P. ROBESON AND DR. J. KINGSBURY'S MESSAGE TO PREPARATORY COMMITTEE FOR ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 23 /HSINHUA/:- "We will do all in our power to secure American participation in the peace congress," Paul Robeson, well-known American peace leader and Dr. John A. Kingsbury, U.S. delegate to the Preparatory Meeting for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference cabled on August 19 the Preparatory Committee for the forthcoming conference in Peking.

Dr. Kingsbury told the New York Daily Compass on August 7 of his impression of the preparatory meeting and said that he was particularly impressed by the emphasis on discussion and conciliation of differences at the conference. The chairman of the day never permitted a vote till everybody had spoken and opposing views had been debated fully and brought near agreement, he said.

Dr. Kingsbury also expressed his admiration for the gigantic construction work in New China and the new life of the Chinese people.

JAPANESE PEOPLE NOMINATE OVER 200 CANDIDATES FOR DELEGATION TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 24 /HSINHUA/:- Japanese people have nominated more than 200 candidates for the peace delegation to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. Names of the candidates have been submitted by peace groups, students anti-war organisations and mass organisations and people's societies in Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, Kanagawa, Ibaragi and Hiogo and other parts of the country.

Liu Ning-i, Secretary General of the Preparatory Committee for the Peace Conference, has received a cable from the Japanese preparatory committee stating that the Japanese National Peace Conference wishes to choose 100 delegates to attend the conference in Peking and hopes the conference will receive all other candidates as observers.

Acclaiming the enthusiastic support of the Japanese people for the Peace Conference, Liu Ning-i replied that as the number of delegates from each country has been decided upon and approved by all countries, it is agreed that 40 delegates shall come from Japan and other peace fighters are welcomed to attend the Peace Conference as observers.

Selection of delegates from among the candidates will be made at the National Conference which has been called by the Japanese Preparatory Committee for the Peace Conference for the last few days of August.

The younger brother of the Emperor of Japan, Prince Mikasa Miya, has also expressed his support for the Peace Conference and his wish that Japanese delegates should participate. /contd./

[illegible] Japanese cultural circles, headed by Michio Iwamura, Masamato Ozawa, Yoichi Fukushima and Aikiko Soki, sent a joint message to Chinese cultural circles saying:"Despite all obstructions, Japanese cultural circles will send delegates to participate in the September conference."

CHINESE PEOPLE'S ORGANISATIONS WELCOME JAPANESE DELEGATES TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 24 /HSINHUA/:- A warm people's welcome for delegates from Japan to the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions is expressed in the messages from six leading people's organisations of China.

The delegates are invited to tour the country after the conference. The All-China Federation of Labour cabled to the Japanese Preparatory Committee on August 22 stressing that peace and security of Asia are seriously threatened by the American aggressors and hailing the unique courage displayed by the Japanese workers "in their great struggles against foreign occupation and for national independence, against the reactionary rule and for people's democracy and freedom and for peace in Asia and the world."

The message continues:"We have been fervently interested in your every struggle. The five nation-wide strikes you launched successively from April 12 to June 20 this year and the 500,000-strong May Day demonstration in Tokyo directly hit the schemes of the American imperialists, invaders of Korea and revivers of Japanese militarism. We are firmly convinced that the united struggle of the Japanese workers and workers of China will certainly play an important role in the struggle for checking American imperialist aggression and rescuing peace in Asia. Therefore we warmly support the Asian Pacific Peace Conference to be held in our capital, Peking, in the last week of September and we cordially welcome the delegates of the Japanese workers to attend. After the conference we would like to invite them to remain here for a time to visit the great works of construction of New China and to see the new life of the Chinese workers after liberation so as to advance friendship and solidarity between the Japanese and Chinese working class which will develop ever greater strength in the great struggle for rescuing peace in Asia and the world. Dear brother and sister Japanese workers, let us join hands tightly in this great struggle for saving peace in Asia and the world. We send our best wishes."

Another cable was sent by the ACFL to the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan, the Congress of All-Japan Industrial Workers Union, the Joint Struggle Committee for Wages and the Liaison Bureau of Japan with the World Federation of Trade Unions, it says, "Since the preparatory meeting for the peace conference was convened in June, big strides have been made in the peace movement in the Asian and Pacific regions. We are convinced that the participation of Japanese workers' delegates in the conference will further enhance the strength to defend peace."

A message to Japanese women from Tsai Chang, President of the All-China Federation of Democratic Women, assures them of an ardent welcome for their delegates to the peace conference. "We believe you will overcome all difficulties to send you delegates to the conference," it says.

Messages expressing equal ardour in looking forward to meeting the Japanese delegates have been sent to the corresponding organisations in Japan by the All-China Federation of Democratic Youth, the All-China Federation of Students and the All-China Federation of Literary and Art Circles.

The Preparatory Committee of the All-China Federation of Industrial and Commercial Circles has also sent a message to the industrial and commercial circles of Japan. This declares that "the people of both China and Japan ardently wish our two countries to enjoy peaceful coexistence so that normal trade relations will be developed.

ALL-INDIA SPONSORING CONFERENCE FOR ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

New Delhi, August 23 /HSINHUA/:- The All-India Sponsoring Conference for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference will be held on September 9 at the New Delhi Town Hall. The Conference will discuss reports of the preparatory work in various provinces, delibarate and formulate documents on issues to be raised at the coming peace conference in Peking and finalise the lists of the Indian delegation to the conference. Provincial delegations to the sponsoring conference will be selected by provincial sponsoring conferences as well as mass organisations supporting the peace conference.

At two recent meetings, the All-India Preparatory Committee for the Peace Conference formed a working committee to carry out the immediate tasks connected with the preparatory peace conference work. Headed by Dr. Gyan Chand, noted economist, the committee will grant credentials to delegates attending the Peking conference.

The Women's Self Defence League of West Bengal, has called to the women of Bengal to participate actively in the preparatory work of the peace conference. The Women's Peace Committee of the Bhowanipore area in Calcutta met on August 18 to establish their programme for the preparatory work of the peace conference.

MONGOLIAN DELEGATION TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE FORMED

Peking, August 25 (HSINHUA) - A delegation to attend the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference has been formed by the Mongolian people, Bazar Shirindib, President of the Mongolian Peace Committee, said in his letter to Liu Ning-I, Secretary General of the Preparatory Conference for the coming Peace Conference.

The Mongolian people unanimously support the declaration and resolutions of the Preparatory Conference, the letter says. They consider that the agenda for the coming conference has been clearly defined in the declaration of the Preparatory Conference. However, emphasis should be laid on the questions of ending the Korean war, stopping the use of bacteriological weapons in Korea and Northeast China, signing of a peace treaty with Japan and stopping the wars in the colonies.

CAMBODIA PEOPLE SUPPORT ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 25 (HSINHUA) - On behalf of the people of Cambodia, Son Ngoc Minh, President of the Cambodia National United Front has sent a message supporting the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference to the Preparatory Committee of the conference in Peking. The message reads:

"On behalf of the people of Cambodia, we sincerely welcome the declaration of the Preparatory Meeting of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. We approve of all questions which the Preparatory Meeting has submitted for discussion at the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. We will carry out all resolutions adopted by the conference and effectively push forward with the people of Viet Nam and Laos, our war of resistance against the French colonialists and American interventionists, and struggle unswervingly for national independence, freedom and peace in Asia and the rest of the world.

THIRD ALL-INDIA PEACE CONGRESS TO BE HELD IN SEPTEMBER

New Delhi, August 25 (HSINHUA) - The third All-India Peace Congress will be held from September 12 to 14 in Jullundur, East Punjab. Leaders of the peace movement are undertaking extensive tours to various parts of the country in preparation for the congress.

Dr. S.D. Kitchlew and Sardar Gurbux Singh, President and Vice-President of the All-India Peace Council, Chatur Narain Malaviya, Congress member of the Indian Parliament and former chief Minister of Bhopal State, Dr. J.C. Kumarappa, a follower of Gandhi and noted economist, and R.K. Karanjia, member of the All-India Peace Council, are among those who will travel around the country mobilising peace partisans for the September meeting. Pandit Sundarlal, leader of the Indian delegation to China last October, and Romesh Chandra, Secretary of the All-India Peace Council, has been to East Punjab, Bihar and Uttar Pradesh.

NORTHWEST FRONTIER PROVINCE PEACE COMMITTEE OF PAKISTAN ELECTS 10-MAN DELEGATION TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

New Delhi, August 25 (HSINHUA) - The Lahore Peace Committee's Executive Committee session of August 8 decided to organise peace committees in the districts of West Punjab, Pakistan. Khan Ghulam Mohammad Khan Lundkhor, President, and Syed Muttalabi Faridabadi, General Secretary of the Peace Committee, were chosen to tour the whole province on this work.

Support for the decision of the World Peace Council to hold a world peace congress in Vienna this December was expressed in a resolution.

A Northwest Frontier Province Peace Committee was formed on August 18. It has elected a ten-man delegation to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

PEOPLE'S DAILY ARTICLE ON ASIA WEEK IN INDIA

Peking, August 25 (HSINHUA) - Yesterday's Peking People's Daily carried an article congratulating the Indian people for the spectacular results achieved by holding of "Asia Week" throughout India. The author, Cheng Chen-to was a member of the Chinese cultural delegation which visited India last year.

The Indian people, he writes, have a traditional love for peace and their widely growing peace movement, which is based on their historical opposition to aggression, will most certainly win unprecedented results. Since the return of the Indian delegates to the Preparatory Meeting for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, he points out, peace-loving people all over India have been holding meetings and mass rallies to prepare for the coming peace conference in Peking; discussions have also centred on the ways and means for ending the present strife in Asia.

He recalls the warm friendship between India and China, maintained for over 2,000 years, broken only by the imperialists but now happily restored. The people of India and China, along with those of many other nations in Asia and the Pacific Region , Cheng Chen-to writes, form a great force for peace. United and fully developed, this force will be able to thwart any conspiracies of the warmongers.

In conclusion he offers his sincere congratulations to the peace-loving Indian people on their successful holding of "Asia Week." The accomplishments of "Asia Week", he says, are but a foretaste of what the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference will achieve.

NEW ZEALAND PEACE DELEGATE ON ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 26 (HSINHUA)- "The Peace movement is a people's movement in the truest sense. It rests on the strongest of bases - that desire for peace which is now man's first essential, before he can advance further."

So writes Rewi Alley, a member of the New Zealand delegation to the Preparatory Meeting of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference in the Preparatory Committee's bulletin of August 22.

In his article entitled "A new step to peace" Mr. Alley says that neither the Soviet Union nor China wants war, and from the bomb shattered London to the docks of New Zealand and Australia, from factories in India to those in Japan the cry for peace is the same.

"And so last June, there came the historic step of calling together in Peking a Preparatory Meeting to discuss a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions", the article continues. "Delegates from countries of Asia and those of the Pacific met in the conference hall in small meetings, and together privately. They talked about the ways and means to bring their peoples together for peace. They expressed what they felt on dangers to peace. They armed themselves with facts and figures to enable themselves to struggle better for peace. Then they returned to their own countries to organise for the next step."

Referring to the forthcomung peace conference, Rewi Alley declares: "Now, in this autumn, we shall see some of the fruits of their work, in the great conference which shall assemble in Peking, and which will carry their work still further. A conference which shall include large delegations of many countries, races and creeds, people with greatly differing political opinions, different backgrounds, yet people who will have come because they have felt that the cause pf peace justifies any effort, any sacrifice, people who believe in the call to the conference issued by the Preparatory Meeting."

The article refers to China as "a force for peace and construction". "In travelling to and fro to Peking," it says, "the delegates will see a China that is alive and determined; a China miraculously changed in these past three years since liberation; a China that works in an organised, thoughtful scientific manner; a China of steel, whose rulers are the people, and who will no longer bend knee to any predatory interest; a cultured China, warm and friendly to those who come in friendship and sincerity - a China as a leader in the world of man-to-be, together with all great nations that work for peace."

NEW ZEALAND PEOPLE WIDELY INTERESTED IN PEKING PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 26(HSINHUA)- Allan Monteith, Secretary of the New Zealand Peace Council in a letter to the Preparatory Committee of the Peace Conference has stated that the September conference is attracting wide attention in that country. It is believed that a delegation made up of people in all walks of life can be elected on a broad basis to the Peace Conference in Peking.

Monteith has been elected to the Preparatory Committee of New Zealand.

ENTHUSIASTIC SUPPORT FOR ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE IN VIET NAM

Peking, August 26 (HSINHUA)- People in all walks of life throughout Viet Nam are enthusiastically supporting the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, states a Viet Nam News Agency report.

A pamphlet explaining the importance of the Peace Conference has been distributed throughout the country by the Viet Nam Peace Committee.

Viet Nam's workers, in response to a call issued by the Viet Nam General Confederation of Workers, launched an intensive emulation drive from July 20, the sixth anniversary of the Viet Nam revolution. At a recent enlarged meeting of the Standing Committee of the Viet Nam Peace Committee, Nguyen Duy Tinh, delegate of the Viet Nam General Confederation of Workers, re-affirmed the workers' support for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. "The lofty aim of this conference is also the aim of the Viet Nam people, and, in particular, of the Viet Nam working class", he declared.

On August 2, Nguyen Xuan Tram, member of the Viet Nam delegation to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, spoke to more than 100 delegates at the National Congress of Cadres of the Viet Nam Youth National Salvation Association, who gave their enthusiastic suppprt to the declaration of the Peking Preparatory Conference. At the Conference for Defense of Children held on July 29, all representatives signed the declaration. after hearing the report by Nguyen Xuan Tram on the aims and purposes of the Peace Conference.

In the 3rd and 4th military area, at a gathering of intellectuals on June 26 and a meeting of technicians and representatives of local people's organisations on July 10, the declaration of the Preparatory Conference held in Peking was signed by all those attending. People in the French-occupied area also held rallies to voice their support to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. The Viet Nam Peace Committee has received many resolutions from villagers living in the French-occupied areas giving support to the coming Peace Conference and exposing the barbarous crimes committed by the French invading troops. Local people's armymen and guerrillas also addressed letters to the Viet Nam Peace Committee hailing the Peace Conference.

All newspapers in Viet Nam have given prominent space to articles dealing with the importance of the Peace Conference and urging people to give it support.

"FOR PEACE IN ASIA, THE PACIFIC REGIONS AND THE WORLD" - SOONG CHING-LING IN "PEOPLE'S CHINA"

Peking, August 28 (HSINHUA) - The following is an article entitled "For Peace in Asia, the Pacific Regions and the World" written by Soong Ching-ling (Madame Sung Yat-sen) for the coming issue of the English language magazine "People's China":

The Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions to be held in Peking this September is taking place at a most vital time. Peace is far from being an academic question anywhere in the world today. It is most assuredly an urgent, practical problem in this part of the globe. Several wars are actually being waged here. Japan, against the expressed will of its people, is being remilitarised by the United States and prepared once again as a base for aggression; crude, ruthless economic and political pressure is being exerted by the American government on certain Latin American and Asian countries in an effort to force them into the war camp; American generals continue to pour salt into a nasty wound of their own making further frustrating the Korean truce talks, stepping up their criminal bombing of the aged, the women and children in Korean cities already reduced to rubble, applying their so-called military pressure by bombing peacetime installations. This is in addition to their already mountain-high list of iniquities, topped by the most vicious - germ warfare.

The brutal, aggressive character of these policies in the Far East, plus the recklessness of recent acts of the Western Powers in Europe, especially in regard to Germany, have caused a serious deterioration in the international situation. This is a circumstance which gravely disturbes many people all over the world. Each successive blow has increased the alarm and anxiety, the indignation with which they view the spectacle. Each person visualises the mounting threat to himself: his home gutted or his lored ones lost. Each patriot visualises the threat to his country: the chance of harnessing nature and building a happy life for the people instantaneously disappearing in a burst of fire. As a result, for an increasing number of people in the East and West, a task has arisen: how to meet and stop this threat.

To give life, to build, to enhance - these are the main missions in man's life. For these, peace is the essential condition. But this peace which we need and so ardently desire, has to be won. This we know. The small band of the war-minded are hardheaded and irresponsible. They do not easily give up their plots for profit. As we have seen on many occasions, they think nothing of defying the wishes of the people and are ready to fabricate their pretext for war or its extension at any moment. This means that the forces of peace, the ordinary men and women in their hundreds of millions, must be alert, must firmly resist being led along the road to oblivion. We must make our voices heard; our demand to live peacefully side by side with all peoples and all nations must be transformed into loud and strong words. We must be active; as the ideas of peace and cooperation are sounded in the many tongues of the many nations, there must be mobilisation on all sides, in every country.

This is to say, that if we are not to be sidetracked, tricked or pushed around by the few who would destroy us, then the majority must organise itself further to preserve progress and civilisation.

The importance of the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions in this regard cannot be overstated. The 500 delegates, representing 1,600 million people, have a tremendous task to shoulder, but they also have an opportunity to create what will undoubtedly prove to be a central factor in preserving world peace. Supported by the World Peace Council, which is the greatest movement of its kind in the history of man, as well as by the already established and rapidly growing peace organisations of various countries the Conference is in a position to make an unparalleled move towards achieving unity for peace over the earth's most populous area.

There is a wide base upon which this unity can be constructed; that is, the great similarity of conditions in this part of the world which has had an important influence on how we view peace.

Peace is a concept with many aspects for the people of Asia and the Pacific. It means more than the absence of general war. Our long and bitter experience has been that even in timeswhen there was no general war this by no means applied to those countries suffering the oppression of imperialism. There may have been peace elsewhere, but in our countries imperialism was threatening our very existence. Most of our nations have a glorious past, great potentialities for a rich economy, a high level of cultural attainment. But imperialism attempted to grind our past into dust; it did reduce many of our economies into stifling monocultures o simply to suppliers of raw material and cheap labour;it vitiated our culture and tried to substitute its own. This has been the way of imperialism in a great many places in Asia and the Pacific. It brought us a vast misery and ignorance, a terrible toll in lives and a cruel retardation. It has incurred the wrath of all of us.

To Asian and Pacific peoples, therefore, peace and national independence are so closely linked as to be indistinguishable. Peace must be founded on equality of all peoples and mutually advantageous dealings between all nations. This is possible only when each people runs its country without outside intervention, according to its own wishes and to its greatest benefit. This, in turn, is closely linked with the question of a peace in which all nations cooperate to the greatest benefit of the whole world, no matter how differently they may govern themselves or operate their economies.

This concept of peace is accepted far and wide among the peoples of Asia and the Pacific. You will find important parts of this view or all of it in all ranks - among workers, farmers, intellectuals, officials, commercial and industrial circles. It has become our fundamental understanding of the way things stand in the world today. It can be said that this understanding, stimulated by previous examples, has been further and immeasurably heightened by the victories of the Chinese people.

China, at one time, in her recent history, was referred to as the "sick man of Asia." This was the feeling many had toward us, some in pity, others with jeers. There should be no question in anyone's mind that today such pity is inappropriate, and jeers testify only to fatal underestimation. For in three short years, the Chinese people have elevated their nation to its rightful place, as one of the leaders of the world. We have regained our national dignity. We have forged a new might. These earth-shaking accomplishments are due to our successful struggle for independence, to the fact that we have proclaimed and implemented a people's democracy. By these victories, by our giant strides in the reconstruction of our country, we have set a new standard for the peoples of Asia and the Pacific. We have given them a new outlook on their own problems.

The enhanced prestige that the Chinese people now enjoy has yet another cause - our unwavering stand for peace. Peace is part of our tradition as a nation and as a people. Throughout the thousands of years in which we Chinese have had relations with the peoples of Asia and the Pacific, we have never acted in a warlike manner. In this present period, peace is the basic tenet of the foreign policy of our People's Republic of China. We have demonstrated in every way that with us the seeking of peace is a serious pursuit. In carrying out the policies of our country, in the defence of our land, as organisations and individuals, it is always the quest for peace which guides and dominates our actions.

That the people of Asia and the Pacific regions recognise this fact is attested to by their sending representatives to our capital to take a new and historic step for peace. Peking is a city born of the unity of the Chinese people. Now it serves as the birthplace of the new unity of the Asian and Pacific peoples in their struggle for harmony among the nations.

Thus, the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions is the result of the general upsurge for peace throughout the world. The peoples represented will have a solid base for unity, since peace is what they demand and peace is part of the solution of their own national problems. And finally, the Conference is to take place in a country, in a city and among a people dedicated to the preservation and protection of world tranquility and cooperation. The results are bound to be grand and magnificent.

We can be sure that these results will be far different from those of another conference which has just taken place in this part of the world. I refer to the meetings which have been called by the United States Government to form the so-called "Pacific Council". In this meeting they also talked peace, but in fact planned further aggression. In this meeting they also talked cooperation, with "backward" nations, but in fact they set in motion more schemes to further enslave certain Asian and Pacific countries. In this meeting they also talked about equality of peoples, but in fact the terms of this "council" will be dictated by one power, the United States Government.

It must be pointed out that the politicians of the United States who will lead this council of war do not in any way represent the people of that country. The people of the United States, in fact, could not even get in at the door of that meeting. This is in sharp contrast to the way the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions will provide a platform from which can be heard the true voice of the American people.

We sincerely hope that a large delegation can be present to represent the people of the United States. As members of a Pacific nation, Americans will have a definite interest in what we decide, and they will be able to make a definite contribution. The Conference will also give them an opportunity to learn what this part of the world is thinking. Many terrible things have been done in their name. They should learn the truth about these acts. They should also learn, and I am sure that we can impress them with the fact, that the peoples of Asia and the Pacific make a clear distinction between them and the real perpetrators of those acts.

We hope that representatives of the American people can come to see us in the flesh to gain firsthand knowledge of the new developments which are taking place. We want to assure them that there is no threat to them or their way of life from us or from any of the lands where the people rule. We think we can prove to them that the threat is in their own midst, that their enemy and ours is one and the same. We want the American people to know that there are many reasons why we should cooperate as peoples and as nations, but that there is not one single reason why we should be fighting each other.

Together with the American people we of Asia and the Pacific want to answer the question: "Who benefits by the fighting in Korea, Viet Nam and Malaya, by the unilateral treaties which keep other countries as colonies, by rearmament, by restriction of trade and cultural intercourse?" Together with them we want to work out the real correlation between the fact that U.S. corporations registered a profit of 44.8 billion dollars in 1951, eight times the peacetime figure before World War II, and the fact that one third of their national income is gobbled up by taxes, by the killing, maiming and destruction which their government has let loose in the Far East. We know the direct relationship between all these things, we think the representatives of the American people will agree with us.

In other words, we, and they, and all peace-loving people face a common enemy, the handful of wilful men who profit from war. In the struggle against this enemy, for our existence and for peace, the peoples of Asia and the Pacific look upon the people of the United States as an ally, as a crucial ally. We hope they will join us in all their strength. We hope they will join us in working out the peace, and then in making this world a place of fruitful labour and joy, a safe and sound place for their children and ours. We will grasp their hands in this greatest of crusades, to make our time one of the finest ages in the world's history.

Working together at the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions, the representatives of many nations will forge the unity of all races, colours, creeds and religions for peace! Together we will lay the groundwork for the participation of Asian and Pacific peoples in the Extraordinary Congress of the Peoples for Peace next December! Together we will make immense strides towards winning the world for the people!

"ON THE EVE OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE OF THE ASIAN AND PACIFIC REGIONS" — LIU NING-I IN "PEOPLE'S CHINA"

Peking, August 30 (HSINHUA)- "On the eve of the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions" is the title of an article by Liu Ning-I, Secretary General of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, which will appeal in the next issue of the foreign language fortnightly People's China.

It follows in full:

Who among the millions of people of goodwill in the Asian and Pacific regions does not long for a peaceful, free, independent and happy life? We do not want to be interfered with, nor do we ever want to interfere in the lives of others. We do not tolerate aggression from others, nor do we want to invade other countries. It is our desire that all peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions, irrespective of political system or religious belief should live peacefully together in equality and freedom, help one another, and have economic and cultural exchange with one another. We would like peoples of our regions to be united and friendly like one big family and live in amity with the rest of the world, to travel freely between one another's lands, and for all to exert their best efforts continuously for a prosperous and happy life.

Unfortunately, in the East as well as in the West, the aggressors headed by U.S. imperialism are stepping up their plots for an aggressive war against the wishes of all decent men and women in the world. In Western Europe, in complete violation of the Potsdam Agreements, they are striving for the revival of Nazi power in Western Germany, and have ordered the Bonn government to sign the so-called "General Treaty" and the "European Defence Community Pact." They are producing weapons of mass destruction - atomic, bacteriological and chemical weapons. All this has aroused the opposition of people in all countries.

In the East, the U.S. imperialists are dragging out the Korean armistice talks, massacring prisoners of war, and openly waging bacteriological warfare on a large scale in Korea and on Chinese territory. In North Korea, they are wantonly bombing peaceful civilians. In Northeast China, they contiunously invade our territorial air, carrying out provocative strafing and bombing.

In order to accelerate the revival of Japanese militarism, they have concluded an illegal and unilateral "peace treaty" with Japan, a bilateral U.S.-Japanese "Security Pact" and a U.S.-Japanese "Administrative Agreement." They have invaded and are occupying the Chinese island of Taiwan. They are resorting to military force to intervene in the liberation movements for national independence in Viet Nam, Malaya and so on. They are forcibly building military bases around the world. The attempt to set up a "Middle East Command" is only one more instance of this.

This mad, aggressive drive on the part of the United States is seriously threatening the peace of the peoples in the Asian and Pacific countries; it has also created an extremely serious world situation. Men and women of goodwill must hesitate no longer if they want to save peace in Asia, the Pacific and the world. (contd.)

Precisely for these reasons, a Preparatory Conference for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions met successfully in Peking early in June of this year. Delegates from various countries represented unanimously decided to convene a peace conference in Peking in the last week of September, and to call on all people of goodwill in the Asian and Pacific Regions to unite to save peace, and to find appropriate means to solve the following problems:

1.To safeguard the independence,freedom and peace of the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions; to oppose expansion of armaments and war preparations; to prohibit warmongering and propaganda encouraging racial hatred; to prohibit all suppression of propaganda for peace; to demand freedom for the peace movement;to prohibit the use of atomic, bacteriological and chemical weapons; to oppose bombing and massacring of non-combatants and civilians; to emphasise observance of international law.

1. To develop equal, mutually beneficial and normal international economic relations and cultural exchange; to oppose blockades and embargoes; to improve people's livelihood; to promot welfare of women and children.

3.To oppose the remilitarisation of Japan, and to oppose the use of Japan as a base for aggression, in order to eliminate the serious threat of peace in the Asian and Pacific regions.

4. To settle peacefully the Korean question on a fair and reasonable basis and to solve reasonably all questions relating to peace in the Asian and Pacific regions including Viet Nam, Laos, Cambodia, Malaya and other countries.

After the Preparatory Conference, a broad and warm response came from peoples in the Asian and Pacific regions. By mid-August, many cables had been received indicating acceptance of the invitation to participate. A broad and strong mass movement is under way among peoples of 32 countries in the Asian and Pacific regions where meetings and discussions have been held to elect representatives to attend the conference.

The All-India Peace Council and the Indian Preparatory Committee for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions have mobilised all political parties, mass organisations, cultural groups, and people from all walks of life and have held meetings for full discussion on the Conference. An "Asia Week" and an "Asia Day" were declared between August 3 and August 10, during which representatives were elected from all circles to attend the Conference in Peking.

The people of Japan have been mobilised through meetings and discussions about the Conference in factories, prefectures, counties and cities, to choose representatives on a democratic basis to participate in the Conference. An intensified mass movement has in this way also been formed in Japan.

People of Australia are working hard on the selection of a delegation that will be broadly representative in character. Burma, Indonesia, Pakistan, the United States, Canada and countries of Latin America have been campaigning for the Conference. Many of them sent their delegates to Peking to participate in the preparatory work. In the Republics of the Asian part of the Soviet Union, meetings and discussions have been held, reports have been given in factories, rural areas and schools. People of Korea and Viet Nam are giving especially warm support to the Conference. Moving incidents of such support are too numerous to mention here.

All this indicates that after the Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, people inhabiting those regions have expressed their wholehearted support for the Conference. A mighty movement has begun, demonstrating that the strength of the broad masses longing for peace is invincible, and that any attempt to halt or undermine this movement will be futile.

We people of China love peace. Today we need peace all the more for our work of national construction to make our independent, free and happy motherland stronger and more prosperous, and make the lives of the people happier. We feel indeed honoured that the Conference is to be held in our capital, Peking. As Chairman Mao Tse-tung has stated: "We have friends everywhere in the world." People of China will be very happy to meet their friends from more than 30 countries; fighters for the peace and happiness of mankind will assemble in Peking for friendly and collective discussion of the great task before them - saving peace. People of China are now enthusiastically discussing the Conference; people of all social strata are speeding their preparatory work in order to be ready for this great historic event.

A large assembly hall is being built in Peking. People of all cities and villages in China are eagerly looking forward to the arrival from afar of our friends of peace.

This will be a conference for peace and unity, a conference to save peace of the Asian and Pacific regions, to ward off the disaster of war and to enable people to enjoy freedom and happiness. Peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions are of one heart in their desire for peace.

The determination of thousands of millions of people to build a great wall in defence of peace will make our peace camp as strong as steel.

ALL-INDIA PEACE COUNCIL EXECUTIVE MEETING CONDEMNS U.S. GERM WAR

Peking, August 30 (HSINHUA) - The Bureau of the All-India Peace Council adopted a resolution during its executive meeting in June condemning the employment of germ warfare in Korea and Northeast China by American imperialism, according to a belated report from New Delhi.

The resolution said: "The members of the Bureau have studied with the greatest care the evidence of impartial observers from many countries, including our own, relating to the charge that germ warfare is being waged in China and Korea. Examination of these materials has convinced us beyond any doubt that this inhuman and shocking method of mass extermination by spreading pestilential germs has been employed in a widespread scale by the United States military forces."

"It is a matter of profound shame," it continued, "that such acts are being carried on in the name of the United Nations."

The resolution went on: "Considering that bacteriological warfare is a crime against human conscience and civilisation and a threat to all the great and difficult victories that man's industry and genius has been able to register in the battle of life against death, the Indian people with their ancient and peace-loving civilisation and traditions have an important rôle to play in putting a stop to such methods of warfare."

In conclusion, the resolution said: "We appeal to all Indians to inform themselves of the evidence and rally in their millions to protest against such germ warfare and to demand punishment of all those found guilty of such crimes."

CEYLON PEOPLE NOMINATE 10-MAN DELEGATION TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

New Delhi, August 30 (HSINHUA) - A 10-man delegation has been nominated by the Ceylon people to represent them in the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. It includes two Buddhist priests, four members of the Ceylon Parliament and one member of the Colombo Municipal Council. It will leave Ceylon for Peking by mid-September.

Mr. N. Sanmugathasan, member of the All-Ceylon Peace Committee and formerly Vice-President of the Ceylon Trade Union Federation, said that an intensive campaign is going on in Ceylon to make preparations for participation in the forthcoming Peace Conference. The campaign started with a public rally on August 8 at the Colombo town hall, where representatives of all parties spoke in support of the aims of the Peace Conference, and pledged to send to it a well-chosen delegation. Reverend Udakendawala Saranankara who had attended the Preparatory Meeting in Peking, then gave a report on the works of the meeting and the recent Berlin session of the World Peace Council. Well over 2,000 people crowded the hall and a good many of them were Buddhist monks, Sanmugathasan said.

Similar meetings were subsequently held in provincial towns, he went on, in Kurnegala on August 17 and in Matara on August 23. In the next few weeks , meetings would take place in Kandy, Jaffna, Trincomalee, Galle and other places.

A local sponsoring committee, composed of leading figures in various fields of life, has been set up and has started popularising the Peace Conference. An appeal entitled "Asia needs peace" upholding the aims of the Peace Conference and calling upon the Ceylon people to give the Conference their full support was signed by 25 prominent citizens representing all shades of political opinion in the country as well as by Buddhist and Christian representatives.

Referring to the development of the peace movement in Ceylon, Sanmugathasan pointed out that the All-Ceylon Peace Committee had convened two very successful all-island peace congresses and had mobilised popular support for the campaign to ban the use of the atomic weapons and for the signing of a five-Power peace pact. Meantime, the Committee started the campaign demanding that no bases of the army, navy and air force in Ceylon be used for war of aggression against other countries.

An important aspect of the Ceylon peace movement was the participation of a large number of Buddhist monks. Practically all heads of the Buddhist seats of learning signed the ban-the-atom-bomb appeal. One of the secretaries of the Peace Committee and a prominent figure in the peace movement is Reverend Narawila Dhammaratane, leading Buddhist monk and a scholar of national repute.

Explaining the desire of the Ceylon people to establish trade relations with the Chinese People's Republic and how such relations would contribute towards peace, Samugathasan said, "The peace movement in Ceylon has adopted as one of its slogans the demand for immediate trade relations with China."

INDONESIAN PEOPLE ELECT DELEGATION TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 30 (NSINHUA) - Delegates to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference have been elected from among Indonesian trade unions, and commercial, religious, art and cultural circles, according to a report from Djakarta.

The Indonesian National Peace Committee has decided to hold a "Peace Week" in major cities during the last week of September with peace exhibitions and mass rallies and a series of artistic activities on the theme of world peace.

Public personalities of Indonesia have voiced warm support for the Peace Conference. "The Asian and Pacific Peace Conference will make possible the establishment of closer relations between the people of all countries on the basis of peace, security and mutual respect," said Tambunan, Vice-President of the Indonesian Parliament in an interview with Harian Rakjat (Djakarta People's Daily). Wiwoho, President of the Organisation of Masjumi (Moslem Party) of Djokja, has written to the National Peace Committee saying that any effort made for the Peace Conference should not only command sympathy but should win full support of all mankind.

INDIAN WORKING CLASS WARMLY SUPPORTS THE SEPTEMBER PEACE CONFERENCE

Under the leadership of the trade unions in various places, the Indian working class are enthusiastically giving their support to the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions and taking part in the preparatory work for sending an Indian delegation. The Trade Union Congress of East Punjab, Hyderabad and West Bengal have convened peace conferences of the unions. In these conferences, plans of sending presents to the coming Peace Conference in Peking were announced, and resolutions were adopted to telegraph greetings to the September Conference, pledging the union's determination to fight for world peace together with the working class of the world. A number of unions are actively collecting funds to meet the travelling expenses of their delegates.

AUSTRALIA INTENSIFIES PREPARATORY WORK

The Australian Preparatory Committee launched a nationwide discussion campaign on issues relating to the September Peace Conference. The working masses, the intellectuals, the churches, and the press have all expressed their support to the peace movement. The "Melbourne Herald" backs Australia's participation in the coming Conference.

According to the "Australian Tribune," sentiment to support the September Conference is spreading among the membership of the Australian Labour Party. Large meetings were held by the local organisations of the Labour Party in Banstown, Hurstville and Miranda and resolutions were passed in support of the Conference.

After his return from the Preparatory Conference in Peking, Dr. John W. Burton spoke at numerous meetings to rally support for the peace campaign and was fervently received everywhere.

The National Sponsoring Committee of Australia is scheduled to meet at the end of August in Sydney. There the final composition of the delegation to the September Conference may be decided.

CHILIAN MEMBER OF PREPARATORY COMMITTEE ELECTED

Preparations are underway in Chile. Forty peace-partisans of various circl have joined the sponsoring committee. Mrs. Olga Poblete, member of the World Peace Council and professor of Far Eastern problems, was appointed Chilian member of the Preparatory Committee for the September Peace Conference.

PREPARATORY CONFERENCE SUCCESSFULLY HELD IN THAILAND

As a result of the endeavour of the Thailand Peace Committee and the support of the broad masses of the peace-loving people, the Thailand Preparatory Conference was held in Bangkok on August 23, and successfully concluded. The Conference telegraphed us its pledge to support the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions through practical actions for peace.

VIET-NAM WORKERS GREET THE SEPTEMBER PEACE CONFERENCE WITH LABOUR EMULATION DRIVE

Since the enlarged Conference held late in July, during which a Preparatory Committee was set up and a delegation to the September Peace Conference was elected, extensive preparations have been going on throughout Viet-Nam. While the delegates have been visiting various provinces, explaining to the people the significance of the Peace Conference and listing the demands of the people and collecting signatures of peace-supporters, many political parties and popular bodies have issued directives to their local organisations to do the same. This nationwide movement has been extended to various circles, strata and localities and has won warm response. Letters, telegrams and resolutions from various regions in support of the September Peace Conference have been received by the All-Viet-Nam Preparatory Committee. The Viet-Nam Federation of Labour has also launched a short period emulation drive and its accomplishment would be offered as a tribute to the September Peace Conference.

LAOS DELEGATION ELECTED

The National United Front of Laos has launched an extensive campaign to expound to the people of the whole country the spirit of the Declaration issued by the Peking Preparatory Conference, which has met with the people's ardent support. At a national congress of the people's representatives, a delegation was elected to attend the forthcoming Conference in Peking and Mr. Nouhak, member of the Central Committee of the Free National United Front, was appointed Laos member of the preparatory committee.

CAMBODIA BROADENS ITS PEACE CAMPAIGN AMONG THE PEOPLE

Preparatory work in Cambodia is in full swing. In spite of the difficult circumstances, the peace partisans have actively and extensively explained to the people the vital significance of the Declaration issued by the Peking Preparatory Conference. In many districts, meetings were held and signatures of the supporters of the forthcoming Conference were collected.

ON THE EVE OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE OF THE ASIAN AND PACIFIC REGIONS

Liu Ning I

Who among the millions of people of goodwill in the Asian and Pacific regions does not long for a peaceful, free, independent and happy life? We do not want to be interfered with, nor do we ever want to interfere in the lives of others. We do not tolerate aggression from others, nor do we want to invade other countries. It is our desire that all the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions, irrespective of political system or religious belief should live peacefully together in equality and freedom, help one another, and have economic and cultural exchange with one another. We would like the peoples of our regions to be united and friendly like one big family and live in amity with the rest of the world, to travel freely between one another's land, and for all to exert their best efforts continuously for a prosperous and happy life.

Unfortunately, in the East as well as in the West, the aggressors headed by U.S. imperialism are stepping up their plots for aggressive war against the wishes of all decent men and women in the world. In Western Europe, in complete violation of the Potsdam Agreements, they are striving for the revival of Nazi power in Western Germany, and have ordered the Bonn government to sign the so-called "General Treaty" and the "European Defence Community Pact." They are producing weapons of mass destruction -- atomic, bacteriological and chemical weapons. All this has aroused the opposition of people in all countries.

In the East, the U.S. imperialists are dragging out the Korean armistice talks, massacring prisoners of war, and openly waging bacteriological warfare on a large scale in Korea and on Chinese territory. In North Korea, they are wantonly bombing peaceful civilians. In Northeast China, they continuously invade our territorial air, carrying out provocative strafing and bombing.

In order to accelerate the revival of Japanese militarism, they have concluded an illegal and unilateral "peace treaty" with Japan, a bilateral U.S.-Japan "Security Pact" and a U.S.-Japan "Administrative Agreement." They have invaded and are occupying the Chinese island of Taiwan. They are resorting to military force to intervene in the liberation movements for national independence in Viet-Nam, Malaya and the Philippines. They are forcibly building military bases around the world. The attempt to set up a "Middle East Command" is only one more instance of this.

This mad, aggressive drive on the part of the United States is seriously threatening the peace of the peoples in the Asian and Pacific countries; it has also created an extremely serious world situation. Men and women of goodwill must hesitate no longer if they want to save the peace in Asia, the Pacific and the world.

2. To develop equal, mutually beneficial and normal international economic relations and cultural exchange; to oppose blockades and embargoes; to improve the people's livelihood; to promote the welfare of women and children.

3. To oppose the remilitarisation of Japan, and to oppose the use of Japan as a base for aggression, in order to eliminate the serious threat to peace in the Asian and Pacific regions.

4. To settle peacefully the Korean question on a fair and reasonable basis and to solve reasonably all the questions relating to peace in the Asian and Pacific regions including Viet-Nam, Laos, Cambodia, Malaya and other countries.

After the Preparatory Conference, a broad and warm response came from the peoples in the Asian and Pacific regions. By mid-August, many cables had been received indicating acceptance of the invitation to participate.

The people of Korea and Viet-Nam are giving especially warm support to the conference. Moving incidents of such support are too numerous to mention here.

The wholehearted support shown by the people of all countries in Asia and the Pacific and the active preparations which they are making for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference are so intensive and broad that they are a vigorous demonstration of the fact that the calling of this conference expresses the common demand of the people throughout Asia and the Pacific. Delegates representing the desire for peace of 1,600 million people will assemble at this conference. They will exchange views freely and try to find the appropriate means to meet the desire to defend peace in Asia and the Pacific and settle those questions which are of great concern to the people. We advocate saving peace, and oppose armament expansion and war preparations. We advocate peaceful negotiations and oppose violent means. We advocate the peaceful settlement of all international disputes and oppose intervention in any nation's internal affairs. Peace can be saved, but it must be saved jointly by peace lovers. For this reason, we call on lovers of peace in Asia and the Pacific, irrespective of political conviction, religious faith, race or nationality, to nominate their delegates to participate in this great Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

We can foresee that the enemies of peace, as such, will carry out all kinds of obstructive and sabotage activities against our great peace conference. It is possible that they will resort to any conceivable means of rumour-mongering, slander, the sowing of dissension, threats, the creation of obstacles and handicaps, or they may resort to other intrigues and schemes. However, all their means are bound to meet ignominious failure in the face of the great, courageous and united strength of the people of different countries. The desire for peace and the steeled determination of the broad masses of all countries in Asia and the Pacific to save peace constitute an invincible strength. Any attempt at obstruction and sabotage will ultimately prove futile.

We people of China love peace. Today we need peace all the more for our work of national construction to make our independent, free and happy motherland stronger and more prosperous, and make the lives of the people happier. We feel indeed honoured that the conference is to be held in our capital, Peking. As Chairman Mao Tse-tung has stated: "We have friends everywhere in the world." JAPANESE PEACE COMMITTEE HOLDS PEACE MOVEMENT MONTH

Peking, July 24 /HSINHUA/:- A delayed report from Tokyo says that the Japan Peace Committee has decided to hold a peace movement month terminating on August 15 throughout Japan.

Peace meetings are to be held in various prefectures and districts leading up to a national peace conference in August which will be attended by representatives from all parts of the country. The peace movement is to expand from the trade unions to women's circles and rural villages.

The following directions for pushing the movement forward had been issued by the Japan Peace Committee:

First, concerning the campaign for opposing rearmament and conscription. Call on the people the country over not to join the "Police Reserve Corps," but to oppose conscription and unlawful revision of the constitution aimed at rearming. Express opposition to the requisition of land, houses and fishing grounds by signatures, resolutions, petitions and meetings. Strengthen the organisations and liaison work in relation to this campaign on a nation-wide scale.

Second, concerning the campaign for safeguarding peaceful industry and peaceful life. Oppose the war economy; organise discussions among different trades and in various districts, with a view to protecting national industry, and in particular middle and small industry and commerce; start a campaign to find a way out of the economic crisis. In respect of trade, demand an equal, free and mutually beneficial trade with all countries; and launch a campaign for implementation of the Sino-Japanese Trade Agreement. At the same time, unite more closely the struggle of the workers against low wages and overwork, that of the merchants against heavy taxes and that of the peasatns against requisition of land.

Third, concerning the campaign for the defence of freedom and democracy. Call on the people to smash the sinister bills like the "Anti-Subversive Activities Bill"; to fight for basic human rights and freedom of speech, assembly, organisation and study. Oppose suppression and help the victims of suppression.

Fourth, concerning the national campaign centred on the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions. Discuss this question respectively in various places, among various organisations and trades. Elect delegates to the Conference from national organisations, from noted personages and various districts.

Fifth, strengthen the campaign for demanding conclusion of a Five-Power Peace Pact.

INTERVIEW WITH ROMESH CHANDRA, SECRETARY OF ALL-INDIA PEACE COUNCIL

New Delhi, July 29 /HSINHUA/:- special correspondent - In a special interview, Romesh Chandra, Secretary of the All-India Peace Council and Deputy Secretary General of the Preparatory Committee of the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions, has answered my questions as follows:

Question: What is your reaction to the resolutions of the extra-ordinary session of the World Peace Council recently held in Berlin?

Answer: I am deeply impressed by the new perspectives which these resolutions open up for the developments of the peace movement.

I am thoroughly convinced that the resolution on ending the war in Korea passed by the World Peace Council with its simple two-point demand "Immediate termination of hostilities by the signing of an armistice based on respect for international law and customs" and "Ratification and observance of the Geneva Protocol of 1925" will help the Indian peace movement to draw in its fold large sections of people who have thus far remained outside it.

Equally, the call of the Berlin session for a real peace treaty to replace the illegal San Francisco treaty with Japan will commend itself to all sections of the Indian people who sympathise with the courageous struggle of the Japanese people for their freedom and against the forces of war.

The address of the World Peace Council to the Governments of the Four Great Powers and to all the people in connection with the German problem will again meet with response among all sections of the Indian people.

The All-India Peace Council is especially gratified to note the emphasis given by the World Peace Council to the duty imposed on trade unions, political parties, people's organisations, religious bodies and youth to strengthen the cause of peace.

The Indian peace movement has itself recently addressed an appeal to the Indian people's organisations which have till now failed to place the struggle for peace at the forefront of their programmes. I am happy to be able to inform you that the appeal is meeting with considerable response.

The Central Council of the All-India Peasant Association, in a resolution passed last month, has drawn special attention to the failure on its part and has called for holding of peasant conferences for peace at all levels, for a special drive for signatures to the

Pact of Peace, and for full support to the Indian peace movemc
This development is of the most profound significance, for the peasant organisation is naturally one which can carry the mess of the World Peace Council to the largest numbers of the India people.

I am confident that the resolutions of the World Peace Coun will help to broaden and deepen the Indian peace movement at t important juncture in human history.

Question: When the Indian delegates returned from the Prepa
Conference for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, what did report to the Indian people about the Conference?

Answer: Professor D.D. Kosambi, leader of the Indian delega held a press conference immediately after his return to India.
the conference he emphasised the key importance of the Asian a Pacific Peace Conference and also spoke of the evidence he had of the use of germ warfare in Korea and China. Professor Kosam later wrote an article on the Conference which was widely repr in papers supporting the peace movement all over the country.

Another Indian delegate, Mr. Indulal Yagnik, has spoken at public meetings in Bombay and Ahmadabad on the significance of Conference. He, too, has agreed to write for publication a spe appeal to the Indian peasants to support the Conference. Being leader of the peasant movement, the appeal from him will undou meet with great response.

A third delegate, Sardar Gur Bakhsh Singh, has only just ret from China. He has already addressed a public meeting on the Conference in Delhi and is busy preparing two articles for the
He has also agreed to tour the country to popularise the aims
Conference in the month of August.

I may add that all the Indian delegates are also writing a on what they saw in China and particularly the great love for and the struggle against aggression and against inhuman forms warfare being conducted so heroically by the Chinese people.

Question: What preparations are being made by the All-India
Council for the participation in the Asian and Pacific Peace C

Answer: On the initiative of the All-India Peace Council, t
All-India Preparatory Committee for the Conference is being s with its headquarters in Delhi. All important people's organis have been invited to join the Preparatory Committee. In addit leading representative individuals of all viewpoints are being approached to join the Committee. /contd./

We are receiving far more response to the call of the Conference than we ever anticipated. We already have indications that very large numbers of members of Parliament belonging to all parties join the Committee.

The initial task of popularisation of the aims of the Conference has been undertaken through wide-spread publicity. The declaration of the Preparatory Conference at Peking has been published in full by over 20 important papers all over the country. These papers are also carrying a weekly column written by me entitled "Forward to Peking," which gives information regarding the preparations for the Conference. The articles on various aspects of the Conference written by prominent Indians are also to be sent out for publication in the press. At the call of the Bureau of the All-India Peace Council, the forthnight from July 13 to 27 is being specially utilized to collect signatures from leading citizens to the appeal to the Indian Prime Minister to act in favour of peace in Korea and against the use of germ warfare.

This campaign is also being combined with the campaign calling for support for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

From August 3 to 10 the Indian Preparatory Committee is observing the "Asia Week" specifically to popularise the Conference. Reports have been received from various provinces which indicate the wide-spread preparations for the observance of the "Asia Week."

Towards the end of August, sponsoring conferences for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference will be held on a really wide basis in all the provinces leading to the All-India Sponsoring Conference in the beginning of September in the Indian capital.

We have asked the intending delegates to begin collection of funds for their passages from now and also to apply for passports. We are confident of sending a really representative delegation headed by the most important names in all fields of India's political, cultural, economic and social life.

Question: What has been the reaction of the Indian people to the use of germ warfare in Korea and China?

Answer: A feeling of revulsion and horror has swept the country since the first news came of the use of bacteriological weapon by the American forces. Opinions already expressed by the Indians, who have examined the facts for themselves in Peking and elsewhere, have succeeded in confirming the charges made by the Chinese and Korean Governments. /contd/

The Indian people do not find it difficult to believe that the American imperialists have employed this barbaric weapon against the Chinese and Korean peoples.

The All-India Peace Council and other organisations supporting the cause of peace have taken pains to place the facts before the people and counter the lies which the makers of war seek to spread.

The strong sentiments of the Indian people in favour of impartial investigation and punishment of those found guilty have found expression in the proposals by hundreds of thousands of persons in all parts of the country in public meetings and rallies.

That is why the Indian people will warmly welcome the sending of an impartial delegation by the World Peace Council so that the facts may be known and the complete prohibition of germ warfare be brought nearer.

The All-India Peace Council is very conscious of the fact that the campaign against germ warfare has not been as intense as it should be in this country. But we are confident that peace committees and mass organisations will redouble their efforts to make the truth known in the coming weeks.

Question: What is the Indian people's attitude regarding the bombing of the Yalu power plants and Northeast China?

Answer: The bombing of the Yalu power plants has met with universal condemnation among the Indian people.

The Indian Prime Minister has himself come out strongly and repeatedly in unqualified condemnation of the bombing. This in itself is a reflection of the strength of opinion on this question among all sections of the Indian people.

In Bombay, the Peace Council held a public meeting to condemn the Yalu bombings, The intensity of the feelings can be judged from the fact that the hall was packed to suffocation and that stormy cheers broke out when the veteran Indian Gandhiite and pacifist Dr. J.C. Kumarappa called for boycott of American goods as a gesture of protest against the Yalu crimes. The hall rang with slogans of "Boycott American goods" in a way they have never done till now.

The Yalu bombings have increased the sentiments against the American imperialist crimes in Korea very considerably. The Indian newspapers have been practically unanimous in their condemnation

Question: What are the views of the Indian peace movement and the Indian people with regard to the Japanese question? /contd./

Answer: The Indian peace movement has, from its very inception, strongly supported the Japanese people's struggle for peace, freedom and democracy, and has resolutely opposed all attempts to remilitarise Japan and keep it under the control of the American imperialists.

At the Second All-India Peace Congress in May last year, a special resolution was adopted on the Japanese question which condemned the efforts then being made to conclude a separate peace treaty with Japan and to remilitarise Japan.

We believe that the campaign unleached by this resolution contributed considerable measure to the stand taken by the Indian government on the issue of the San Francisco conference and the treaty.

The Indian people have been inspired by the news of the courageous manner in which, during the last few months, the Japanese people have been struggling against the forces of war. Their hands have reached out towards them in solidarity and affection.

There is every reason to believe that the Indian people will respond fully to the call of the World Peace Council resolution "On the struggle against Japanese Remilitarisation, for a Democratic Japan," adopted at the special session in Berlin for a real peace treaty with Japan providing for the withdrawal of all occupation forces and the removal of foreign bases, and for full sovereignty and democratic and peaceful development of the Japanese people.

In conjunction with the preparations for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, a campaign of friendship and solidarity with the Japanese people and for a just solution of the Japanese question will be organised by the Indian peace movement.

INDIAN PEACE MOVEMENT ACTS ON RESOLUTIONS OF WORLD PEACE COUNCIL

New Delhi, July 31 (HSINHUA)- "The resolutions of the World Peace Council will help to broaden and deepen the Indian peace movement at this important juncture in human history," declared the All-India Peace Council in a statement recently.

Hailing the decisions of the extraordinary session of the World Peace Council in Berlin, the statement continues:

"The All-India Peace Council is thoroughly convinced that the resolution on the ending of the war in Korea passed by the World Peace Council with its simple two- point demand - immediate cessation of hostilities by means of signing an armistice based on respect for international law and customs and the ratification and observance of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 - will help the Indian peace movement to draw into its fold large sections of people who have thus far remained outside it.

"The call of Berlin for a real peace treaty to replace the unjust and illegal San Francisco Treaty with Japan will commend itself to all sections of the Indian people who sympathize with the courageous struggle of the Japanese people for their freedom and against the forces of war."

On the German question the statement says: "All Indians eagerly seek a peaceful solution on the basis of agreement between the four great Powers to respect the right of the German people to establish their unity and form a government of their own choice which will negotiate a genuine peace treaty, guaranteeing a sovereign, democratic and peaceful Germany."

In conclusion the statement says: "The All-India Peace Council appeals to all peace committees and all organisations pledged to the cause of peace to do all in their power to popularize and win the support for the historic decisions of the World Peace Council."

The Bengali language weekly "Matamat" in its editorial on July 19 referred to the forthcoming World Peoples Peace Congress at Vienna and the Peace Conference for Asia and the Pacific regions in Peking.

The Matamat writes: "On this occasion, against war and for peace, there must be widespread mass campaigns all over West Bengal. There must be campaigns among the peasants - every peasant must be aroused to oppose war - among the workers, the middle class people, and among every section in towns and villages."

The Matamat concludes: "Take the message of the World Peace Council to every house through this campaign and make it invincible with mass support."

The Urdu language daily "Naya Zamana" of Jullundur, East Punjab, writes under the caption of "Peace Shall Be Victorious":

"The heavy bombings of Korea, the use of napalm bombs, germ bombs, inhuman treatment of the prisoners of war, the bombing of the Yalu River and Chinese Cities, go to prove that American imperialism does not want a truce, and on the contrary wants to extend the war".

The Naya Zamana noted that the leaders of the world peace movement had discussed the dangers arising from the war in Korea and the re-militarisation of Japan.

The Naya Zamana concludes: "Thus all peace fighter should raise their voice that on the issue of the prisoners of war, America must give up her arrogant stand. The issue must be solved in accordance with international agreements. The truce agreement must be signed at once".

DELAYED PEACE DELEGATION FROM COSTA RICA ARRIVES IN PEKING

Peking, August 1 (HSINHUA)- A delegation of four members from Costa Rica to the Preparatory Meeting for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions arrived here on July 31. The delegation was welcomed at the airfield by leading members of the China Peace Committee and of the All-China Federation of Labour. The delegation was delayed en route.

The delegates are: Vital Murillo, Ovidio Salazar, and Sainz, school teachers and Cabazas, a trade unionist.

CEYLON PEACE DELEGATES LEAVE CHINA FOR HOME

Canton, August 1 (HSINHUA)- Rev. U. Saranankara, delegate of Ceylon to the Preparatory Meeting for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, left here for Ceylon today. He was seen off by representatives of the Canton branch of the China Peace Committee and the Preparatory Committee of the Federation of Labour of Kwangtung Province.

Rev. Saranankara, after attending the Preparatory Meeting in Peking went to Berlin to attend the extraordinary session of the World Peace Council which was held from July 1 to 6. He was travelling home by way of China.

KUO MO-JO GREETS "ASIA WEEK" IN INDIA

Peking, August 4 (HSINHUA)- Kuo Mo-jo, Chairman of the Chinese People's Committee for Defending World Peace, greeted "Asia Week" in India which began yesterday in a message sent on August 2 to Romesh Chandra, Secretary of the All-India Peace Council. Mr. Chandra is also Deputy Secretary General of the Preparatory Committee of the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions. The message reads as follows:

"We are happy to know that an 'Asia Week' is to take place from August 3 to 10 and an 'Asia Day' on the 10th for the purpose of developing a broad movement among the Indian people for the defence of peace and making known to them the significance of the convocation of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. Since the return of your delegates from the preparatory conference, you immediately started to take effective steps to develop extensive preparatory work, mobilising national, provincial and local political parties, cultural and social groups and other mass organisations for broad discussion on the conference. Through the activities of 'Asia Week' and 'Asia Day', you are carrying the declaration of the preparatory conference deep into the hearts of the people. This contributes greatly to promoting the preparatory work of the conference and it deserves admiration. We are relating your plans and efforts to China and other countries, and they are being enthusiastically welcomed.

"The warmongers are madly remilitarising Japan, intending to break up the Korean armistice negotiations and stepping up preparations to extend the war. The demand of the peoples in Asia and the Pacific region to save peace becomes stronger daily, so is their confidence in the struggle. If we can only further mobilise the broad masses, unite them, assure the success of the Asian- Pacific Peace Conference and pave the way for the Congress of the Peoples for Peace in December, then the cause of peace will be advanced and peace saved. On behalf of the Chinese people, I wish that you achieve great success in your movement and I send you my sincere fraternal greetings".

PROFESSOR KOSAMBI, VICE-PRESIDENT OF ALL-INDIA PEACE COUNCIL DESCRIBES PREPARATORY PEACE CONFERENCE IN PEKING

Peking, August 6 (HSINHUA)- A lively, informative account of the Preparatory Meeting for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions - that was held in Peking in June - is contained in an article by Professor D.D.Kosambi, Vice-President of the All-India Peace Council that has received wide publicity in India. Professor Kosambi was leader of the Indian delegation to the preparatory meeting and his article was carried in many Indian papers and periodicals.

"The formal opening was most impressive," he writes. "The delegates observed the seriousness of their task from the very outset. In his speech opening the conference and welcoming the delegates, Kuo Mo-jo pointed to the serious position in Asia, the crucial position of Asia and the Pacific region in the world peace problem, the need for solidarity between peoples of the countries represented, the total populations being over 1,600 millions, more than half the world's population."

After outlining the proceedings at the conference, he describes how the manifesto was drawn up. It appears in print as a calm and innocuous document," he says, "but remember that it passed through many radical changes; it wasn't voted in by a majority; every person present finally agreed without reservation that it represented fairly the principles for which he or she stood. There may be some question of phrasing or literary effects; many would have liked to see a shorter declaration, some only of principles, some with more fire; but a great achievement was that all agreed, in the end."

He enumerates some of the different views expressed in the conference and tells how all differences were smoothed out in discussion. "This is the great achievement of our conference," he points out. "They all really agreed ... When one sees the extraordinary divergence in the political and social backgrounds of the delegates, there is no doubt that this is unique even in the annals of the peace movement, though undoubtedly the world peace movement will soon surpass this achievement, having made gigantic strides in the three years of its life.

In the latter part of the article, Professor Kosambi writes of the deep impression made on him by the liberated New China where the peasants and workers have plenty to eat, landlords have disappeared with the Kuomintang, the land has been redivided and people take an active share in governing themselves.

"Most impressive of all," Professor Kosambi declares, "is the dancing. Not state or theatre ballets, but common people's dances in the evenings and on holidays in great public parks: 10,000 waiting outside because the park is filled with 50,000 people dancing. This is spontaneous folkdancing .... People don't dance that way unless they have plenty to eat and find life joyful."

Professor Kosambi writes in conclusion: "Knowing this, one also realises how deep is the desire of the Chinese for peace and friendship, one thing that they ask of their brothers in the rest of the world, and most particularly of India, the land that first gave them the religion of peace."

LIU NING-YI GREETS INDIAN "ASIA WEEK"

Peking, August 8(HSINHUA):- A message of greetings to the Indian peace movement on "Asia Week" which is now being held throughout India was sent by Liu Ning-yi, Vice President of the All-China Federation of Labour, His telegram to Romesh Chandra, Secretary of the All-India Peace Council and Deputy Secretary General of the Indian Preparatory Committee for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, reads:

"At a time when the American imperialists are intentionally dragging out the Korean armistice negotiations, actively rearming Japan and conspiring to extend the Korean war to other parts of Asia, the holding of 'Asia Week' from August 3 to 10 in India will bear great significance and contribute to promoting the peace movement in India and Asia. We hope the broad Indian labouring people will actively participate in "Asia Week' and turn their peaceful aspirations into a strong force to oppose the imperialist war intrigues and defend lasting peace in Asia and the world. I wish you success in your work."

INDIAN PEOPLE MAKING ACTIVE PREPARATIONS FOR COMING ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE.

New Delhi, August 7(HSINHUA):- Active preparations for the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference are being made by the Indian people.

A broadly representative delegation to the coming peace conference in Peking will be elected early in September at a national sponsoring conference under the auspices of the Preparatory Peace Conference Committee.

The preparatory committee reached this decision at its July 30 session in Delhi. Present were pepresentatives from all progressive organisations and many Parliament members from different political parties and groups.

The committee also decided to hold an "Asia Week" from August 3 to 10 and an "Asia Day" on August 10 widely publicising the significance of the coming peace conference.

Over 20 of India's major papers have carried in full the declaration of the Preparatory Meeting for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions. Detailed reports and articles dealing with the preparatory meeting for the peace conference made by delegates to the meeting have drawn great interest and much attention from the Indian people. Prominent persons of various political parties and well-known people's representatives have expressed their intention to support the conference.

INDONESIAN PEOPLE'S PREPARATIONS FOR ASIAN PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 8(HSINHUA):- Under the leadership of the Indonesian National Peace Committee, the Indonesians are actively preparing for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions to take place in Peking next month, states a report from Djakarta.

Representatives of the Indonesian National Peace Committee and other organisations held a meeting on July 27 to set up formally an Indonesian preparatory committee for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions. The preparatory committee elected Sidik Kertapati of the Peasants United Front, member of Parliament, as chairman, Arbain Dungga, businessman, as vice chairman, Zain Nasution, Chairman of the Indonesian National Peace Committee, as general secretary and 19 other members. The preparatory committee has decided to hold peace exhibitions in Indonesia during the period of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

The Indonesian National Peace Committee also elected religious leader Uktolseja to participate in the preparatory work of the peace conference. He left Djakarta on July 5 and arrived in Peking on the 20th.

SOONG CHING-LING GREETS ROMESH CHANDRA ON INDIAN ASIA WEEK

Peking, August 9(HSINHUA):- Soong Ching-ling has sent the following message to Romesh Chandra, Secretary of the All-India Peace Council Secretariat, congratulating him on "Asia Week" now being held throughout India:

"Please accept the sincerest wishes of the Chinese people and myself personally for immense success in your Asia Week rally. We look upon it as a crucial event in the heightening strife for world peace. It is urgent that all peoples take such constructive steps this time when the threat to our well-being daily mounts. The Indian people, as the Chinese and all Asian peoples, have great experience in struggling against the perpetrators of such threats. If we can muster our full power at this time, if we can make the securing of peace the immediate task of our hundreds of millions, if we can demonstrate our demand for nothing less than the ceaseing of all aggression and negotiation among all nations no matter how they differ, we will have accomplished a major historic feat. We will have created an indestructible bastion for peace. Success to the Indian people's Asia Week! On to the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions!"

A message of greetings has been sent to the Indian Preparatory Committee for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference by the All-China Democratic Women's Federation. "General mobilisation of all peace-loving Indians for participation in the movement to defend peace in Asia," the message says in part, "will advance the peace movement of the Asian people."

ACTIVE PREPARATIONS FOR ASIAN PEACE CONFERENCE IN VIET NAM

Peking, August 9(HSINHUA):- Active preparations for the forthcoming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference and the December Peace Congress of the Peoples are underway in Viet Nam, states a Viet Nam News Agency report.

At an enlarged meeting of the Standing Committee of the Viet Nam Peace Committee on July 24 and 25, it was decided to publicise widely the resolutions and decisions of the recent Berlin session of the World Peace Council and the Preparatory Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

A delegation composed of 12 combat and labor heroes, and representatives of people in other walks of life, will be sent to the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, the conference decided. Xuan Thuy, President of the Viet Nam Journalists Association was appointed Viet Nam's representative to the Preparatory Committee of the Peace Conference.

The enlarged meeting was attended by Dr. Le Dinh Tham, Chairman of the Viet Nam Peace Committee, Ton Duc Thang and Father Pham Ba Truc, President and Vice President of the Standing Committee of the Viet Nam National Assembly, representative of the Viet Nam Lao and Cambodia Liaison Committee, representatives of the Lien Viet Front, the Viet Nam Peace Committee, the Viet Nam People's Army, political parties, people's organisations and religious circles and public figures.

JAPAN-CHINA FRIENDSHIP ASSOCIATION TO SEND DELEGATES TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 9(HSINHUA):- The Japan-China Friendship Association has decided to send delegates to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference to be held here next month, states a message to the Chinese people just arrived from the Association.

Written on July 7, the 15th anniversary of Japan's aggressive war against China, the letter begins with the reassurance of the Association's resolve to push forward with the movement for friendship between the two nations. It continues:

"Your cordiality and sympathy with the Japanese people can be fully seen from the recent Sino-Japanese Trade Agreement.

"A clear expression of the Japanese people's support for this agreement and their desire for its implementation is shown in the enthusiastic welcome accorded our Association's Council members Messrs. Kei Hoashi and Kisuke Miyagoshi since their return on July 1, and in requests, made from Hokkaido in the north down to Kyushu in the south, to hear their reports. Our office has a stack of telegrams and letters from all parts of this country asking that meetings be called to hear their reports. This signifies not only the Japanese people's eager hopes for Sino-Japanese trade, but also their warm desire for friendship and peace between Japan and China. (contd.)

"But much stands ~~in the way~~ of this desire. For example, instead of establishing normal relations ~~as neighbours, with your People's~~ Government which represents the 470 million people, Japan concluded a 'Japanese-Chinese treaty' with the fugitive regime in Taiwan. The Japanese workers delegates, invited by your trade unions to attend the May Day celebrations, were denied passports and thrown into goal.

"These facts are closely connected with the attempt to revive militarism, which, though the blood of the 'July 7th' tragedy is fresh as yet, is creating new terror and disaster in Japan as well as in other parts of Asia. We, the Japanese people, will not permit a recurrence of the 'July 7th' tragedy. We must insist on peace and friendship between Japan and China, and must fight unswervingly against the drift towards war and ruination.

"We have learned the details of the Preparatory Conference for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. The conference's aim for peace, friendship and elimination of the threat of war, based on mutual respect and friendship and irrespective of differences in religious belief or political views, completely coincides with the aspirations of our Association.

"The Standing Council of the Association supports this peace conference and has decided to send delegates to it. These delegates will attend in the cause of peace and friendship, and will raise questions concerning Japan and China."

CEYLON PEACE PARTISANS DECLARATION IN SUPPORT OF ASIAN PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 9(HSINHUA):- A broad sponsoring committee has been set up by the Ceylon peace fighters to prepare for the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference in Peking this September, states a report from Colombo.

Stressing the necessity for and significance of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, the sponsoring committee has issued a declaration calling on the people of Ceylon to give their active support to the conference.

The declaration was signed by:

Reverend D. Siri Pannasara Thero, Principal of Vidyalankara Privena (Centre of Buddhist Learning) and Chief High Priest (Buddhist) of Colombo and Chilaw;

Reverend Hedipannala Pannaloka Thero, Vice Principal of Vidyalankara Privena;

Reverend Nattandiya Pannakara Thero;

Reverend A.A. Gogerly and Reverend H.H. Keuneman - Christian priests;

Pieter Keuneman, M.P., President of the Ceylon Trade Union Federation and member of the World Peace Council;

Dr. N.M. Perera, M.P. and President of the Ceylon Federation of Labour;

Leslie Goonewardene, General Secretary of the Lanka Samasamaja Party;

Dr. E.M.V. Naganathan;

Harold Peris;

Stanley de Zoysa;

T.B. Illangaratne;

S.D. Bandaranake, M.P. and President of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party Youth League;

Mrs. Tej Gunawardene;

Tissa Wijeyaratne;

K. Vaikunthavasagam -editor of the People's Voice;

Karl Kasman; Dr. Kumaran - ex-Mayor of Colombo and N. Sanmugathasan, Vice President of the Ceylon Trade Union Federation.

Ceylon's peace fighters have decided to hold mass rallies in August to publicise the peace conference and win support for it. At these rallies, delegates representing wide sections of the people will be elected to participate in the conference.

PREPARATIONS IN AUSTRALIA AND PAKISTAN FOR ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 10 (HSINHUA)- There is considerable activity in Australia and Pakistan in preparation for the coming Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions which will be held in Peking in September.

On his return home, Dr. J.W. Burton, who headed the Australian delegation to the preparatory meeting in June, immediately called for the setting up of a national committee to select delegates to represent all sections of the community in Australia. Great interest has been aroused on the question of the peace conference and widespread discussions have been going on around it. Enthusiasm and interest is higher than at any time since the plebiscite last year. According to a report in the Sydney Tribune, the Pacific Peace Committee of Australia resolved on June 29 to set up a national initiative committee for the selection of delegates to attend the forthcoming peace conference in Peking.

From Karachi comes a report that the executive of the Pakistan Peace Committee in Karachi, after hearing the report made by M.A. Shakoor, Pakistan delegate to the preparatory meeting for the coming Peace Conference, fully endorsed the declaration and proposals adopted at the prepararory meeting.

On August 3, the Pakistan Peace Committee met to discuss publicity work in relation to the participation in the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions and the selection of delegates. A press conference was held by the peace committee on August 4 at which M.A. Shakoor reported on the preparatory meeting held in Peking in June.

JAPANESE CULTURAL WORKERS PLEDGE TO SEND DELEGATES TO ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 10 (HSINHUA)- "Whatever the obstruction, we will send our cultural delegates to Peking to attend the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions", pledges a letter agreed on at a forum on July 6, held by some 40 noted Japanese cultural figures to mark the 15th anniversary of the Lukouchiao (Marco Polo bridge) Incident on July 7 1937, "states a delyed Tokyo report.

Those present included Sachio Iwamura, leading member of the China Research Institute, Ozawa Masamoto of the Japan- China Friendship Association, Yoichi Fukushima, agronomist, Shigeru Matsuyama and Kazuo Nakao, secretaries of Tomi Kora and Kisuke Miyagoshi, Japanese delegates who signed the Sino-Japanese Trade Agreement in Peking. Kazuo Nakao reported on the Agreement at the forum.

The letter expresses the hope that peaceful cultural exchange will be developed between Japan and China and adds, "We are endeavouring to consolidate cooperation between the peoples of Japan and China."

Referring to the Sino-Japanese Trade Agreement, the letter continues: "We cannot but feel enraged towards the reactionary Japanese Government for repaying the great friendship of the Chinese people by concluding a "Peace Treaty" with the defunct regime now taking refuge in Taiwan. The letter also pledges every effort of Japanese cultural circles to prevent actions directed against China and her people.

ELECTION OF DELEGATES FOR ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE THROUGHOUT JAPAN

Peking, August 12 (HSINHUA)- Opposition to the revival of Japanese militarism, abolition of the San Francisco "Peace Treaty" and the U.S.-Japan "Security Pact" and demand for an over-all peace are among the five proposals which the Japanese National Peace Committee will submit to the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference in Peking, says a Tokyo report.

The Committee has decided to direct the peace movement along these lines. Special emphasis will be laid on opposing rearmament and conscription, promoting trade with China and the Soviet Union and urging a successful settlement of the armistice talks in Korea.

A nationwide campaign is spreading for election of delegates to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. "Delegates are to be elected from national organisations, from among distinguidhed personages and from various districts following discussion of the Conference in all localities among various organisations and trades"; is one of the leads given by the National Peace Committee in connection with the all Japan "Peace Month" which ends on August 15.

Delegates have already been elected in many places. Kumao Terada, Chairman of the Okayama branch of the National Peace Committee, Kaneichi Yoshioka, agronomist, were elected at a peace meeting held on June 28, under the auspices of the Okayama Peace Conference Preparatory Committee, which was attended by Ikua Oyama, noted peace partisan. The Committee was set up on the intiative of Kumao Terada, and local priests, county councillors, businessmen and Trade Union leaders.

Nagai, Chairman of the Okayama Youth Congress, will attend the peace conference on behalf of the Japanese peasant youth.

Other delegates already elected include: Seji Tanaka of the Kanagawa Trade Union Council, Takahashi of the Ikegai iron factory, Kusunoki of the Kawasaki branch of the National Peace Committee and Suzuki of the Yokohama Minseidan.

At its June 30 session, the Executive Committee of the National Trade Union Federation of Government Employees decided to give support and send delegates to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. It also included among its present tasks opposition to the militarisation and colonialisation of government organisation and the demand for abolition of the San Francisco "Peace Treaty", the U.S.-Japan "Securiry Pact" and "Administrative Agreement."

INDONESIAN PEOPLE WANT PEACE AND ABHOR WAR - REV. OKTOLSEJA IN PEOPLE'S DAILY

Peking, August 13 (HSINHUA) - The Indonesian delegate to the Preparatory Committee of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference in Peking, Reverend Oktolseja, in an interview appearing in today's Peking People's Daily said, "The convocation of the peace conference will have great influence on the struggle for peace in Asia and the rest of the world."

"The broad masses of Indonesian people want peace and abhor war, because they have personally experienced the calamities created by the imperialist policy of armament expansion and war preparations. They strongly oppose acceptance of the U.S. 'military aid' and 'embargo' policy as well as the recent 'Mutual Security Act' which they know quite well to be nothing but steps in the U.S. imperialist war preparations," he continued.

The preparatory meeting held in June in Peking drew much public attention in Indonesia, and the people are greatly interested in the coming peace conference, Reverend Oktolseja stated. The report on the preparatory meeting made by Suwarti, delegate to the meeting, he declared, has been warmly received by the people. "The declaration made by the preparatory meeting is a succinct expression of the long-cherished demand and desire for peace of the Indonesian people," Reverend Oktolseja pointed out, "I as a Christian, would say that this desire for peace is also the will of God," he stated.

Asked about the preparatory work for the conference in Indonesia, he said, "The Indonesia National Peace Committee is giving wide publicity to the significance of the peace conference and actively preparing for election of delegates to it."

"The peace organisation has great influence among the people. There are peace committee branches even in many small villages. There, the people use banners of peace to decorate their wedding halls, The strength of peace is more powerful than that of its persecutors in Indonesia.

"But this does not mean that there are no difficulties. I myself met with strong opposition and obstruction from many Church leaders who discharged me from my post in the church of North Sumatra for my coming to Peking. But the people wanted me to come. 90 percent of the Christians of North Sumatra support me. For truth, and to fulfil the desire of the people, I have not given in, I have come at last, and I believe that our people will tide over all difficulties and obstacles to help their delegates attend the conference in Peking."

The delegate expressed full confidence in the coming conference, through which, he said, "the peace movement will be further developed and people of the Asian and Pacific countries will unite to save peace and triumph over the menace of war."

"Through this conference, I hope that the Korean war will be brought to an early end, the rearmament of Japan checked and conflicts in Viet Nam, Malaya and other places be reasonably settled, so that the people of these countries can live in peace," he concluded.

PREPARATIONS FOR ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE UNDER WAY IN BURMA

Peking, August 13 (HSINHUA):- Preparations for the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference are under way in Burma, according to a report from Rangoon.

The Burma Peace Committee has elected U Tun Aung Gyaw, Vice-President of the Burma Peace Committee and President of the All-Burma Association of Civil Service Workers, as a delegate to help in preparatory work in Peking and a delegation made up of people drawn from all walks of life is to be formed this month to attend the conference.

Peace campaigning has also increased in intensify. Warm support is given by the people of Burma to the campaign for collection of signatures for the conclusion of the Five Power Peace Pact, against Japanese rearmament and the unilateral peace treaty with Japan and for the winning of peace, which the Burma Peace Committee launched in mid-July following the All-Burma Peace Congress. A peace appeal for Burma published by the peace committee in connection with the campaign urges that: "people throughout Burma should unite to build up the country, rid themselves of all enemies who attempt to convert Burma into a battlefield, and join hands with all other peace-loving people to stop the warmakers."

VIGOROUS PREPARATIONS IN NORTH KOREA FOR ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Pyongyang, August 13 (HSINHUA) - Vigorous preparations are being made by the Korean people to take part in the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference scheduled to open in Peking next month.

The Korean National Peace Committee is convening a national peace conference late this month to elect the Korean delegation to the Peking conference.

Since last June, when it was decided to publicise the significance of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, peace committees in factories, villages, schools and other organisations have held discussions around the declaration of the Preparatory Meeting for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference and the report made by Pak Cheng Ai, who headed the Korean delegation to the meeting. Local newspapers have featured articles on the development of the peace movement in various countries of Asia and the Pacific area.

From the widespread interest aroused, it is clear the Korean people welcome the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. Their discussions stress their determination to carry on the struggle for a peaceful settlement of the Korean question on a fair and reasonable basis, and for peace in Asia and the whole world.

5,000 JAPANESE PEOPLE HELD RALLY IN TOKYO IN DEFENCE OF PEACE

Peking, August 14 (HSINHUA) - 5,000 Japanese people came together at an in-door mass meeting in the Tokyo skating rink on June 25, that day which had been dedicated as a day of active struggle in defence of peace according to a belated report from Tokyo. They adopted resolutions demanding the immediate cessation of the Korean war and banning of germ warfare in Korea. They decided to promote participation in the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference and to undertake a relief campaign for the Korean people suffering under war.

This rally was called in response to the appeal of the World Federation of Trade Unions. It was initiated by the WFTU Liaison Bureau in Japan and was sponsored by the Congress of Industrial Unions of Japan, the Japanese National Peace Committee, the Patriotic Over-all Peace Movement Council, the National Relief Association of Japan, the Japan-USSR Friendship Association, the Japanese Stage Artists Group, and the United Democratic Front of Korean Residents in Japan. It showed not only the staunch support of the organised Japanese working class for peace, but the backing among other sections of Japanese people.

Among other resolutions adopted at the meeting was one to develop the movement for implementation of the 60,000,000 pound sterling Sino-Japanese Trade Agreement.

Solidarity messages from the World Federation of Trade Unions, the All-China Federation of Labour, the Federation of Trade Unions of Korea and the Women's International Democratic Federation were read at the meeting and received with enthusiasm.

INDONESIAN AND COSTA RICAN PEACE DELEGATES VISIT SHANGHAI

Shanghai, August 15 (HSINHUA) - Indonesian and Costa Rican delegates to the Preparatory Meeting for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions arrived here from Peking for a visit. They are Oktolseja from Indonesia and Vital Murillo, Ovidio Salazar, Sainz and Cabazas from Costa Rica. The delegates were met at the station by the representatives from the East China and Shanghai branches of the China Peace Committee.

INTERVIEW WITH COSTA RICAN PEACE DELEGATES

Peking, August 15 (HSINHUA):- Special correspondent - The Costa Rican peace delegates now in Peking have expressed their full support to the declaration of the Preparatory Meeting for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions and its proposals in an exclusive interview here.

The delegates are Ovidio Salazar, Sainz, Cabazas and Vital Murillo. They were unable to attend the preparatory meeting because of delay en route and arrived in Peking on July 31. They will attend the coming peace conference in Peking.

The following are their answers to questions by this correspondent.

Question: What are your views on the declaration of the Preparatory Meeting for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions and the proposals for its preparations?

Answers:

Ovidio Salazar: The views expressed in the declaration and proposals are correct because they were worked out after repeated discussions by the preparatory conference. They are acceptable.

Murillo: The resolution points out the way to universal peace. This is the desire of all sensible persons throughout the world.

Sainz: The declaration demonstrates the ardent desire for peace of people of different countries. Eduardo Mora Valverde who arrived in Peking earlier than we did and added his name to the declaration, has signed it on behalf of the people of Costa Rica.

Cabazas: The declaration represents the will and interests of people of different countries. It will lead to the strengthening of peace. As a workers' delegate, I wholeheartedly endorse the signing by Eduardo Mora Valverde.

Question: What are the present developments of the peace movement in your country?

Answers:

Ovidio Salazar: The peace movement, which is illegal in Costa Rica, is advancing and being carried deep into the broad masses of the people through the efforts of the working youth. The police are supp suppressing publicity for peace, but slogans calling on the people to join the peace movement can be seen even on cars and walls. For five years there was no May Day demonstrations in Costa Rica, but on May Day this year people paraded, demanding peace and the restorating of the workers' day.

Sainz: The peace movement goes deeper among the working people in Costa Rica than among other sections of the people, the intellectuals are taking an active part in it too. Of the approximately one million people in the country, 50,000 have signed the peace appeal. Literature on the peace movement frequently appeared in publications of women, youth and university students organisations. In every peace organisation, women are active workers and volunteer to sell books and papers for peace.

Cabazas: The Costa Rican Peace Committee, trade unions, women's and revolutionary youth organisations are all working for peace. The militant peace movement is led by the Independent Federation of Workers which presents peace as the prime issue at all meetings or conferences. Workers participating in the peace movement are subject to constant persecution. Although the workers encounter difficulty for reading literature on the peace movement, they are bringing the movement into the heart of the peasantry. Many people took part in the May Day demonstration this year and their slogans are all for peace. The trade unions held many commemoration meetings on the second anniversary of the Korean war.

Vital Murillo: The intellectuals in Costa Rica live in poverty. Most of them are school teachers and many participated in the peace movement. Rafael Angel Lluvere, a noted teacher of mathematics, who was dismissed for his participation in the peace movement, still continues to promote the movement. Other distinguished intellectuals have also taken part in the peace movement. Catholics in Costa Rica are sympathetic with peace. I am a Catholic and I am for peace. Wherever peace can be secured, it should have the support of humanity.

Question: What do you expect from the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference this fall?

Answers:

Salazar: I hope that peace can be established throughout the world. No peace means no progress. On my way to China from Costa Rica I passed many places. Here in China, I have seen that peace is in the making. A peace conference which will be called in a peaceful atmosphere is helpful to the cause of world peace.

Murillo: A peace conference called by delegates chosen from the people of honour and conscience will have great influence.

Cabazas: I hope and believe that the peace conference will take place in an atmosphere of international friendship and that discussions will be conducted in a free and democratic manner by the delegates. Resolutions thus drawn up will be in the best interest of the struggle for peace.

Sainz: The peace conference will make people realise the danger of the Korean war and enable them to understand the gravity of the Japanese question. Ending the Korean war is a safeguard for world peace.

"ASIA WEEK" OBSERVED THROUGHOUT INDIA

New Delhi, August 15 /HSINHUA/:- "Asia Week" was observed throughout India from August 3 to 10 in response to a call issued by the All-India Peace Council in preparation for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

In Calcutta, thousands of citizens attended public meetings during the week. The West Bengal Committee of the Indian Communist Party appealed to the people to make "Asia Week" a success and led in house to house propaganda work, group meetings, public meetings and parades.

Mass organisations like the West Bengal Provincial Trade Union Congress, the West Bengal Provincial Peasants Union and Women's Self Defence League appealed to their members and others to give wholehearted support to "Asia Week" and to play an active part in it.

On August 4, the West Bengal Preparatory Committee organised a symposium on the issues of the Korean war, war preparations in Southeast Asia and bacteriological and chemical warfare. A public meeting on August 8, at which messages were received from Kuo Mo-jo, Chairman of the China Peace Committee, and other countries wishing "Asia Week" success, passed a resolution in favour of ending of wars in Asia and for discussing of ways and means to end these wars at the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference in Peking.

Typical of local peace activities was the forming of a peace committee in Manicktola area of Calcutta on August 8 at which 50 prominent citizens of the locality participated. This committee took on the task of publicising the message of the Peking Peace Conference to every house in that area.

"Asia Week" was also observed in the industrial area of Budge, Batangar and other industrial centres of West Bengal and in various districts, towns and rural areas.

In Bombay, a public meeting was held on August 7 under the auspices of the Bombay Peace Committee. Some 500 citizens packed the hall. Recordings of the confessions of American prisoners of war on "evidence of germ warfare" were played over. Professor D. Kosambi, Vice-Chairman of the All-India Peace Council, who presided over the meeting said that the Chinese people were leading a very peaceful and prosperous life and that builders of New China had changed the very nature of man."The Chinese people want only one thing - to be left undisturbed to shape their own destiny," he stressed.

Dr. Mulk Raj Anand, Vice-Chairman of the All-India Peace Council said that the Pacific Pact was meant to tighten the chain of slavery around the neck of Asia. /contd./

Madame Kumudiini Mehta, a fighter of peace, announced that reports reaching the office of the All-India Peace Council showed the enthusiastic participation in "Asia Week" throughout the country.

In East Punjub state, "Asia Week" coincided with the preparation for the 3rd All-India Peace Congress to be held at Jullundur from September 12 to 14. In Jullundur, a meeting of leading intellectuals, held on August 7 in the local town hall, was attended by 250 persons. It was addressed by Sardar Gurbux Singh, Vice-Chairman of the All-India Peace Council, and Romesh Chandra, Deputy Secretary General of the Preparatory Committee for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

It was followed by a mass meeting, attended by 2,500 Jullundur citizens, the same night at which Sardar Gurbux Singh explained the significance of the declaration of the Peking preparatory conference.

"Asia Week" was observed throughout the Amritsar district by meetings and rallies in rural areas and in Amritsar city itself. Sardar Gurbux Singh addressed three meetings in Amritsar city where he pointed out that "the people of China love and respect the Indian people."

"Asia Week" was also observed in many other urban centres such as Ludhiana, Phillaur, Hoshiarpur, Ferozepore, Moga, Ambala, and in many rural areas.

At a meeting of the Assam Peace Council held on August 3, the council appealed for collection of signatures on the Five Power Peace Pact and for forming of peace committees wherever possible. It was decided that the last week of August should be observed as "special peace efforts week" in Assam.

In Pepsu, a series of district peace conferences are being held throughout the state, in preparation for the Pepsu Provincial Peace Convention to be held on August 31. "Asia Week" activities were sponsored during these conferences.

In Bihar, a number of district peace conferences are now under way in preparation for the Bihar Provincial Peace Conference at Gaya on August 16 and 17. Several of these - in Muzaffarpur, Bhagalpur Monghoyr and Patna district - were held during "Asia Week". Pandit Sundarlal, member of the All-India Peace Council, who is touring the province, presided over several of these conferences.

In Uttar Pradesh, during "Asia Week" intensive preparatory work was carried out for the Uttar Pradesh Provincial Peace Conference to be held at Lucknow on August 23 and 24 under the presidency of Dr. S.D. Kitchlow, President of the All-India Peace Council.

VIET NAM PEOPLE CALLED ON TO SUPPORT ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 16 /HSINHUA/:- A message calling on the Viet Nam people to support the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference to be held in Peking in September has been issued by Ton Buc Thang, President of the National Committee of Lien Viet National United Front and Le Dinh Than, Chairman of the Viet Nam Peace Committee.

It declares:"Peace in Asia and the Pacific is seriously menaced by the policy of aggressive war which the imperialist bloc, headed by the United States, is frenziedly stepping up. The holding of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference is very timely.

"The Asian and Pacific Peace Conference will make a tremendous contribution to the world peace movement and the struggle for national independence. The people of Viet Nam welcome this peace gathering with all their heart."

After giving an account of the preparations in Viet Nam for the coming peace conference, the message calls on all Viet Nam peace fighters and people's organisations within the Lien Viet National United Front to carry on extensive publicity work among the people on the significance of this peace gathering and asks people of all strata to support the conference.

In conclusion the message says:"We firmly believe that the peace forces in Asia and the Pacific, united with those in other parts of the world, will shatter the war schemes of the imperialist bloc and its lackeys. Due to the determination of the Viet Nam people, led by President Ho Chi Minh, to carry on the long-drawn resistance and to the cemented solidarity of the Viet Nam, Pathet Lao and Khmer peoples, we are certain to wipe out the French colonialists, defeat the American interventionists and win complete independence for the three peoples, thereby contributing to the cause of world peace."

THAILAND PEACE COMMITTEE PREPARES FOR ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 18 /HSINHUA/:- The Thailand Peace Committee is actively preparing for the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, states a Bangkok report.

Dr. Charern Ferbsang, President of the Thailand Peace Committee, was elected the committee's delegate to the Thailand Preparatory Committee for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. Thao Thai, a Bangkok newspaper, reports that Charern Ferbsang has written to the press announcing that a meeting will be held in Bangkok by the Thailand Peace Committee in August to elect delegates to the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference and discuss proposals to be submitted to the conference. In order to have a wide exchange of views, people from all strata and different organisations will be invited to this meeting.

YERSHOVA, VICE CHAIRMAN OF SOVIET PEACE COMMITTEE ON VIEWS OF SOVIET PEOPLE TOWARDS ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Moscow, August 16(HSINHUA):- Special correspondent - "The Soviet people are vitally interested in the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference," declared T. Yershova, Vice Chairman of the Soviet Peace Committee, in an exclusive interview to this correspondent this week on the views of the Soviet people towards the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. She continued:

This conference is an important milestone in expanding and strengthening the international movement in defense of peace. Every action which is directed at strengthening the sacred cause of peace is warmly welcomed by the Soviet people.

The Soviet people love peace above all things. They want no war. They threaten no one and intend to attack no one. Our people put all their heart in peaceful construction and the consolidation of the strength of their homeland because they know that the stronger the Soviet Union, the more vigorous the cause of world peace.

Brought up in proletarian spirit of internationalism led by Lenin and Stalin, the Soviet people respect the right and sovereignty of other peoples, and at all times are desirous of being on peaceful and friendly terms with people of all other countries. It is for this reason that the Soviet people, as well as all peace and freedom loving people the world over, are bitterly opposed to the American imperialist aggressive policy of enslaving people, in particular, people of the countries in the Asian and Pacific regions, with the aim of dragging them into a new world war. That is why the Soviet people warmly support the just fight of the peoples in the Asian and Pacific regions against foreign occupation, against the use of these people and the wealth of their countries to start a new world war, and for national independence and sovereignty of their countries.

The Soviet people support the declaration of the Peking Preparatory Meeting for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions. The forthcoming peace conference will discuss the question of Korea and that of Japan.

The Soviet people have profound sympathy for and pay high tribute to the Korean people's heroic fight for independence and the achievements of New China's glorious sons and daughters in rendering selfless, fraternal assistance to the Korean people in their just cause. The manner in which our people are responding to the fight of the Korean people can be judged from our press. Throughout the Soviet Union, meetings, big and small, have taken place in which the Soviet people have registered their great indignation and protest against the American aggressors' bloody terror in Korea, against their use of germ weapons in Korea and China, against the shocking torment and torture inflicted on prisoners of war on Koje Island and at Pusan. With their wanton bombing of non-military targets in Korea and China, with their bombing of Pyongyang and other North Korean cities to rubble, (contd.)

with their destruction of Korea's cultural treasures, the American aggressors have made it clear to the world that the war instigators want no international law of any kind, no international agreement or convention.

The Soviet Peace Committee daily receives hundreds of letters from workers, collective farmers, stuuents and housewives in the USSR. They are protesting against the American aggressors' bestial atrocities in Korea and demanding that the Korean question be settled in accordance with the resolution adopted at the extraordinary session of the World Peace Council in Berlin.

In a letter to the Soviet Peace Committee, the workers, both men and women, of a paper manufacturing plant in the Karelo-Finnish Soviet Socialist Republic, have written: "We have assembled to join the appeal of the world's millions of progressive people to condemn the American militarists' new atrocities in POW camps in Korea. American warlords' bloodthirsty outrages have no limits. When we hear of the incidents on Koje Island, the indignation of everyone of us knows no bounds. American warlords are powerless to bring the heroic Korean people to their knees, and so, vent their anger on the defenceless POWs. The American aggressors have been caught redhanded. They cannot escape judgement by people. Peaceful people will stay the bloodstained hands of the criminals."

This is the voice of all Soviet people. They therefore support the raising of the question of a peaceful settlement of the Korean war in the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

The problem of Japan is of great importance to our people. Japan was an ally of Hitlerite Germany in the Second World War and brought tremendous losses to the Soviet Union and China. To make Japan a democratic and peace-loving country instead of a militaristic one is therefore of utmost concern to the Soviet people. They enthusiastically support the resolution of the World Peace Council opposing Japanese remilitarisation and urging a democratic Japan. They also support the struggle of the Japanese people against the treacherous, unjust and unilateral San Francisco "peace" treaty and the socalled Japan-U.S. Administrative Agreement, which have been forced on the Japanese people and which jeopardise their best interests and their desire to live in peace side by side with peoples of other countries. The fight for an overall just peace treaty signed by all nations concerned is mounting everywhere.

To enslave the peoples of other countries, the American imperialists are at present trying to set up a Pacific alliance, as an instrument for a new war. They have openly stated that the Pacific pact would help them suppress the national liberation movement in Asian and Pacific countries. But the peoples of these countries have different ideas. They are taking an active part in the struggle against the aggressive plans of the American interventionists, and their struggle for independence has the profound sympathy of the Soviet people. Among the subjects slated for discussion at the coming peace conference is the question of strengthening economic and cultural cooperation among the Asian and Pacific countries. The Soviet people always stand for the strengthening of economic and cultural ties with other nations, including Asian and Pacific nations, on the basis of mutual benefit and respect for each other's independence and sovereignty. Peoples of the world, like the people of this country, are indignant at the American policy of economic discrimination, embargo and blockade against China and other countries.

The Soviet people want economic cooperation and cultural intercourse among all peoples. This was borne out by the International Economic Conference recently held in Moscow.

All the items on the agenda of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference are being widely discussed in the press and broadcasts as well as at meetings. The Republics in the Central Asian portion of the Soviet Union take a particular interest in these questions. In his report to the Soviet Peace Committee, Hodjaev, Chairman of the Peace Committee of the Uzbek Republic said that in his Republic, meetings were held and reports made in many collective farms and factories on the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. As a participant in its preparatory meeting in Peking, he has reported on the work of the preparatory meeting at scores of meetings and has outlined the coming peace conference. An article by him on this question appeared in Trud not so long ago.

Biologist Ivan Glushenko, Corresponding Academician of the USSR Academy of Sciences, who took part in the preparatory meeting, has made broadcasts about the work of the preparatory meeting and the coming Asian and Pacific Peace Conference in September.

Many members of the Soviet Peace Committee have written commentaries in the press and made broadcasts.

The Soviet people are greatly interested in how other countries are preparing for the peace conference. Peace partisans in our country are very interested in "Asia Week", organised by the All-India Peace Council during which preparatory work was done for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. On behalf of the Soviet Peace Committee, Nikolai Tikhonov has sent greetings to the All-India Peace Council.

The great work done by different countries for this peace conference proves that peace defenders regard this conference as an important affair. It will help curb the frenzied war instigators and will prevent the carrying out of their criminal plans. The Soviet people, together with all peace-loving people in other parts of the world, will contribute their utmost to strengthen peace and prevent a new war.

WORLD PEACE COUNCIL CALLS ON NATIONAL COMMITTEES TO STRIVE FOR SUCCESS OF ASIAN AND PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE

Peking, August 17 (HSINHUA) - The Secretariat of the World Peace Council has addressed a letter to the peace committees of various nations participating in the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

The letter points out that all peace-loving peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions, as well as those of the rest of the world are expressing their ardent support for the achievements made by the Peking Preparatory Meeting of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference.

Preparatory work in various countries has been further developed, based upon the reports about the preparatory meeting made by the delegates, the message declares.

To work for peace in Asia and the Pacific, it states , is an important part in the work for world peace. The success of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference will greatly help the preparatory work for the Congress of the Peoples for Peace to be held in December. The message adds, "The World Peace Council earnestly hopes that you will exert maximum efforts to push forward and organise the convocation of the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. We are willing to cooperate with you and jointly strive for the success of the conference."

PUBLIC MEETING IN MADRAS ON CLOSING DAY OF ASIAN WEEK

New Delhi, August 18 (HSINHUA) - A public meeting was held in Madras Triplicane Beach on August 10, the concluding day of the Asia Week, under the auspices of the Madras Peace Committee.

K. Subramanyam, famous South Indian film director presiding over the meeting, said that the peace movement was a broad movement of the people, and all sections of people, irrespective of party or religion, must join it. Recalling his visit to the Soviet Union, he said that he was much impressed by the tremendous urge of the Soviet people to preserve peace in the world.

He called upon the Indian people to strengthen the peace movement and fight for peace in Asia and the world.

Speaking on the occasion, Ajoy Kumar Ghosh, General Secretary of the Indian Communist Party, said that war in any part of the world would mean suffering for people of the entire world. He said that it was due to the aggressive policy pursued by the vested interests of one nation, trying to dominate another nation and to exploit the people of another country. He said that it was the British imperialist interests which were fighting against the liberation movement of the Malayan people, the French vested interests against the people of Viet Nam, and the American monopoly interests which had unleashed the most brutal war in Korea.

Narayan Doraikannu, editor of a Tamil language journal, said that it was the imperialists who were responsible for the war in Korea and other places and it was the duty of the Indian people to play an important part in the preservation of peace.

He referred to the coming Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions and the 3rd All-Indian Peace Congress to be held in Jullundur, East Punjab, and said that the people of Madras should send their representatives to these peace gatherings and support the cause of world peace.

T. Jayadevan and Hanumantha Rao of the Students Federation also addressed the meeting. One of the two resolutions passed by the meeting stated: "This meeting of the citizens of Madras greets the forthcoming Asian and Pacific Regions Peace Conference."

PEACE CONFERENCE OF MADRAS CITY TO BE HELD ON AUGUST 31

New Delhi, August 19 (HSINHUA) - A conference of peace-loving citizens of Madras City will be held on August 31 by the Peace Committee of Madras, it was learned today.

The purpose of the conference, according to a statement issued by the Peace Committee, is to popularise the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions which will be convened in Peking in September. The statement declared that the conference in Peking will be an event of great international significance and marks a new and higher stage in the struggle of the 1,600 million people of the countries of Asia and the Pacific regions for peace and a happy life.

The statement added that the wars already raging in Asia and the imperialists' "preparations for war elsewhere - the remilitarisation of Japan and West Germany, the stockpiling of essential commodities, the gearing of production to war purposes - all these are intensifying our problems, most of all, the problem of food."

"We appeal to all citizens to support the Madras Peace Conference and make it a resounding success," the statement concluded.

PEACE COMMITTEES TO BE ESTABLISHED IN WEST PUNJAB, PAKISTAN

New Delhi, August 19 (HSINHUA) - Peace committees will be established in various districts of West Punjab, Pakistan. This was decided at a meeting of the executive committee of the Lahore Peace Committee on August 8.

It was also decided that President and General Secretary of the Lahore Peace Committee, Ghulam Mohammed Khan and Syed Muttalab Faridabadi, should tour the whole province in connection with the work.

The Lahore Peace Committee adopted a resolution supporting the decisions of the extraordinary session of the World Peace Council recently held in Berlin.

PREPARATIONS FOR ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE IN AUSTRALIA

Peking, August 19 (HSINHUA) - Prominent Australian religious personalities have made public expressions of warm support for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference. They include Dr. Booth, Archbishop of Melbourne, Dr. Crichton Barr of the Scots Church, Dr. Irving Benson of the Wesley Church, and Rev. Lyall Dixon of the Independent Congregational Church, according to a report from Sidney.

A special conference will be held between the South Coast Labour Council and the metal trades branches to elect delegates to the Peace Conference.

Sidney University has set up a "Student for Peking Committee" to elect one delegate to the conference.

Dr. J. Burton, Australian chief delegate to the Preparatory Meeting of the Peace Conference, and other peace partisans have been widely publicising the importance of the peace conference. Two thousand Melbourne people packed the Assembly Hall on July 18 to hear them speak. Many who were unable to get in the hall crowded in the street.

Leonard Lamburne, publicity officer of the Peace in the Pacific Committee, has also been speaking at many gatherings of workers calling upon them to defend peace in the Pacific.

KUO MO-JO GREETS PREPARATORY PEACE CONFERENCE IN BANGKOK

Peking, August 21 (HSINHUA) - Kuo Mo-jo, Chairman of the China Peace Committee, Tuesday, sent a message of greetings to Charoen Suebaseng, President of the Thailand Peace Committee on the convocation of the Preparatory Peace Conference in Bangkok. The conference scheduled to be held at the end of August is to support the forthcoming Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions in Peking. The message reads in part as follows:

Because of your efforts and the support of Thailand peace-loving people the success of your conference is assured. The convocation of the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions directly concerns the prosperity and security of millions of peoples in Asia, the Americas and Australia. Let us strive together for the success of this conference of historic significance.

Liu Ning-I, Secretary General of the Preparatory Committee for the Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions, also sent a message which reads in part:

Since peace in Asia is seriously threatened, the defence of peace has become an imperative task for millions of Asian peoples. The firm solidarity of all Asian people is our unconquerable peace fortress. Let us join hands together to strive for the success of the coming Peace Conference for the Asian and Pacific Regions.

NATIONWIDE CAMPAIGN FOR DELEGATES TO ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE LAUNCHED IN CANADA

Peking, August 21 (HSINHUA) - "Canadian delegates will attend the Peace Conference of Asian and Pacific Regions," Mary Jennison, Secretary of the Canadian Peace Congress, told a press conference early this month. She brought back from China recordings of the statements made by captured U.S. airmen Quinn and Enoch telling of their participation in germ warfare in Korea which she played for the pressmen.

Emphasising the broad, representative character of the Peking Preparatory Meeting for the coming Peace Conference, Miss Jennison, declared that it was clear that the overwhelming majority of the world's people "do not feel war is inevitable and do believe that differences can be negotiated."

A nationwide campaign for delegates to the peace conference has already been launched by the Canadian Sponsoring Committee for the conference. The announcement of the campaign was made in a joint statement by Finlay Mackenzie, Secretary of the Sponsoring Committee, and Miss Jennison. Declaring that "the topics to be discussed at the conference affect many areas of Canadian life," the statement asks the Canadians to add their support to sending a delegation and to give them a mandate by signing a ballot form which is now being circulated.

PREPARATORY COMMITTEE FOR ASIAN-PACIFIC PEACE CONFERENCE FORMED IN NEPAL

New Delhi, August 21 (HSINHUA) - The All-Nepal Peace Council has formed a Preparatory Committee for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, and a delegation will soon be elected to attend the conference in Peking, declares Krishna Chandra, General Secretary of the Council. Decisions of the Council are being favourably received by the people throughout Nepal.

CANADIAN PEACE LEADER DENOUNCES U.S. THREAT TO BOMB KOREAN CITIES

Peking, August 22 (HSINHUA) - "The threatened bombing of North Korean towns at a time when the armistice discussions are going on does not open the way to the peaceful settlement of the problems of the Far East," said Finlay Mackenzie, Secretary of the Canadian Sponsoring Committee for the Asian and Pacific Peace Conference, in a press statement on August 12, according to a report from Toronto.

The statement noted that the Canadian people can give practical help towards ending the Korean war by supporting the sending of a Canadian delegation to the Asian and Pacific Conference, on the agenda of which discussions of the war in Korea will have an important place.

A ballot form is being widely circulated by the Canadian Sponsoring Committee asking the Canadian people to support the sending of a delegation to the conference.

Prague, 18th July, 1951.

Dear Friends,

You should have received our letter of June 7th, concerning the preparation of the General Economic Conference called for the 1st October, 1951 in Moscow, in application of the decisions adopted by the World Council at its Berlin session.

We hope that our letter will have provided you with useful ideas for preparing the participation of a delegation from your country to this important international meeting.

We would be pleased to know as soon as possible, the development of these preliminary works and the results you have obtained. This information, as well as information on the difficulties which you may encounter, are of greatest interest to us. Indeed, the date of the conference is rapidly approaching, and it is necessary to do the utmost to advertise it as widely as possible, during the period of preparations, while the conference is in session, and after it has ended.

To help you in your work of preparation, we think it useful to send you the draft agenda, and to give you some advice or suggestions drawn from the experience of some countries which are very much in advance in the preparation of their delegations.

We would specify, that the questions which figure in this draft agenda are given only as proposals: they reflect the general line on which the preparatory commission believe the discussion should be based and on this point it is up to you to make any proposals you think necessary.

1. Possibilities of improving the 20th Century Standard of living on condition that peace be preserved.

a) study the different standards of living of peoples under the influence of world wars (socialist country, new democracies, capitalist countries - strong and weak - colonial and dependent countries).

b) war economy and its influence on the standard of living of the populations.
- war budgets - inflation - rising prices - lowering of sectors on peaceful economy - unemployment - conditions of life.
- consequences of the policy of war economy on the situation of people from different walks of life.
- influence of the policy of war economy on colonial and dependent countries.

c) lowering of the standard of living and reduction in peaceful trading relations.

d) results of a peaceful policy.
- economic developments, widening of markets, raising of the standard of living.

2. Possibilities of improving economic relations between all countries.

a) present situation of international relations.

b) survey of the work of the Economic and Social Council of U.N.O. and its specialized commissions.

c) the effects of the policy of discrimination.

d) raw materials (repercussion of the policy of war economy on rising prices and stocks).

e) possibilities of improving international exchange, widening of economic and commercial relations between the different countries and their repercussions on the people's standard of living.

f) peaceful coexistence of different systems.

This text is but a rough draft and can only be considered as final when it has been approved by the International Preparatory Committee composed of eminent personalities, who will send out the invitations.

Although the questions concerning the actual working of the conference have not yet been decided in detail, it has been suggested that , apart from the probable opening address, a report should be presented on the first point on the agenda, and a second report on the second point.

We invite you to prepare, on the basis of this draft agenda, information concerning your country which will help in the preparation of each of these large reports. The text of this information should, as far as possible, be written in French, English or Spanish and be sent to the secretariat (economic commission) by August 15th at the latest, so that it can be communicated in good time to each of the two persons who will make the reports.

2. We hope that the draft agenda will help you to successfully carry out your preparation and in particular to undertake as soon as possible, a wide campaign of explanation on the subject of the character, the role, and the aims of this conference, by adequate explanation and without going into detail about the content of the conference, it is necessary to arouse the interest of the population in general, and trade union, agriculture, economic and financial spheres in particular, bringing to their attention the subjects which will be discussed at the conference.

3. The divers points of which the draft agenda is composed are not limited. Already some countries, in the course of their campaign of explanation have posed questions which interest them more particularly.

The essential point to explain in your campaign is that this conference will show that by ensuring peace in the world, peaceful solutions will be found to all the economic problems which concern the people so gravely affected by the transformation of a peaceful economy into an economy of war. We think that, following the example of some countries this campaign of explanations can facilitate not only the finding of personalities who would be willing to participate in this conference, but also the setting up of committees to support the delegation from your country. It is advisable, not to stick to the nomination of a certain number of delegates but to set up a committee for the purpose of supporting your delegation.

In some countries, for example in France, a working commission was set up by the National Committee, with the special task of taking charge and accelerating the preparatory work. This commission then broadened out, leading to the creation, with personalities who agreed to participate in the conference, of a widely sponsored national committee. This committee is greatly facilitating all the preparatory work, helps to make widely known the holding of the conference, and will afterwards be able to propagate its resolutions and decisions.

4. Taking into account new elements which have risen, and contrary to what has been announced, the delegations will pay their own expenses for the journey to Prague. The organizers of the conference will be in charge of the journey of the delegates from Prague to Moscow and the Soviet Peace Committee will be in charge of the expenses of all the delegations on Soviet territory.

Obviously the application of this system poses sharp problems for very distant countries. But we think that good preparation for the conference mainly dealing with broad explanations among people who are likely to be interested, and the setting up of broad supporting committees, can help in the solving of all problems of this kind. Needless to say, each particular case should be studied independently and be settled in relation to its importance for the delegation.

We would impress upon you our urgent need for information on the state of your preparatory work.

Very sincerely yours,

For the World Council of Peace.

Dear Friend,

You will find as attached, the text of the new letter which has been sent to all the National Committees on the subject of the preparations for the General Economic Conference.

You will also shortly receive a Bulletin specially devoted to this question and which will contain, among other things, information on the state of preparations in a certain number of countries.

We hope that all these documents will help you to accelerate, to the extent of your possibilities, the work undertaken in your country for its participation in this important meeting . We would especially welcome your advice on this subject.

Very sincerely yours,

For the World Council of Peace.

J. Laffitte
General Secretary

Received and thanks. We are working hard on this. All the best to you Paul Robeson.

FREEDOM ASSOCIATES

New York 27, NY

Dea r John:

Your letter to Paul dealing with the projected international economic conference has been received during his absence on a trip to California. He will return here May 15 and I will immediately bring it to his attention.

He constantly expfesses great concern for developments with regard to the World Peace Council and I know it is his intention to increase his activity in bringing the program and projects of the Council before the American people and winning their active support for the world peace movement. He will, I am sure, look forward to being kept in closest touch with preparations for the economic conference as they proceed.

By the way we have recently discussed having Paul prepare on record a series of messages and songs which may be sent to peace meetings in the various countries of Europe, Asia, and Africa as they occur in the coming weeks and months. Some of them, of course, may be sent directly to the peace orgamizations involved in the given country. In other instances it might be advisable to have the master records sent to your office, to be copied and then shipped to meetings, conferences and other occasions which may not come to our attention. I should appreciate knowing whether you think this could be readily handled by your office.

It would facilitate early receipt of Paul's mail if it is sent to the address above. The Council on African Affairs has moved here a nd this is also the headquarters for Paul's monthly paper, FREEDOM.

Keep up the good work, of which we are all so proud. Accept all good regards.

Sincerely,

Lou

P.R.

Dear friends:

As you know, the World Council of Peace is holding an international economic conference in Moscow at the end of August this summer. It is naturally to be hoped that there will be American participation in this conference and in the preparations for the conference.

This conference has already excited a lot of interest in Europe and a broad participation is expected from the WesternEuropean countries. Thus the Quakers in England have expressed a great interest and we are hoping that our talks with them this week-end will lead to concrete results in this regard. I shall let you know as soon as possibleas to the results of these talks and as to what can be made public about them.

Also in England, the economist Kaldor, professor at Cambridge, is in principle in agreement to help preparations for this conference. We are now taking steps to assure not only his help but also that of Mrs. Robbinson, also professor at Cambridge.

The participation of the following persons is certain at the Moscow conference: Monsieur Dupier (journalist, former editor of "La France Industrielle")
M. Bettelem, professor of political economy at the University of Paris
M. Rouques la Garigue, professor of political economy at Bordeaux
M. Sauvy, France's greatest specialist in demography
M. Labeyrie, honorary governor-general of the Bank of France

Among those who have agreed in principle to be sponsors of this conference (although thequestion has not finally been settled who shall issue the invitations for this conference although the World Council is the initiator - the Bureau in Copenhagen will decide this):
M. Metral, President of "Les Industries Mecanique de France"
M. Poudroux, who plays an important role among French employers
M. Tron, President of the French National Bank for Commerce and Industry
M. Levard, Assistant Secretary-General of the French Federation of Christian Workers (who is 3/4ths committed at this point).

Similar breadth of interest is being shown in Italy, Belgium, etc, and therefore this conference will play a tremendous role in advancing the cause of peace. For the time being, no publicity can be given to these developments, but I shall let you know as soon as things are definite. We hope to hear at Copenhagen about how things are going in this regard in the U.S.

Dear Paul:

Ihave typed the first part of this letter in duplicate in order to send copies to Upshaw, Fletcher and De Maio.

Besides my warmest greetings, I have a few more words to add for you: I hope you have arranged to receive the peace prize. You should also know that Stover has wired that he cannot come to Copenhagen.

This is all for now. My best to everyone.

as ever,

John

Dear Friend,

Every two years the WFDY organises the World Festival of Youth and Students, a gathering of young people from all corners of the earth for Peace and the strengthing of friendship and mutual understanding between all peoples.

At the last Festival in Bucharest, the fourth one held, 30,000 young people from 111 countries took part together with a half-million Rumanian youth. There were 537 cultural programmes performed before 2,450,000 people, 157 films from 33 countries and a number of art exhibitions. Also the International Friendly Sports Meets took place at the same time, with 4,366 sportsmen from 54 countries participating.

The recent Council Meeting of our organisation in Peking /August 1954/, decided to hold the Vth World Festival of Youth and Students in Warsaw, Poland /July-August 1955/. This Festival will again bring together thousands of young people from various international, national and local organisations, leading workers in the fields of culture and sports, having different opinions and beliefs. At this we also decided to set up an International Preparatory Committee for this great Festival.

This Vth Festival will be greater, larger and more rich than ever before. We feel that it will be very good to have you as a member of the International Preparatory Committee because of your interest in youth or in some of the events which will take place during the Festival which will help make this great event a huge success.

Therefore we are inviting you to become a member of the International Preparatory Committee for the Vth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship.

Dear friend,

Some time ago we received from your Secretary a letter informing us that by the end of August you would be sending an article which we had requested on Peoples Music. As it has not arrived to date we are convinced that something has gone amiss, and that perhaps it has found its way into other offices than ours.

However we are writing again through Mr. Stan Levinson of 9 Camden High Street London. We hope that you still have a copy of the article and will be able to send it to him at that address.

Dear Mr. Robeson,

Your heartening telegramme sent on the occasion of the International Preparatory Committee Meeting for the 5th World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship held in Vienna, was warmly received by the youth representing more than 60 countries who were present there.

We regret your inability to take part at the initial meeting of this Committee. Youth the world over know your name, your voice, and the songs you sing, and look to you as one of the leaders of the Peace movement in your country and the world. We are certain that the campaign to restore your passport will be successful, and that once again you will be able to take your place among us and other democratic people abroad.

We are happy to have the honour of adding your name to the list of many who support this coming Festival. These Festivals help unite millions of youth the world over for National Independence, a better life and for a better understanding. They enable young people to display their talents and capacities, the cultural triumphs of their work and their will to work for the lessening of international tension and peaceful co-existence.

We thank you for your wonderful message which will certainly assist in the preparations of the Festival.

Enclosed you will find the Appeal of the International Preparatory Committee to the youth of the world and we shall keep you informed of developments and activities.

With warm wishes for a Happy New Year.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robeson,

As our previous letters have informed you, the International Preparatory Committee for the Vth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship will hold its first meeting in Vienna this December 17th.

Already many prominent people in the fields of sports, culture, science, etc. as well as leaders of youth and student organisations have expressed their readiness to take part in this meeting. Numerous others, unable to attend, have sent messages of greetings and support and have, despite their absence, in this way, added their voices to the many that will appeal to all youth to participate in and prepare for the Festival. Such messages are an important contribution to the success of the Festival as we recognize that actual attendance is often impossible because of problems in relation to travel, time and the importance of your work.

Naturally, we would be honoured to have your presence at the International Preparatory Committee meeting. However, by means of your support and honourary membership, you can still be a part of this noble cause which united millions of youth and students throughout the world in the interests of Peace and Friendship.

Hoping to hear from you soon, we send our best wishes.

Sincerely,

For the Secretariat

APRIL 14, 1954 .....

AGAINST THE FRANCO-DICTATORSHIP, WITH THE SPANISH YOUTH FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM!

The desire, and the determination of the peoples and the youth to ensure the triumph of peace through negotiations was greatly encouraged by the results of the Conference of the Four Ministers of Foreign Affairs in Berlin. The Conference proved that the pressure of the friends of peace was strong enough to impose their will for further discussions even on those who proclaimed in advance their determination to break off the talks at the first opportunity.

The Conference has also shown that those who gamble on war are desperately trying to rush through the plan for the "European Defence Community", and present this as an accomplished fact, from which there can be no turning back.

Everyone can see more clearly today that there does exist a small group, whose interests, power and ability to rule are based on preparations for war, and who have a panic fear of peace, because for them it is a greater menace than war.

Among the most odious of these followers of catastrophe, is Franco and his regime of "blood and gold", the blood of democrats, the gold of the profiteers.

The celebration on the 14th of April, of the traditional "International Day of Solidarity with Anti-Franco Spanish Youth" (anniversary of the foundation of the Spanish Republic) on the initiative of the WFDY and the IUS will rightly be held under the slogan, for defence of peace in Europe and the world. Against the infamous regime which has oppressed Spain for 15 years, and which relies on the support of the war-mongers, as it formerly relied on the help of German and Italian fascism for its establishment. The youth of the world who demand freedom and life for their heroic Spanish brothers and sisters, recognises that they too are defenders of peace, and fighters for the freedom of all people.

The recent signature of a military pact with the USA, with installations of atomic depots and bacteriological weapons; the construction of gigantic aero-naval bases, and the provision of vast quantities of weapons and war credits, leads to the open transformation of Spain into a military base.

Supplement of WORLD YOUTH No. 1/1955

Documents of the International Gathering of Rural Youth

Vienna, December 9th—15th, 1954

Meeting hall of the International Gathering of Rural Youth

Appeal of the Participants of the International Gathering of Rural Youth

Vienna, December 9th—15th, 1954

Young Men and Women of the Countryside

We, the representatives of the rural youth of 69 countries, assembled for the first time in an International Gathering of Rural Youth, come together to discuss the situation of young people of the countryside and to point out the means of common action to obtain a better life, we address you!

The life of most of us is made difficult and joyless by the insufficiency and lack of land and work, by natural catastrophes and by the backward state of the countryside.

The facilities for culture, education, leisure and sports are very limited for the young people of a great number of countries; in many cases we are deprived of democratic liberties and of our most elementary democratic rights.

Particularly tragic is the situation of the rural youth of the colonial and dependent countries.

The war-preparations, the armaments-race and increasing military expenditure, the artificial obstacles to the development of international trade and exchange, aggrevate even more the situation and seriously affect the agriculture and the whole economy of a great number of countries.

Young people of the villages, whatever our opinions and beliefs, whatever the organisations to which we belong, all of us want a dignified and joyful life.

We are convinced that it is possible to improve our living conditions. Success attained during the preparations for the International Gathering has further strengthened our confidence and has stimulated our just struggle for the achievement of our most cherished aspirations.

The preparations for the Gathering and the Gathering itself have shown that we have become stronger, that our voice, the voice of millions of rural youth thirsting for progress and happiness, can no longer be stifled.

Young Men and Women of the Countryside

We appeal to you to act for the realisation of the World Charter of the demands of rural youth adopted by our International Gathering. Supplement it, adapt it to the specific conditions in your country, your village, and your section! Through your united action obtain work and access to land, just wages for your work and tax reductions. Demand the satisfaction of your legitimate rights to education, culture, sports, and leisure, oppose the creation of aggressive military blocks and win increased agricultural credits at the expense of military budgets!

Together with the youth of the towns and the entire people of our countries, let us fight for a better life, for national independence and for peace! Peace and the national independence of our countries will facilitate the realisation of our demands, will guarantee our countries against destruction and servitude.

Young People of the Towns, Men and Women of the whole World!

The action of rural youth forms a part of the common struggle of the youth of all nations for a better life of liberty and prosperity.

We appeal to you to strengthen your invaluable solidarity and to support with even greater force our actions for the satisfaction of our just demands.

On behalf of the millions of rural youth of all countries, we appeal to the various youth, peasant, trade union, student, political, religious, cultural, sport and other organisations to assume their responsibility in furthering our fight for a better life!

Young Men and Women of all Countries!

Let us strengthen our solidarity and our friendship now and in the future!

Let us redouble our efforts and our enthusiasm for the victory of our demands!

Let us unite for a better life for the happiness of the young generation!

Our strength lies in our unity, in unity there is the guarantee of the success of our just struggle for a happy future, for peace among nations!

Danish delegates and a Japanese friend met for a friendly chat together

WORLD CHARTER

The Fundamental Demands of Rural Youth

In December 1953 the youth of the province of San Alberto di Ravenna (Italy) addressed the rural youth of the world with an appeal to hold the International Gathering of Rural Youth.

This initiative met with a great response in all countries. At the meeting of the International Preparatory Committee, established to prepare the Gathering (April, 1954, Denmark), a draft of the World Charter of the Fundamental Demands of Rural Youth was worked out.

During the preparation for the Gathering this draft was discussed by thousands of young boys and girls of all countries in numerous meetings and conferences. After elaborating their own charters of demands they completed the draft by making proposals and amendments.

The present Charter, adopted by us, the participants in the International Gathering of Rural Youth, contains the basic and vital demands of rural youth of the world. It is the result of large-scale discussions during the preparations and the course of the Gathering.

Each group of young rural people has its' specific demands for the realization of which they are fighting. But there are also demands which concern the majority of rural youth.

This Charter expresses the interests and hopes of millions of young boys and girls of the countryside, on whose behalf we state:

The Young Men and Women of the Countryside Demand:

— Work and higher wages for their work, prohibition of all involuntary or non-paid services.

— Granting of land at the expense of the state or uncultivated land or of land which is now in the hands of foreign companies etc. to young boys and girls of the countryside who have been robbed of their land or have only insufficient means to establish their own homes.

— Liquidation of all feudal survivals, granting of all civic rights and democratic liberties to the young men and girls: freedom of speech and press, real opportunities for founding their own organisations, freedom of assembly, the right to vote and opportunities for participating in the social and political life of the country.

— The reduction of taxes and the granting of long-term state loans at minimum interest, state assistance for buying agricultural implements, seeds and fertilisers at reasonable and moderate prices.

— National assistance for young people to set up their own homes.

Delegates to the Gathering arrived from all corners of the world. Henri Martin (on the right) in a friendly talk with delegates from British-Soudan, Viet-Nam and Lebanon — Encouragement from the state for social activities, mutual help, co-operation in work and exchange of experiences in every field of rural life.

— Construction of irrigation systems and other improvements to make work easier and to increase the yield of the land, measures to prevent natural disasters, assistance for victims of such disasters, modernisation of the villages.

— Improvement of hygienic conditions, social security in the event of accidents or sickness, an increase in the number of hospitals and medical centres in the countryside etc.

— Real and genuine opportunities for school education in the native language, stamping out of illiteracy, opportunity for rest, sport, cultural activities and entertainment.

The Young Tenants, Sharecroppers and Smallholders Demand:

— Guaranteed work for the whole year, the same wages as adults for equal work; adequate insurance for all young unemployed workers.

— Establishment of a guaranteed minimum wage; establishment of a maximum working day of eight hours; voluntary overtime and an increase in overtime rates; one day off each, week and annual paid holidays.

— Conclusion of collective agreements with employers and observance of these agreements by the employers.

— Guarantee of adequate and decent accommodation.

Young Women and Girls Demand:

— Equal pay for equal work.

— State aid to expectant mothers and paid maternity leave for agricultural workers; establishment of maternity homes, creches and kindergardens.

— Family allowances; prohibition of forced marriages; legislation in defence of children, and absolute prohibition of the sale of children.

Rural Youth of the Colonial and Dependent Countries Associate themselves with the Demands of all Young People in the Countryside and Demand:

— Genuine national independence and abolition of feudal exploitation. Equal wages and working conditions irrespective of race or nationality, and payment for work in money.

— Complete abolition of all kinds of racial and national discrimination, and absolute ban on forced labour and corporal punishment.

— More pay for work under particularly difficult conditions, in the rice-fields, on the cotton, rubber, sugar and other plantations.

Taking into consideration that the improvement of the living standards and working conditions are only possible in a state of peace, national independence and peaceful co-operation between the peoples, all young country people take a stand for the lessening of international tension, against all forms of foreign aggression, against all measures for preparation of a new war, against the use of peasants' land for military bases. They are in favour of banning weapons of mass destruction and for general reduction of armaments, for the settlement of all outstanding differences between the nations by peaceful means, for increased budget expenditure on agriculture through reduction of military expenditure, for the extension of international trade which is to the advantage of all trading countries and which contributes to the development of agriculture.

Young country people demand this for a better life and a brighter future. We are convinced that this Charter will obtain the full support of all young country people. It will help to strengthen the unity of young boys and girls from the country-side in their fight for their just and legitimate demands.

The Participants of the International Gathering of Rural Youth, Vienna, December 9th—15th, 1954.

Address of the International Gathering of Rural Youth

Vienna, 9th—15th December, 1954

To all International Organisations

For seven days in Vienna in December 1954, we, the 356 participants from 69 countries, representing the mandates of millions of rural youth of all categories who sent us to the International Gathering of Rural Youth, have intensively, freely and profoundly discussed our conditions of work, life, education and leisure and have thrashed out a common programme of work, aims and aspirations, which will serve us as a basis for future actions all over the world to assure a better, happier life for all young people living in the countryside.

We want to have the support of all sections of the community and of all organisations to ensure that our just demands are granted and our urgent needs fulfilled. We believe that it is the responsibility of all international organisations and especially youth organisations, to help us in every way possible to win the aims we have set out in the World Charter of Rural Youth.

We will welcome every effort to join with us in winning the aims set out in the Charter and the decisions of our International Gathering of Rural Youth, and we call upon all international organisations, to work with us and to co-operate in assuring that we, the youth of the countryside of all lands, will win a happier life in a world of peace.

The Gathering charges the Presidium to assure that this address and all the requisite documents of the Gathering are presented to all international organisations.

WORLD FEDERATION OF DEMOCRATIC YOUTH

WORLD PEACE COUNCIL

Vienna session, November 23 - 28, 1953.

DECLARATION OF THE WFDY SECRETARIAT 1

RESOLUTION OF THE WORLD PEACE COUNCIL 1

A MESSAGE FROM THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO ALL ORGANISATIONS AND PERSONALITIES WHO DESIRE A RELAXATION OF INTERNATIONAL TENSION 3

RESOLUTION OF THE CULTURAL COMMISSION 4

CONTRIBUTION TO THE DISCUSSION BY JACQUES DENIS, GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE WORLD FEDERATION OF DEMOCRATIC YOUTH 4

DECLARATION OF THE WFDY SECRETARIAT

After the meeting of the World Peace Council, which met in Vienna from the 23rd to the 28th of November, the Secretariat of the World Federation of Democratic Youth approves without reservation the important decisions of this session and calls on the youth to join with all their strength carrying them out.

The principal task of the hour fixed by the World Peace Council is to work for the lessening of international situation. Young people understand and will understand more and more that this is the way for the solution of problems which weigh heavily upon their life in different countries, as it has already been pointed out by the IIIrd World Youth Congress.

The Secretariat of the WFDY approves of the World Peace Council action in warning the peoples against the schemes of those who are opposed to the lessening of internationall tension , and in making concrete proposals which can strengthen the effectiveness of the struggle for peace. It welcomes the idea of a world gathering which would allow the exchange of all points of views and the examination of possible solutions for all the problems which endanger peace, as a new and great contribution to the cause of peace.

The paramount task of each young person, of each youth organisation is to take part, bringing their own ideals and definite actions according to the situation in each country, in the great action of the peoples for the lessening of international tension , the success of negotiations, the triumph of peaceful solutions. The considerable successes already obtained in this way, from the armistice in Korea to the progress achieved by the idea of a meeting of the Great Powers, will stimulate us in this action which will be victorious.

December 2nd, 1953.

The W.F.D.Y. Secretariat

RESOLUTION OF THE WORLD PEACE COUNCIL

The Budapest Appeal for negotiation, launched by the World Council of Peace, has had profound repercussions and has won the widest support. As a result of this campaign, the idea of settling international differences by agreements acceptable to all is daily winning ground and bearing fruit.

The end of hostilities in Korea was a victory for the cause of peace.

The latest exchange of Notes between the Great Powers proves that the holding in the near future of a Four Power Conference on the German question is possible.

The idea of ending hostilities and reaching a peaceful solution in Indochina is making progress both in France and in Vietnam.

But forces opposed to the easing of international tension are using the word "negotiation" to veil plans for prolonging the Cold War. Negotiations cannot be realised if one party is conforted by the other with accomplished facts: the desire for negotia tion cannot be present if conditions are created to make it fail.

In Asia and in Europe, there are situations and conflicts which are especially endangering World Peace.

In Korea, negotiations are in danger. The intention to exclude neutral nations, especially India, from a Political Conference dealing with specifically Asian interests could cause the failure of negotiations. The peoples will not allow hostilities in Korea to be resumed.

The interests of European security demand the quickest possible settlement of the German problem. This settlement is only possible by agreement between the Four Powers - the United States, the U.S.S.R., Great Britain and France. The main obstacle which stands in the way of this agreement is the intention of one side to rebuild German militarism and to bring Germany into the war coalition directed against the other.

The World Council of Peace calls upon the peoples of Europe to prevent the ratification of the Treaties concerning the European Army and the revival of German militarism in any shape or form. This would open the way to agreement on the German problem between the Four Powers, thereby offering the German people the prospect of a peaceful future and giving to all the peoples of Europe a guarantee against the revival of aggressive forces in Germany.

For the last seven years there has been war between France and Viet Nam which can only be ended by direct negotiations between the belligerents.

The World Council of Peace welcomes the proposal made in this direction by the delegation of the Vietnam Democratic Republic supported by the Chinese delegation. This proposal, to which the French delegation made a favourable reply, could serve as a basis for settlement.

The World Council of Peace has always affirmed that foreign interference, occupation by foreign troops and the establishment of military bases on foreign soil, constitutes a threat both to the peoples independence and to peace.

Such a policy is also being developed in the Near and Middle East, Latin America and Africa. It shows itself in Europe, particularly by the plan for the European Defence Community and the installation of atomic bases in Spain, in Asia by the foreign occupation and the intensification of the rearmament of Japan, and in Pakistan where the United States is trying to set up military bases. This latest effort threatens to bring about a war psyhosis amongst hundreds of millions of people in yet another part of the world.

The armaments race and the manufacture of ever more powerful weapons of mass destruction, impose an intolerable burden on the world, and constitute a frightful menace.

The World Council of Peace, has drawn the attention of the world to this problem by its Stockholm Appeal campaign and its Warsaw resolutions. It regrets that the United Nations Organisation has not yet reached agreement on these matters, and hopes that steps will be taken to bring about the absolute prohibition of atomic and biological weapons and a substantial reducation of all armaments under effective control.

The World Council of Peace finally emphasises that, whilst negotiation is necessary on each particular problem, it considers, as it always has, that a Five Power Conference is still the best method for achieving a relaxation of international tension.

This Conference would be able, on the initiative of each of the Powers, to take up any problem felt to be a cause of international tension, and could seek general agreements acceptable to all.

The persistent refusal to grant the Chinese Peoples' Republic her rightful place in the Councils of the World is an obstacle to this Five Power Conference. This refusal is contrary to the interests of all states and is judged more and more severely by world opinion.

The Charter of the United Nations gives the peoples an instrument able to bring about lasting peace. The peoples should strive to ensure respect for the Charter. The infringements of the Charter have plunged the world into great difficulties. A return to the letter and the spirit of the Charter would help the peoples to ensure their security and independence. It would allow real co-operation between the nations to develop their economic resources, their well-being and their culture.

The anxiety and fear, the misery and the difficulties of everyday life imposed upon the peoples by the Cold War and the armaments race, can and must be eliminated by the action of the peoples.

In the last resort, Peace depends upon the people.

A MESSAGE FROM THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO ALL ORGANISATIONS AND PERSONALITIES WHO DESIRE A RELAXATION OF INTERNATIONAL TENSION.

The armistice concluded in Korea has given an uneasy world the hope at last of seeing a decrease in tension between the Great Powers. Negotiations which were opened, however, have come up against renewed obstacles.

Agreement is proving difficult on other questions vitally important for the peace of the world.

Nevertheless, the peoples long for a relaxation of international tension. Economic barriers and political pressures accompanying this tension are becoming increasingly difficult to bear.

We velieve it is possible to rescue the world from this condition.

Today, a wide range of political and social forces in all countries are working for an improvement in international relations.

New voices among eminent scientific, religious and political authorities are condemning the use of weapons of mass entermination. Public opinion is becoming alarmed at the growing accumulation of armaments of all types.

All people of good sense realise that it is not possible to settle problems of world importance or guarantee fulfilment of any agreement made without the participation of the Government of the Chinese People's Republic.

Responsible representatives of all political groups in most West European countries have made a public stand against the rebirth of German militarism in any form.

In these conditions, we think an opportunity should be given for all organisations or personalities, who are striving for the relaxation of international tension, to concentrate their efforts on this question. The resolution, passed in Vienna by the World Council of Peace on 28th November, 1953, is an expression of our point of view on this matter.

The join preparation for a meeting allowing the free exchange of all viewpoints and the examination of possible solutions is now necessary.

An International Meeting of this nature, held as soon as possible would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension.

Vienna, November 28th,1953.

RESOLUTION OF THE CULTURAL COMMISSION.

The last session of the World Council of Peace correctly demonstrated the need and the possibility of widely developing cultural exchanges, a valuable factor in achieving and consolidating a relaxation of international tension.

We are happy to see that in spite of the still too numerous obstacles, appreciable results have been obtained since then.

At the same time, we repeat that many greater successes could be achieved at present, Vast prospects will open up if every organisation and every human being interested in the culture of their own country, as well as world culture, decide to enter into contact and work for fruitful international relations on the bases of reciprocity.

The full support of the Peace Movement is assured for the various activities already achieved or planned, such as: visits; exchanges of delegations, works of art, literary and scientific publications; international exhibitions, congresses and the meetings and interchange of scientists, intellectuals, artists and sportsmen.

We call on every organisation and person interested in the development of cultural relations between the peoples. We appeal to them to increase such activities and to secure co-operation on a still wider basis so that this work will be even more effective.

A MEETING OF WORLD PEACE COUNCIL PARTICIPANTS INTERESTED IN THE PROBLEMS OF YOUTH

On the initiative of the WFDY delegation, a friendly meeting brought together the members of youth movements or people interested in the problems of youth, during the session. Jacques Denis, General Secretary of the WFDY presented information on the tasks of the youth in the struggle for peace and the programme of work of the WFDY.

The social took place in a cordial atmosphere and ended with the songs of different countries of the world.

CONTRIBUTION TO THE DISCUSSION BY JACQUES DENIS, GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE WORLD FEDERATION OF DEMOCRATIC YOUTH.

Dear Friends,

On behalf of the WFDY, I would like right away to express our full agreement with the proposals presented by President Joliot-Curie with the aim of strengthening action to promote the lessening of international tension.

To try and point out how such proposals respond to the deep feelings of all the youth, I would like to recall an event that happened precisely four months ago. 1,500 young people were gathered in the IIIrd World Youth Congress. At this Congress which was the gathering of very different young people, many of whom met for the first time, one morning the signature of the armistice in Korea was announced. And suddenly young White, Yellow, Black people, we threw ourselves into each others arms, we embraced, we sang, we laughed, we cried. This was an indescribable hour.

Indeed, we understood - and this was emphasized - that this was only a beginning and many efforts would still need to be made in order that peace be won. But we were conscious of living in a great time, a time in which for the first time the peoples were powerful enough to impose the end of a war by bringing the whole weight of their vigilance to bear on the negotiations. The time when the proof was found that that which neither the worst atrocities, nor the most outrageous war could advance even one step forward, could be achieved by negotiations. The Congress proclaimed that the youth have the task to "support actively the efforts of the peoples directed towards international relaxation. An end can be put to the bloodshed, the cold war can be ended.

For the youth the demanding of the easing of international tension is vital. A situation in which the insecurity, anxiety for the tomorrow and the consequent misery of overwhelming military burdens reign, where the youth find a barrier before each of their most simple hopes and dreams, such a situation cannot be allowed to last. Much has been spoken and written about youth morality in a certain number of countries where the repercussions of international tension, of the "cold war" are particularly apparent. But the influence of war and terror propaganda has been too little discussed. Even school children learn that the bursting flash of the "Bomb" or the paralysing poisons or the microbes can kill in a moment or destroy all that is so much in need of love, all that untiring sacrifices of parents, so much education, and labour have been needed to make live and grow.

That what is remarkable is not that only a small fraction of the youth in these countries abandoned themselves to a poisoned, crude and despairing conception of life, what is remarkable is that the essential part of the youth are of a moral health which reveals their daily fight and at the very least their refusal of war and death.

These things are not useless to recall here for if we can appreciate this, we will do more in order that this refusal becomes unceasingly more active and brings to the forces of peace a strengthening which is at present not sufficient in certain cases.

The strengthening of the activities of the youth for peace is especially shown in the preparation and the holding of international youth events last summer. I have already spoken of the World Youth Congress. The IVth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship which followed it, allowed the task of fighting more actively for the easing of international tension which gives life to the ideals of peace and friendship, to be placed before millions of young people.

The 30.000 delegates coming from 111 countries - numbers never before reached in an international meeting- represented millions of young people and also peace defenders of all ages who demonstrated their support in a thousand ways. From France came 3.500 delegates, from Finland 2.400, from ~~Great Britain~~ 1.100, from Algeria 190, from Egypt 140, from India 150, all the countries of North and South America were represented, with the exeption of the American Colony Puerto Rico. The Chilean delegation alone numbered young people of 44 different organizations. Hundreds of meetings among the delegations permitted these young people to know each other better, and to make common agreements, such as in the meetings of young americans and Koreans, French and Vietnamese, British and Chinese. For example the text drawn up by French and German delegates was widely published and presented for the approval of young French people during action against the Bonn and Paris treaties.

The breadth of the cultural and sports events of these days is not less important. The festival constituted the broadest cultural and sports exchange and was of an extremely high standard. The cultural programme grouped the groups and soloists from 65 countries performing 531 concerts and programmes. 3.111 participants signed up for the cultural competitions in 11 different classes. 214 received the envied title of Festival Laureat.

As for sports, the International Friendly Youth Sports Competitions took place for the first time. 4.366 sportsmen from 54 countries participated in them. They included sports which did not figure in the Olympic Games. Five world records, 93 national records were broken. To indicate for example the quality of the organisation in a field where our work until now was not very wide spread, let us point out that an international sports organisation, the olley-ball Federation, recently decided to participate henceforth in the organisation of a specialised tour, every two years, in the framework of the Festival competitions, on the basis of the positive experiences of this year. These are results of great importance, at a time when a campaign has been carried out to affirm that the idea of peace and friendship was, one may wonder why, incompatible with sport. We, for our part, are sure that such competitions, like the Olympic Games, serve and will serve in their way, the easing of the international situation and the friendship of the peoples for peace.

I shall not insist here on what such cultural and sports demonstrations bring about precisely from the point of view of education of youth in a positive and optimist sense, as this had been already dealt with by us in previous sessions of the World Peace Council. What I would like to stress is, the service these experiences of the Congress and the Festival, as well as that of the IIIrd World Students Congress, held at the beginning of September and which was also concerned with the defence of peace, have rendered.

The delegates have returned to their countries, convinced that the whole of the youth must be gathered together for this vital struggle, convinced of the necessity of great and broad activities, making possible this gathering together in ways appropriate to the needs and the feelings of youth. Thousand of report back meetings were held, cultural groups presented their talents uniting the treasures of the national culture of their people and those of other countries - the common treasure of mankind. Local and regional festivals were organised. Young people are participating more actively in the activity of the peace movement. From now on they understand better that the ideas of peace and friendship are not purely sentimental ideas, but have a content deeply linked to that what is the essential preoccupation of each people in every national situation. These are ideas inseparable from continual, hard and definite action.

Much time would be needed only to reckon the many fold activities already agreed on, or about to be decided. I would like to say simply that they are being worked out in dozens of countries, practically in all the countries of Europe and America, as well as in a great number of others. These are initiatives inspired by the Festival, national or regional festivals, gatherings of all natures, international camps, exchanges of delegations and others.

Particularly important will be the festivals to be organised on one hand in Latin America, in Chile, on the other hand in Central America, in Guatemala, as well as the international camp of the Northern countries, planned in Norway. Among the sports initiatives, that of the Friendly Winter Sports should be particularly quoted.

The exchange of delegations will be on a wide scale. The French students delegation which recently visited the USSR has invited a Soviet delegation for Spring. A delegation grouping the whole of youth organisations of France is now being organised on a reciprocal basis.

Our WFDY has decided to organise, to encourage all the initiatives taken on an international scale for cultural and sports exchanges, a big campaign gathering all these actions under the title: "Through acquaintance to Friendship". We mean this to serve the cause of bringing together the peoples, of which the Budapest session of the World Peace Council justly said that it will hasten the negotiation of Governments.

It is in the same spirit that young people of the six countries menaced by the "European Army" prepare a common action,expressing a real community, their community of struggle against the common danger of war and servitude. It is planned that afterwards an other such action be organised broader, extending to all young people of the countries who are anxious about the rebirth of militarisation in Western Germany be organised, concluding by a series of rallies at the different borders of Germany. The young Frenchmen, Belgians,Dutch and Germans,the Danes and Germans,Polish,Czech and Germans, Austrian and Germans will meet at these borders where so many times hostile lines have been built and battles taken place and there joining their hands they will build friendly bridges between the peoples who fight for peace. This will be a worthy reply to this lying "European" propaganda which is intended to make young people of one part of this continent fight against those of another under the army helmets of generals Günther and Guderian. The real friendship between the European peoples and youth is shown in such actions and will be more and more vigorously demonstrated.

Considering therefore, through their own experience the scope and the necessity of a great action,aining to hasten the action for negotiations and the easing of the international situation, the young generation will lend their full support, make their utmost contribution through their own actions and by their participation in those actions,decided on in each country,for the success of the meeting proposed here by President Joliot Curie.

AFTER THE VIENNA SESSION OF THE WORLD PEACE COUNCIL
(November 23 - 28, 1953.)

Declaration of the WFDY Secretariat

After the meeting of the World Peace Council, which met in Vienna from the 23rd to the 28th of November, the Secretariat of the World Federation of Democratic Youth approves without reservation the important decisions of this session and calls on the youth to join with all their strength carrying them out.

The principal task of the hour, fixed by the World Peace Council is to work for the lessening of international tension. Young people understand and will understand more and more that this is the way for the solution of problems which weigh heavily upon their life in different countries, as it has already been pointed out by the IIIrd World Youth Congress.

The Secretariat of the WFDY approves of the World Peace Council action in warning the peoples against the schemes of those who are opposed to the lessening of international relaxation, and in making concrete proposals which can strengthen the effectiveness of the struggle for peace. It welcome the idea of a world gathering which would allow the exchange of all points of views and the examination of possible solutions for all the problems which endanger peace, as a new and great contribution to the cause of peace.

The paramount task of each young person, of each youth organisation is to take part, bringing their own ideas and definite actions according to the situation in each country, in the great actions of the peoples for the lessening of international relaxation, the success of negotiations, the triumph of peaceful solutions. The considerable successes of negotiations, the triumph of peaceful solutions. The considerable successes already obtained in this way, from the armistice in Korea to the progress achieved by the idea of a meeting of the Great Powers, will stimulate us in this action which will be victorious.

On the initiative of the WFDY delegation, a friendly meeting brought together the members of youth movements or people interested in the problems of youth, during the session. Jacques Denis, General Secretary of the WFDY presented information on the tasks of the youth in the struggle for peace and the programme of work of the WFDY. The social took place in a cordial atmosphere and ended with the songs of different countries of the world.

DECEMBER 19, INTERNATIONAL DAY OF SOLIDARITY WITH THE VIETNAMESE PEOPLE AND THE STURGGLE FOR AN END TO THE COLONIAL WARFARE IN VIETNAM.

This day will be celebrated this year on a wide scale thanks to the initiative of the IIIrd World Congress of the World Federation of Trade Unions. In a declaration delivered to the press, the WFDY Secretariat recently "renewed the expression of its full support to this initiative; and calls on all the youth, all the youth organisations to ensure its success".

After having recalled how for the last seven years a colonial war has been carried out in Viet-Nam, the declaration of the WFDY Secretariat concludes:

"YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE WHOLE WORLD!

Unite and with the French youth, affirm on this day of December 19 and during its preparation in actions, your solidarity with the brave Vietnamese youth who are fighting for the national independence and peaceful future of the fatherland. Organise assemblies, demonstrations, denounce the criminal action of French and Americaan colonialists and draw in new millions of brothers and sisters into the noble and just struggle for peace in Viet-Nam and in the world.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF FRANCE!

Go in unity to each deputy, to your government, take part in demonstrations and popular meetings, demand with all your people Peace in Vietnam.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF VIETNAM!

As you have learnt in a moving way during the Congress and the World Youth Festival, the youth of the world are at your side! Together we fight for the beautiful and unconquerable cause of your freedom and of peace!

Glory to the heroes of Vietnam!

Honour to the courageous Vietnamese youth and their great people!

PEACE IN VIETNAM AND IN THE WHOLE WORLD!"

The National Bureau of the Union of Republican Youth of France to the National Bureau of the Socialist Youth.

The National Bureau of the Union of Republican Youth of France has proposed to the National Bureau of the Socialist Youth common action in order to put an end to the war in Vietnam."After the conclusion of the armistice in Korea", declares the UJRF, "there is no reason why negotiations should not be undertaken with the President HO CHI MINH. The youth who are essentially interested in the end of this war,can play an impotant role in this action" says the Union of Republican Youth of France in a letter calling for joint discussions.

MESSAGE FROM THE KOREAN YOUTH TO THE WFDY ON THE OCCASION OF ITS EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY

The Democratic Federation of Korean Youth addressed a letter to the WFDY in which they declare the following :

"On the occasion of the anniversary of the WFDY, the Central Leadership of the Korean Democratic Youth,on behalf of all the Korean youth, conveys their warm greetings to the WFDY, and through it, to all peaceloving youth of the world.

The Korean youth are deeply convinced that the struggle of young people together with the people of the whole world, played a great role in obtaining victory and the signing of the armistice in Korea.

We wish the WFDY new and brilliant successes in its work for peace and a better future for the young generation of the whole world."

THE POPULARISATION OF THE IIIRD CONGRESS AND THE IVTH FESTIVAL CONTINUES

Young Spaniards in Argentina Popularise the Congress and the Festival.

Over 200 young Spaniards living in Argentina joined in a meeting organised in Buenos Aires to popularise the results of the IIIrd Congress and the IVth Festival. The young Spanish immigrant to Argentina who took part in the Spanish delegation in Bucharest, presented a report back and answered the many questions which were put to him by young people. At the end of the meeting,a resolution was adopted who pledged to support and apply the Congress and Festival decision and protest energetically against the signature of the USA-Franco military treaty. The newspaper "Young Spaniards" published in Argentina has also devoted a special issue to the Congress and the Festival.

Reports on the Festival and the Congress in India.

Mr. Shri Prd SINGH, vice-president of the Indian delegation at Bucharest and outstanding member of the CONGRESS,govermental party in India,held on November 3 in Patna an press Conference devoted to his impressions on the Festival and the World Youth Congress.

After having called on the youth of India to unite to carry out the decisions and the recommendations of the Festival and the Congress,he gave his impressions on the journey he made returning from Bucharest through the USSR and China.

High level Activities of the Italian Socialist Youth Since the Festival.

During the last months,the Italian Socialist Youth have been active, popularising the IIIrd Congress and the IVth World Youth Festival. 15 provincial newspapers of the Italian Socialist Party published long and interesting articles on these events and two dailies in Rome, AVANTI and LAVORO NUOVO gave regular reports on the Bucharest events. The last two issues of the magazine "SOCIALIST YOUTH" were devoted to the Congress and the Festival and numerous conferences and debates took place in the whole of Italy with Congress and Festival delegates present. In 18 provinces Festivals of Socialist Youth took place on the theme of International Friendship. Photo and handwork exhibitions attracted many young people who learned about the Festival and the life of Rumanian youth.

Popularisation of the Festival in Australia

In a letter recently received,the EUREKA YOUTH LEAGUE told us:

"You will be pleased to know that the Australian delegation to the Congress and Festival arrived back in Australia this week. They have already addressed numerous factory and public meetings and gained enthusiastic support. A welcome home function held in Sydney last monday night (November 9) was attended by 250 young people and adults. The delegation sang many songs they learnt at the Festival,and presented some of the dances learnt overseas.These were received very warmly. The delegation leader TOM MC DONALD spoke on the impressive unity for peace shown in the Congress and Festival and on the great importance of cultural and sporting exchanges amongst the youth of various countries."

NEWS AROUND THE WORLD

A Declaration of the Antifascist Committee of the Soviet Youth.

The Antifascist Committee of Soviet Youth recently published a declaration warmly approving the initiative of the World Peace Council in favour of an international campaign for the peaceful settlements of international differences through negotiations. The Antifascist Committee invites the Soviet youth to continue and to intensify the struggle for the peaceful settlement of international disputes,for the strengthening of friendship with the youth of all countries of the world.

A Conference of Young Miners in Great Britain.

Recently, for the first time in the history of the Trade Union, the young miners of South Wales held an official conference. This event, followed the recent constitution of the Advisory Youth Committee of the National Union of Miners in South Wales.

This Conference was also attended by fraternal delegates of the Scottish Miners Youth Committee and the British Youth Festival Committee.

The resolutions voted at this conference demanded:

1 - The adult wage workers at the age 18 for all young miners working underground.

2 - Sports and cultural facilities in mining regions.

3 - The reduction of the length of military service

4 - Fraternal international relations with the youth of all the countries.

The National Union of Great Britain's Students Decides Not to Break Off Relations with the International Union of Students.

The Council of the National Union of Students of Great Britain recently held a meeting in Bristol. During this meeting a resolution was discussed demanding that the National Students Union break off relations with the International Union of Students. This resolution was rejected by 573 votes against 558 and 81 abstentions.

The National Students Union with 85.000 members will now ask to be accepted as associate member of the IUS.

Solidarity with Cuban Youth!

The WFDY Secretariat recently protested against the brutal repression of democratic forces in Cuba, and namely the democratic youth organisations. In a press release the Secretariat of the WFDY declares:

"The Democratic forces of Cuba are the object of numerous persecutions and a more and more brutal repression.

... According to this the democratic youth and students organisations are banned, their leaders put in prison or pursued. The Havana University was searched by the police and several leaders of the University Students Federation have been arrested, among them their president Mr. Joaquin PELEAZ.

... The house of the youth leader, Flavio BRAVO, vice-president of the WFDY was invaded by the police and his personal library was destroyed.

... The WFDY energetically protests against these attacks on the democratic liberties and the life of the Cuban youth organisations. The WFDY demands an end to the persecutions to which the leaders and the press of Cuban youth are submitted. The WFDY asks all its member organisations and all youth organisations of all countries to express their solidarity with the youth and the people of Cuba".

Indian Students Defend Their Academical Rights.

During the last months, the students of India have carried out great struggles to safeguarding their academic rights, particularly for the recognizing of Students Unions by the authorities.

In Lucknow, the students received the support of the whole population, public organisations, the Lawyers Association and of the former governor of the province SHRI MAHARAJ SINGH. After a struggle marked by strikes and demonstrations during which a student was killed, several wounded and dozens arrested by the police, the demands of the students were satisfied.

In three colleges of the TRAVANCORE COCHIN state, the students demanded the right to organise Students Unions and better studying conditions. In answer, the authorities imprisoned the student leaders and the police occupied school buildings. The students went on strike and organised demonstrations of protest. 70 have been arrested.

The students of other colleges and high schools demonstrated their solidarity with the Travancore Cochin students, organising strikes in their turn. Members of Parliament, the Municipal Council of Allepey, leaders of different political parties, announced their support for the struggle of the students. On November 27, at the call of the All India Students Federation, a National Day of Solidarity with the Students of Travancore Cochin was celebrated.

Columbia

At the conferences held in the different universities of Columbia on the question of negotiations, it was pointed out that with the sum spent by the government of Columbia to maintain the armed forces sent to Korea, five schools could be constructed daily for a period of two years. This could solve the problem of 700.000 Columbian children who have no opportunity to go to school. Petitions were addressed to the President, asking for the immediate withdrawal of Columbian military forces from Korea.

NEWS OF THE LAST MINUTE

An Appeal of the Rural Youth to the Youth of the World for an International Meeting of the Rural Youth.

At the moment that this Information Bulletin was about to be printed, we learned that on Sunday, December 6th, in the village of SAN ALBERTO, Italy, Emilia province, in the Po Delta, a local meeting of the rural youth, took place in the course of which the participants, of different political and social origin, launched an appeal to the rural youth of the whole world with the aim of holding an International Meeting of Rural Youth.

In this appeal which is of great importance, and about which we shall speak in the next bulletin, these young Italians, agricultural workers, metayers, sons of small landowners, students of agricultural technical schools, declare:

"We, who are linked to the land which our ancestors tilled, we want in the countryside more human living conditions and that a minimum of work and the possibility to learn a trade be assured us, to work with the technical means science puts on our disposal, to enjoy ourselves, to practice sports, to attain a certain degree of culture, in short to have employment and a happy future assured!"

.... and furthermore, after saying that this is the common will of the rural youth of all the countries, they continue:

"We therefore address an appeal to all the farming and rural youth of all the countries of the world, to their youth organisations, trade unions, national and international, to all men and women in the world working in the realm of science and culture, to technicians and educators in order that they may join in promoting an International Meeting of Rural and Farming Youth which will allow us to get know each other, to exchange our experiences, to discuss our problems, to determine our common demands, the guide to our action to create a new life and bringing civilisation and progress to the countryside of our countries."

It is evident that such an appeal, launched by the catholic youth, by socialists, republicans, independents, communists, will raise a powerful echo in Italy and also in the whole world.

RESOLUTIONS

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

of the

WORLD FEDERATION OF DEMOCRATIC YOUTH

The Executive Committee of the WFDY met from the 25th to the 28th of January, 1954, in Stockholm, Sweden.

The IIIrd World Youth Congress which met in July 1953 in Bucharest, where the delegates from 93 countries elected unanimously the Executive Committee, which met for the first time in the capital of Sweden, to discuss the important tasks entrusted to them by the youth of the whole world in the struggle for peace, for friendship among the peoples, for mutual understanding and international co-operation and for a better future for the young generation.

Two important questions made up the agenda of the Executive Committee meeting:

1) - The defence of the rights of rural youth and the participation of the WFDY in the preparations for the International Gathering of Rural Youth.

2) - The activities of the WFDY for the development of sports and cultural exchanges among the youth of different countries.

More than 60 members, guests and observers from the following countries attended: Italy, Great Britain, France, Germany, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Denmark, Hungary, Iran, Poland, USSR, USA, Holland, Indonesia, Lebanon, Norway, Chile, Korea, Czechoslovakia, Viet-Nam, Cuba, Spain, Finland, Austria, Canada, Rumania, South Africa, India, Sweden.

Observers attended from the Women's International Democratic Federation, the International Union of Students, from the Young Women's Christian Association, from the International Civil Service, from the Norwegian UNO Youth, from the Norwegian Youth League of the Good Templers.

Messages and written contributions were sent to the Executive Committee by youth groups and organisations interested in the agenda, especially from Japan, Guatemala and Mexico.

More than 30 guests and observers discussed with lively interest the first point of the agenda, where all the serious conditions of youth of the countryside of many countries were stressed. The discussion proved that the initiative of the youth from Ravenna, Italy, had found a favourable echo among the youth of the countryside. Various proposals show that the idea of such gathering has spread rapidly and has been received in all countries with enthusiasm. That is why, already a great number of the most different youth organisations are discussing the formation of local or national committees, which would work from the very beginning on the basis of the Ravenna Appeal.

Concerning the second point of the agenda, the representatives of the countries present accepted the measures proposed by the Secretariat of the WFDY to develop cultural and sports exchanges among the youth of all countries, the organisation of friendly cultural and sports meetings, parties, assemblies, regional, national and local festivals. They strssed that the efforts made until now by the WFDY to achieve the co-operation of the most different organisations in order to develop cultural and sports activities, have brought happy results and prove the necessity of multiplying these efforts.

After fruitful conversations, the Executive Committee unanimously adopted the resolutions which we publish here.

RESOLUTION ON THE DEFENCE OF THE RIGHTS OF THE RURAL YOUTH AND THE PARTICIPATION OF THE WFDY IN THE INTERNATIONAL GATHERING OF RURAL YOUTH

The Executive Committee of the World Federation of Democratic Youth has, during its meeting, 25th - 28th January in Stockholm, examined the problem of the defence of the rights of the rural youth and at the same time the proposal of the Italian youth on the organisation of an International Gathering of Rural Youth.

In recent years the life of the rural youth of many countries has become more and more difficult, the number of young farmers who have been deprived of their land is steadily increasing, the wages of young agricultural workers have been lowered, unemployment is increasing, taxes are risingm and land rents and the prices for equipment have been raised.

The rural youth of most countries are meeting with great difficulties in their desire for education, they do not receive the necessary medical aid, and they have no opportunities for vacations or for participating in sports.

In many countries the political rights of young people in the countryside are being limited more and more, and in a number of countries rural youth have no opportunities of forming their own organisations, to state their elementary demands at meetings and assemblies, in the press and on the radio. Considerable sections of the rural youth, especially girls and women are deprived of their right to vote.

Youth of colonial and under-developed countries live under particularly hard and difficult conditions.

The direct cause of this intolerable situation of rural youth in many countries is to be found in the preparation for a new war, the policy of rearmament, the militarisation of the economy and the policy of the so-called cold war, which destroys normal economic relations between the countries.

The agricultural youth will not tolerate these hard conditions of life, they seek an alternative. Growing sections of rural youth demand land and work, increased wages, lowered taxes and land rents, stabilisation of agricultural prices relative to industrial costs, and the use of war budgets for agricultural needs. The opportunity to found a home and family, real access to education and professional training, to recreation, sports, and necessary medical aid. The rural youth demand the granting of complete political rights. The young people of the countryside, together with all young people are declaring themselves in favour of a relaxation of international tension, ending of the existing wars and armaments drive, for the independence of their countries and normal economic relations between the different countries.

The WFDY supports all these just demands and struggles of rural youth.

The Executive Committee considers that the future task of the WFDY and its member organisations is to carry out still more active work among the rural youth, to draw all the rural youth into the struggle for peace and for a better life. It is necessary to draw the ever increasing sections of rural youth, small-holders, agricultural workers, the tenant and tied farmers, and professional people in the countryside into the struggle for the winning of their just demands. By every method - organising gatherings and meetings, cultural, sports and other activities, through the press and on the radio, magazines and revues, organising solidarity between young workers and students in the towns and rural youth.

The Italian youth have initiated the call for an International Gathering of Rural Youth in the autumn of 1954. In this proposal of the Italian youth the Executive Committee of the WFDY sees the possibility of uniting and stimulating the fight of the rural youth of all countries for their elementary rights and supports by all possible means this initiative.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY appeals to all international and national youth organisations of all countries, who are concerned about the situation of rural youth, to make known the appeal of the Italian youth, and to develop the widest and most active preparations for the Gathering. The International Gathering must become a really representative coming together of all sections of rural youth, young agricultural workers, sons of small-holders and tenant farmers and tied farmers, young technicians, medical and agricultural students, irrespective of their political and religious opinions, of race, nationality or of social status.

The Executive Committee also supports the proposal of the Italian youth for the creation of a Preparatory Committee of the International Gathering of Rural Youth and instructs the Secretariat of the WFDY to take part in the work of the International Preparatory Committee. The Executive Committee requests its member organisations to do their best, in co-operation with the most varied youth organisations, and representatives of rural youth, to ensure the most broadly based composition of the International Preparatory Committee.

The Executive Committee taking into account the different circumstances in the countries and the varied sections of youth, recommends to the youth organisations of the different countries that they organise gatherings, conferences, campaigns, meetings, assemblies, inquiries and petitions, to discuss the questions of the life of the rural youth, to develop ideas, charters of rights and legislation for the International Gathering; drawing up mandates for delegates, organise cultural and sports events and the collection of funds to send delegates to the Gathering.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY requests all youth organisations and above all, the rural youth organisations to form national and local committees for the preparation of the International Gathering, drawing representatives from trade-union, religious and other organisations, leaders of farmers' movements, well-known public figures, men of science and culture, into participation in the work of the committees, to stimulate the broadest based activities among rural youth.

The Executive Committee proposes that the Secretariat of the WFDY organises this work by a profound study of the life of the rural youth, by helping youth to draw up their demands, by exposing the conditions of life of rural youth, by the spreading through all means of the experiences in the struggles of the rural youth for political and economic rights, for peace and for a better life.

The Executive Committee charges the Secretariat of the WFDY to render all possible aid to the youth organisations, to the national and local preparatory committees and in the first place to those of the colonial and under-developed countries in their preparations for the International Gathering of Rural Youth.

RESOLUTION ON THE ACTIVITIES OF THE WFDY IN DEVELOPING CULTURAL AND SPORTS EXCHANGES BETWEEN YOUNG PEOPLE IN DIFFERENT COUNTRIES.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY notes with satisfaction that recently there has been a remarkable strengthening of friendly international relations, that there have been more wide-spread sports and cultural exchanges and a great increase in cultural and sports activities among youth organisations.

The preparations, the holding and the results of the IVth World Festival of Youth and Students in which 30,000 young people took part have been a great contribution towards this present situation. The Festival was a great get together of friendship and was a wonderful display of cultural and sports activities and of the talents of the young generation.

These events have awakened a live interest in the young people of the world who give their active support to regional and national Festivals, to art competitions, frontier meetings, youth caravans, fêtes and sports competitions. Exchange of cultural and sports delegations has a favourable influence on the building of friendship and reciprocal understanding among young people of different countries.

To help strengthen further the unity among young people in the fight for their rights for peace and international security, the Executive Committee of the WFDY calls for still more wide-spread international cultural and sports contacts.

The WFDY will give all its help to national organisations in order to assure still greater expansion in the field of exchanges. The Executive Committee records its support for an international campaign "Friendship through Knowledge and Understanding" from World Youth Week (21 - 27 March 1954) up to World Youth Day (10th of November 1954). This campaign should help towards better knowledge of the life, customs, culture, art and sports of many people.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY approves the organisation in 1954 of the following events:

- International youth competition for Piano and Violin -(September 1954)
- International Youth Singing Competition (Prague, May 1954)
- International Cycle Road Race - (Britain, September 1954)
- International Friendly Winter Sports (December 1954)
- Table Tennis Competition (Italy)
- Cultural Competition, sponsored by "World Youth", on the life of rural youth.

The Executive Committee instructs the Secretariat of the WFDY to work out with other interested organisations the programme and rules of these events and to send them to different countries within one month.

Also in 1954 various youth organisations have planned a large number of regional, national and local festivals, friendship galas, competitions, international camps, and varied sports events. The Executive Committee notably welcomes and supports the Youth Friendship Festival of Central America and the Carribean (in Guatemala), the Spring Festival of Youth of South America (in Chile), the Friendship Camp of Scandinavian Youth (in Norway), the British Youth Assembly, the National Rally of French Youth, the 2nd National Rally of German Youth, the 4th Olympiades of Italian youth, the national youth Festivals in Japan, Holland, Belgium, Pakistan, Israel, Ceylon, New Zealand, Switzerland, provincial festivals in Canada, and South Africa, the Spring Rally of Italian girls as well as other events.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY instructs the Secretariat to give all possible practical help to national and local youth organisations as well as to preparatory committees so as to ensure the fullest success of these events. It is necessary to popularise through all possible mediums this rich programme. The Secretariat of the WFDY must help youth organisations, cultural and sports groups and preparatory committees to invite youth of other countries, well-known people and sportsmen, to festivals, friendship camps and other events. The WFDY Secretariat must help youth organisations to exchange exhibitions, films, books, papers, correspondence, songs and other publications, as well as the sending of cultural and sports equipments.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY considers as opportune the establishment of WFDY prizes for winners of cultural and sports competitions thus strengthening exchanges in these fields and the friendship of youth of countries throughout the world. It will be useful to make available to different countries the mass sports badge of the WFDY.

The Executive Committee of the WFDY proposes that the Secretariat popularises in all ways these various forms of strengthening friendly relations between the youth of different countries such as the frontier meetings, relay races, sports by correspondence, visits of youth groups, groups of young artists, sports teams and sportsmen.

The Executive Committee appeals to international and national youth organisations, to the various organisations interested in the development of cultural and sports exchanges, proposing co-operation with them in the preparation and running of this vast activity. It instructs the Secretariat to discuss with these organisations the practical conditions of such co-operation.

In the same spirit it instructs the Secretariat, and recommends to member organisations, to support actively all other events serving the unity of youth and friendship between the nations.

Thus the Executive Committee calls on the organisations to give their support to the exchange programme of the IUS in particular to the forthcoming 12th World Student Summer Games in Budapest. The Executive Committee also welcomes the organisation of the International NANSEN Camp in NORWAY.

Finally the Executive Committee deems it necessary that the Secretariat, with the agreement of member organisations, popularises by all means, through "World Youth", Information Bulletins, leaflets, radio, etc. the experiences of youth organisations acquired in the course of their activities contributing to mutual understanding to friendship and to the unity of the youth of the world in its work for peace, happiness and a better future.

NEW AFFILIATIONS

The Secretariat of the WFDY submitted for approval to the Executive Committee the following affiliation demands (which will be - according to the Constitution - definitely effective after ratification by the Council and the next Congress) .

1 - Union of Marrocan Students in France

2 - Pioneers of Norway, (Norway), organisation of children from Norway under the direction of the Norwegian branch of the WFDY, (founded in 1950)

3 - Alliance of the Democratic Youth of Honduras (Honduras)
Organisation of union with special influence among students.

Union of the Youth of Guadeloupe
Founded in 1947, for the defence of the rights of the youth of this island and for peace.

5 - Democratid Youth League of Karachi (Pakistan)
Founded in May 1953.

6 - Glasgow University Socialist Club (Great Britain)

7 - Trinidad and Tobago Youth Council (Trinidad, West Indies)
Organisation of the youth from this island who recently held their Congress.

8 - World Youth Friendship League (Canada)
In activity over a number of years, on the basis of the WFDY programme.

9 - South Africa Indian Youth Congress.

We observe that the demands for affiliation presented by Trinidad, Honduras and Guadeloupe, countries in which the WFDY had not had any affiliated bodies, increased the number of affiliated countries of the WFDY to 93.

Dear Friends,

The Secretariat of the WFDY addresses you today on a problemwhich needs your support and requires your utmost efforts.As you may know,recently in Western Germany the number of attacks against the political rights of the citizens and first of all against the democratic youth has considerably increased.

We still remember the participation of the German delagation at the III World Congress and first of all the information from the delegates from the German Federal Republic about the persecution of young patriots.

During the time which has passed since the Congress, these measures have been intensified.Many examples have been published in various newspapers.

At the same time the strength of solidarity has been proved by the liberation of Wolfgang Schoor,young composer who took part in the IIIrd Youth Congress and the IVth Festival as observer.

We also demand the liberation for all the youth -about 150- who are today in prison;let us mention some of their names:

Manfred von Brauchitsch ,member of the International Festival Committee,who is known in Germany as one of the "Fighters for Peace and Liberty in German Sport". Besides he is well known beyond the German frontiers as a racing motorist.During the preparations for the Festival Brauchitsch was imprisoned, but his release was achieved thanks to the solidarity movement.

Jupp Angenforth, representative of Western German Youth, member of the Rhine-North-Westphalian Parliament. Besides this he is the leader of the central Bureau of the FDJ in Western Germany.Under this title he will represent the FDJ in the course of the trial. Inspite of the immunity which he enjoys as an M.P. he was arrested in the open street and taken to prison.

Hanni Dunsche, young sports woman,who fights together with her husband -like Brauchitsch- for peace and liberty in German sport.

In November of 1952,Walther Zauner,a youth from Regensburg, was condemned by the american military court to 4 years of prison, for havin blocked up the holes intended to be used for dynamiting the Maria-Orter bridge in his home town. Shortly before Christmas

Dear Friend,

As you probably know, the WFDY and IUS Councils, which were both held in August, decided to convoke the Vth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship in July - August, 1955.

In accordance with the friendly invitation of the Polish youth, the Vth Festival will be held in Warsaw.

Continuing a tradition which has already been illustrated by the brilliant successes of the preceding Festivals, this gathering, which is open to tens of thousands of youth all over the world, will, during its preparation and the festival itself, afford the opportunity to know and understand one another better, thus contributing to mutual friendship and understanding among peoples. In this way, too, they have the possibility of trying their strength in note-worthy cultural and sports competitions.

The whole programme of the Vth Festival will be dedicated to the most noble aspirations of all sections of the youth: for peace and a better life.

The WFDY and the IUS, in order to promote the most efficient co-operation between all those who are interested in the success of this great activity, has decided to create the International Preparatory Committee of the Vth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship.

The Committee will hold its constitutive meeting in Vienna /Austria/ on the 17th of December 1954 with the following agenda:

"Preparation of the Vth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship".

We are convinced that your participation will be of infinite value for the successful work of this Preparatory Committee. Knowing your interest in all that concerns the youth,we sincerely believe that you will be kind enough to accept our invitation.

We hope you will answer favourably. In case you are not able to be present at this meeting, we would greatly appreciate your message and your suggestions for the Festival and its preparations.

Hoping to hear from you and to meet you soon, we send our warm greetings

Latin American FACTS

PUBLISHED MONTHLY by LATIN AMERICAN RESEARCH BUREAU
799 Broadway. New York 3, N. Y. Room 636 10c a copy $1.00 a year

Dear Friend:

At last we have a publication which is creating understanding and cooperation between the peoples of the United States and Latin America. This publication is LATIN AMERICAN FACTS, of which the latest issue is enclosed.

LATIN AMERICAN FACTS

This is a new publication which is attempting to bring to the American people factual economic, cultural, social and political data about Latin America and about United States-Latin American relations. This is an urgent need in order to create understanding and cooperation between the peoples of these two areas.

Within the short period of its existence LATIN AMERICAN FACTS has already extended its subscription lists to people all over the United States - as well as to Argentina, Cuba, Mexico and Puerto Rico.

THE LATIN AMERICAN RESEARCH BUREAU

Our research bureau itself has become a valuable source of information for many people. The Bureau hopes to be able to initiate other publications in addition to LATIN AMERICAN FACTS, as well as to provide information for articles, books and lectures.

WHAT WE NEED

We believe that you feel as we do - that it is necessary for LATIN AMERICAN FACTS and our Bureau to continue and enlarge its work.

We are therefore asking you if you will be one of 200 people to give $10 for this cause - the cause of furthering understanding and cooperation between the peoples of Latin American and the United States. - Two thousand dollars will insure continuance of our work for a full year.

Sincerely yours,

Richard Greenspan

U.S. TO GET TOUGHER WITH LATIN AMERICA

On December 16 President Truman proclaimed a national emergency. The same day the U.S. State Department immediately took action to swing the Latin American nations into line behind U.S. full mobilization by proposing an emergency meeting of the foreign ministers of the 21-nation Council of the Organization of American States. A few days later the proposal was accepted, with the meeting scheduled to be in Washington in mid-February.

The New York Times, a newspaper close to the State Department, indicated the U.S. was going to put on the heat. Its editorial (Dec. 19, 1950) greeting the conference began:

"In times of danger it is prudent to count one's friends and 'grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel'." It added: "This is no time for rhetorical courtesies of the flowery language of diplomacy." - Especially, we might add, with countries we've shown such dominance over in the United Nations.

Importance of Conference Site: An indication that the U.S. is going to put on more pressure for Latin American support is the meeting place - Washington, D.C. This will be the first time a meeting of the foreign ministers of the 21 nations will be held in the U.S. since such meetings were first proposed in 1936.

Latin American Support Worries U.S.: Said the Times in the same editorial (12/19): ". . . ,one must point out that so far as practical help in the campaign (i.e. Korean) was concerned, we received little from Latin America. Brazil and Mexico gave troops in the Second World War, but this time only moral support."

A few days before, the Times (Dec. 13, 1950) had quoted Joseph P. Kennedy, former U.S. Ambassador to Great Britain:

"We need defense (i.e. military preparations) in this hemisphere, in Canada, in the Caribbean and in Latin America," said Kennedy. "We have no reason to believe that cooperation on their part will not be forthcoming." And then, to show that he did have doubts it would be forthcoming, stated: ". . .and we can, and should, insist upon it."

Puzzled: A few months before, Stanford University's Hispanic American Report, (Oct., 1950) declared: ". . .we are puzzled by the declaration of President Aleman that Mexico is in no position to send troops to Korea. In a revolution a soldier springs up behind every rock."

A glance at their July, 1950, issue gives part of the reason: "The general impression remains that the majority of Mexicans are opposed to sending military aid of any sort" for the war in Korea, said the Report, which supports the war.

Brazilian Officers Oppose Korean War: The left-wing Cuban press service, Prensa Continental (Dec. 20) reported that an editorial "criticizing UN (United Nations) policy in their support of North American aggression toward the Korean people" appeared in the publication of the Club Militar, and "is shaking the high brass of the Armed Forces" of Brazil. (Almost all Brazilian officers belong to this Club) As a result, Club Militar's leaders have been under attack by Brazilian ruling circles who are committed to U.S. foreign policy, Prensa Continental informs us. It also reports that "the center of the campaign against the Club Militar and its publication is the American Embassy."

Other U.S. Embassy Attacks: The Oct., 1950, issue of the Hispanic American Report disclosed that the U.S. Ambassador to Mexico had incurred the wrath of the Mexican press by calling the reporters in to express U.S. disapproval of the Stockholm Peace Petition (which calls for world condemnation of the first user of the atom bomb.) The Mexican press resented this attempt of the U.S. Ambassador to influence what they wrote, and said so openly.

Ten million signatures on the petition have been reported collected in Latin America thus far.

U.S. Has Good Cause to be Worried: Since the end of World War II the U.S. has betrayed its pledges of economic assistance to Latin America (see p.5); bolstered and encouraged Fascist-like regimes which today oppress more than 110 million people (see p. 4); followed the traditional imperialist policy of encouraging greater private investments and high profits beneath a smoke-screen of talk about "assistance" (see p. 6); played a great part in lowering the standards of living of Latin Americans (see p. 8) 70% of whom were reported as constantly hungry, as reported in Latin American Facts, Nov., 1950.

None of these policies are to be changed at the coming western hemisphere conference.

To Be Discussed: Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller Jr. explained the U.S. wanted the conference for "a discussion 'of the urgent problems. . .in the political, economic, military and related fields.'" (N.Y. Times, Dec. 17, 1950)

Miller said it was the hope of the U.S. Government that the discussion be limited to those matters "related to the current world situation."

Not To Be Discussed: Miller thus ruled out any talks on previous U.S. promises of economic assistance to Latin America (postponed 7 times) or of any proposals for increased political freedom in Latin America.

U.S. Wants Vital Raw Materials and Under-paid Labor: Washington correspondent, Robert S. Allen revealed more than three months ago (N.Y. Post, Sept. 14, 1950) that a decision had been reached on a policy level in Washington that: "Unlike the last war when Latin American troops were not used in combat they will be very necessary for this purpose in the next conflict."

Allen also added: "The plan most favored by the Pentagon is to organize various units made up of men from different Latin American countries." It would be simpler to train such units, was one reason given. Fear was another: ". . .the danger would be much less of their becoming involved in 'local' politics" and thus bring them under direct U.S. control.

Under-paid Labor: Getting under-paid labor imported to the U.S. has also been in the cards for months. "The State Department was disclosed. . .to be negotiating with Central and South American Governments looking to the importation of possibly several thousand workers," disclosed the N.Y. Times, Dec. 16, 1950. It also indicated that many of these workers will be used in labor battalions attached to U.S. forces throughout the world.

Critical Raw Materials: To mobilize fully the U.S. needs certain vital raw materials, many only obtainable in sufficient quantities from Latin America. Some of these were outlined in The Atlantic Monthly (Sept., 1950): "Brazilian and Cuban manganese; Bolivian tin, tungsten, and antimony; Peruvian copper and vanadium; Brazilian mica, quartz crystals, industrial diamonds, vegetable oils, raw rubber, and bauxite, sesal and abaca cordage fibers and kapok from the Caribbean republics, and medical substances and chemical supplies from all countries." Other raw materials and foods will also be required.

People Can't Be Delivered: Chances are that the U.S. will be able to whip most of the countries into line as far as vital raw materials are concerned, provided of course the U.S. pays for them. The government representatives might even be badgered to agree to some fighting men and under-paid labor.

But these representatives will not be able to carry out their pledges of full cooperation of the people of their countries. As one writer who has some kind words for the Truman administration said of Latin America recently - "except for the more reactionary and feudal circles, anti-American sentiment is today greater than at any time since our marine interventions." (Carlton Beals in the Progressive, 12/50)

15 "FREEDOM LOVING" DICTATORSHIPS TO ATTEND

Fascist-like regimes rule 15 of the 20 Latin American nations that are to attend the mid-February Western Hemisphere conference, a survey by this publication reveals. These 15 countries encompass more than 110,000,000 people. Included among them are the leading countries, namely, Brazil, Argentina and Chile. The others are: Bolivia, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Venezuela, as well as Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, and El Salvador.

Comments from conservative, moderate and liberal sources on the 15 (see blow) fascist-like regimes, disclose some of the undemocratic activities they have pursued.

The anti-democratic nature of three-fourths of these Latin American regimes thus refute any idea that the coming conference will be a gathering of "the free nations of the world" or that the question of "freedom" will seriously be considered.

The Excuse: Under the familiar Hitler cry of "fighting Communism," these fascist-like regimes have been encouraged and excused by the U.S. State Department. However the Communists have been only a small part of the 110 million whose political liberties have been taken away. This contention is supported by the statement of Samuel Guy Inman, often a U.S. Government representative at Inter-American conferences, in the British publication, World Affairs (Jan., 1950).

Inman points out that in Peru and Venezuela what happened was that reform governments were expelled by reactionary forces, which "began to fill the prisons with labor leaders and other freedom-loving citizens."

The Anti-Democratic Activities: In all the 15 countries activities of labor organizations have been severely restricted or abolished; bona-fide labor leaders and even the mildest of political opponents are murdered, tortured, jailed or exiled; and freedom of speech and press is virtually non existant.

Connection Between U.S. and Fascist Regimes: There has been a direct connection between the increase of fascism in Latin America and profits, as is indicated by Gerard Masur in The Virginia Quarterly Review (July, 1950) when he says: "We will have to give up our contradictory attitude of condemning dictatorships on general principles and then compromising with caudillos (dictators) because they offer better returns with greater safety for capitalist investors."

At Last Inter-American Conference U.S. Encouraged Fascism: Fascism was encouraged by the U.S. at the last big inter-American conference at Bogota in April, 1948, at the same time that the U.S. betrayed its promises of economic aid to Latin America made at the Mexico City conference in March, 1945.

Inman disclosed this in his article mentioned above. He said that at the 1945 Mexico City conference: "The United States promised it would aid Latin America in readjusting itself to a peace economy," and ". . .raising the standard of living of Latin America."

Three years later, at the Bogota Conference, Inman describes what happened:

". . .the delegates who failed to take an effective step to raise the living standards of the poverty-ridden people, met and passed resolutions against the evils of Communism. A few months afterwards military coups d'etats, appealing to the Bogota resolutions against Communism, with the support of reactionary clerical and Fascist interests, expelled recently elected reform governments in Peru and Venezuela . . ." The resolution was spurred by the U.S. delegates at Bogota.

On the 15: A glance at comments on the 15 fascist-like regimes reveal the following:

Peru, Colombia, Paraguay, Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua and Panama "have either set up new dictatorial regimes or have consolidated the existing ones," reported Gerard Masur in the moderate Virginia Quarterly Review, July, 1950.

Argentina: ". . .freedom of speech does not actually exist in Argentina," said the Jan., 1950 issue of Stanford University's Hispanic American Report. Since then repression has grown worse, and the U.S. has lent Argentina large sums of money.

Brazil: The National Security Act "establishes the terms of imprisonment for those 'who make verbal attacks on government agents, or spread false or alarming news in order to provoke disorder,'" states the British magazine World Today (July, 1950). The National Labor Union of Brazil is controlled by the government. Elected Communist representatives in the Brazilian Congress were kicked out after the party was outlawed in 1947.

Chile: As a result of a series of strikes in railway, coal and other industries the Hispanic American Report (Jan., 1950) disclosed that the Chilean government "with the purpose of preventing 'inflammatory activities' has exiled to remote regions of the Republic a former member of the Chamber of Deputies, Juan Vargas Puebla; the leader of the Bakers' Union, Miguel Vargas, a former cabinet minister, Miguel Concha Quezada; and a former councilman" -- all charged with being Communists. This understates the case: thousands of Chileans have been jailed, and Pablo Nehruda, the famous Chilean poet and other intellectuals and labor leaders have been forced to flee into exile.

Honduras: The Hispanic American Report, Sept., 1950, discloses that in Honduras the "chief complaint" of the Liberal opposition to the government of President Manuel Galves "are that opposition newspapers are not allowed to circulate freely in some parts of the country and that opposition parties are impeded from meeting."

Bolivia: This country was compared to Argentina by a prominent South American interviewed by J. Alvarez del Vayo in the liberal Nation magazine March 11, 1950.

Costa Rica and El Salvador: In Costa Rica, once known as "the cradle of democracy" in Latin America, stated New York Times writer Will Lissner (June 24, 1950) "One of the achievements of the 1949 revolution. . . was to drive labor out of politics by suppressing the Communist-dominated unions." Also: "These unions, except the railway workers, were also suppressed by the revolutionary junta in El Salvador." Lissner's article began significantly enough: "United States business interests are enjoying a honeymoon today everywhere in Central America except Guatemala."

Haiti: Fenelon Alphonse, chief opposition candidate to Colonel Paul Magloire in the October presidential election in Haiti charged that the election was "hokum" and "did not vote." (N.Y. Times, Oct. 10, 1950) Mr. Alphonse knew what he was talking about. The next day the Times reported that 99% of the vote was obtained by Magloire, a member of the military junta which had ousted former President Dumarsais Estime.

Anti-Democratic Attacks in Others: In Cuba, Mexico, Ecuador and Uruguay - four of the five remaining countries - increased attacks on civil liberties are to be noted. Guatemala thus far has shown the greatest respect for civil liberties, and interestingly enough has been under greatest attack by the U.S. government and leading U.S. newspapers.

THE GROWTH OF U.S. INVESTMENTS

Beneath a smoke-screen of talk about "assistance" the United States government has actually followed the traditional attitude of encouraging more economic domination of Latin America by U.S. investors, it would appear from the facts below.

They show that in 1948 of the $11.3 billion of private direct investments (foreign enterprises controlled in this country) $4.1 billion was invested in Latin America. (Not included in these figures are private loans to foreign governments.)

This $4.1 billion represented 36.3% of total U.S. private direct investments abroad.

Total United States Private Direct Investments Abroad*

	1919	1929	1940	1948
Latin America	2.0	3.6	2.6	4.1
Canada	.8	2.0	2.1	3.3
Europe	.7	1.4	1.9	2.3
Other (incl. undistributed)	.4	.7	.7	1.6
Totals	3.9	7.7	7.3	11.3

*Source: P. 58, Point Four, U.S. Department of State, Publication 3719. Released January, 1950.

Note that there was an increase of $1.5 billion in Latin American investments from 1940 to 1948. This was an increase greater in size than in any other area of the world U.S. capital has been spreading.

-more-

Also to be noted is that from 1919 to 1940 there was a decline in the percentage Latin American direct investments occupied compared to similar investments in other areas of the world. By 1948 however, a slight increase percentage-wise was to be noted compared to 1940.

Latin America Accounted for 66% in 1945-47:

Of the $906.2 million of U.S. foreign direct investment capital (new) for 1945 through 1947 $603.8 million, or 66.6% of the total, was in Latin America.

In 1948, of the $699 million of this type of investments, $318 million was invested in Latin America showing that this area remains a prime source of investment.

Profits Increase:

Profits of direct private foreign investments have been increasing in both size and percentage, the Department of State booklet shows.

"The estimated income from these direct investments has been increasing steadily since the war," they say. "From 1938 through 1945 it amounted to about $400 million a year. After that time it increased consecutively to $622 million, $834 million, and $997 million (preliminary) in 1948." (p. 59)

These figures do not include reinvested profits which "rose from $221 million in 1945 to a preliminary estimate of about $570 million in 1948" the publication discloses.

Rate of Profit:

A comparison of the rate of profit in the United States and abroad for 1945-48 is shown in the following table:

Rate of Profit of U.S. Direct Investments
At Home and Abroad

	United States*	Abroad
	(after taxes)
1945	6.4%	9.2%
1947	9.5	15.2

Source: Page 58, Point Four, U.S. Department of State, Publication 3719. Released January, 1950.

Thus, even according to Government figures which can usually be counted upon to understate the case, foreign investments bring in a higher rate of profit than domestic investments.

LIVING CONDITIONS DECLINE FURTHER

Despite U.S. verbal offerings of aid to Latin America (see p. 5), the fact remains that the living conditions of the people of Latin America are constantly on the decline.

Brazil: A Classic Example:

Brazil, containing one-third (50,000,000) of the inhabitants of Latin America, is a classic example. "It is not hard to understand why there are Communists in Brazil or in any other Latin American country where a low-wage, high-profit economy is practiced," wrote correspondent W.H. Lawrence in the N.Y. Times, Jan. 2, 1950.

He then pointed out that since 1937 the cost of living had gone up nearly four times "and wages have not kept pace."

A year later (Jan. 3, 1951), a Times dispatch was headlined "Living Costs Soar Further in Brazil" and disclosed that: "Wages did not keep up with living costs. . "

Honduras:

For many years a dictatorship, Honduras is a case in point: "Wages in Honduras over the past ten-year period have remained relatively constant, while prices of commodities included in the average family's consumption pattern have skyrocketed" reported the Foreign Commerce Weekly (Dec. 18, 1950) a U.S. government publication. They added:

". . .the San Pedro Sula Chamber of Commerce has estimated that wages have increased 20-25 percent since 1940. A cost-of-living index prepared by Banco Central de Honduras increased 195.4 percent since 1940."

These cold figures in no way reveal the full extent of the hunger, disease, death, and every thinkable sort of misery Latin Americans suffer. Aspects of this were revealed in our November issue ("100,000,000 Latin Americans Go Hungry")

Trend Continues in 1950:

This sharp increase in living costs as compared to wage increases has been taking place in Latin America over the last decade. The figures below, taken from the United Nations Monthly Bulletin of Statistics, Dec., 1950, show cost of living increases in the major cities of seven countries in Latin America.

The figures indicate the trend for the population of all seven countries which encompass over 100,000,000 people.

	Cost-of-Living Index				% of increase between 1949 and latest 1950 month
	1940	1945	1949	1950
Bolivia (La Paz)	214	473	725	843 (June)	16.3
Brazil (Sao Paulo)	105	232	359	382 (Aug.)	6.4
Chile (Santiago)	119	244	529	595 (June)	12.5
Colombia (Bogota)	114	189	304	386 (Aug.)	27.0
Mexico (Mexico City)*	117	247	389	416 (Aug.)	6.9

Living Costs Sharper than in U.S.:

In almost all countries of Latin America price increases have been sharp between 1940 and 1949, and have been greater than in the United States. The seven Latin American countries above are good examples in this respect.

For the first number of months in 1950 exceptionally sharp increases have occurred in a number of countries, U.N. figures show. The 7 countries are indicative of this. In some can already be seen the effect of U.S. cost increases since the Korean war.

Since Latin America today depends on obtaining a greater proportion of its imports from the U.S. than ever before in a peace-time period, even sharper increases in living costs can be expected.

Cost of Living has "Serious Political Possibilities:"

"Distribution of the national income was even more unsatisfactory in 1948 than it was in 1940," declared the professorial Inter-American Economic Affairs in their Autumn, 1949 issue.

"From 1939 to 1948 the cost of living in Latin America rose on the average more than 125%." They termed this a dangerous increase" which is running ahead of the advance in wages." "The cost of living situation is an ugly one with serious political possibilities," they warned.

Spelling It Out:

What these "serious political possibilities" imply was spelled out by "a distinguished South American" interviewed by the Nation magazine (Mar. 11, 1950). He said: "The awakening of the Asian masses has been the outstanding development of the first half of the twentieth century. The awakening of Latin America may be the historic event of the second half."

NEW BOOK CONTAINS VALUABLE FOREIGN INVESTMENT DATA

Monopoly Today (International Publishers, Dec., 1950), the new 128-page fact-studded compact work by Labor Research Association, contains an excellent section on "Foreign Investments and the Monopolies." Well-documented and indexed, it discloses that monopoly capital of the U.S. has been reaching out increasingly for super-profits abroad. This is partly due, say the authors, to a desire to take over the position of capitalist competitor nations weakened as a result of World War II.

In addition to giving comprehensive figures on total U.S. investments, private and public, the book also points out that even in foreign investments there is a monopoly. Thus 75% of the net out-flow of U.S. direct-investment capital in 1947 was accounted for by 10 out of the approximately 2,500 U.S. companies with foreign branches and subsidiaries.

The other sections of the book contain latest information on: the workings of U.S. monopolies, the increased strength of the eight leading financial groups, and the role of big business in mass communication.

The book costs $1.00 (paper cover), $1.50 (cloth-cover) including postage. It can be obtained from Labor Research Assn., 80 East 11th Street, New York 3, N.Y.

GEORGE COSSON - Former Atty. General of Iowa

543 - 53rd. St., Des Moines, Ia.

In the beginning there was fear, and fear was in the heart of man; and fear controlled man. At every turn it whelmed over him, and with the crashing of thunder and the wild sighing of the wind it swept through him, leaving him no moment of ease.

All the days of man were gray with fear because all his universe was charged with danger. Earth and sea and sky were set against him; with inexplicable hate they were bent on his destruction. So it seemed to primitive man without knowledge, without education, without culture and without enlightenment. In the course of time, the idea of the spirit crept into his head. He had dreams, good and bad, pleasant and horrible.

Men and beasts that he had seen and had not seen visited him, but some of the men who visited him in his sleep had died. Some of the men and animals were friendly while others sought to kill him. No longer was he free from fear even in his sleep because enemies alive and the spirit of his dead enemies made him nightly visits to do him harm and sometimes to kill him. It was natural for him to conclude that the evil which he encountered in the daytime from the elements and earth and sea and sky were controlled by these evil spirits. Hence, the evil spirits must be placated, appeased or destroyed and the good spirits rewarded and worshipped.

Lewis Browne, from whom I have not hesitated to borrow, sets forth this thought in striking phrase in This Believing World and he closes each chapter on the early Celts, Babylon, Egypt and India with these words: "And they were afraid, afraid, afraid."

If some historian should write the history of the so-called free world, and particularly the history of the United States, he might well close each chapter with the identical words of Lewis Browne concerning the history of primitive civilization: "And they were afraid, afraid, afraid." Like the early primitive man, all our days, yes and our nights, are gray with fear until we have become a nation hysterical and psychopathic, not to say paranoiac. This is true because, with all our education, scientific knowledge and culture, we have but little enlightenment.

> "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things."

So said St. Paul, I Corinthians, 13:11. Isn't it about time that we grow up and become men and put away adolescent speaking and understanding and thinking? Are we, as individuals and as a nation, to be forever controlled by the same instincts which dominated primitive man?

It has been said that "civilization is but another name for man's increasing victory over fear." This is no doubt true in so far as primitive man is concerned, but with the coming of civilization another element makes its appearance - - hate. We then have the twin evils of fear and hate. Again I borrow from Lewis Browne in his devastating portrayal of hate as exemplified in the ancient city of Jerusalem. I quote:

"These hundreds of creatures swarming in this ancient town feel as enemies to each other. The Arab in his robe looks with loathing on the Armenian in his sack suit and both look with disdain on the Jew. The Carmelite monk looks with anger at the Anglican missionary and both look with contempt on the Greek priest. Hatred seems to be all around one; almost a noxious vapor that one can see, a veritable reek that one can smell. These creatures seem to be unable to bear the very sight of each other. They actually seem ready to kill! They have killed in this ancient town, killed until every alley was flooded with blood. Not a wall in all this maze of walls but was rung with the groans of the dying.

"Skulls beyond counting have been cracked on these flags; throats unnumbered have been slit in these doorways. They've murdered and pillaged and raped in this old holy town 'till now it is all but one Golgotha, one bloody hill of skulls. And if you would know why, you need only look into the eyes of those hurrying phantoms. Readily they will tell you; men have slaughtered and ravished in Jerusalem because they had religion. Men have gouged eyes and ripped bellies because they believed! Believed in what? In God? Hardly -- No, they have believed only in mere vocables -- Yahweh, Christ or Allah. Yes, they have all had religion. They have all believed. They have all had a certain degree of education and culture. But with religion, education and culture they were dominated by fear and hate because they had no enlightenment."

Without enlightenment, religion, education and culture will never bring "peace on earth, good willto men." In fact, it was in this city of Jerusalem that the Prince of Peace was condemned. He was condemned because, with the Jews, there could be but one religion -- Judaism. The penalty of teaching a different religion was death by stoning. The chief priests and Pharisees did not wish to stone Jesus because of his popularity with the people, so he was brought before Pontius Pilate, and there accused and finally condemned to be crucified.

This man who went about doing good, who taught us the pure religion, the worship of good in spirit and in truth and the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and prayed that we might bring about the Kingdom of Heaven here on earth, is killed and dies the ignominious and cruel death of crucifixion. Herein we witness another great evil in addition to fear and hate -- the evil of self-righteousness. Self-righteousness always breeds fear, hate, prejudice and intolerance.

To the self-righteous there is but one good -- his good; one religion -- his religion; one way of life -- his way of life. All else is evil and evil should be destroyed. Even stoning, crucifixion and banishment are justifiable if necessary to destroy the evil. So runs the argument at every level of civilization, by every form of religion and by every form of government if the people have not enlightenment, and fear, hate and self-righteousness dominate their thinking.

This brings us to the next great evil, the lust of power and domination and this, in turn, breeds fear, hate and self-righteousness. The punic wars between Rome and Carthage are peculiarly apt and instructive in the present crisis. Rome and Carthage, as the result of a common enemy, were allies for a period of eleven years. The danger over, jealousies arose. The Carthaginian oligarchy had ambitions of splendor to be furthered by private schemes. Rome cast covetous eyes across the Straits of Messina upon the Carthaginian possessions in Sicily. Carthage was a great sea power. The super patriots of Rome argued that so long as Carthage was a great sea power, Rome was in danger.

It was easy to inflame the Roman public until the demand could no longer be resisted for a so-called "preventive war." The pirates of Messina appealed to Rome for help. This furnished the occasion and excuse for Rome to make war on Carthage. "So began the most wasteful and disastrous series of wars that had ever darkened the history of mankind." So said H. G. Wells in his Outline of History.

After a war which lasted nearly a quarter of a century, Carthage in 240 B C sued for peace. Both sides were exhausted by war and needed time and peace for reconstruction. "A little more wisdom and a little magnanimity on the part of Rome and there need never have been a renewal of the struggle," but the evil side of life was vocal and dominant. The repeated cry of Marcus Porcius Cato was that Carthage must be destroyed; so the second and third punic wars were fought; 219-201 and 149-146 B C.

Wells is certainly correct when he says the history of the second and third punic wars is not the history of perfectly sane peoples.

He rejects the idea that these wars were necessary to protect the people of Rome and their legitimate interests. Said Wells: "Other instincts were loose. The evil eye of the ancestral ape had come back into the world. Reasonable men were howled down or murdered. The western world was indeed black with homicidal monomania. Two great peoples, both very necessary to the world's development, fell foul of one another and at last Rome succeeded in murdering Carthage."

May we express the hope that some future historian a thousand or two thousand years hence will not be able to say, in speaking of the present conflict between the United States and Russia, "A little more wisdom, a little magnanimity, a little enlightenment with a willingness to negotiate as equals and the great war between the United States and Russia need never to have taken place. Two great peoples, both very necessary to the world's development, fellfoul of one another and at last both succeeded in murdering each other and destroying western civilization." This is no fantasy. Every element which existed at the time of the punic wars between Rome and Carthage exists today between the United States and Russia. The difference is that instead of one Marcus Porcius Cato who closed every address with the statement "Carthage must be destroyed", we have a hundred or a thousand here in the United States saying as openly and boldly, "Russia and communism must be destroyed."

Colliers in its special edition of October 27, 1951, with the printing and sale of 500,000 extra copies has done that very thing -- has fought the third world war and destroyed Russia and communism. According to the article in Colliers, the U.S.S.R. lost 32,000,000 killed during the war, of which about 8,000,000 were women and children. By the atom bomb we destroyed 20 square miles in the center of Moscow.

New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago and London were destroyed. The war started in May, 1952, and we occupied Russia as liberators in 1960. As liberators, we brought our blessings to the Russian people, especially the womenfolk who were still alive. High-heeled shoes sold on the black market after stockings, butter, coffee and sugar could be had. A factory which put out a brand of lipstick (Love Forever) had to run 24 hours a day to supply the demand.

In this gory, warmongering article of Colliers, tinged with sentimental simplicity, not to say idiocy, something worse than the red eye of the ancestral ape has come back into the world.

The tragedy of it is that any reputable magazine would dare publish such an article in America, and the greater tragedy of it is that the article received quasi official approval in advance. Says Colliers in its forward: "An over-all conception of this issue was confirmed in study and consultation with top political, military and economic thinkers -- including high-level Washington officials and foreign affairs experts both here and abroad." The Colliers article is but one of many articles to the same effect in leading magazines and statements of men in high places which include the statement of Francis Mathews, then Secretary of the Navy, who told an audience in Boston in August, 1950, that the United States should be willing to pay "even the price of instituting a war to compel co-operation for peace."

The editors of the American Magazine evidently believed their readers would not be content with the advocacy of destruction of every city in Russia by the use of the atomic bomb. They published an article in February, 1951 by Ellsworth Raymond under the title "Why Doesn't Somebody Kill Stalin." Raymond opens his article by saying: "Wouldn't it be a wonderful thing if someone killed Stalin." Sterling Noel fulfills Raymond's wish in his novel of August, 1951, called "I Killed Stalin" and has his hero track down and assasinate Stalin.

Two brief statements willsuffice to show the effect all this conduct of ours is having on Europe and Asia. John Cowles, writing in Look, October, 1951, said: "Many highly intelligent Europeans and Asians, who loathe Russian totalitarianism and believe completely in the democratic ideal, fear that through ineptness the United States is going to blunder into war or that we will become so provoked with Russia that we will, ourselves, precipitate war." Frank Owen, editor of the conservative London Daily Mail, recently said that American war hysteria was "not only terrific but terrifying."

We are thus brought face to face with a strange anomaly puzzling to all the nations of the non-communist world. The richest and strongest military nation of the world with the least danger of either internal or external aggression is the nation with the greatest fear and, as said by the editor of the London Daily Mail, America's war hysteria is not only terrific but terrifying. The question 'why' calls for an answer.

To understand why this is so, we must draw another lesson from history. The evils of fear and hate, self-righteousness and the lust for power not only become greatly intensified but, in their very nature, become impossible of solution when they take the form of a holy crusade dominated by the idea that "it is God's will." The holy, ideological crusades of today are the natural successors of the holy religious crusades of yesterday and the Middle Ages. Each has the same characteristics, the same intolerance, the same bigotry, the same self-righteousness and the same love for power and domination.

There is simply no room in the world for a strong, rival power. They cannot co-exist peacefully. It is God's will. This identical thought, though not the identical language, has been expressed a number of times by General MacArthur, General Ridgeway and by a score of others here in the United States. Bishop Oxnam a year or so ago repeatedly warned against a holy war.

"It is God's will", said the mighty throng with one voice when Urban II finished his powerful and moving address at Clermont, France in 1095. The seed bed of fear and hate and intolerance had long been in preparation. Peter the Hermit, riding through France and Germany on his ass and haranguing the people must be given due credit, but it was Urban II who put into the minds of men that it was God's will and started the ball rolling, or more accurately speaking, the mob moving east, and thus began the first of the crusades which were to last nearly two hundred years -- the longest, the bloodiest and the most destructive of all the religious wars of history.

We read that the slaughter was terrible. The blood of the conquered ran down the streets until men splashed in blood as they rode. At nightfall, sobbing for excess of joy, the crusaders raised their bloody hands to God in prayer. Jerusalem was finally captured July 15, 1097 and the First Crusade came to an end. The Last Crusade ended when Acre, the last city held by the Christians, was captured by the Mohammedans in 1291. The church was back where it started.

The crusades had failed after millions in life and millions in money had been lost. So, at the end of the slaughter, the Mohammedans held the East and the crusaders the West whether it was God's will or no and it was demonstrated that both could and must co-exist in the same world even if possessed of fear, hate and hysteria.

Man at long last has almost succeeded in his conquest over nature and somewhere education and culture have continued to advance but so much of the world's effort and so many of man's moral and religious crusades have failed of their purpose because of a lack of enlightenment. The measure and advance of enlightenment must need be determined by our passion for truth no matter where it leads and by the extent and degree we overcome and conquer the evils of fear and hate, intolerance and self-righteousness.

Of all the curses that have afflicted mankind and stood as a stone wall and as a bar to progress and cooperative effort, the worst is the belief that God has granted a monopoly on truth and his goodness to some individual and/or organization and has conferred upon that individual or organization an exclusive agency and representation here upon this earth.

This is true because it is based upon the belief that God's purpose can best be fulfilled here on earth by unity through identity, whereas, under the eternal and immutable law, all advance and progress come through unity, through variation and natural selection and the survival of the fittest. That is the law of the universe. Jesus stated the law of diversity and live and let live when he said to John: "Forbid him not. He that is not against us is for us."

Our foreign policy of containment and destruction of communism, based on the theory that enough guns and bombs and money would do the job, has failed as it was bound to fail. It failed for the reason the Crusades failed. This Korean war, however, has revealed our productive capacity and our industrial might to be far greater than we had even hoped. Given this tremendous strength and power, with imagination, good will and statesmanship, our possibilities and potential for good stagger the imagination both as to our domestic and foreign policy.

Since charity should begin at home, we should start here. We should take ten billion dollars from the money appropriated for the military to destroy life and use it to save life. We should build a four lane highway from coast to coast and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes and Canada to accommodate every state in the Union and limit it to the use of passenger traffic. We should improve and use our present two lane highways for trucks and freight transportation. This would greatly reduce this terrible slaughter of the innocent upon the public highways.

The next billion or billions would go for slum clearance, flood control, housing, public health, hospitals, medical research and to promote education -- another vast saving and conservation of human life. Instead of prohibitions, isolation and insulation, we should encourage the free flow of trade and commerce with every country in the world. Likewise, we should encourage social and cultural relations. This would do more in the battle for men's minds and hearts than all the guns and bombs that can be created. Work with and through the United Nations in every effort for human betterment and world peace.

With enlightenment, the vision of Jefferson, the goodness and wisdom of Lincoln and the honesty and the dynamic creative ability of Theodore Roosevelt, or of any one of them, with not to exceed a half of the money we are now squandering, we could here and now create a new heaven and a new earth.

WHY SHOULD RED CHINA BE ADMITTED TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

In discussing the question, we may eliminate the word 'Red' since there is only one China. Chiang Kai-Shek represents no one except himself and the corrupt gang which supports him. The present government of China controls every square foot of the mainland of China. China has the largest population of Asia and the world, and is by far the most important country of Asia. Asia contains over one-half of the peoples of the world.

This being true, there can be no peace and stability in Asia until China is given a place in the Council of Nations to which she is entitled as of right. This has been clear from the beginning. During August, 1950, I wrote a letter to the Iowa delegation in Congress in which I said, "China will be heard in the Security Council or on the battlefield. If in the Security Council and the Assembly, there is strong reason to believe an amicable settlement can be reached. If on the battlefield, every time China speaks some of our American boys will be killed. It is up to the administration and Congress to determine which it shall be."

In my letter to the Iowa delegation in Congress of July 3, 1951, a few days after President Truman intervened in the Korean war, I said: "It is appalling to think of the consequences which will follow, assuming Russia does not enter the war, but that China enters the war in support of North Korea. China, under the law of self-preservation, could not allow a hostile nation on her Manchurian border."

Walter Lippmann, in one of his most penetrating analyses in July, 1951, said: "Why, we have to ask ourselves, do we find ourselves facing impossible choices wherever we turn in the Far East?" "Because we are unable and unwilling to recognize the fact that Red China is a great military power in the Far East, and that nothing can be settled within the sphere of China's historic interest without the participation of Red China. The facts of life are the facts of life; and wishing, hoping, preferring, crying out against them will not alter the facts of life."

The facts of life being the facts of life, we are compelled, whether we wish it or not, to negotiate with China on the battlefield, the Security Council or elsewhere, since, as Lincoln said: "If you go to war, you cannot fight always." Upon what possible theory then can it be claimed that we should wait to negotiate until thousands, perhaps millions of our boys are slaughtered in an all-out war with China, which will almost certainly lead to a third world war. No one who has any sense of reality can suppose we can have a permanent, dictated peace with China.

However, it is not a question of admitting China to the Security Council; rather, it is a question of recognizing such admission by the United States and other members of the United Nations. China is named in the United Nations Charter together with the United States, Russia, Britain and France as one of the permanent members of the Security Council.

Britain, although she has become closely allied with the United States, early recognized Red China. India did likewise, together with a number of other nations.

It was the intention of our State Department to make no objection to the recognition of Red China, but McCarthyism changed that overnight. There is little statesmanship, either within or without the administration, in our foreign policy since political expediency is largely the ultimate, determining factor. Both political parties have become captive victims of their own and of each other's campaign of hate and hysteria. Like Shakespeare said of jealousy: "It is the green-eyed monster which doth make the meat it feeds upon." There seems to be no stopping place since, in time, the accusers become the accused.

No man dares offer a rational solution or speak his honest convictions lest he be branded as a Red, a fellow traveler or a subversive. Even though he has first-hand knowledge whereof he speaks and knows more about Asia than any man in Washington, his suggestions that it would be wise and to our advantage to recognize China bring down upon his head intemperate denunciation and name-calling and a demand by a member of Congress that he be impeached. Regardless of the fact that he holds the high office of Justice of the Supreme Court, he does not receive even a courteous hearing.

I have witnessed with concern and dismay this corroding and corrupting influence of our whole foreign policy, the increasing destruction of our most fundamental rights bequeathed to us by the founding fathers.

I have witnessed the silencing and intimidation of our national leaders in every field of endeavor; the stifling of our press and news agencies, and I have noted with anguish that the public schools have become the prey of these despoilers of our sacred heritage and lastly the Supreme Court of the United States, the last bulwark of our liberties, has, through its majority members, succumbed to this hysterical pressure.

We had as well face the fact that what may be correctly described as McCarthyism is shaping both our domestic and our foreign policy.

Senator McCarthy may be denounced and Senator McCarran and General MacArthur severely criticized, but in the end what they advocate, if not fully adopted, causes our State Department to back track, apologize and make commitments which tie our hands from making a realistic approach to global questions of the most important nature.

It is this McCarthyism and the influence of Chiang Kai-Shek which is the root of our government repudiating the clear provision of the United Nations Charter and in using strong-arm methods to prevent China from taking her place on the Security Council as provided in the Charter.

This is morally wrong, economically and politically wrong. I use the word 'political' in its global sense. One of the great tragedies of our time and of all history is our total lack of understanding of Asia.

Gardner Cowles sensed this fact when he had Justice Douglas of the Supreme Court prepare the article published in Look Magazine on the subject: "Why We are Losing Asia" and the article in Look by Pearl Buck, "Why Asia Hates Us."

The eminent philosopher and mathematician, Bertrand Russell, affirmed this truth when he spoke to the American newspaper correspondents in London on August 9th last, and said that he saw slight chance of the world ruled by communism, but that the big problem of white men "is to come to some arrangement with the black, yellow and brown men of Asia and Africa."

But to come to some arrangement we must first realize that Colonialism and Feudalism in whatsoever forms they may appear must come to an end. Sovereign nations and their people must be treated as sovereign and as equals, not as inferiors to be controlled either by Big Government or Big Business. Fundamental rights know no color line and will recognize no external authority. Foreign domination must cease.

What the backward peoples want is understanding and guidance to help them to help themselves, not handouts or military equipment.

You can't shoot democracy into people 'nor bomb communism out of them. Want, hunger and disease are not satisfied or cured by vocables or high-sounding slogans and platitudes such as "Democracy", "The Free World" and "Our Way of Life". 'Nor are these people awed by the threat of the use of the atom bomb. They demand that most basic right to be found in the jurisprudence of the civilized nations of the world, the right to be heard as equals in their own behalf.

If they are entitled to these rights, then China should no longer be denied her seat in the Security Council.

But it is said that China forfeited these rights when she joined North Korea in aggression. The answer is that China did not go to war to assist North Korea to conquer South Korea and unify all Korea.

Do we or do we not believe in the Golden Rule for nations as well as for individuals? Would we allow China or Russia to invade Mexico and continue beyond Mexico City to the Rio Grande River on our Texas border? Even a child knows we would not allow this and that if we went to war to protect the southern border of Texas, we would not consider it aggression on our part. Then how can we say it is aggression for China to protect her Manchurian border when MacArthur crossed the 38th Parallel and continued to the Yalu River? How can we say this is aggression in view of the tragic experience which China suffered as a result of the invasion of Manchuria by Japan through Korea and across the Yalu River?

China went to war for the most elemental reason; namely, to protect her Manchurian boundary, not at the behest of Kim Ill Sung or Joseph Stalin, but for her own protection. She gave warning in advance to India that we must not cross the 38th parallel; that she would not tolerate a hostile nation on her border. General MacArthur told President Truman, and President Truman says he believed him, that China was just bluffing, and so MacArthur proceeded across the 38th parallel clear to the Yalu River.

The rest is history written in blood and tears and destroyed homes and fields and factories, followed by hunger and disease, with utter bankruptcy and desolation for Korea and impending bankruptcy for France, England and even the United States if we continue our present policy.

By their fruits ye shall know them. This is the direct result of MacArthurism and McCarthyism. It derives from our failure to heed the warning of China and Nehru and Britain and not follow the line of MacArthur and McCarthy.

What price glory? Is human life no longer sacred in America? Has it become the settled policy of our government and our people that our boys are expendable in every part of the world; that blood letting is secondary to our military objectives? How far can a great and free people be led by fear and hate, hysteria and self-righteousness from the paths of sanity, peace and justice and freedom and abundance down the road to destruction -- the destruction of everything which makes life worth living; the destruction of everything which good and brave men have fought and died for since the dawn of civilization?

Let us pass from the general to the concrete. Let us particularize to see more clearly how far on this road we have already travelled. Had China been allowed to take her place on the Security Council, it is my opinion there would have been no Korean War. Or, if North Korea had invaded South Korea,with China on the Security Council, it could have been settled on the basis of the 38th parallel, since China's primary interest was the protection of her Manchurian border, and since she did not enter the war until after MacArthur had reached the Yalu River.

We may be assured that with China on the Security Council the United Nations would have prevented MacArthur from crossing the 38th parallel and continuing to the Yalu River.

It is of the greatest importance that we recognize that it was this act of MacArthur that brought China into the Korean War to protect her border.

But it is claimed that too much importance should not be attached to the 38th parallel since, after all,it was an arbitrary line agreed to by Russ ia and the United States for a practical division of Korea.

The complete answer to that is that President Truman regarded the 38th parallel of such importance as to furnish reason, or excuse, as you like, to intervene in the war between North and South Korea, using the army, navy and air force, without any declaration by Congress and without previous authorization or direction by the United Nations. The half-hearted approval by the United Nations followed after Truman had already entered the war. Congress to this day has not declared war and Congress alone has the power to make war.

Can we say then, that it is not aggression for the President of the United States to intervene in a war between Koreans in contravention of the Constitution and without previous sanction of the United Nations, but that it is aggression for China to intervene in the same war to protect her own border from a hostile nation which at this very moment has military possession of Formosa, which belongs to China, though it was definitely agreed between the President of the United States, Britain, China and Japan that Formosa would be returned to China?

Up until MacArthur reached the Yalu River and China entered the war, the damage, relatively speaking, was not great. The terrible destruction of life and property dates from the time that MacArthur crossed the 38th parallel. This damage and destruction begger description. Words are inadequate. J. Donald Kingsley, Agent General of the United Nations, Korean Agency, said: "I doubt if ever in the history of the world since perhaps the sacking of Carthage has there been such complete destruction as has occurred." He added: "It has been estimated that 2,000,000 civilians have been killed in the war so far (May 21, 1951); that the destruction of the thatched villages that blanket a large part of Korea has been almost total." He estimates over six hundred thousand homes have been destroyed. This has resulted in more than 6,000,000 refugees in their own country. Small pox, typhus, pneumonia, tuberculosis and other diseases followed to further decimate the population.

It has not yet dawned upon our people that for every North Korean soldier killed, we have killed ten Korean civilians. We have almost annihilated a nation. We have liberated the South Koreans by death. This isn't police action, Mr. Truman. This isn't war. This is barbarism. And this needless slaughter and destruction, Mr. Truman, is not "due to the fact that some distant and shadowy figures in the Kremlin control millions of people far from them", to quote from the letter of Secretary Acheson to the Marine and his father. No, Mr. Truman,these millions of Koreans killed, men, women and children, the aged, the blind, the sick; babes in arms and babes waiting to be born were killed by American soldiers dropping American bombs from American planes.

In this connection, Mr.Truman, you should ask yourself the question -- a question being asked by an increasing number of people in this country -- and throughout the world -- Is there a better way to do the things we profess we want to do? If the universe is at heart moral, then there can be but one answer, a moral not a military answer. Great and good men like Nehru and Justice Douglas of our Supreme Court say there is a better way, a way that leads to peace, not war. Mrs. Davis, wife of Major George A.Davis, the flying ace who was shot down in North Korea, cries out in her anguish that there is a better way and that her husband lost his life in a war without reason.

Wrapping the cloak of self-righteousness around ourselves solves no problems, contributes nothing to world peace, but closes our eyes to the part we are playing in this terrible drama and how far afield we have wandered from the principles of our forefathers and of every president from Washington until Truman.

Some historical references will help us to understand and evaluate the evil we have wrought and our place in history since Truman became president. It should help us to understand Nehru when he said he agreed with our purpose but not our method.

If we place on one side the early Christians killed by Nero and the other Caesars, all those killed in France during the reign of terror and the Franch Revolution, all our soldiers killed in the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and our soldiers in World Wars I and II, and add to those all the colonists and early settlers killed by the American Indians, the grand total will not exceed the number killed in this Korean War to date, if we include the civilians and the soldiers of all nations since Truman intervened in the Korean War.

It has been said, however, that we had to do this because the invasion by North Korea was ordered by the Kremlin. This is purely an assumption and not proven. There is persuasive though not conclusive evidence to the contrary. The leaders of both North and South Korea were spoiling for a showdown. Syngman Rhee is an arrogant tyrant. He had imprisoned forty thousand Koreans for political offenses. In March of 1950 Rhee had imprisoned, in violation of the Constitution, thirteen members of the National Assembly. Border clashes had been frequent for a long time.

Rhee had made a radio address not long before in which he said he would invade North Korea. The New South Korean Assembly that convened the Monday before the invasion was strong anti-Rhee. Rhee had been promised help by John Foster Dulles just the week before invasion. Dulles said he told Rhee they would not stand alone. Kim Ill Sung says he did not go to the offensive until after repelling three attacks from the South. There is reliable information that North Korea at the time was only partially mobilized and had less than seven full divisions, whereas their plan called for thirteen to fifteen divisions.

John Gunther in Tokyo, writing a history of MacArthur, was told by an occupation officer at MacArthur's headquarters the morning of the invasion that South Korea was invading North Korea. China and Russia were at the time engaged in trying to get China a seat on the Security Council and the Assembly and Russia had boycotted the Security Council and Assembly and hence was not present to cast a veto on the American resolution in support of the Truman intervention which had been ordered before the resolution was presented.

Thus at the time of the invasion, both China and Russia were concerned in seating China in the United Nations but were even more concerned in the return of Formosa to China which had been promised. Mao Tse-Tung intended to see that China obtained Formosa. He had the military strength to take it. Chiang knew that Mao intended to take Formosa and had the power to take it, and that unless help arrived his number was up.

MacArthur was s trongly in favor of giving the help. MacArthur said we needed Formosa for military reasons to dominate the Pacific. John Foster Dulles was in Tokyo a week before the invasion. It is fair to presume that Dulles gave Chiang the same promise of help that Dulles says he gave Syngman Rhee. Whether he did or not, immediately after Truman intervened in the Korean war, he, Truman, as President and Commander in Chief, ordered Formosa seized by our Navy and we took military possession of Formosa, unilaterally without any sanction of the United Nations. This is exactly what Chiang Kai-Shek and Syngman Rhee wanted. Intervention in the Korean civil war and the military occupation of Formosa. Their prayers and schemes had succeeded. Chiang and Syngman Rhee were now safe. The strong military arm of the United States was around them. Henceforth, our American boys would die in their defense on the battle fields of Asia.

Whatever history may show as to the real cause of the Korean War, nothing can justify the needless killing of millions of Korean civilians and the mass destruction of their homes and property.

But this tells only a part of the story. Looked at from the long range of history, the worst part is yet to be told. We fought two world wars to destroy militarism, to give small nations the right of self-determination, and to make the world safe for democracy. We denounced the dictators, Franco and Peron, for their Fascism and for giving aid to Germany during the war. We looked with favor on nations struggling to be free and with disfavor against colonialism. We demanded no foreign territory and no special rights for ourselves from any nation. We sought moral and economic leadership, not military domination. Our purpose was to unite, not to divide.

Wendell Willkie had popularized the idea of One World. The conditions for One World were well and wisely provided for in the United Nations Charter. Each nation was to retain its sovereign power with no interference in its domestic affairs from any foreign power. The United Nations Charter was based upon the theory that there was room in the world for different political, religious and economic systems. Each nation was to be free to select its own system and its own ideology. All could co-exist in the same world. None was to have special rights and none was to make surrender.

The United States could join and adhere to such an organization because nothing therein provided was inconsistent with the principles embodied in the Declaration of Independence of our Constitution, and political philosophy that was announced by our forefathers and by our great presidents, Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln. Under these principles and under the United Nations Charter, with all of the world's ills, we were making progress. The war with the Axis powers had been won and it was only a matter of final surrender. Slowly the antagonism between the two giants, United States and Russia, was softening. Cultural, social and trade barriers were being gradually relaxed. There was hope and promise for the future at the time of the death of President Roosevelt. Taxes were relatively low, production was increasing and social, civic and internal improvement was going forward in every direction. The standard of living was high. Take-home pay, measured by the purchasing power of the dollar, was good. The military was subordinate to the President, Congress and civil authorities. There was less fear and hate and hysteria amongst our people than had existed for over a generation.

Our freedoms were maintained and our Bill of Rights was respected. There was a place for the scholar and independent thinker. Appeal to reason was more respected and effective than appeal to prejudice and hate. The Good Neighbor policy of Roosevelt was being implemented over the world. Our leadership was moral and economic - not military. Our nation and our people were trusted and held in high esteem everywhere except by Nazis and Fascists. The Third International had been dissolved by Stalin and the Cominform had not been established. Confidence between the United States and Russia was improving. Numberless prominent men of America, including the late Wendell Willkie and Gardner Cowles and Harold Stassen and Eric Johnson, then president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, visited Russia; had no difficulty in obtaining an audience with Stalin, and all came away with high hopes for peace with Russia.

However one may feel about some of the domestic policies ofRoosevelt, such were the conditions at the time of Roosevelt's death. Compare then and now. Let us briefly summarize what has taken place in the few short years since Truman became president in April, 1945.

After taking the leading part in creating the United Nations, the basic concept of which as before stated, was that each nation was to remain a sovereign equal and live its own life in its own way with no interference in its domestic affairs; we then, in violation of those principles, declared the Kennan-Truman doctrine of Containment with the aim of the destruction of Communism. To implement and carry out this purpose, we organized the North Atlantic Pact. By so doing, we divided the United Nations and the world into two hostile armed military camps - communist and non-communist. * We thus created a world crisis of confidence or rather lack of it. Negotiations fail at every level since no one trusts the other. Fear and hate, bigotry and intolerance, that is to say McCarthyism, have supplanted the Good Neighbor policy amongst nations, and the Roosevelt philosophy that there is nothing to fear but fear itself.

The cold war with all its evil consequences follows. Every accusation and unfriendly act by one nation provokes a counter-accusation and even more unfriendly act by the other. International trade and all peaceful relations are more and more curtailed and prohibited until statesmanship becomes bankrupt. Men of little vision surrender to the worst form of defeatism by abandoning faith in the peaceful machinery of the United Nations Charter and of the great moral forces of the world.

There is then nothing left except the primitive instinct of the use of guns and bombs, so the military takes over and dominates the civil. The Pentagon calls the passes for the White House. Force is the language spoken by the President and the State Department. We have a government of and for and by the military, rather than a government of and for and by the people.

The proof of this is painfully obvious. Witness the fact that our debt burden now approaches $275,000,000,000; the fact that the Truman administration has collected taxes in the amount of $262,600,000,000, i.e. $8,400,000,000. more taxes collected than during all of the time from Washington until Truman, though we fought two world wars, the Civil war, the Spanish-American, the Mexican, the war of 1812 and the Indian wars, and built the Panama Canal, before Truman became president.

By this orgy of spending and giving we have robbed the living, the dead and the children yet unborn. The living, by multiplying the federal tax burden three to seven fold and cheapening the dollar by inflation. The dead by halving the value of life insurance policies and bonds left by the deceased for the support of his widow and children. The unborn, by placing a first lien to the Federal government in the amount of $1,770. around the neck of each child as it comes into the world to pay this staggering debt burden. We have robbed the privately endowed colleges and universities and endowed philanthropic and religious societies by the same method and doubled the living costs of the students.

We have set outselves and the world a bad example of using fantastic sums of money on a global scale for the purpose of influence. By this reckless unprecedented spending and giving we have corrupted our own people and destroyed the self-reliance and impaired the morals of the Governments receiving our aid.

* Much concern was felt by a number of delegates to the United Nations at the time we were urging the signing of the North Atlantic Pact. A press dispatch from Lake Success by Nat Barrows said that many delegates thought that the United States, in urging the pact, was giving the United Nations the kiss of death; that it would emphasize and place reliance on the military rearmament and render ineffective the peaceful machinery of the United Nations Charter; that, while we were paying lip service to the United Nations, we were selling it down the river.

In carrying out the Truman-Kennan doctrine of Containment and the Atlantic rearmament program, we have set the East against the West and nation against nation and created division in the governments and set the people against their governments.

Britain is now torn into three factions, the followers of Churchill, Atlee and Bevan, and both people and governments against us. Neither the people nor the governments would follow our leadership for a day except for our coercion and the hope and assurance of receiving our millions and billions. That is because they do not share our hysterical fear of military invasion, but feel that we are needlessly dragging them into war, compelling them to choose between solvency and neutrality, or guns and bankruptcy; not guns or butter, but guns or bread.

By selecting their countries as air bases, we mark them for battle ground and thus increase and not lessen the danger of war. We further imperil their security and liberty by rearming West Germany and Japan. They resent our unilateral action in taking military possession of Formosa, in MacArthur crossing the 38th parallel and continuing to the Manchurian border. In our repeated threats to bomb the mainland of China and to use the atom bomb, in our forcing them to take Franco as a partner, in jeopardizing their economy by cutting off trade relations with Russia, and east-west commerce which is the very life blood of their economy.

The sum of it all is that we are violating the most basic principles of the United Nations Charter, thus destroying the very purpose for which it was created, to preserve the peace by peaceful methods. We then condemn the United Nations for its failure, for which we ourselves must bear our full share of the blame. I agree with Nehru, there is nothing wrong with the United Nations Charter, except the matter of representation.

The United Nations Charter, like the Ten Commandments, is not self-executing. Good comes from compliance; evil from violation.

If the United Nations is ever to fulfill the great purpose for which it was created - viz: to prevent major wars and promote peace by peaceful methods, three conditions are absolutely essential.

1. The Assembly and Security Council must be fairly representative of the nations and peoples of the world.

2. The Nations in the Security Council and Assembly must be treated as sovereign.

3. Each nation must be free from external coercion and influence so that it may exercise its own moral independent judgment on every question presented for solution. All this is the very essence of freedom and democracy.

The question of fair representation in the Assembly and Security Council and the right of every nation free from influence or coercion to decide every question upon its merits goes to the very heart and root of the whole world crisis.

The most fundamental thing in any government is that its judicial, legislative and administrative departments and tribunals shall be free from every form of influence and coercion. Five percent commissions, deep freezers, mink coats, air plane trips and deluxe entertainment at ritzy hotels are but the vulgar evidence of this corrupting and corroding influence. Such influence would be recognized as wrong in every civilized country. But if it is wrong to thus influence local and national officers and tribunals, why is it not a far greater wrong to improperly influence members of an international tribunal whose decisions mean peace or war?

What is the giving of a mink coat or a few thousand dollars in the form of a commission or rebate compared with the giving of millions and billions to a single government to induce actions and agreements in compliance with our demands which prevent such nation from exercising her sovereign right? But this use of billions of our money to subsidize (not to use the ugly word 'bribe') foreign governments to let us do the thinking and planning for the United Nations tells only a part of the story. From the beginning we have assumed the right to say who should and should not be admitted to the Assembly and the Security Council.

When Roosevelt sought to add some new members to the Supreme Court, we called it packing the Court, and it was decisively rejected. What we then considered wrong, we now consider a virtue. To be specific, we forced the admission of the government of Dictator Peron of Argentine, as a member of the United Nations without allowing the appointment of a committee or a few days for investigation and consideration. We did this though we had previously issued a state paper denouncing Peron, and though Peron denies freedom of the Press, of Assembly, and denies freedom of speech and religion.

Russia considered this a needless hostile act and evidence that we intended to use strong arm methods to control the United Nations. This was the beginning of the Cold War, though the climax did not come until we divided Berlin. This policy of ours continued up to the closing of the Assembly in Paris, in February, 1952, when we refused agreement to admit group membership representative of both East and West, but more favorable to the West.

To the majority of the delegates the plan seemed fair and just, the political committee voted 21 to 14 in favor, and would have been accepted but Acheson denounced this group plan to give the East some representation as blackmail (strange definition of blackmail, isn't it, when you ask for a part of a loaf and offer the other fellow the larger part, though it should be divided equally). Well, for fear of offending rich Uncle Sam, a large number of delegates, including our friends, abstained from voting and the East was denied additional minority representation by the Assembly.

This brings us again to the all important question - the question which may well settle the fate of the world and leave its imprint upon world civilization for centuries. Shall China be admitted to the Security Council and the Assembly?

Before answering the question, let us consider the alternative - that we continue to use coercive methods to prevent China from being represented in the Council of Nations. History furnishes the answer to date of persuing this policy - the Korean tragedy, one of the world's great tragedies which president Truman assumed when he intervened that it was to be a mere police action.

Seeing no victory for the United States and no end in view that will bring peace in Korea and China according to our plans, it is proposed by men in high places that we gamble more recklessly with human life and human destiny by (a), starting an all-out preventive war with both China and Russia; or, (b) bombing the mainland of China and using the atom bomb if truce talks fail; and, (c) look to the resurrection of the political military corpse of Chiang Kai-Shek, and arm him and the remnants of his defeated army, and turn them loose on the mainland of China. Then instigate and subsidize sabotage, treason, counter-revolution and civil war in both China and Russia. Give this nasty business respectability by frequent statements of eminent citizens, public and private, telling the Chinese and Russian people how much we love them if only they will overthrow their present governments.

These proposals, collectively or individually, by whomsoever made, are not evidence of statesmanship, but of desperation; not of wisdom, but homicidal insanity. Sabotage, treason, counter-revolution and civil war gets us nowhere unless there is a reasonable chance of overthrowing the government in power and establishing a stronger and better government in its place; otherwise you get chaos and anarchy. You get what the French got after the revolution and before the man on horseback appeared, and Napoleon became First Consul, only the horrors of the French Revolution will be multiplied by ten or a hundred. Is that the measure of the statesmanship and contribution to world order of your country and mine?

This terrible situation in which we find ourselves, with no rational solution by our Government, was well expressed by Gardner Cowles in a recent address in Des Moines in which he said "our Government has no plan for winning the war in Korea and no plan for ending it", and he added that he saw no way of winning the Korean War except we inflict direct punishment on China and that would involve frightful risks which could not be undertaken at this time.

If we turn to Europe, Berlin and Germany, we find the situation equally hopeless. Our Government has no plan for winning and no rational solution and under our present foreign policy there can be no rational solution of the German problem. This is true because we have divided Berlin and Germany and our Government is insisting that Berlin and Germany remain permanently divided in order that Western Germany may be made a part of the military NATO rearmament program of Western Europe. Adenauer is willing to go along with us for the division of Germany but the people of Berlin and Germany do not wish to be divided. They passionately desire a united Berlin and Germany.

Russia, with a sense of reality, understands these national aspirations of the German people and therefore proposes a plan of free elections to unite Germany. But if Germany is united, then Western Germany cannot be integrated into the rearmament program of the NATO. And we are now feverishly attempting to put through theagreement to unite Western Germany to Western Europe before Russia can make any new offers. Strange, isn't it, that Lincoln fought the long Civil War to unite the North and the South and we now risk war in order to divide Berlin and Germany. The same holds for Korea.

All this furnishes convincing proof that the whole Truman-Kennan military policy of containment and the whole rearmament policy of NATO is not only wrong but a complete failure. It has caused far more evils than any possible good, granting due allowances for incidental benefits.

I would, therefore, scrap the whole foreign policy of the Truman Administration which includes the containment policy based upon the assumption that Russia and the United States cannot co-exist peacefully in the same world and the whole forced rearmament policy of Europe at our expense with the cutting off of East-West trade. All of which increases and not lessens the danger of war and all of which is destroying the economy of Europe and making these countries more and more dependent on the United States.

If you say that NATO military rearmament is necessary at whatever cost to prevent Russian military aggression against the United States or some of the European countries, my answer is that it is absurd to assume that if Russia had planned military aggression against the United States or some European country she would be so considerate as to wait 3, 4 or 5 years to attack, though she has had the military strength to overrun Europe within a few weeks during all of this time and also considerate enough to remain quiet while we committed the provocative acts of encircling her with military bases and armed her neutral neighbors and induced them to join a military pact against her and cut East-West trade.

If you say the scraping of the whole Truman foreign policy is a most radical proposal, my answer is that during all of American history, from Washington until Truman, the good established conservative American foreign policy has been based upon Washington's Farewell Address, Jefferson's philosophy during the French Revolution, the goodness and wisdom of Lincoln in dealing with the South and the slave question, and the good neighbor policy of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The dividing of Berlin and Germany and the Truman-Kennan military containment policy and the NATO rearmament program of Europe and the cutting off of East-West trade is not only radical by all our previous standards and the standard of democracy throughout the world but it is Un-American. It is impossible of attainment, it offers no hope for success neither now nor in the future.

We have come to a dead end street with a military barricade in Asia and we have come to a dead end street in Europe.

The primary reason why the whole Truman Acheson foreign policy can never succeed is because it is a wholly negative destructive policy.

There is nothing affirmative and constructive in the whole Truman Acheson foreign policy except Point Four, and that is far too limited to accomplish any large purposes. The Marshall Plan held out great promise but we attached conditions to the Marshall Plan and it was all a part of securing adherence to the North Atlantic Pact which divided Europe and the world. We taught much about the free nations, we seem to think that by much repetition, that which is pseudo will become a reality and much repetition of false assumptions will become verities. As a matter of fact, the United States is the least free of all the non-communist nations. We have allowed one nation -- Russia -- to shape and dominate the whole frame and pattern of our American policy, both foreign and domestic. We take NATO, TITO and FRANCO and the McCarran Act and the concentration camps, wrap them all up in one package and they become part of the free nations.

A teacher can't teach, a preacher preach, a scholar write, a business man attend a world economic conference, a federal official offer a rational solution, or a person of goodwill attend a peace conference, a delegate at the United Nations disagree with our American foreign policy and enjoy the freedom and immunity which is guaranteed by and is the very essence of the Bill of Rights. They all hazzard the risk of condemnation by Acheson, McCarthy or McCarran.

There is, however, a way out; and that way has already been indicated - the scraping of the whole Truman foreign policy; restore Americanism and work by, with and through the United Nations; greatly enlarge Point Four, urging all nations to participate and operate the same through the United Nations and give aid impartially according to need and not with conditions attached to further our ambitious military programs.

If we wish a realistic Asian settlement, wash our hands of Chiang Kai-Shek and Syngman Rhee; fulfill the contract made at Cairo concerning Formosa and signed by Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt and agreed to by Japan. In this connection we might consider the suggestions made by Walter Lippmann.

Repeating for emphasis, let it be known in an overall settlement that we will recognize the Republic of China -- the only Government of China as the permanent member of the Security Council and of the Assembly. Admit the block of nations which the Political Committee in the United Nations voted 21 to 12 to admit but whose admission was denied because our Secretary of State used coercive methods and indulged in intemperate language to prevent the admission of these nations.

Let it be known that we favor any fair method of uniting Berlin and Germany.

The facts of life being the facts of life, have an army, navy and airforce consistent with our great strength and the leadership we are destined to play in the council of nations; but sufficient only for self-defense, moral leadership and deterrent purposes and not for military domination. Recognize the sovereign right of every other nation to decide for itself the extent of its rearmament program and the amount of its own money it wishes to spend for such purposes.

If we do these things which may be done with honor and which as a matter of right out to be done, it will be amazing how the door will open to the solution of many grave questions which cannot now, under our present policy be resolved. We will restore the peaceful machinery of the United Nations Charter and open the way to a Korean settlement and adjustment of the Japanese relations with China.

We must choose between Americanism and the United Nations or the Truman Acheson un-American policy of military might. The fate of our Nation and the world depends upon the choice we make.

We are too close to events to judge of their great importance. We are too much influenced by hate and prejudice, self-righteousness and the love for domination that goes with patriotic Nationalism to see clearly and judge impartially. We may be assured, however, that we are witnessing the world's greatest drama and the world's greatest tragedy. We are both spectators and actors. The civilization of mankind for a thousand years may wellbe influenced by the way we play our part.

So I say to you: Be not afraid. Never lose faith in the great eternal verities. Believe that the universe is at heart moral.

Believe there is nothing so sacred as truth and no substitute for reason and justice.

Believe that intolerance, prejudice, self-righteousness and the lust for power and domination are cardinal sins.

Believe that peoples and governments of goodwill and enlightenment will always seek to settle their differences by peaceful rather than barbaric methods of mass murder.

Believe the civil, not the military, should govern men and nations.

PEACE AND GOODWILL ASSEMBLY :: Meetings September 15th to 20th

UNO and the American Aggression Against China

THE UNITED NATIONS Organization is examining one of the most important questions on its agenda—the American aggression against China.

When the American imperialists embarked on their piratical war in Korea, they decided to entrench themselves on the Chinese island of Taiwan, on which the shattered remnants of the Kuomintang bands have taken refuge. Acting on Truman's order of June 27 last, the U.S. 13th Air Force and Seventh Fleet occupied Taiwan and its waters in order to turn the island into a base of aggression against the Chinese mainland.

On August 24, Chou En-lai, Foreign Minister of the Chinese People's Republic, sent a message to the Security Council demanding that measures be taken to stop the American aggression. The U.S.A. and its satellites used every means to keep the question from being discussed in the Council. It was included in the agenda only at the insistence of the Soviet Union. Even after that, the U.S.-British bloc tried to put off the examination of this important issue as long as it possibly could. Moreover, realizing that in the end the Council would have to go into the matter, Washington resorted to a trick: the U.S. delegation hastily presented to the Council a so-called report by MacArthur, a document teeming with slanderous allegations and wilful distortions of the true story of the American intervention against the Korean people.

Simultaneously, in defiance of the provisions of the U.N. Charter, which stipulate that when a dispute is examined the parties concerned must be given a hearing, the U.S.-British bloc endeavoured to prevent representatives of the Chinese People's Republic from being invited to the sittings of the Security Council.

The battle around this question raged for more than a month. At last, on September 29, thanks to the insistence of the Soviet delegation and the representatives of the People's Democracies, and also to the attitude of some of the other delegations, who apparently realized that to examine the dispute in the absence of one of the parties concerned would be both illegal and senseless, a resolution moved by the Ecuador representative was adopted, under which representatives of the Chinese People's Republic were invited to participate in the discussion. The resolution was supported by the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France, India, Norway, Ecuador and Yugoslavia. The U.S.A., Egypt, Cuba and the Kuomintangite voted against it.

Thus in the end the attempt of the U.S.-British bloc to ignore the Chinese People's Republic came to naught. And it is obvious, of course, that it is impossible to solve international problems, and particularly problems relating to Asia, without hearing the voice of the 475 million people of China.

Parallel with the Security Council, the Political Committee of the General Assembly also has the question of the American aggression against China under consideration. It was included in the Assembly's agenda under the title "U.S.S.R. Protest Concerning United States Aggression Against China," on the motion of the Soviet delegation and in the teeth of resistance by the delegations of the American bloc. Here too the U.S. delegation tried to confuse the issue and resorted to a diversion by laying before the General Assembly what it called "the question of Formosa," thus implying that it was an open question whom the island belonged to, and that the United Nations must decide on its status.

This is another of the State Department's usual crude manoeuvres. De jure and de facto, Taiwan is Chinese territory, and was so long before the United States secured its own independence. All the time the island was under the Japanese aggressors, its population, 98 per cent of whom are Chinese, never ceased to struggle for their reunion with continental China. On December 1, 1943, at the Cairo Conference, the governments of the U.S.A., China and Great Britain resolved that, together with Manchuria, Taiwan and the Pescadores should be restored to China. This solemn commitment is contained in the Potsdam Declaration of the U.S.A., Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China.

Now the American imperialists have jettisoned their solemn international pledges and decided to use Taiwan as a military base for further aggression against China and other Asian countries.

The American side adduces two arguments in justification of its policy, undeterred by the fact that they are mutually contradictory. The first is a flat denial of having encroached on China's integrity, on China's territory. U.S. delegate Austin sent a letter to the U.N. Secretary-General on August 25, in which he stated very categorically that "the United States has not encroached on the territory of China, nor has the United States taken aggressive action against China."

Referring to these assertions at the sitting on November 28, Chinese representative Wu Hsiu-chuan aptly recalled the Chinese adage: listen to words and observe deeds. The presence of American armed forces in Taiwan cannot be denied. Other instances of U.S. aggressive action against China are also generally known, such as, the systematic violation of the frontiers of the Chinese People's Republic by the American air pirates, the bombing of Chinese towns and villages, the slaughter of Chinese civilians. In the course of their aggression in Korea, the American imperialists carried the flames of war to the very borders of China. In its statement of November 11, the Foreign Ministry of the Chinese People's Republic said in reference to this:

> "China's security is seriously threatened as a result of the invasion of Korea and Chinese Taiwan by the American imperialists, and their bombing of Northeast China."

In the light of these facts, one must be naive indeed to believe Truman's assurance that the United States has no predatory designs on Chinese territory.

The second argument advanced by the American side in defence of its position is that the United States had to take these actions in order to safeguard its security. This was the line taken by Austin in the Security Council, and by John Foster Dulles in the Political Committee. But where does American "security" come in, when Taiwan lies some 8,000 kilometres from American shores?

Trying to justify the invasion of Taiwan, Austin and Dulles, and Truman before them, characterized the Chinese people's desire to liberate Taiwan as—aggression. This is turning the matter upside down. For it is patent nonsense to assert that the invasion of the territory of a sovereign state by foreign troops is not aggression and a menace to the security of the entire Pacific, but that the presence of that state's troops on its own territory would be.

Quite obviously, it is not a case of the "security" of the United States, but of the rapacious plans of American imperialism, which is out to take the place of Japanese imperialism in Asia. The notorious "Tanaka plan" expounded the thesis: "To conquer the world, one must first conquer Asia; to conquer Asia, one must first conquer China; to conquer China, one must first conquer Manchuria and Mongolia; to conquer Manchuria and Mongolia, one must first conquer Korea and Taiwan." The debacle sustained by the Japanese imperialists has apparently had no sobering effect on the American bidders for domination in Asia. Their hypocritical pretence of desiring peace and friendship with the Chinese people is totally belied by their own actions.

The delegates of the United States, Great Britain, France, Norway, Cuba and Ecuador in the Security Council moved a "six-power resolution" sanctioning the American aggression and grossly maligning the Korean people and China.

The American voting machine turned down the Soviet resolution condemning the American aggression and calling for the immediate withdrawal of the American forces from Taiwan and other Chinese territories. A resolution moved by the representative of the Chinese People's Government, supported by the Soviet representative, on the subject of the American aggression in Taiwan was likewise rejected. Yet the proposals contained in these resolutions could guarantee peace in the Far East.

But though it secured the defeat of these resolutions aimed at safeguarding peace and security in the Pacific and in Asia, the U.S.-British bloc in the Security Council failed to put through the "six-power resolution," because the Soviet delegation voted against it.

The examination of the question of America's aggression against China is being continued in the Political Committee of the General Assembly. The Soviet delegation has submitted the following resolution:

"The General Assembly,

"Having gone into the question of aggression by the U.S.A. against China, having heard the statement of the delegation of the Chinese People's Republic on the subject and the explanations of the U.S. delegation, and having considered the instances of encroachment by U.S. naval and air forces on China's territorial integrity and the inviolability of her frontiers, to wit: a) invasion by United States armed forces of the Island of Taiwan, which is an inalienable part of China's territory—as recognized by the Cairo Three-Power Agreement of the U.S.A., Great Britain and China, of December 1, 1943—and the consequent intervention of the United States Government in China's internal affairs, and b) the blockade of Taiwan's shores by the U.S. Seventh Fleet, with the hostile object of preventing access to the island of the armed forces and authorities of the Chinese People's Republic,

"Requests the Security Council to take the necessary measures to secure the immediate termination of the United States aggression against China."

The situation which the American aggression has created in the Far East makes it incumbent on the United Nations to take immediate and resolute measures, in accordance with its Charter, to restore peace and security in Asia. The action of the American imperialists in unleashing war in Asia is a direct menace to world peace. The public in all countries expect the United Nations to do its duty. But America's rulers are endeavouring once again to paralyze the United Nations. They refuse to accept the victory of the Chinese people and the collapse of their predatory plans vis-à-vis China. But if they think to gain their ends and impose their will on the Chinese people by extending their aggression in Asia, they are mistaken. No manoeuvres or diplomatic stratagems will avail them.

In statements by their government, in numberless resolutions passed by public and political organizations, in letters and telegrams to the United Nations, the Chinese people have uttered their weighty word.

"The Chinese people," declared Wu Hsiu-chuan in the Security Council, "are maintaining sharp vigilance over the progress of American imperialist aggression. They have already acquired experience and learned a lesson from history as to how to defend themselves from aggression."

Some Aspects of the World Debate

N. SERGEYEVA

THE CARDINAL issue of our day—war or peace—has been brought into the world forum. This is a great achievement for the partisans of peace. The issue was broadly discussed by representatives of different views and trends at the World Peace Congress. But not only there. Actually, those who were desperately anxious to avoid the discussion—those whom it profits to preserve the secrecy in which wars are hatched, and who want to have people believe that war is inevitable and inescapable—have, willy-nilly, been drawn into the debate. The vicious attempt of the Labour government to prevent the Congress, by closing England's doors at the last minute to its principal delegates, was exposed and denounced, and this helped to break the conspiracy of silence and compelled the opponents of peace to speak out. And the character of their attacks on the peace movement still further stressed the essential rightness and historical justice of its cause.

The discussion which developed at and around the World Congress was one of the most severe moral and political defeats ever sustained by the enemies of peace and their abettors. We should like to dwell on some of the principal issues raised in the course of this discussion.

THE SOVIET SYSTEM AND A POLICY OF PEACE ARE INDIVISIBLE

The present-day warmongers are trying to propagate the belief that war threatens (and is inevitable) because of the existence (and policy) of the Soviet Union. This argument is used to justify the armament drive and the aggressive war preparations of the U.S.-British bloc.

But capitalist states made war on one another long before the Soviet Union came into existence, and that fact in itself knocks the bottom out of this argument. The first world war, as everyone knows, also began before the establishment of the Soviet system in Russia. Furthermore, all through the period between the first and the second world wars, from 1918 to 1939, wars hardly stopped in the capitalist world. They were aggressive wars, waged by imperialist powers in furtherance of their predatory interests. Cases in point are the attack of fascist Italy on Ethiopia and the attack of imperialist Japan on China. The second world war likewise began as a collision between two coalitions of capitalist states: Hitler Germany attacked Poland and brought on war with France and Britain. Now, with the publication of documents from the secret archives, it is known that Hitler not only intended to seize the British Isles, but was planning to conquer the American continent.

In contrast to this imperialist policy of war and aggression, the Soviet Union has invariably adhered to a policy of peace and friendship among nations. Peaceful relations with all countries, whatever their political systems, have been the aim of the foreign policy of the Soviet State ever since its inception.

The Soviet policy of peace is not a sign of weakness. This was convincingly shown by the outcome of the intervention 30 years ago, when, although its muscles were still unknit, the young Soviet Republic successfully repulsed the loudly vaunted "campaign of fourteen states" organized by Churchill. It was also shown by the outcome of the war unleashed by Hitler Germany. The Soviet Union is strong enough to repel the armed attack of any foe. Its might is beyond question. Nevertheless, it does not build its policy on violence and coercion, but on peace and the promotion of friendly relations and co-operation with other countries.

The Soviet system began its existence with a call for peace. And this was not fortuitous, but a natural corollary of historical development. In order to accomplish the great social transformation proclaimed by the October Revolution, the first and essential requisite was peace. Consequently, the primary and fundamental principle of the Soviet Government's foreign policy has been and is to ensure peace among nations and to oppose imperialist wars,

The Soviet Republic's struggle for peace is a struggle against imperialism, to which war is a natural state, the "normal" way of settling disputes and conflicts. More, war for the imperialists is a desirable modus of overcoming their economic difficulties, by robbing other countries and peoples, and their own people too. Although only preparing to launch another world war, Truman and Attlee already insist that the British and Americans must make sacrifices and more sacrifices. Göring's sinister formula, "guns before butter," has been revived and made the keynote of the political and economic life of the United States, Great Britain and all the Marshallized countries.

The Soviet Union's peace policy follows logically from the progressive nature of the Soviet system, Soviet society and the whole Soviet way of life. Progressives everywhere and always are believers in lasting peace among nations. A progressive who does not stand for peace is inconceivable. And if additional proof were needed of the arch-reactionary, fascist character of the Tito clique in Yugoslavia, it is provided by their hatred of the world peace movement and their savage reprisals against peace supporters.

But the peace movement embraces not only all the progressive elements. It is much wider. It includes many members (and can include many more) of the conservative camp, who do not believe in progressive social reform, but who realize the criminality of war and the disastrous consequences it holds out for mankind. Undoubtedly, there are bourgeois statesmen and politicians who are alive to the fact that the world war the adventurers are plotting will be fraught with grave peril to the very social system in which they believe.

Thus the very existence of the peace movement, in the form represented by the Second World Peace Congress, refutes one of the major arguments levelled against it by bourgeois politicians, namely, that it is a "Communist move," a tool of Moscow. British Prime Minister Attlee officially repeated this allegation on November 1. But the reaction he got was not what he intended; he met with a vigorous rebuff from the public of the world and from broad sections of British opinion. The retort he received was that the struggle for peace was not the affair of Communists alone. The Yorkshire Post, which published an article abusing students of Leeds University for supporting the peace movement, received many letters of protest, some of which it was forced to print. One of the students, G. A. Evans, put the case as follows:

> "The demand for abolishing atomic weapons is... a just and righteous demand which Communists, non-Communists and anti-Communists can support. The fact that the Communists are in favour of banning the atom bomb will be felt by most English people as a matter for rejoicing rather than sorrow."

Professor J. G. Crowther, President of the British Peace Committee, said in a reply to Attlee:

"I am not a Communist, nor are the majority of the 500 million men and women who have signed the Stockholm Appeal.... Today, with half of the human race looking to the Communists for inspiration, any peace movement without Communist participation is unrealistic and in fact helps to endanger peace. The two kinds of society in the world must live together if there is to be peace, and they can live together."

NON-INTERVENTION IN THE INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF OTHER NATIONS

Non-intervention in the internal affairs of other nations is one of the elementary conditions for peace.

Imperialism does not believe in respecting the rights of other nations. Persuaded of their military or economic superiority (real or imaginary), the imperialist powers practise the cult of brute force, and the prime mover of their foreign policy is an urge for conquest and robbery. But this imperialist gangsterism is so detestable to the people—of the metropolitan as well as of the dependent countries—that the rulers of imperialist states are compelled to camouflage their aims. We accordingly find the warmongers prating about their devotion to democracy and peace.

A number of sophistries are advanced nowadays to justify imperialist aggression and brigandage. The chief of them is that peoples have no right to change their system of government, or their social order. It is on these grounds that the American and British governments are stifling the struggle of the Greek people against the royalist-fascist regime which they detest, and which was forcibly imposed on Greece by the imperialists themselves. Washington uses the same argument as a justification for nurturing and cherishing bankrupt political cliques that have been ejected by their peoples—from Chiang Kai-shek and his Kuomintang gang to Mikolajczyk, Ferenc Nagy, Gemeto and the other outcasts from the East-European countries who have now been switched to the job of espionage. The State Department's intrigues against the People's Democracies are prompted precisely by this policy of denying peoples the right to change their government systems and choose regimes and governments which they trust.

The hollowness of this argument is shown up by historical facts. The political systems prevailing in all the states of today are the outcome of revolutions. Let us recall the French bourgeois revolution of the eighteenth century and the English bourgeois revolution of the seventeenth. The U.S.A. owes its origin as a democratic state to the War of Independence of the 1770's and the civil war of 1861-65 between the North and the South. If President Truman is president today, it is only because the North American colonies rose against the British crown and threw off its rule in the eighteenth century.

The celebrated John Rogge may now say that he does not recognize the War of Independence and the war for the abolition of slavery. He might just as well say that he does not recognize the force of gravity or the solar system. Some, we know, did deny them at the time of Newton and Copernicus.

To justify their gross interference in the affairs of other peoples with the object of stopping their progressive development and their struggle for social reform, the imperialists have invented the term "internal aggression." They are trying to stop this "internal aggression," they affirm—with the noble motive of safeguarding peace and promoting the welfare of the peoples in whose affairs they meddle.

Actually, the idea of the imperialists is to brand as aggression the legitimate movements of peoples springing from the internal development of their countries. A clause concerning "internal aggression," it was revealed in the press at the time, was included in the secret provisions of the aggressive North-Atlantic treaty. Its import is that if in any country internal developments should occur tending towards a change of regime not approved of by the imperialists, and Washington should consider it necessary to intervene, the other signatories of the North-Atlantic pact are obligated also to intervene with their armed forces. The slanderous allegation that North Korea had committed aggression against South Korea was, as we know, advanced as a justification for the American invasion of that country.

It is as absurd to talk of internal aggression as it is to talk of hot ice. The term was invented by the imperialists to confuse people's minds and create a pretext for interfering in the affairs of other countries. Aggression is always committed from outside. The Address of the World Peace Congress to the United Nations contains a definition of aggression which no sensible person will question. It says:

> "No political, strategic or economic considerations, no motives deriving from the internal situation or any internal conflict in one or another state can justify armed intervention by any other state. Aggression is a criminal act on the part of that state which first employs armed force against another state under any pretext whatever."

As far back as May 1933, the League of Nations Security Committee approved a definition of aggression based on this same principle. It defined as the aggressor that state which is the first to declare war against another state, or whose armed forces invade the territory of another state even without declaration of war. It further expressly stated that justification for attack cannot be based upon the internal situation in a given state, as, for instance, political, economic or cultural backwardness; alleged maladministration; revolutionary or counterrevolutionary movements, civil war, disorders or strikes, or the establishment or maintenance in any state of any political, economic or social order.

Many bourgeois states agreed at the time with this definition, because no possible objection can be raised to it. But in our day the Washington and London politicians, in their search for excuses and cloaks for armed intervention in the affairs of other countries, are trying to turn all the accepted ideas and rules of international law upside down. However, the aggression in Korea remains aggression, and rapine remains rapine, no matter what fraudulent arguments the American imperialists resort to in order to whitewash their intervention. It is not Korean troops that have invaded New York and are establishing their order of things there, but American troops that have invaded far-off Korea and destroyed practically every town in that heroic country. The decision of the World Congress, with its clear-cut definition of aggression, is of a vast and fundamental importance; it deprives imperialist propaganda of every shred of justification for violence against other nations—violence, moreover, which jeopardizes world peace.

PEACEFUL CO-EXISTENCE OF THE TWO SYSTEMS

When the North-Atlantic treaty was being framed, Truman and Bevin asserted that it was not directed against any country. This was of course a lie, and one which nowadays even the most case-hardened political truth-twister would not venture to repeat. With the preparations for war gone as far as they are, it can no longer be concealed or denied that these preparations are directed against the Soviet Union and the People's Democracies. And so, as a means of justifying their aggressive designs, the imperialists make it their business to prove that war is inevitable because of the very existence of two antithetical systems—the socialist and the capitalist.

It is well known that in their statements of principle the founders of Soviet policy, Lenin and Stalin, declared that the two systems can and must live peacefully side by side. It is also well known that the Soviet Government unswervingly bases its policy on these principles. Since the war, notwithstanding the demonstrative military preparations of the Western powers and their gross violations of their international pledges, the Soviet Union has unfailingly signified its readiness to settle controversial issues in a peaceful way, and, in particular, to reach agreement on all major problems with the United States. We need only recall J. V. Stalin's replies to Kingsbury Smith, the Soviet Government's recent proposal for a conference of the four Great Powers on the German question, and the proposal made by the Soviet delegation at the present session of the General Assembly that the five Great Powers should conclude a Pact for Strengthening Peace. These and similar proposals met with the warm support of the masses in all countries, the U.S.A. and Great Britain included. But all proposals for a peaceful adjustment of differences, including the Soviet proposal at the present Assembly session, recommending direct negotiations between the five Great Powers, have been consistently rejected by Washington. It is clear to every lover of peace that negotiations between the five Great Powers, and a spirit of harmony and good will between them, would be the shortest and most effective way of eliminating the danger of war. This was stressed in the resolutions of the Second World Peace Congress.

Like that of the Nazi bandits in their time, the propaganda of today's warmongers is conducted along two lines. On the one hand, they make a parade of their supposed desire for peace. Realizing full well that the peoples hate war, the imperialist politicians—Truman and Acheson, Attlee and Bevin, Bradley and Eisenhower, and even that war criminal MacArthur—declare with unparalleled hypocrisy that their aggressive preparations and frenzied rearmament are designed solely and exclusively to strengthen peace. Even the murder and rapine in Korea is alleged to be motivated by the desire to establish enduring peace in that country!

On the other hand, this unsurpassed canting about peaceful intentions is accompanied by the most rabid propaganda for war and the whipping up of war hysteria. Psychological preparation for war is being conducted by the present-day bidders for world supremacy on a scale which Hitler and Goebbels might have envied. To the best of their ability, and as far as conditions allow, the American imperialists are trying to stir up the savage beast in the peaceful American people too. To the great chagrin of the brass hats in the Pentagon, the mass of American youth are no fire-eaters. The cult of the dollar, money-grabbing and go-getting has proved to have its reverse side: profiteers and self-seekers do not relish shedding their blood, and certainly not for the dubious ideals held up to them by the psychological warfare division of the State Department. As to gangsters alone, they don't get you very far. And so the ubiquitous radio and the monopoly-serving press are kept hard at work stirring up hate, racism and chauvinism in American minds, infecting them with suspicion and hostility towards other peoples, and especially towards countries with just and progressive social systems.

No matter how fervently America's masters may vow their devotion to peace, they cannot help exposing themselves as warmongers. Washington is in such panic fear of the demand of the peoples that war propaganda be prohibited because its entire propaganda machine is geared to war. Obviously, if war propaganda is proclaimed a crime, as the peoples demand it should be, the first place to look for the criminals will be Washington. One of them will be Bernard Baruch, the banker, who ever since the end of World War II has been planning the mobilization of America's economy for another war.

When he said this, he was speaking on behalf of all the merchants of death, for whom war is a profitable business. On their behalf, too, speak the advocates of a preventive war who have lately been so vocal in Washington —Secretary of the Navy Matthews, for instance, who called for aggressive war as a "preventive measure" against any state that refused to submit to American dictation, or MacArthur, with his scandalous plan for turning the Pacific into an American lake, and his program for U.S. domination of all ports "from Vladivostok to Singapore."

The warmongers and their political handymen greeted the peace partisans' appeal for peaceful economic competition between the two systems with such an outburst of fury because this goes right against their propaganda stress on the inevitability of war. This sensible and feasible idea has been put forward by the World Congress in its Address to the United Nations, and is meeting with the support not only of the working people—they have always been in favour of improving business relations with the Soviet Union—but also among wide sections of the wealthier classes. It invariably figures in the petitions of Quaker, women's and other United States public organizations to the White House. And even in the British House of Commons voices in favour of this solution of international problems are raised not only among the so-called Labour opposition, but also on the Conservative side of the House. They are the voices of people who have not lost all sense of reason and who have learned a lesson from the second world war.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION

An indispensable condition for international co-operation, and one without which stable peace is unthinkable, is recognition of the equality and respect for the sovereignty of other states. This is the principle on which the United Nations is founded, and the provisions of its Charter furnish the necessary basis for co-operation among nations.

The idea that co-operation between states, regardless of their social systems, is possible, feasible and essential for the maintenance of peace among nations—an idea advanced with such unanimity by the peace partisans and embodied in the decisions of the Congress—is reflected in the U.N. Charter, notably, in the principle of the unanimity of the Great Powers in the Security Council.

Agreement among the Great Powers is essential for the safeguarding of peace. This was fully realized by U.S. statesmen who really desired peace and were sincerely in favour of international co-operation. It was for this reason that President Roosevelt, for instance, espoused the principle of unanimity. But when the American government embarked on the reckless course of preparing another world war, it launched an offensive against the principle of unanimity in the Security Council, and ever since American imperialism has been working to undermine and disrupt the United Nations.

This line has been revealed in all its nakedness at the present session of the General Assembly. The State Department has mustered the mechanical majority vote of its satellites against the sane policy of agreements and compromises, which is essential for the maintenance of universal peace. It does not betray the slightest inclination to arrive at agreed decisions acceptable to all. It demonstratively avoids seeking for them, openly and grossly violates the U.N. Charter, forces unlawful decisions on the Security Council, and places the flag of the United Nations in the hands of MacArthur, stained with the blood of the Korean people.

The mechanical voting majority in the United Nations does not reflect the aspirations of the peoples. This is apparent not only to us in the Soviet Union. Henry Usborne, Labour M.P., pointed out in the House of Commons on July 28 that whereas the U.S.S.R., India and China, together containing half of the population of the world, cast only 10 per cent of the votes in the United Nations, the 20 Latin American countries, which are satellites of the U.S.A., and which represent only 7 per cent of the world's population, cast 40 per cent of the votes. But this perfectly suits the State Department, which is turning the United Nations into one of its subsidiaries.

With the help of this mechanical voting majority, the lawful representatives of the Chinese People's Republic are prevented from taking their seat in the United Nations. The American politicians try to confuse the issue by reiterating that China is being kept out of the United Nations because she has a Communist government. As though a people three times the size of the American and ten times the size of the British can be prevented from setting up the kind of government that it fought for over more than twenty years! Would it enter anybody's head to deprive the U.S.A. of representation in the United Nations on the grounds that its government is a capitalist one!

THE BANNER OF PEACE VERSUS THE CULT OF POWER

"We must continue to increase our production for military purposes. We must continue to increase the strength of our armed forces —army, navy and air force. We must devote more of our resources to military purposes." These words were uttered in October in San Francisco by the president of a country which has embarked upon rearmament on a scale unprecedented in history.

"The only way is to create a situation of strength," Acheson told representatives of Big Business in the White House on February 16.

Strength, strength, strength; power, power, power—this is the keynote of all the utterances of America's policy-makers. The exponents of power politics are trying to dope American minds with the notion that overwhelming military strength, unlimited rearmament, is a sure road to peace. "If we are stronger than all the rest, we shall establish peace," affirm the advocates of preventive war. The purpose of these sophistries is to confuse people, to conceal from them the preparations for unleashing another world war and the aggressive designs of the American plutocracy.

Actually, the appeals for power, for a policy of brute suppression, are a sign of the internal weakness of the imperialist camp. Capitalism, in its period of general crisis, is powerless to stay mankind's progressive advance, and it therefore dreams of strength and fosters the cult of power politics.

But time is working against the warmongers. This is shown by the rapid growth of the peace movement, and it is confirmed by the lessons of the American imperialists' venture in Korea.

The growth and spread of the peace movement drives the imperialists to fury. The movement is a constant reminder to them of their political and moral bankruptcy.

The Second World Peace Congress was an event of major importance. It was a demonstration not only of the impressive strength of the peace partisans, but also of the strength of their arguments. Developments are bearing out the historical rightness and justice of the cause of peace. The banner of peace raised aloft by the Soviet Republic 33 years ago is successfully countering the cult of force, and it now has the allegiance of the overwhelming majority of mankind.

U.S. Monopolies Grow Fat on Korean War

Prof. N. WEIZMANN

BEFORE us lie a number of issues of the Wall Street Journal, organ of the American financial oligarchy. Among the welter of bold-captioned articles and flaring advertisements, occasional tables of figures, no more than a few lines each, are interspersed. Modest and inconspicuous, they scarcely attract the eye. But, perhaps, they tell the story of the present state of America's economy more effectively than the most lengthy and circumstantial editorial comment.

These tables show the sales and profits of America's giant monopolies and other big corporations for the third quarter and the first nine months of the present year.

The third quarter is snappily referred to by the paper as the "post-Korea months." It was in this period that President Truman signed the Defence Production Act of 1950 and approved a $500 million program of tank production, and that the Senate approved supplementary appropriations of $17,000 million as "emergency defence funds," including $11,700 million for "increasing the United States military forces."

Who is profiting from the suffering and mass slaughter in Korea? Into whose pockets have flown the colossal appropriations for extending aggression in Asia? The Wall Street Journal gives the answer—the war in Korea is an exceedingly profitable business for the U.S. monopolies.

In a number of instances, the tables give comparisons with 1948 as well as 1949. An examination of these figures provides additional evidence that in 1949 America's economy was passing through a very severe slump, showing all the signs of sliding into a regular crisis. This presumably was one of the factors that determined America's ruling circles to pass from threats of aggression to outright aggression. We shall give some of the figures—they are very eloquent. Here are the net sales of one of the biggest chemical concerns, the Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., for the first nine months in each of the last three years:

1948	$463,000,000	100
1950	$537,000,000	116

The same picture is to be observed in the case of other concerns. Here are the sales of four big corporations in the third quarters of the three years (millions of dollars):

	1948	1949	1950
Republic Steel Corp.	196.9	155.4	228.0
Detroit Steel Corp.	7.3	5.9	23.8
Acme Steel Co.	14.4	12.8	16.2
Johns-Manville Corp.	44.8	43.1	55.3

Union Carbide & Carbon has made plenty out of the armament drive; but its rake-off cannot compare with that of E. I. du Pont de Nemours, which, as we know, specializes in the manufacture of explosives and takes an active share in the production of atomic bombs. In the first nine months of 1950, du Pont's sales totalled $934.6 million, exceeding those of the corresponding period of 1949 by 22 per cent. The rate of increase was even swifter in the third quarter, when sales were 32 per cent above those of the corresponding period of last year.

Du Pont's sales have expanded from quarter to quarter: taking the first quarter of this year as 100, sales in the second quarter rose to 117, and in the third to 130. However, profits have increased even faster. In the first nine months of 1949 the firm's net profits, after tax deduction, totalled $136 million; in the same period of the present year they totalled $218.6 million, which represents an increase of 61 per cent. This means that its profits increased in 1950 nearly three times as fast as its sales.

A large proportion of du Pont's huge profits (nearly one-third) comes from its share of the income of General Motors, the automobile firm. The latter's profits in the first nine months of 1950, according to the published figures, were truly astronomic—$702 million, exceeding those of the corresponding period last year by $200 million.

Du Pont is matched by another super-monopoly, General Electric, which also has a hand in atomic-bomb production. The sales of this concern in the first nine months of this year were $1,354.5 million, of which $473.4 million fall to the third quarter (the corresponding figures for last year were $1,190.4 million and $388.6 million). In the same period, the corporation's profits (after tax deduction) were $112.9 million, as against $67.6 million in the first nine months of last year. In other words, the expansion of General Electric's profits was nearly five times as great as the expansion of its sales (67 per cent and 13.8 per cent respectively).

A much greater increase of profits compared with sales is also to be observed in the case of other firms producing supplies for American imperialist aggression. The following table shows percentage increase of sales and net profits (after tax deduction) in the first nine months of 1950, compared with the corresponding period last year:

	Sales	Profits
United States Steel Corp.	11.5	34.2
Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp.	10.3	32.0
Acme Steel Co.	17.6	88.9
Caterpillar Tractor Co.	30.0	99.2
Monsanto Chemical Co.	34.5	78.5
Johns-Manville Corp.	20.5	51.9

Could there be more graphic proof that the artificially created war boom serves for the further enrichment of a handful of American plutocrats?

Here are a few other instances, also taken from the Wall Street Journal, of corporation profits in the first nine months of 1950 being half as much again and even double of what they were in the same period last year (millions of dollars):

	1949	1950
Standard Oil of New Jersey	195.0	274.5
Socony-Vacuum Oil Co.	66.0	83.0
United States Rubber Co.	8.6	15.8

The Wall Street Journal's issue of November 1 contains a report of the sales and profits of the United States Steel Corporation, America's biggest supplier of steel and rolled metal. In the third quarter of 1950 its sales amounted to $750.4 million (compared with $604.8 million in the third quarter of last year). Its profits in the third quarter were $59.7 million and in the nine months they totalled $178.8 million, as compared with $133.2 million in the corresponding period last year.

Equally rapid is the growth of the sales of other steel firms: Republic Steel, National Steel, Jones and Laughlin.

That the fat profits of the monopolies come primarily from war contracts is no secret. An article in the Wall Street Journal of October 9 entitled "Arms Buying" stated that the U.S. army was spending for "hardware" (the playful term used for such things as guns, tanks, ammunition and other weapons) 500 per cent more than was planned before the aggression in Korea—$1,962 million, instead of $312 million.

The Cadillac division of General Motors has alone received orders for light tanks totalling $110 million. This means that at least one-fifth of the half a billion dollars assigned by Truman for tank building has already passed into the coffers of General Motors. Orders running into many millions have also been received by Willys-Overland Motors ("jeeps"), Continental Motors (tank engines), the American Car & Foundry Co. (105-millimetre howitzer motor carriages), International Harvester (armoured vehicles), and others.

These cold figures mercilessly expose the fact that behind the American aggression in Asia and the war hysteria and armament drive in the United States lie the infamous business interests of the American monopolies.

Developments in Korea

Foreign Press Review

L. S. L.

THE BOURGEOIS press has recently been giving greater prominence than ever to the developments in Korea—a fact which is directly connected with the failure of General MacArthur's latest offensive against the Korean People's Army.

This offensive, preceded by lengthy all-round preparations on the part of the American aggressors, was trumpeted abroad as a "general," a "decisive" effort. On November 24 all bourgeois newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic prominently headlined the text of MacArthur's official communiqué announcing that the attack in Northwest Korea was proceeding "according to schedule," encountering "stubborn but failing resistance." Somewhat earlier, Associated Press reported that MacArthur, escorted by jet fighter planes, had made a flight over the Yalukiang—the border river—and then returned to Tokyo, where he boasted to newspapermen:

"Tell the boys when they reach the Yalukiang they are going to eat Christmas dinner at home."

It was noted in the press that MacArthur had timed his offensive in Korea to coincide with the arrival of the Chinese People's Republic delegation in New York to participate in the Security Council discussions of the U.S. invasion of Taiwan.

On November 25 the Christian Science Monitor's Washington correspondent Harsh wrote that MacArthur's "unexpected" offensive had been duly considered and approved beforehand at the State Department and the White House.

> "The reason for the approval of the plan and for the general satisfaction here with the launching of the offensive," Harsh wrote, "is the dominant belief in high United States planning quarters that a situation of strength is an essential basis of any successful talks with Russia or with any of the countries associated with Russia. It is felt here that the sooner MacArthur's troops reach the Yalukiang, the sooner the United Nations will be able to talk with the Chinese."

The same day, Reuters correspondent Valentine wrote from Seoul that political circles close to the commander-in-chief believed the latter unwilling to wait any longer for a political decision to be reached at Lake Success, and very doubtful as to its possibility. In other words, Valentine continued, it was believed that General MacArthur wanted a quick decision.

What was hoped of the November offensive was revealed by New York Times correspondent Reston, who wrote from Washington that the United States was urging the British

> "not to press any conversations with the Chinese Communists too far until the outcome of the present offensive in Korea is clearer."

So we see that Washington's political line was to be directly dependent on what the adventurist MacArthur managed to accomplish in the field.

But events in Northwest Korea did not develop as the American interventionists had expected. In several sectors the Korean People's Army, aided by Chinese volunteers, launched decisive counterattacks. Dropping the optimistic tone of earlier reports, American and British newspapers began to carry very sombre accounts of the fighting. New words appeared: "defeat," "collapse," "disaster." On November 26 Reuters Tokyo correspondent wrote that the entire eastern flank of General MacArthur's three-day-old offensive had crumbled under a furious counterattack by the People's Army. A spokesman of American Eighth Army headquarters declared in the afternoon of November 26 that as a result of mass attacks by the North Koreans, first one and then another of MacArthur's lines across the central mountain area had collapsed.

Associated Press correspondent Whitehead, with the U.S. 25th Division in Korea, wrote in a dispatch published on November 27:

> "The big United Nations offensive . . . was threatened with complete collapse today. This was the stark reality of the situation after forty-eight hours of savage fighting. The Chinese and Koreans have dealt a stunning blow to the United Nations forces. The offensive that rolled forward for two days has been halted decisively. The United Nations troops are on the defensive, after giving up most of their gains."

Other reports from the front gave a graphic picture of the confusion and disorganization among the troops of the U.S. and its satellites. Thus, United Press correspondent Kalisher wrote from American Eighth Army headquarters that the American command faced a major military disaster, and that the North-Korean offensive had smashed all hope of a quick conquest of Korea. Lt.-Gen. Walker, commander of the Eighth Army, issued the order to "hold the line at all costs." But this order was far easier to issue than to obey. Reports from correspondents at different American staff headquarters brought news of the disorderly retreat of U.S. and Li Seung Man troops, of nothing being known of many large units, of American army spokesmen describing the situation as "critical."

The failure of MacArthur's "decisive" offensive was very nervously received in American official circles. New York Herald Tribune correspondent Andrews reported from Washington on November 29:

"The bad news from Korea has plunged Washington into a state of gloomy apprehension and feverish activity.... Truman is holding an extraordinary conference with the National Security Council, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the State Department's Far Eastern experts."

The Wall Street Journal's Washington correspondent Cromley wrote:

"At the White House, Pentagon, and Department of State yesterday the men who make policy were nervous and jumpy.... A Far Eastern expert said frankly yesterday, 'I cannot tell you what we think about the situation this morning; we may all have different ideas by this afternoon.' One diplomat just sat ... saying to himself, 'It is going to be war; it is going to be war.' Another diplomat was saying quietly under his breath, 'We ought to bomb them; we ought to bomb them—right in Manchuria we ought to bomb them.' Another Department of State planner said worriedly, 'We should better watch Europe too—the Lord knows what might happen, while we are tied up in Korea.'"

To this vivid description, Christian Science Monitor correspondent Harsh added:

"General MacArthur's severe military reverse in Korea sent the top military command of the United States to the White House, urging on the President the earliest possible resort to diplomacy to extricate their armed forces from what they at present consider may become an impossible military position."

The "top men from the Pentagon" recognize however, Harsh declared, that "resort to diplomacy would be hopeless" as long as the army is in retreat. Hence, they consider that

"the immediate task is to stabilize the situation on the front, if possible.... However, they are of the almost unanimous opinion that the time has passed for military solution. MacArthur himself has appealed for such resort to diplomacy. This view accords entirely with that of the top military leaders in Washington, who told the President that the events of the past few days made it impossible for MacArthur to accomplish his present mission in Korea."

A dispatch from Cromley in the Wall Street Journal shows that U.S. ruling circles are not interested in a peaceful settlement.

"In the Department of State and the Pentagon," Cromley writes, "strong groups were determinedly urging a new 'get tough with China' policy.... They feared China would interpret softness as appeasement.... These 'get tough' proponents want to bomb Manchuria at present—and bomb it hard.... But there are other diplomats and Pentagon planners who want to go slow.... One diplomat says bitterly: 'MacArthur set off this new China attack with his big new drive. At present he wants to bomb Manchuria; what is he trying to do—get us in a real war with Red China?'"

British and American newspapers speak of numerous conferences now taking place in an endeavour to find a way out of the situation. MacArthur's reckless actions, they report, have evoked alarm and anxiety in England, France, and other countries, which fear that such a rash policy may bring them face to face with war.

Reston of the New York Times wrote on November 30:

"There is no doubt that confidence in MacArthur even on Capitol Hill has been shaken badly as a result of the events of the last few days. Similarly, there is no doubt that United States leadership in the Western world has been damaged by Truman's acceptance of the bold MacArthur offensive and the President's rejection of the more cautious British strategy.... In the undercover dispute between the cautious policy proposed by the British and French and the bold policy sponsored by MacArthur, the President has backed MacArthur nearly every time. This has produced a situation within the Western coalition that United States diplomats just now are beginning to try to correct."

A fresh wave of war hysteria was started by Truman's press-conference statement of November 30. In this statement Truman not only repeated that the U.S. government has no intention of abandoning its "mission" in Korea, but held out the prospect of a still further extension of its army and a continuation of the U.S. imperialist moves in Korea and in relation to China. Thus, while professing to want peace negotiations, Truman is actually fanning the war flames.

One gets the impression that the present widespread criticism of General MacArthur in the most diverse American circles is being secretly inspired by certain groups in Washington, as a sort of safety valve for public indignation.

MacArthur is being censured by the very press which only yesterday praised him to the skies. No further back than November 26, one of the New York broadcasting stations spoke of him as "America's military genius." Now this "military genius" has cabled a Washington paper that his remark about the war terminating by Christmas was meant "facetiously."

Many Congressmen, the New York Herald Tribune reported on November 29, demand an investigation as to why MacArthur boasted about the war terminating around Christmas, just when an offensive against the United States forces was being prepared in Korea.

While mutual recriminations are bandied about in the circles which have had a hand in determining the present aggressive line of U.S. policy, progressive public opinion in America is coming out in determined protest against aggression in Asia. On behalf of a newly formed organization known as the "Emergency Conference on China and World Peace," Dr. Harry Ward has sent Truman and Trygve Lie messages of protest against MacArthur's threats.

"It is unthinkable," these messages declare, "that our country should war with the 475 million Chinese people.... There must be no U.S.-China war, and the atom bomb must not be dropped on Manchuria. We have tried everything except mediation and conciliation in the Korean war, and denial of China's rightful role and interests has led us to the very brink of a third world war. It is plainly time for the cease-fire order in Korea."

T. O. Thackrey, editor of the Daily Compass, proposes in a front-page editorial that MacArthur be recalled from the Far East and that his war policy be completely reversed. It was folly, Thackrey declares, to authorize MacArthur to cross the 38th parallel.

"This general who wants to be an emperor," Thackrey continues, "at present poses on the same grounds of 'military necessity' the demand for authorization to bomb China. And after China—what border then?... MacArthur has proved himself a general whose dreams, boasts and communiqués so far outrun reality and facts that it is folly to repose faith in his advice."

Thackrey demands cessation of hostilities and withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korea, and proposes peace negotiations, which, he says, are imperative and certainly more important than

"the risk of displeasing the war party headed by MacArthur, or appeasement of Senator Knowland and the Chiang clique."

In Britain too, public opinion sharply condemns the reckless U.S. policy of extending the aggression in Asia. A characteristic illustration is a statement issued on November 29 by the National Peace Council, a pacifist body co-ordinating the activities of over forty British organizations working for peace but not affiliated with the British Peace Committee.

This statement declares:

"The citizens of our own country, who largely supported the original United Nations action in Korea, are—in the wide experience and representative judgment of the council—decisively opposed to any steps which would involve Britain with its allies in war with China.

"The council has therefore most urgently requested that the British government should strive to recapture the initiative for peace and should straightway instruct its representatives at the United Nations to make every effort to bring the war in Korea to an early close by way of a negotiated peace."

INTERNATIONAL LIFE

NOTES

THE STRUGGLE CONTINUES

Thwarted in their attempts to torpedo the World Peace Congress, the enemies of peace and abettors of the warmongers in Britain are now venting their impotent rage on its delegates. The printer Freddy Layton, secretary of the Bristol Youth Peace Group, has been dismissed from his job with the Bristol Evening World for attending the Congress. A London worker, V. Finlayson, has been sacked on the same grounds.

The Conservative and Labour leaders are also hounding members of their parties who went to the Congress. On November 29 the Labour Party Executive in Blaydon, Durham, passed a decision to expel Steve Lawther, who has been elected to the World Peace Council. Lawther and his wife have resigned from the Labour Party in protest and announced their intention of devoting all their efforts to working in the campaign for peace.

The Carpenders Park Labour Party (North London) has suspended Mrs. Allan, who was a delegate to the Congress, from all further activity in the party.

Dr. Christopher Woodard, whom the Congress elected to the World Peace Council, has been expelled from the Conservative Party. Commenting on the expulsion, Dr. Woodard said:

"I've never in my life met such abysmal stupidity.... All those fools could do was to try to get me to say I was not opposed to Communism. I pointed out that there are at least 1,000 million people in the world who believe in Communism and that they have to be listened to and that we must co-operate with them if we are to have peace."

The Congress delegates for their part are doing everything to inform people in Britain about the Congress and its immensely important results. During their journey home from Poland they held several meetings to discuss how to further the work for peace. In a statement they have issued since, they declare themselves inspired by the success of the Congress and "pledge themselves to do their utmost in the cause of peace and to bring together the peoples of the world in friendship and co-operation." Professor Bernal, writing in the Daily Worker and in letters to the Times and the New Statesman, has given a detailed exposition of the Congress decisions.

The delegates are going to speak at a series of big "report back" meetings which the British Peace Committee is arranging throughout Britain in the coming fortnight. Many of them have already addressed meetings and mass rallies.

GERMANS SAY NO

The Landtag elections held towards the end of last month in Hesse, Württemberg-Baden and Bavaria in the American zone of Germany were a signal defeat for Adenauer's Christian-Democratic Union. Even in Bavaria, a traditional stronghold of the reactionary Catholic parties, the Social-Democrats topped the list.

The Bonn "chancellor's" servile zeal in remilitarizing Western Germany has discredited the Christian-Democratic Union in the eyes of the voters. They call it the war party. And the Schumacherites exploited these sentiments for all they were worth. Their election campaign centred around a lying promise to oppose Adenauer's pro-war policy. Schumacher told election meetings that a majority for the government parties would be interpreted abroad as support of remilitarization. He tried to talk away the fact that in all essentials he sees eye to eye with Adenauer on this question—a thing which more than one of the newspapers has pointed out.

Thus the keynote of the election was the attitude of the populace towards the remilitarization issue, and that too is the light in which its results have to be viewed. This is something that even American observers are unable to deny. United Press, for instance, had to admit that the Germans had pronounced "against remilitarization." Voters in the American zone had followed the Socialists, whose main election promise had been not to rearm. And the Americans' political adviser in Hesse, Dr. Anspach, spoke in his dismay of a "regular landslide."

Certainly the elections were an emphatic demonstration by the people of Western Germany against Washington's remilitarization plans.

COAL FAMINE IN TRIZONIA

Again, as in the early postwar years, coal trains in Western Germany are being raided by a fuel-hungry populace. The stations where coal is unloaded are guarded by armed police and squads specially detailed for the purpose. But people shovel coal off moving cars between the stations. Some trains lose as much as 20 per cent of their freight en route.

According to official statistics, coal production in the Ruhr is normal. Why then this shortage of coal in Western Germany? Why are not only homes, but many of the peace industries experiencing an acute scarcity? Sugar refineries, textile mills, agricultural machinery plants, bakeries, gas works are closing down or curtailing production. Many firms are laying off workers wholesale. Small and medium-sized establishments find themselves in very bad straits indeed. The Bielefeld Freie Presse says:

> "The coal situation threatens to become a disaster that will plunge the Federal Republic into dire want."

At the same time, war factories are kept in capacity operation on American and British orders. Housing construction in the British zone has been suspended because the building material factories are getting no coal; yet available supplies of these materials have been commandeered for fortifications and barracks.

It is war production that is responsible for the coal hunger, which bids fair to bring on a crisis of the whole West-German economy. What makes things still worse is the large compulsory export quotas for Ruhr coal, which is delivered at a low price for the war industries of the Western powers. For the first quarter of next year the so-called International Ruhr Authority has fixed an export quota of 6,830,000 tons, although the Germans have pointed out that this is at least a million tons too much.

To be sure, the United States is ready to "help." It is offering to bring in 500,000 tons of American coal, only at the profiteering price of 16.5 dollars a ton, instead of the 10 dollars paid for Ruhr coal. There is also another American offer: if the Bonn authorities will lower their tariffs on oil, the U.S. monopolies are willing to supply it. This complaisance is easy to understand, seeing that the business would put some 100 million dollars of extra profits in their pockets.

Besides drawing Western Germany into the armament drive with all its sinister consequences, the American imperialists are shamelessly robbing her, strangling her peace economy and dooming her people to hunger and cold.

CANADA—A U.S. ARMY COMMAND

Some time ago, the hearts of Canadians were gladdened with the news that their armed forces had been given the privilege of being the aides of the United States. The person who told them this was External Affairs Minister Lester B. Pearson, speaking in parliament on September 4. Commenting on Pearson's statement, independent M.P. Gagnon said that in the past the Canadian government had taken its orders from Britain, and now it was taking them from Canada's neighbour—Canada's policy was still being dictated by the heads of other countries.

By other countries Gagnon naturally meant the United States. And what Pearson meant in speaking of Canada's new role was made plain by subsequent developments.

On November 24 a correspondent of the Ottawa Citizen reported, quoting official documents in his possession, that on October 1 the Pentagon had set up a new "U.S. Northeast Command," with U.S. Major-General Whitten in charge. And this command, it transpired, included a good third of the territory of—Canada: the entire Province of Quebec, the other Atlantic provinces, all the Canadian Arctic islands, right up to the North Pole, and, to round out the picture, the whole of Danish-owned Greenland.

The thing promised trouble. Pearson called a press conference in a hurry and tried to explain it away. But what could he say to justify such a flagrant violation of Canada's sovereignty? He could only mumble that Canada had been duly "consulted."...

Since then the Canadian press has published some further unsavoury details of this affair. The Canadian government, it appears, made no objection to the Pentagon's imperialist appetites as such. No, it only made one request: the Americans should publish no maps of their new command, so that people shouldn't get the impression that U.S. jurisdiction had been extended to these Canadian territories.

News Item: Jules Moch, France's Minister of National Defence, has been exposed as a shielder of grafters and spies of the General Staff, who are implicated in the notorious "Ministers' Affair." Two hundred and thirty-five deputies voted to have Moch's crimes brought before the High Court.

WHOM FRANCE'S DEFENCE MINISTER DEFENDS

G. VALK

After making Washington boss of a third of the country, the Canadian government tries to "save its face" by subterfuges like these. But it's fair to assume that Canadians want to live in Canada, not in a U.S. "Northeast Command."

SOME PERTINENT CORRECTIONS

When the Italian Chamber of Deputies was considering the budget estimates for the Ministry of the Interior, Minister Scelba informed the deputies, among other things, that "in the sphere of social legislation Italy stands well in the forefront." Whether this was a specimen of the policeman's smug complacency or just a barefaced lie is uncertain. Certain it is, however, that if the Italy of De Gasperi and Scelba is "well in the forefront" in anything, it is only in unemployment, low living standards and illiteracy.

The present winter finds conditions in Italy worse than ever, and particularly dreadful is the plight of the children of the working folk. Statistics printed in the Vie Nuove magazine for November 19 show that 300,000 Italian children have a predisposition to tuberculosis, and only 4 per cent of them are receiving medical attention. Of the 2,000,000 school-age children who require medical treatment, 1,120,000 cannot get it. Fifteen thousand children in Italy were crippled during the war, chiefly in American bombing attacks; only 6 per cent of them are getting any assistance—and of the 200,000 war orphans 35 per cent are uncared for. There are also 500,000 mothers who receive no medical service.

Italy has not enough schoolhouses. Eighty thousand teachers are without work. The schools that do exist are overcrowded, and epidemics are rife. The national rate of incidence of tuberculosis among school-age children is above 10 per cent, and in some areas it is as high as 50 and 60. The illiteracy percentage in the South is between 60 and 70, which is hardly surprising, seeing that the annual government expenditure on schooling is 10 lire (less than 6.5 kopeks) per child.

And so we see that Scelba's bombastic pronouncements about Marshallized Italy's achievements in social welfare stand in need of substantial correction.

NEO-FASCISM IN AUSTRIA

By a law passed on the 22nd of last month, the Austrian parliament has abolished the so-called people's denazification courts, established in 1945 to punish Nazi and war criminals. But only very naive people can be led by this to assume that denazification in Austria has been completed and the courts are being abolished because there is nothing more for them to do.

With the encouragement of the Western powers, the Austrian authorities from the very outset sabotaged the joint allied decisions on denazification. The denazification courts deliberately evaded the job they had been set up to do. Even according to the official figures, out of the total of 80,377 cases started against Nazis, 64,811 were quashed, suspended or indefinitely postponed, and 4,375 persons were formally acquitted. Only 6,219, or 7.7 per cent of the accused, were found guilty. And even out of these acknowledged Nazi criminals, 5,984 were given only the briefest prison terms, and their preliminary confinement was credited to them, so that they were released right from the courtroom. Only 67 Nazis are in custody at the present time.

The Austrian government has also failed to carry out the Allied Council's directive for speedy enforcement of Law No. 25, which provides that National-Socialists who are a menace to the state shall be confined in special camps. All these individuals are at large and many have been officially amnestied. In 1948-49 the President of Austria amnestied 6,411 fascist criminals by his personal decree, and another 356 former active Nazis were amnestied by the Ministry of Justice.

With the Austrian authorities acting in this way, Nazism is positively encouraged to revive. Some dozen and a half underground neo-Nazi organizations were uncovered in the Western zones of Austria in 1948 and 1949; it came out, incidentally, that they had been closely linked with the British and American secret services. The Nazi "League of Independents" was made legal last year, and a neo-Nazi group calling itself "The Young Front" exists openly in the ruling People's Party.

In the light of all these facts, the abolition of the denazification courts can only be interpreted as a fresh move towards the neo-fascization of Austria.

PORTRAITS FROM THE PEOPLE'S DEMOCRACIES

One of the Notables of the New Bulgaria

Orlin VASILEV

The author of this story about the Dimitrov Prize winner Ilia Pelov, the talented self-taught inventor, is a well-known Bulgarian novelist and journalist, editor of the newspaper "Literaturen Front." The author of many novels and screen plays, including "White Road," "Strahil," "Primeval Forest," "Everyday Life," "Kalin the Eagle," and "The Alarum," Vasilev has been awarded a Dimitrov Prize for literature.

AT THE FOOT of the Balkan mountains nestles the old town of Vazovgrad. Its squat little houses roofed with mossy tiles are huddled together, and most of them are surrounded by high stone walls dating back to the days of Turkish rule. For centuries the heavy gates, locked and barred, concealed the poverty of the small farmers, the shepherds and artisans. Thin-legged, long-eared donkeys plod drearily along the narrow crooked streets, picking their way among the stones that have rolled down the mountainside. Nuns in their long dark habits move like black shadows under the walls of the ancient convent. The primitive, cumbersome "dikanya," a flat board studded with jagged flint teeth, is still used in these parts for threshing the grain....

And suddenly a new town thrusts itself powerfully and irresistibly into the midst of this medieval scene. The heart of the new town is a factory, surrounded by a large park. Huge, spacious factory buildings rise on either side of broad avenues. Encased in metal and glass, they spread themselves bright and shining under the blue sky. Beyond towers the handsome, imposing building of the House of Culture, and beyond that, more avenues and gardens. Then come blocks of four- and five-storey apartment houses where the workers live, their broad windows sparkling merrily in the sunshine.

We are sitting by an open window in one of these apartments. This is the home of Ilia Pelov, a worker of wide renown, who has won the Dimitrov Prize and three government decorations. Pelov is a man of 46 or 47 with a finely-featured face and steady penetrating eye. He is deliberate, unhurried in his speech as in his movements.

"Not so bad for a start, is it?" he says, pointing to the view from the window. "The old life is retreating and we're advancing. Look, there's the new high school, and over there is the reading room, the library and the cinema. Everybody has electric light and radio here. The fathers still drive donkeys and thresh with 'dikanyas,' but their sons and grandsons are operating the latest kinds of machinery. Before very long all that will be left of the old town will be a museum. Let it stand as a reminder to future generations of what we had to start with."

But I feel that Pelov's contemporaries too might benefit by knowing the story of this descendant of a long line of farm labourers who is today a notable of the new Bulgaria—where he started, what his life has been, and what his plans and aspirations are for the future.

His father, Mladen Pelov, fled from his famine-stricken village and roamed from place to place in search of work. He wanted to send his children to school, to give them a good start in life, but it was more than he could manage. And when two of them died, he told his third son:

"You see how it is, Ilia.... We have six mouths to feed. You will have to keep yourself from now on. Perhaps you'll be able to get on in life...."

His mother made him up a bundle of two faded shirts, a towel and a hunk of bread. Ilia shouldered the bundle, and set off to "get on in life."

"In one village where they had a threshing machine I got a job as stoker," Pelov recalls. "Got my first whiff of machine oil there—the sweetest smell a worker knows! But the summer ended, and with it the threshing. I decided to push on to Sofia. If I was to go under, I might as well dive into deep water—that was how I looked at it."

Scared by the bustle of the big city, the village lad did not venture beyond the district around the railway station, spending the nights in vacant lots. There he made the acquaintance of some stonemasons as homeless and destitute as himself who advised him to try the railway repair shops. He was lucky enough to be taken on as a turner's apprentice, and was given a warm welcome by his work mates, many of them Communists, with whom he lived in the railway barracks, sleeping like them on three bare boards with a sack for a mattress and another for a blanket.

Ilia Pelov

Here in the Sofia railway repair shops Ilia learned the first lessons life was to teach him. It was here that he found out how marvellous a thing was the lathe and how hideous a thing the society he lived in.

With the older workers, the boy visited the Communist club, and there for the first time he heard about the Soviet land, where farm labourers like his father and stonemasons and lathe hands like his new friends had driven out the capitalists and landlords and were running the factories, banks and estates themselves. And because they had done this the interventionists had set out to make war on them.

In his spare time Ilia learned to drive a car, and later he got a job as mechanic in an automobile repair shop. He was endowed with a questing mind, an accurate eye and a steady hand. Industrious and persevering, he would spend long evenings poring over technical handbooks. And after a time he matched the skill of workers of much longer experience. He read blueprints at sight, was quick at making calculations, could adjust a lathe, and later, a milling machine too. He soon had the reputation among his fellows of being expert at copying parts from specimens, without working drawings.

He wanted to study further and so he spent the money saved up for a suit on buying technical books. But he soon found that in monarchist Bulgaria the ordinary worker could make no headway.

There were no engineering plants in Bulgaria. What machine shops there were had one or two small lathes and an ordinary hand bellows standing in the middle of the floor. Some of the bigger ones did have machines, but they were worn-out, obsolete models used mainly for petty repair work.

And so life in capitalist Bulgaria taught Pelov another bitter lesson. The country was foreigner-ridden. Everything was run by Germans, Americans, Belgians, French, Englishmen or Italians. None of them, naturally, had any interest in developing Bulgarian industry. On the contrary, the theory was brazenly propounded that Bulgaria could be nothing but an agrarian adjunct of German industry. The Bulgarians were supposed to follow the plough, plant tobacco, soybeans, barley and corn. All the rest they were to receive "ready-made" from abroad.

Sofia's streets were literally jammed with foreign shops and the offices of foreign firms. It was not only machines that were imported. Hammers, pliers, spades, screws, bolts, horseshoes and even nails bore foreign trademarks.

"For grain, tobacco and attar of roses you can buy really good things from any foreign firm, not that Bulgarian-made stuff...."

This was the slighting way in which goods of domestic manufacture were referred to by the foreign businessmen and their Bulgarian menials. "Bulgarian stuff," "Bulgarian work" meant poor stuff, trash. The implication was that Bulgarian goods could never compare even with the worst rubbish brought in from America, Germany or Britain.

This degrading term of opprobrium, originally used by the colonizers and their agents in alluding to manufactures, was subsequently applied also to literature, the theatre and the arts generally.

The simplest machines that came from abroad were accompanied by men to install them. Bulgarian factory-owners regarded foreigners with awe. And even the few Bulgarian trained engineers took this state of affairs quite for granted. They themselves went to Germany, Austria, France or Italy for their education and returned home filled with contempt for Bulgarian workmanship. As a matter of fact, most of them quickly forgot all they had learned, and even before they received their degrees sought positions in local branches of foreign firms in order later on to become salesmen of ready-made machines and parts. And if the firm did not deal in machines, but in razor blades, say, or toothbrushes, or shoe polish, what did that matter? In his desire to make money the Bulgarian bourgeois surpassed even his foreign partners and instructors.

The lot of the engineer who sought to preserve his self-respect and his professional dignity was unenviable indeed. In most cases he became an official in some administrative position, usually on the railways; or else he might open a small garage or a workshop for repairing spirit stoves, electric cookers and bicycles. As for engineers who were Communists, when they were not in jail they led the semi-starvation existence of the unemployed.

"The ablest, the most gifted worker," says Pelov, "could not hope for anything better than a bare crust of bread. Yes, we Bulgarian workers had big scores to settle both with our own and foreign capitalists."

But it was not until Russian tanks clattered along the banks of the Danube that the bitter past came to an end.

Starting with that day, Ilia Pelov found that life had another lesson to teach him—a happy lesson this time. He had long since known of the heroic struggles and labour prowess of the great Russian people. He had heard about the Dnieper power plant and the Turksib Railway. News of the glorious doings of the Soviet people had made their way past all the fascist barriers. Working in that old primitive repair shop, Pelov had thought many a time of the gigantic projects built by emancipated labour.

The Bulgarian people rose to meet their liberators and together with the Soviet Army swept forward to finish off the German fascist hordes. The army needed vehicles, and the workshop where Ilia Pelov was employed was given the job of repairing large numbers of them.

That was all very well, but how was it to be done? With the wretched, worn-out equipment and the old hand bellows? But once again Soviet assistance arrived. A lean, bronzed army engineer with hair prematurely grey came to the workshop one day. His name was Major Rybak.

At first even the Major was rather taken aback. Why, there wasn't a single milling machine in the place! On the other hand, there were plenty of directors and managers, outwardly cordial but scared and secretly hostile.

Major Rybak got the older workers and technicians together. He had been a lathe operator himself once and he knew that victory is forged by workers' hands.

"There's a war on, comrades!" he said. "An arduous, patriotic war of liberation. And, as you know, armies nowadays move on wheels. And wheels must have engines to drive them, and engines need bearings, pistons, gears and bushings and all sorts of other parts that have a nasty way of breaking when least expected.

"It's terrible to think," he went on earnestly, his face grave now, "that victory might be delayed even for a day because some wretched screws got loose somewhere. Every extra truck means hundreds more shells, thousands more mortar bombs and bullets delivered to the front. And that means death for the fascist thugs and life for our heroes, our brothers and sons. Do you understand me, comrades?"

That was the beginning of a period such as the workers had never known before. They stayed in the shops for days on end. They ate their meals at their lathes, and snatched an hour or two of sleep stretched out on the floor beside their machines or on a heap of earth in the foundry. And with them all the time was the Soviet engineer, always brisk and cheerful. He had become particularly friendly with Ilia Pelov; he had taken a liking to the quiet, reserved worker from the very first. Pelov did not talk much, but Rybak noticed that his work mates deferred to his judgment: "Let's hear what Ilia has to say."

And Ilia would give his invariably lucid and well-considered opinion.

The Major discovered that Pelov owned a small but extremely valuable technical library. One of the books was "Cutting Tools," by the Soviet Professor Semenchenko. It had many notes in the margin.

Ilia became the Major's right-hand man. Their task was by no means an easy one. Production of the simpler parts had been organized quickly enough, but there were some parts which even the best skilled man could not make with the equipment on hand. And so many different types and models of vehicles were coming in for "treatment"! In most cases parts had to be turned out without drawings, without the necessary specifications and even without specimens from which drawings could be made.

They did all that could be done on the spot, and the unfinished parts were loaded onto a truck and a "flying" team led by Ilia Pelov drove out to plants in other towns and machined them there, working at night when the machines were free.

At last the first milling machines arrived. The workers met them with great rejoicing. Every day, however, brought fresh problems with it.

On the rear axle of every motor vehicle is a rounded steel housing concealing the differential gears. These are the principal link in the transmission of power from engine to wheels. The steel bevel pinion connects with the crown gear. It does not look very complicated. Both parts can be forged and then machined on a lathe. The configuration of the teeth, however, is so complex that special machine tools are needed to make them.

"There are no such machine tools in Bulgaria," they told the Major. "The Germans wouldn't sell them to us."

Perhaps so, but the army needed vehicles, not excuses! What was to be done? The Major racked his brains, so did Pelov, so did the rest of the workers. The cement floor of the workshop was covered with chalked drawings until it began to look like a huge designing table.

At first they found a way to make the crown gear and the bevel pinion by hand. But how much time and effort it cost them! It took three or four days of painstaking work to make each part. And there were more than seventy different types and models of vehicles. . . . No sooner did you get accustomed to one measurement than another arrived, and new standards had to be drawn up, new teeth forged and new calculations worked out.

"Heavy weighs the automobile crown, eh, Comrade Pelov?" the Major would joke.

And so Pelov set to work to devise a mechanism that would make those confounded teeth automatically.

The engineer approved his general scheme and gave him some practical suggestions, but he did not stay to see the new device completed, for at that point the last volley of the second world war was fired in Berlin, and the Moscow sky was ablaze with the lights of the long-awaited Victory celebration.

With tears in their eyes the workers took leave of their teacher, the first Soviet engineer they had known.

Thus Pelov was left without the Major's solid support, and more and more problems seemed to be piling up. Industry had not yet been nationalized and most of it was run by capitalists. Nor had things changed much at the state-owned plants, for most of the former managers had retained their positions, and even where new ones had come in, the historic significance of the new movement among the working class was not yet fully appreciated.

Gradually, however, the Communist Party and the Fatherland Front government broke the ice. Georgi Dimitrov surrounded the first shock workers and rationalizers of production with paternal care and attention. Step by step the way to a people's industry, a socialist industry, was cleared.

LETTER FROM ORAN

The editors have received a letter from Oran from Bachir Merad, a North-African trade-union leader who visited the Soviet Union recently as one of a delegation of Algerian and Tunisian workers, peasants and intellectuals. This is what he writes:

"Please thank Soviet workers on behalf of my docker friend Boualem and myself for the wonderful welcome we received at the factories of Moscow, Stalingrad and Tashkent.

"We were truly thrilled on seeing what your country has accomplished. Thanks to the socialist system, the Soviet people can live in happiness, freedom and peace—the peace they so warmly defend.

"We shall never stop relating and describing to our friends and to all we meet what the Soviet Union is really like, and in this way we shall fight those who try to distort the truth.

"The meetings at which we tell about our impressions are everywhere a tremendous success. We are showered with questions. We shall do everything to spread far and wide the truth about what we saw in the Soviet Union."

Of course, there were still many difficulties. Pelov found that he still had fewer assistants than "advisers" who assured him there was no sense in putting in so much effort when new machines and spare parts would soon be coming in from abroad.

But deep in his heart he cherished the Party's call to follow the grand example of the Soviet workers. He remembered too the Soviet engineer's injunction: never let up, always push forward!

The hardest thing of all was to find a formula that would co-ordinate the complex operation of the device. And again Pelov spent nights poring over Professor Semenchenko's "Cutting Tools" and other Soviet technical handbooks, which were now available in the library at his job. With their help he solved three serious problems one after another.

These three victories were followed in due course by three high government awards: three Order of Labour medals, two of silver and one of gold.

Up at the Ministry, they were following the progress of this worker-inventor. The war was over, but the need for crown gears and bevel pinions was constantly growing, for the economic rehabilitation of the country had begun. Every two or three days the telephone would ring:

"Well, how are you getting on?"

And at last Pelov was able to reply: "I am ready. Send down a testing commission."

Now the first steel bevel pinion was clamped in place. The current was switched on and a special mechanism fed it under the revolving cutter.

At that moment Pelov felt as if the tool had cut not into the steel but into his own heart.

The machine worked for two hours. And for two hours the commission stood by watching, testing, checking, calculating. At last the cutter ran free. The job was done! The head of the commission picked up the newly-made pinion and compared it carefully with the specimen.

"No difference," was his conclusion, "except that ours is still warm...."

The part was measured with the finest precision instruments.

"Nice clean work."

"Bulgarian work!" the commission head remarked proudly.

It was for this work that Ilia Pelov was awarded a Dimitrov Prize, First Class.

"Do you know where I was when I got the news about the award?" Pelov asks. "In Moscow, at the May Day celebrations. Yes, I was there and saw the Soviet wonders with my own eyes. I met Rossiisky, and Chutkikh. What men they are! What strength and persistence! Oh, we have a long way to go yet....

"But we are working and learning as we go. And what we are doing today is genuine Bulgarian work.

"If our Soviet friend Engineer Rybak were to pay us a visit now, I doubt whether he would recognize either us or the works. The plan is constantly being exceeded, although we increase the quotas ourselves all the time. We are stepping right over the old quotas! Our works has already sent five men to the Gabrovo technical college and two to Karlovo. Eleven are taking a preparatory course for the university, and eleven more have gone to Hungary for special study. Yes, our people are growing. We have a factory training school, and advanced training courses besides. New engineers have come to the works, and new suggestions are pouring in all the time to our rationalization commission, of which I am chairman."

Night has long since descended on the valley, but the lights from the plant and the new town around it twinkle so brightly that the stars in the sky seem pale by comparison.

When we took leave of Ilia Pelov, the sky in the east over the famous Shipka Pass was growing lighter. The sun was about to rise. Only under its life-giving rays, I reflected, under the rays of that sun that is coming to us from the East, from the Soviet land, could the talent of a self-taught inventor, the talent of our entire Bulgarian people, blossom out.

Sofia

Glimpses of the New Germany

The following is an interview by our correspondent with members of a large delegation from the German-Soviet Friendship Society which visited the Soviet Union in November. The group consisted of workers, peasants and professional men.

New Masters of the Land

A SMALL BOOK with a cover bearing the black eagle and the title, "The German Reichstag, 1928." In it we find the photographs of moustached Prussians in starched wing collars, in morning coats, in evening dress.... Graf von Eulenburg, Graf von Stolberg-Wernigerode, Freiherr von Hammerstein-Loxten, Freiherr von Richthofen, Rear Admiral Brüninghaus... lawyers, army officers, high-ranking government officials, industrialists. Of the 490 members of the Reichstag, only 27 were workers.

This booklet came to our mind when we met Erich Wirth, a deputy to the recently elected People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic.

A spare man of medium height dressed in a modest suit, Wirth is neither a titled aristocrat nor an industrialist. He is a lathe operator at the Sachsenwerk plant in the small town of Radeberg in Saxony. Erich Wirth is one of the new Germany's prominent people, a "production activist" who has devised new high-speed methods of machining metal.

Our comparison with 1928 is not fortuitous, for it was in that year, when the aristocrats and manufacturers sat in the gloomy building on Berlin's Platz der Republik, that Erich Wirth launched out on his conscious political life, joining the Communist Party of Germany. A worker all his life, Erich Wirth in 1950 is a National Prize winner, one of the most popular people in the republic, a member of the new parliament to which the people sent him as their envoy.

There are scores of workers like Wirth in the parliament of the German Democratic Republic, along with peasants and members of the working intelligentsia. Hundreds and thousands of ordinary workers and peasants, once the slaves of the Flicks and Krupps, are now builders of the new Germany.

"I was quite a good worker before too," Wirth told us. "But why should I have bothered about how much I turned out and what the quality of my output was? What I produced did not belong to me anyway...."

Things are different today. In Radeberg too the workers' life changed radically after the factories and mills passed from the Nazi monopolists' hands into the possession of the people. Wirth showed us an album of photographs of the plant he works in. There were pictures of well-lighted factory departments, a canteen, a club, a children's nursery and a library—all new.

"The workers have come to see the fruit of their labour," Wirth said. "It did not happen all at once, of course, and the new attitude to work did not appear overnight either. Even today there still are quite a few enemies of the new way of things. When I first became a production activist I got unsigned threatening letters on more than one occasion. But we are not the kind to be frightened....

"The experience of Soviet workers has helped us a lot," he went on. "Last April I read in a newspaper about the Moscow lathe operator Pavel Bykov, who had attained high speeds in machining metal. Being a lathe operator myself, I set out to do the same. On April 14 I registered a cutting speed of 783 metres per minute. And on April 22—I chose the occasion in honour of the 80th anniversary of Lenin's birth—I reached a speed of 1,460 metres per minute...."

Wirth's example was caught up by the young workers Piduk and Hoffmann, then by others, and before long Wirth had 36 pupils. The movement for high-speed tooling spread to other plants—in Groditz, Görlitz, Magdeburg—and by November some 800 workers were involved. Besides Wirth, a number of his followers were honoured with this year's National Prize award.

Now Erich Wirth was a member of the German-Soviet Friendship Society delegation. Otto Duwe, one of the republic's best coal miners, was another.

Duwe first went down into the pit when he was 18. That was in the early years of the democratic order in Eastern Germany, so that he already began work under the new conditions.

"Last year I became a production activist," he said, "doing from 200 to 350 per cent of the output quota. Soon I saw that collective work could produce still better results. So we organized a youth team, and it became the best in the pit. Today we have some 15 youth teams and they are working just as efficiently as the old experienced workers."

Active participation by the youth in both economic endeavour and political life is highly characteristic of democratic Germany. Representatives of the younger generation are to be found everywhere—in mass organizations, political parties, and at rallies of leading workers.

Village in Saxony

Dittersbach is a small village of 70 households in the foothills of the Erzgebirge not far from Chemnitz. Once it was the bailiwick of a manufacturer called Major Reuter, who owned two estates totalling 400 hectares of land. The entire population of the village, with the exception of a few kulak moneybags, was under his thumb. Scores of labourers toiled on Reuter's fields, and among them the Szymczak family. Between them they used to make 12 marks a week for a family of six. One of the boys, 14-year-old Czeslaus, became a milker on Herr Reuter's dairy farm.

"If things had gone on in the old way, I suppose I would have drudged all my life like my father and his father before him," Czeslaus Szymczak told us. "But everything is different now."

When he returned to his village, an ex-soldier of 24, the Nazi order had come to an end. Reuter's land was distributed among the peasants, and Szymczak too received a plot. He was one of 10 Dittersbach villagers who got completely new allotments—"new settlers," as they are called. Fifty others had land added to the strips they owned before. Today Szymczak, who once had nothing to his name, farms nine hectares of land and has four cows, six hogs and a yard full of poultry.

Szymczak's life is not the only one that has changed.

There are no more downtrodden farm hands in Dittersbach. Those of the peasants who do not farm on their own but work for the more prosperous have an eight-hour working day guaranteed by law. The law compels the employers to provide decent housing for their workers, set aside garden allotments for them and give them annual holidays.

A new school is being built now in Dittersbach. An athletic field has been laid out, and a summer camp organized for the schoolchildren. There is a class for the study of Michurin and Lysenko farming methods.

The village is represented in the Kreistag (regional parliament). It now has 80 members of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany, and everybody in it has joined the Peasants' Mutual Aid Committee.

The local chapter of the German-Soviet Friendship Society has 40 members.

"More are sure to join when I get back," Szymczak said.

In 1948 an institution the like of which the German countryside had never seen before—a machine-hiring depot—was set up a few miles from Dittersbach, with branches in the surrounding villages of Frankenberg, Mennberg and Grünberg. Each branch has five tractors and all kinds of other equipment. The depot is a tremendous help to the peasant tillers.

"You see, we still have a few large holdings of over 50 hectares in Dittersbach," Szymczak remarked. "And you know how the moneybags always try to get poorer folk into their clutches. They were all set and waiting for the new settlers to come to them for help. But instead, we got real, unselfish help from the workers."

The publicly-owned estates supply the peasants with good seed, and professors of agronomy Ahland and Blache come over regularly from Leipzig.

Such is life these days in a small village in Saxony.

Five-Year Plan

The five-year plan is the keynote of the whole life of present-day democratic Germany. Under this plan, industrial output will be doubled, 26.89 billion marks will be invested in construction, and agricultural production will exceed the prewar level. Crop yields are to rise by 25 per cent over 1950, the national income is to increase by 60 per cent and wages by 16.8 per cent, while food prices are to be reduced by at least 28 per cent.

For our German visitors the five-year plan is also their own plan of action.

"Our plant was built under the two-year plan," said Herbert Greif, director of a new steel mill in Brandenburg, "but it will be completely finished only during the five-year plan period. All ten open-hearth furnaces will be put into operation, and we are going to add several rolling mills and a new foundry department. The number of workers employed will increase sixfold in the five years, and output will go up a great deal. There will also be many new facilities for our workers: a Palace of Culture, a stadium, a dispensary, thousands of square metres of new housing floor space, and a rest home.

"All wrecked buildings in Brandenburg will be completely restored during these five years," Greif continued. "A central city Palace of Culture will be built, also a new town hall. Parks and gardens will be laid out in all parts of the city. And a new plant to produce sectional steel will be set up...."

Hero of Labour Gustav Köhler, an engineer, has worked for 32 years at an iron and steel mill in Riesa.

"Our plant is going to double its output during these five years," he said. "We shall build new blocks and production units. Instead of a small club we shall have a large Palace of Culture, and we're going to lay out some more sports grounds. New dwelling houses will be built as well."

"Let me tell you about the health services," said Physician of Merit Dr. Reinhold Schwarzlose. "Twelve out-patient clinics, 4 polyclinics, and 2 hospitals are to be opened next year in the Land of Brandenburg, and in the five years the number of doctors will be doubled...."

Dr. Joseph Naas, the eminent scientist and director of the German Academy of Sciences, pointed out that the plan embraces not only construction but scientific research too. "In our days upright scientists cannot remain aloof from the common cause of the people," he observed.

"Our Academy is developing into a large scientific centre," Dr. Naas continued. "It already has 43 institutes, commissions and laboratories. And we too have drawn up our five-year plan, for which the state is allocating 52 million marks. For the sake of comparison let me mention that in 1949 the sum was five million. Our plan pursues two main aims. Firstly, we must render direct assistance to the republic in the solution of economic problems. A number of specialized institutes have been established with this in view. The artificial fibre institute assists our textile industry, and the institute of inorganic chemistry is working on problems vital to the chemical industry. Our agronomists, headed by Academician Mitscherlich, are searching for ways of increasing grain yields. Our second task is to promote scientific research activity in general and to train personnel. The number of research workers is to increase substantially by 1955. For instance, the Academy staff is to grow from 1,125 to 3,900."

And Willi Stoph, a member of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party, seemed to be summing up everything that had been said about the five-year plan when he declared:

"For us the five-year plan is not just a plan of economic development. It is the law of the republic's development as a whole, it's our program of action. By carrying it out, we shall be strengthening the cause of democracy and peace."

For Peace and Unity!

Just as the delegation returned from Leningrad to Moscow, the press carried the following dispatch from Berlin:

> "The workers and office personnel of the Brandenburg steel mill have decided to work an extra shift in honour of the coming World Peace Congress and to donate their earnings for the shift to the Peace Fund."

Herbert Greif beamed with pride.

The struggle for peace is inseparably bound up with the building of a democratic Germany. Speaking of the recent elections, Professor Naas said:

"The success of the National Front of Democratic Germany was due in large measure to the fact that we were able to bring home to the voter the basic truth that a vote for the National Front was a vote for peace."

The victory at the polls on October 15 has been a great source of inspiration for the republic's citizens. But none of them forgets for a moment that only in the eastern part of the country are people free to work for peace. In the West the American occupation authorities and their German henchmen persecute every honest champion of peace.

We were told something about this by Professor Robert Havemann, scientist and chairman of the Greater Berlin Peace Committee, who himself fell victim last July to the police terror rampant in Western Berlin.

"What happened was this," Prof. Havemann said. "On July 18 over 10,000 partisans of peace went out into the streets of Western Berlin to collect signatures to the Stockholm Appeal. Among them there were students, scientists, lawyers. My section was in Neukölln, in the American sector. At half past five in the afternoon two law students and myself began collecting signatures on Hermannplatz, and at once we were surrounded by an eager and sympathetic audience. But in less than 10 minutes two police trucks rolled up, the policemen piled out, fell upon our hearers to disperse them, and arrested my fellow signature-collectors.

"'You have no right to arrest them,' I protested. 'They are fighting for peace and that is something every man has a right to do.' At this point a man darted out of the crowd and whispered something to one of the police. A moment later my arms were being twisted and handcuffs clapped on my wrists.... But even then we continued to voice our protest. All the way to the police station we were followed by a large crowd. The next day we were taken from the local police station to the West-Berlin police headquarters in Friesenstrasse, from there to prison, and in the evening for trial in Moabit. All told, 1,600 peace supporters were arrested that day.

"Nearly seven years have passed since the day—December 16, 1943—when I was brought before 'Mad Roland,' the Nazi judge Roland Freisler, who sentenced me to death for anti-fascist activity," Prof. Havemann recalled. "Now I stood before a West-Berlin, that is, American, judge."

A shameful farce followed. The judge declared that the court would sit behind closed doors as Havemann would not be tried, but "only questioned." On this pretext the defence and the public were removed from the courtroom.

"The questioning did not last long," the professor went on. "I was released, but that was only because of the pressure of public opinion, which was roused by the arrest of the peace partisans. As it happened, however, 12 days later I found myself in Moabit again, this time charged with having had an illegal 'assembly' in my own garden!

"Such are the conditions in which the fight goes on in the West," Prof. Havemann concluded. "Regular fascist methods prevail there. I might just observe that the American gentry are working faster than their Hitlerite predecessors. Under Hitler I was dismissed from the Kaiser-Wilhelm-Institut in 1933, but I was arrested only in 1943. This time the Americans dismissed me from the same institute in April 1950 and arrested me the following July...."

Bitter irony indeed! But while the American and German reactionaries are making great haste to impose a new fascism on the German people, the peace movement is growing even faster.

This autumn a conference of women peace partisans was called in Munich. Travelling funds were collected all over Western Germany, and more than 1,000 delegates arrived. Then, twelve hours before the conference was due to open, a police ban was imposed. The conference was held nevertheless, illegally, in three different premises, but with great success for all that. And the West-German Peace Fighters' Committee, headed by Dr. Hatzfeld, the writer, has collected two and a half million signatures to the Stockholm Appeal, although the Bonn authorities persecute every person who gives his signature.

"As for our impressions of the Soviet Union," the delegates declared, "the most important thing is that time and again we have seen for ourselves the Soviet people's determination to uphold peace."

"The friendship of the peoples of the Soviet Union and Germany will ensure peace in Europe"—this idea was to be found running all through the German visitors' statements. The German-Soviet Friendship Society functions in both Eastern and Western Germany. It has a membership of 1,400,000 and continues to grow rapidly.

"We are learning from the Soviet people how to build the new life," Herr Friedrich Ebert, President of the Society, said. "We are learning from them how to create a new, anti-fascist and democratic order and to safeguard it from the machinations of the imperialists. We know that it is not enough to want peace, that peace must be fought for and won. We shall fight for Germany's unity, which is the foundation of lasting peace in Europe. We shall fight for our friendship with the Soviet Union—that shall be our contribution to the cause of peace!"

Suicide Club

B. IZAKOV

SOMEWHERE in the beginning of his latest book* John Foster Dulles recalls that, as a boy, he was fond of reading Robert Louis Stevenson's story "The Suicide Club." The club members were dealt cards every Saturday night and the one who drew the ace of clubs had to kill within twenty-four hours the one who drew the ace of spades.

And Dulles, the man behind the foreign policies of the United States government, follows this up with a burst of frankness: "Today we are all, in a sense, members of a suicide club."

Right enough, as far as Dulles himself and his associates are concerned. The Wall Street bosses and their servants in Washington are pursuing a policy that does indeed stamp them as members of a suicide club. And if fresh proof of that were needed, the program Dulles outlines in his book provides it.

Though written in the usual vaunting style of the political adventurers of present-day America, the book breathes a sense of doom. Dulles is filled with fear and rage as he sees the ground slipping from under the system to the upper crust of whose leaders he belongs. Every now and again an hysterical note creeps into his writing.

> "Something has gone wrong with our nation," he says, "or we should not be in our present plight and mood.... What we lack is a righteous and dynamic faith. Without it, all else avails us little. The lack cannot be compensated for by politicians, however able; or by diplomats, however astute; or by scientists, however inventive; or by bombs, however powerful.
> "At home, our institutions do not attract the spiritual loyalties needed for their defence.... Abroad, our foreign policies can be implemented only by money and goods. These are limited; and because they are limited our policies are limited. Limited policies inevitably are defensive policies, and defensive policies inevitably are losing policies."

For all this, Dulles refuses to recognize that the capitalist system is unsound and rotten. All the ills that beset this system, with which the interests of his pocket and the inclinations of his heart are intertwined, he blames on people, on the common man.

> "There is confusion in men's minds and a corrosion of their souls," he exclaims irefully, and adds: "No Federal Bureau of Investigation, however efficient, can protect us under those circumstances."

Dulles is compelled to note the undeniable victories of the camp of peace and democracy. He reluctantly admits that Communism has "a creed of world-wide import," "a powerful grip on millions of people throughout the world," "a universal appeal." He speaks of the immense power of attraction exercised by the Stalin Constitution of the U.S.S.R., which guarantees the inalienable rights of man.

> "There has been a very definite shift in the balance of power in the world, and that shift has been in favour of Communism," he says with a mournful sigh.

He makes the following computation: the United States and the countries linked with it

* John Foster Dulles, "War or Peace," New York, 1950.

by the North-Atlantic pact and by the "Truman doctrine" has a total population of more than 350 million; the population of the further area in the Americas linked with the U.S. by the Rio de Janeiro pact aggregates about 100 million; on the other hand, the Soviet Union, the East European People's Democracies and the Chinese People's Republic have a total population of 700 million (here Dulles is a little out in his reckoning, he should add at least another 100 million); the other countries of the world have an aggregate population of about 1,000 million.

From this, the adviser of the U.S. State Department comes to the disconsolate conclusion:

> "While our influence and security have been declining, those of the Soviet Union have been rising."

What makes the strongest impression on Dulles' atom-ridden mentality is the fact that the Soviet Union has mastered the production of atomic energy. His reflections on this subject are highly characteristic:

> "The development of atomic weapons by the Soviet Union must go down in the ledger as a great success. The Soviet Union, by quickly bringing our monopoly to an end, radically altered the strategic situation to its own advantage.... Perhaps the position is more than neutralized, for our economy may be more vulnerable than that of the Soviet Union to atomic attack."

Dulles tells us that as late as the spring of 1949 "top official experts" in Washington were convinced that it would be five years or more before the Soviet Union would be able to make atomic bombs. And he admits that there has been a "dangerous tendency" in U.S. ruling circles to underestimate the Soviet Union. (Incidentally, a similar "tendency" was rife among the top Nazi leaders in Hitler Germany.) The conclusion he draws from these atomic reflections is:

> "The ending of the United States monopoly in this field will have widespread repercussions which cannot yet be fully foreseen."

John Foster Dulles may not have wanted it, but a fact that stands out very clearly from his book is that the camp of democracy, progress and peace, headed by the Soviet Union, is already at this stage immeasurably stronger than the camp of reaction and war, led by the American monopolists.

When American propaganda starts talking about the enhanced strength of the Soviet Union, it is usually in order to frighten the Americans with the bogey of a Soviet armed attack. But this is not the case with the present book, which the State Department's adviser has written for a "select public." This is a fact worth noting. He says quite distinctly that the Soviet Union has no intention of attacking America.

"It is by no means certain," Dulles says, that the Soviet Government "plan a fighting war." The Communist Party of the Soviet Union

> "talks about the Soviet military establishment as being designed to defend the Soviet Union.... Communist doctrine does not emphasize conquest by military invasion....
> "Most well-qualified persons are inclined to feel that there is no imminent danger of the Red Army's being marched out of Russia against Western Europe or Asia in a war of aggression."

More, Dulles has to admit that, because of the policy it consistently follows, the Soviet Union "appears as the advocate of peace" in the eyes of the general public, and that "even in the United States there are important groups" which accept this view.

All this is said in a book that is full of scurrilous abuse and vilification of the Soviet Union. It appears that America's rulers know quite well that their country has no reason to fear a Soviet attack.

Well, then, what could be better? Since the mighty Soviet Union is not menacing the United States, why shouldn't the United States calmly go about reducing armaments and promoting international co-operation? So one would naturally think. But not so Dulles. He does not like the Soviet Union's peaceful policy at all, because it upsets the game of the American warmongers. This member of the Wall Street suicide club, while admitting that the United States is not threatened by "Soviet aggression," delivers himself of the following significant remark:

> "Therefore, a policy which, at best, merely counters direct aggression is bound to be inadequate."

And here Dulles lets the reader into a startling discovery: besides direct aggression, there is "indirect aggression." Under this heading he includes such things as strikes in capitalist countries, victories of progressive elements in parliamentary elections, numerical growth of Communist Parties—in a word, every success of the democratic camp and every defeat of the international monopolies. If Dulles' definition is accepted, then any repulse received by the monopolists in any country can be dubbed "indirect aggression" and can furnish the U.S. State Department with an excuse for starting war.

One can easily imagine where this line may lead if carried to its logical conclusion. The American warmongers may, if the fit takes them, proclaim even an economic crisis in the United States to be "indirect aggression"!

To confuse the meaning of the term "aggression" and to give currency to the concept "indirect aggression" as an excuse for starting war, is, indeed, the chief purpose of Dulles' book. Its appearance emphasizes the timeliness of the statement made by the Second World Peace Congress in its Address to the United Nations: "We consider it necessary to denounce the attempts made by the aggressors to confuse the very concept of what constitutes aggression and, in this way, to provide a pretext for foreign intervention in the internal affairs of other countries."

Why Dulles has to confuse the meaning of the concept "aggression" is clear: read his book, and the aggressive intent of the Dollar Empire's foreign policy becomes as plain as a pikestaff.

Dulles says, and we can see him licking his chops as he does so, that the United States is "maintaining a great military establishment" and "pushing the accumulation of atom bombs" and that it has "decided to go ahead with the manufacture of hydrogen bombs."

And while the peoples of the world are imperatively demanding the prohibition of the atomic bomb, John Foster Dulles goes all out to justify its employment. His disgusting arguments fully bear out the reputation he has already earned as a warmonger and an enemy of mankind.

> "We should all feel relief," he says, "if methods of mass destruction were abolished. But that would not mean 'peace.' It might mean that we should die a little later rather than a little sooner; it might mean that we should die slowly rather than quickly."

But the people do not want to die; they want to live, and that is why they attach such paramount importance to outlawing the atomic weapon. And their unanimous insistence will get it outlawed.

Dulles gives the line of casuistic argument to justify and keep alive the war hysteria that is so assiduously worked up by America's rulers:

> "If at any time in the near future it seems that the danger of war has passed, that will be a period of greatest peril. Then we may be tempted to relax and get careless and disarm, materially and morally. By so doing, we should expose ourselves to a sudden attack, which is most likely to come at such a time."

Here Dulles is on his old tack. It was he, you will remember, that said, after the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in Paris in the spring of 1949, that the American people should be "artificially kept alarmed."

And well he might. The war hysteria and the United States' frantic rearmament are a source of fat dividends to John Foster Dulles. Adviser to the State Department, he is also a director of the International Nickel Company, the Bank of New York, and a number of other banks and industrial corporations. His industrial interests are linked with the production of war materials—nickel, gunpowder, dynamite. He is also the senior partner in Sullivan and Cromwell, which the American reference books describe as "the richest and most powerful law firm in New York." The firm specializes in shady international affairs, in kindling and fanning war.

With all the profits he skims from America's war preparations, small wonder that Dulles wants the U.S. government to pursue an even more aggressive policy, to perfect the tactics and technique of the cold war, to extend its subversive activities against the Soviet Union, the East European People's Democracies and the Chinese People's Republic.

Outlining the objectives of American imperialism in Europe, Dulles is annoyed that Western Europe is "subdivided" into different countries, each with its own frontiers, its own currency, its own tariffs, and—oh, horror!—its own "national practices." He cannot stand the thought that in Western Europe—which he contemptuously refers to as a "vacuum" and a "poorhouse"—"the tradition of national independence has become so deeply rooted." All these are handicaps to the unification of Western Europe and its conversion into a "formidable and effective" military system, or, more plainly, into an American war camp. An indispensable requisite for a "united Europe," in Dulles' opinion, is the revival of militarism in Western Germany.

But what is to be done if the peoples of Western Europe obstinately cling to their pernicious (so Dulles thinks) "tradition of national independence" and refuse to "unite" under the sceptre of dollar imperialism? Dulles has the answer ready: The United States must exert "friendly but firm pressure" and pay no attention if any of the rulers of these countries should "protest." For, as he cynically remarks,

> "it is not the first time that politicians protest publicly against what they advocate privately.... We cannot at this grave juncture stand on ceremony."

Just imagine the spectacle, the unique spectacle!—the American imperialists herding their West-European satellites into the common fold of a "united Europe," the latter shying and backing, and Dulles explaining that this is "not part of any imperialist design," but only a "matter of enlightened self-interest" on the part of the United States.

> "We have not only the moral right, we have not only the experience, we have not only the worthy motive, but also the responsibility," he triumphantly exclaims.

Dulles, out of "enlightened self-interest," taking upon himself the "responsibility" for the future of the European "vacuum" and for the fate of the unhappy wretches who stubbornly cling to their West-European "poorhouse"—is it not charming? But it is doubtful whether such a prospect will have any appeal for the peoples of Western Europe.

Dulles also recommends the American imperialists to "build a totally new policy towards Asia." A prominent feature of this "new policy" must be more vigorous intervention in Viet-Nam, and Japan must be assigned in Asia a similar role to that mapped out for Western Germany in a "united Europe."

It should be noted that Dulles wrote his book before the American aggression in Korea. It is to be presumed that his "new policy towards Asia" also provided for starting war there. At any rate, in speaking of the fact that at the time of writing peace reigned in the Korean peninsula, he lets fall the remark:

> "It would, of course, be rash to predict that this situation will continue indefinitely."

A very meaningful remark, bearing in mind Dulles' subsequent visit to Korea and all that has happened since!

Such is the program for kindling general war in Europe and Asia which John Foster Dulles expounds in his book.

He sets no little store on the United Nations as a means of furthering this policy. When the peoples founded this organization after the second world war, they intended it to be an international agency for the maintenance of peace and security. But the American imperialists decided to turn the United Nations into an instrument of their policy. Dulles makes no bones about it: "The United Nations is a political instrumentality," he says bluntly.

Dulles enumerates a number of "improvements" whose purpose is to make the United Nations completely a tool of American policy. We shall not stop to examine them, but will only say that some of his recommendations anticipated the proposals with which the American delegation appeared at the present session of the General Assembly.

It only remains to observe that Dulles' latest work is generously larded with foul calumnies against the Soviet Union and the entire great camp of peace and democracy. He mercilessly garbles postwar history, unceremoniously distorts events and facts, and blasphemously juggles with the words "peace," "freedom," "democracy" and the like. And he spares no colour to paint capitalist realities in the brightest hue.

In the concluding pages of his book, Dulles recommends America's leaders to find a "message" that would win them the following of the peoples. But what hope can warmongers and enemies of mankind have of finding such a message? None whatever. Dulles himself has an uncomfortable feeling that this is so. He says:

> "Our postwar effort in the West is not an effort to win a popularity contest. Popularity, even if we could buy it, is not worth $20,000,000,000. Also, we are not popular now."

"Not popular"!—that is really putting it mildly.

The peoples are turning away with disgust from the American warmongers. And the dollars squandered by the American monopolies on their lying propaganda cannot alter the situation.

"War or Peace" is the name of Dulles' book. A more accurate title would have been "War, Not Peace." For that, in a nutshell, is the lengthy program so cynically and nakedly expounded in it. It is the program of the Wall Street suicide club, of a handful of greed-crazed monopolists.

But mankind will have no truck with these suicides. The fruitful work of the Second World Peace Congress has forcefully proved that mankind is rising in its might to save all that homicidal maniacs like Dulles and MacArthur are threatening with destruction in a new war.

ASSISES NATIONALES DE LA PAIX A BRUXELLES

NOUS publions en première page de ce numéro spécial l'appel lancé par l'Union Belge pour la Défense de la Paix, invitant tous les citoyens de notre pays à se rencontrer en un large rassemblement, les 2 et 3 octobre prochain à Bruxelles. Il est indispensable d'indiquer dès à présent que l'U.B.D.P. ne prétend nullement conserver le monopole d'une telle rencontre. Bien au contraire, nous espérons que la préparation de ces Assises ainsi que les Assises elles-mêmes se dérouleront sous les auspices les plus larges et les plus divers. La liberté de parole y sera la plus complète. L'ordre des travaux sera déterminé par les participants eux-mêmes. A nos amis, à nos sympathisants, à nos militants, nous demandons d'œuvrer au succès de cette entreprise en sollicitant leur entourage, leurs organisations pour que, développant l'appel de l'U.B.D.P., ils manifestent leur position et leurs propositions pour assurer la sécurité de notre pays.

Aujourd'hui, à la veille d'une solution de paix en Indochine, obtenue grâce à la négociation directe, d'autres questions restent pendantes, qui peuvent faire l'objet d'une discussion, les 2 et 3 octobre, et notamment : la C.E.D. et la sécurité de la Belgique ; le danger des expériences thermo-nucléaires ; les armes atomiques ; le désarmement ; l'admission de la Chine Populaire à l'O.N.U.; la libération complète des échanges Est-Ouest.

Les Assises Nationales de la Paix peuvent être l'occasion d'une confrontation fructueuse ainsi que l'affirmation de la volonté de négociation et de coexistence de notre peuple.

Nous pouvons assurer leur succès par une vaste campagne populaire.

Il n'est pas trop tôt pour commencer à retenir les autocars et à préparer les cagnottes !

L'ALLEMAGNE ET LA SECURITE EUROPEENNE

A L'INITIATIVE du Comité belge pour la Solution pacifique du problème allemand, s'est tenue à Bruxelles, le 27 juin passé, une large réunion ayant pour thème le problème de la sécurité européenne. Après un rapport fouillé de Maurice Grosjean, une discussion s'entama, à l'issue de laquelle la résolution suivante fut adoptée :

CHACUN se réjouit aujourd'hui d'assister à une certaine détente internationale. Dans cette atmosphère nouvelle, qui s'est manifestée particulièrement en France, il apparaît davantage que la C.E.D. irait à l'encontre de toute entente internationale.

Cependant, l'on parle de « solutions de rechange » qui permettraient, sous une autre forme, un réarmement de l'Allemagne et son intégration dans un bloc militaire. Ceci comporte un grave danger.

Une solution acceptable pour tous consisterait dans la réunification d'une Allemagne démocratique et pacifique, obtenue grâce à un accord entre les Quatre.

Cet accord serait facilité et trouverait ses garanties dans le cadre d'une organisation européenne de sécurité collective. Un tel système, englobant tous les Etats, quel que soit leur régime, garantirait le respect des frontières et le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Il nous permettrait d'échapper à la division de l'Europe et du monde en deux blocs hostiles et préparerait le terrain à un désarmement progressif.

D'autre part, la poursuite d'une politique de réarmement, comportant la remilitarisation de l'Allemagne, compromettrait le programme de développement économique et social que s'est assigné notre gouvernement.

Nous appelons donc celui-ci à s'associer à une politique de détente pour la réalisation de la sécurité collective en Europe.

GUATEMALA

A l'annonce des événements du Guatémala, l'U.B.D.P. adopta la résolution suivante :

Vivement ému par la non-application de la résolution prise au Conseil de Sécurité de l'O.N.U. demandant le cessez le feu au Guatémala, le Comité Exécutif de l'Union Belge pour la Défense de la Paix, réuni le 29 juin 1954, demande que toutes mesures pratiques soient prises à cet effet et que les représentants belges à l'O.N.U. interviennent dans ce sens.

Indigné par les bombardements des populations civiles, le Comité Exécutif demande aux Belges de se joindre à tous ceux qui condamnent l'agression dont est victime le peuple guatémaltèque.

NUMERO SPECIAL

1944 — Libération de la BELGIQUE

1954 — Réarmement de l'ALLEMAGNE

Nous fêterons bientôt le dixième anniversaire de la libération de notre pays. La Paix n'est pas encore signée et le réarmement de l'Allemagne inquiète à nouveau la Belgique.

Cette menace paraissait écartée pour longtemps après la mise en déroute des hitlériens, grâce à l'union des Grandes Puissances.

Mais, depuis, la renaissance d'antagonismes menaçants a rompu leur unité.

La course aux armements a provoqué un climat d'inquiétude et compromet les économies nationales.

La perspective de l'utilisation des armes atomiques effraie la grande majorité des hommes et des femmes qui veulent vivre en paix.

Pourtant des signes récents semblent indiquer une certaine détente internationale par la reprise du dialogue naguère interrompu.

La Belgique a tout à gagner à cette détente. La course aux armements peut être arrêtée et l'économie nationale peut retrouver son équilibre.

Par la solution pacifique du problème allemand, la sécurité de la Belgique peut être assurée.

L'utilisation pacifique de l'uranium du Congo belge doit pouvoir ouvrir d'immenses perspectives de progrès.

La reprise des échanges Est-Ouest donne et donnera du travail à nos industries frappées par le chômage.

Ces solutions simples, claires et réalisables, expriment certainement les vues de la majorité des Belges. Encore faut-il que l'opinion publique les exprime.

Nous croyons qu'une large confrontation des opinions peut contribuer à les faire prévaloir.

A tous nos concitoyens, nous proposons de se rencontrer, de discuter et de désigner leurs délégués à un large rassemblement.

Faites-vous représenter individuellement ou par le truchement de vos organisations patriotiques, pacifiques, syndicales, confessionnelles ou culturelles, aux Assises Nationales de la Paix, qui se tiendront à Bruxelles les 2 et 3 octobre 1954.

Elles aideront tous ceux qui aspirent à voir la détente internationale s'accentuer, tous ceux qui redoutent le réarmement allemand, tous ceux qui se soucient de notre sécurité et de notre prospérité, à trouver ensemble des solutions nationales et à les exprimer, pour qu'elles se traduisent dans les actes internationaux de notre pays.

Demand Grows for East-West Trade; Key to Jobs, Peace

Re-establishment of normal trade between the United States and the Socialist countries is the key to:

Putting many of the over four million unemployed American workers back to work.

Solidifying the possibilities of world peace by lessening tensions and liquidating the cold war.

Spreading world understanding and goodwill by mutual efforts in satisfying the needs of each other.

Although far apart on other issues, prominent American businessmen and union officials appear to see eye to eye on these objectives.

Capital and Labor

Representatives of both capital and labor are independently urging the Government to lift present embargoes and encourage trade with the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China and the Eastern European countries.

Alarmed by the worsening recession and growing unemployment, which the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union puts at over four million, they zealously eye the eight hundred million people of the Socialist countries—one-third of the human race—and its great market.

Would End Unemployment.

They maintain that only an expanded world trade supplying some of the non-military needs of the people in the Socialist countries could check our recession and put many of our unemployed back to work.

There is also a strong feeling that while we are restraining trade with these countries some of our western allies are taking advantage of this situa- [illegible]

BUILD PEACE THRU TRADE

"There is no broader highway to peace than the resumption of trade everywhere," declared Warren Lee Pierson, Trans-World Airlines board chairman.

Speaking before the Economic Club of Detroit recently, Mr. Pierson, who also heads the U.S. Council of the International Chamber of Commerce, asserted:

"There can be no hope of breaking off the cold war unless there is some gradual resumption of trade. . . . The sooner we ease the tensions, the brighter are the hopes of avoiding a shooting war and it is my belief that trade is one of those steps.

"The history of embargoes isn't very good so far as avoidance of war is concerned."

Democrats Urged To Support Peace

Grass roots Democrats were urged to support any measure or policy that they think will lead to peace. The recommendation was heard by 1,000 active club Democrats attending a two-day conference at Pacific Palisades in December.

The conference, which held 22 panels on different subjects, attacked McCarthyism and expressed a willingness to fight it, but wasn't sure how it could be done most effectively.

Dr. Robert B. Pettingill, University of Southern California professor, addressing the foreign policy panel, declared that "peace, prosperity and the happiness of the entire world" should be and was "of most concern to people today."

The greatest applause of the conference was given to Mrs. India Edwards, vice-chairman of the Democratic national committee, when she appealed strongly for peace.

"Peace is possible," she said. "An armament race can lead only to war. We must use atomic energy for healing, constructive purposes, not for destruction, if we are to survive."

Mrs Edwards urged her fellow Democrats to take the lead in the field of disarmament and suggested that they come up with concrete proposals towards this end. She also recommended support for President Eisenhower's atomic energy proposal to the United Nations, which she saw as a peace move.

"Even if it is a Republican President who makes a peace proposal, for God's sake let's get in back of him and do something!" she said. "Something so that we won't be [illegible]

Peace Balloting Begins

BALLOT used in APC National Referendum.

On February 5, at a Roosevelt birthday meeting addressed by Dr. Royal W. France, civil liberties attorney, and Thomas Richardson, American Peace Crusade National Co-Director, the New York Peace Council of the APC launched its ballot campaign for world peace through negotiations, as part of the National Peace Referendum initiated by the National Committee of the APC last November.

The objectives of the campaign are to influence the U.S. government toward a policy of give-and-take negotiations for the settlement of the international disputes; to stimulate public peace discussion and action; and to strengthen the local, borough and city-wide councils associated with the APC.

The long-range character of the campaign is being stressed. Canvassing teams are being formed by local peace groups. In some areas, persons at any time associated in peace work are the first to be visited with the Peace Ballot and the PEACE REPORTER in order to win them back into peace activity.

Would End Unemployment.

They maintain that only an expanded world trade supplying some of the non-military needs of the people in the Socialist countries could check our recession and put many of our unemployed back to work.

There is also a strong feeling that while we are restraining trade with these countries some of our western allies are taking advantage of this situation to obtain a solid hold on trade with the Socialist countries.

To substantiate their fears asserted:

"There can be no hope of breaking off the cold war unless there is some gradual resumption of trade. . . . The sooner we ease the tensions, the brighter are the hopes of avoiding a shooting war and it is my belief that trade is one of those steps.

"The history of embargoes isn't very good so far as avoidance of war is concerned."

The Shipper, trade journal of the Pacific coast shippers, said in a recent issue:

"The time has come, we think, to face up to the fact that the sensible rather than the expedient or popular course

Justice Douglas:

Bill of Rights Needed for Peace

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, speaking to a meeting of Quakers recently, said:

"Only tolerance for a host of unorthodox creeds will give us wisdom to solve the political problem on which the chances of peace turn.

"This problem of foreign policy therefore starts at home with our Bill of Rights.

"The decline in our prestige abroad can indeed be correlated to the disrespect we have shown the rights of man here at home.

"We cannot blanket this country with fear and suspicion and at the same time be tolerant abroad.

"We have frightened people here at home so that they fear the unorthodox idea."

Pacifists Meet In Detroit

A Conference on the Church and Peace, arranged by the Church Peace Mission last December in Detroit, was attended by 362 persons from 18 Protestant denominations and 27 states.

Conference discussion panels were divided into three areas: The Contemporary World; The Basis of Christian Pacifism; and Positive Action for Peace.

The Conference recommendations on Local Community Action stressed the importance of fixing "criteria for judging the success of your programs and your total effort" for peace. It was urged that a main standard for judging success be the degree to which new people become involved in peace work.

This would require "thinking through and developing specific projects and materials enabling people on all levels of commitment to begin useful work where they are in their present thinking."

Conference proposals for study and action recommended strengthening the United Nations by making it all-inclusive; universal and complete disarmament and use of atomic energy only for peaceful purposes; planning for a transfer from a war to peace economy in the field of disarmament and suggested that they come up with concrete proposals towards this end. She also recommended support for President Eisenhower's atomic energy proposal to the United Nations, which she saw as a peace move.

"Even if it is a Republican President who makes a peace proposal, for God's sake let's get in back of him and do something!" she said. "Something so that we won't be destroyed."

BALLOT used in APC National Referendum.

Brotherhood for Peace

By ROBERT MORSS LOVETT

(Mr. Lovett, Professor-Emeritus of Chicago University, has long identified himself with the struggles of oppressed peoples for freedom. In 1919, he was President of Friends of Freedom for India. From 1939 to 1943, he was Government Secretary of the Virgin Islands under the Roosevelt Administration. A sponsor of the American Peace Crusade, he is today active in the work for peace.)

The month of February was Brotherhood Month. February 15th to 21st was Negro History Week.

In connection with these events, it is well to remind ourselves of the great contribution to world peace brought through the struggles of colored peoples for freedom and for full human dignity.

This is a two-fold contribution: firstly, because colored peoples are in the forefront of the battle for peace and secondly, because every victory in winning respect for the rights of peoples to choose their own way of life is a victory for lasting peace since (as the United Nations Charter makes clear) there can be no true peace until such respect is the practice in all international relations.

The peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Negro people of the United States have a passionate desire for peace, stemming not only from a hatred for war which is shared by their white brothers and sisters, but also from a long experience of ruthless oppression. They know that colonialism cannot live without force and violence and has at its heart a drive toward war. They see, therefore, that the greatest victory over their oppressors can be won by blocking the road to war and by ending all force and violence through the unity of all peoples for peace.

It is for this reason that powerful peace movements exist in those lands where the people are fighting for full freedom or to defend their freedom.

The development of those peace movements is welcomed by all lovers of peace, for without the full participation of colored peoples in the work for peace there can be no final victory of peace over war.

In the United States, too, the Negro people are playing an increasingly important role in the work for peace. They have a deep sympathy for oppressed peoples in other lands. They are increasingly alarmed by the attempts (often made possible by U. S. aid to colonial powers) to suppress the struggles for freedom in Africa and Asia. Such suppression violates basic human rights and the promises made to colored people. It also creates situations threatening international peace.

The last National Convention of the Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks of the World included local, borough and city-wide councils associated with the APC.

The long-range character of the campaign is being stressed. Canvassing teams are being formed by local peace groups. In some areas, persons at any time associated in peace work are the first to be visited with the Peace Ballot and the PEACE REPORTER in order to win them back into peace activity.

At the beginning of local balloting, a date is set for a public meeting six or eight weeks in the future at which ballots will be counted and a delegation elected to take the results to the local Congressman. The same procedure would be repeated for the next stage of the balloting. In this way, the referendum will help to assure that the issue of peace through negotiations will be given serious consideration in the 1954 election campaign.

Every effort is being made in the course of the balloting to win persons visited to ongoing participation in the work for peace. Canvassers are soliciting subscriptions to the PEACE REPORTER and FACTS FOR PEACE. They also seek pledges from individuals to be-

Berlin Meeting Arouses Hopes

All over the world support was expressed for the Berlin Foreign Ministers Conference as a step toward peace.

A letter to the Conference from the World Council of Churches on behalf of 170,000,000 Christians welcomed the Conference, and pointed out that "the extent to which there is a commitment to further cooperation will largely determine whether the peoples of the world will regard the prospect of securing peace among nations with or without hope."

2,300 members of Local 347, United Packinghouse Workers, C. I. O., in 36 hours signed a petition to President Eisenhower (also forwarded to Secretary Dulles at Berlin) urging

Make Geneva Meeting a Success

We are all glad that governments are turning to the Conference table, rather than the battle field, to settle their differences. This is the road to lasting peace.

The Berlin Conference was a step along this road. The coming Great Power Conference in Geneva with China can carry us further toward peace.

But we have not yet reached the end of the road.

What is required to achieve peace is not only talks, but agreements between governments on solutions to problems threatening to cause war.

There must be agreements to end the war in Indo-China; to establish peace in Korea; to prevent atomic warfare; to end the arms race; to settle the German problem; to restore international trade and healthy peace economies.

Without such agreements, U.S. troops may become involved in Indo-China; Syngman Rhee may start the war again in Korea; civilization itself may be destroyed in an atomic holocaust; peoples will be bankrupted by war budgets and high taxes to pay the cost of the arms burden; Nazi generals will again have an army for new conquests; unemployment will spread and a depression be hastened.

It is clear that such agreements are in the interests of the American people.

Such agreements are today possible between governments—if there are reason and a sincere desire to end tensions on all sides.

Such agreements will not be possible if a small, but powerful minority in any country is permitted to sabotage reaching agreement between nations on sensible solutions to international problems.

Such a small but powerful minority exists in our country today, led by McCarthy, Knowland, Byrnes and others who seek to dictate terms to other nations rather than to find bases of agreement with other nations to end international tensions.

This minority is already at work to prevent our representatives at the Geneva Great Power Conference from reaching agreement with other nations.

It is necessary, therefore, for the American people to insist that our government make every effort at Geneva to reach agreements for peace in Korea and in Indo-China and for exploring new steps to lessen international tensions.

THE RECORD

(This column reminds you of recent events indicating positive results of world-wide demands for negotiations, and suggesting areas where continuing negotiations for peaceful solutions should be demanded.)

Dec. 8: President Eisenhower tells United Nations our country wants agreements, not wars among nations, proposes talks with Soviet Union on international atomic pool for peaceful uses. The U.S.S.R. agrees (Dec. 21), proposes that an interim pledge not to use atomic, hydrogen and other weapons of mass extermination be considered too.

Dec. 13: Panmunjom talks to arrange Korean peace conference broken off by special U.S. Envoy Arthur H. Dean after North Korean-Chinese charge of U.S. "perfidy" in release of 27,000 POW's last June. Other side immediately requests resumption.

Dec. 29: Ho Chi Minh, President Vietnam Democratic Republic repeats his offer to negotiate an armistice in Indo-China with French Government.

Dec. 29: South Korean President Syngman Rhee repeats threats of forcible unification of Korea and calls for new World War.

Jan. 1: Soviet Premier Malenkov, in New Year greetings to American people, expresses hope of improved American-Soviet relations in 1954.

Jan. 7: President Eisenhower, in State of the Union Message emphasizes "military measures to make . . . peace secure," in-

Demand Grows: Cease-Fire U.S. Keep Out of Indo-China

With Indian Prime Minister Nehru calling for a cease-fire now in Indo-China in view of the Big Five Geneva Conference on April 26, and with such U.S. Senators as George and Russell of Georgia, Sparkman of Alabama, Stennis of Mississippi, and Kennedy of Massachusetts voicing alarm about U.S. involvement in the war, local peace groups are taking action to arouse public expression to officials in Washington to protest U.S. aid and men prolonging hostilities in Indo-China.

In California, Chicago, Connecticut and New York, leaflets have been distributed. In New York, a printed postcard to President Eisenhower is being used.

Leaflets point out: The French and Vietnamese people want the the war ended. U.S. taxpayers' dollars pay two-thirds of the cost of the war and keep it going. Now U.S. lives may be lost since 450 U.S. Air Force men are already performing combat duty in fighting areas (N.Y. Daily News 2/9)

Support for an immediate truce; support for the Big Five Meeting in Geneva; and protests against further U.S. involvement in Indo-China is being aroused across the country to prevent Indo-China from becoming another Korea.

RABBI HAILS NEGOTIATIONS

Rabbi Ira Eisenstein, president of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, in a sermon on January 9 welcomed the initiation of talks between the United States and the Soviet Union in order to explore the peaceful use of atomic energy.

"The question now is in what spirit shall we approach the discussion table," he said. "Shall we acquire the art of compromise and achieve the best that the present situation can provide?"

Pointing out that "there is a vast differenec between appeasement and compromise," the rabbi stated: "In the present crisis in world affairs the factor that may decide whether we shall survive as a human race or wipe ourselves out in universal slaughter will be our ability to master the art of compromise."

He said: "We all pray that both sides will have the patience and the wisdom to recognize that everything depends upon willingness to negotiate.

"The disposition to negotiate, to sit down together and yield on both sides, is, in the ultimate sense, the criterion of a sincere love of peace."

in its resolutions a statement about world peace. The National Baptist Convention reflected growing concern about peace by establishing last year a Commission on International Affairs and a United Nations Commission.

Noted Negro organizations, such as the National Council of Negro Women, took a part in opposing the Bricker Amendment. The African Methodist Episcopal and the A. M. E. Zion Churches have been taking active interest in developments in Africa and in persuading the U. S. Government to put its influence on the side of brotherhood and justice. The Negro press follows the situation in Africa closely and many Negro editors are spokesmen for policies of peace.

Ralph Bunche, Dr. Mordecai Johnson, Mrs. Mary Church Terrill, the late Mrs. Therese Robinson, and other Negro leaders are well-known for their work in the field of international peace.

Throughout the world the names of Dr. W. E. B. DuBois and Paul Robeson are symbols not only of the Negro people's struggle for full equality, but of the efforts of the American people as a whole to win peace.

With the Negro people being so much in the forefront of the work for peace in the United States, it is clear why the American Peace Crusade, which seeks to join all Americans in a common effort for peace, has a noted Negro trade unionist, Mr. Thomas Richardson, as its executive leader and National Co-Director.

Those of us who are white Americans working for peace, welcome the growing contribution of the Negro people to the movement for a peaceful world and a secure America. We welcome every victory of the Negro people against racism and exploitation as a victory for peace over the groups in our country which are ready to use force to obtain their ends.

The true history of the United States reveals that at every critical point in our nation's life, from the time of the American Revolution through the World War against fascism, the Negro people have made vital contributions on the side of justice and humanity. This history tells us how great a contribution the Negro people will make to the work of saving our nation and the world from the disaster of atomic war.

Brotherhood Month and Negro History are occasions to fix these facts in our minds and put them in focus so that they will be a part of our thought and action throughout the year.

Recognition by growing numbers of white Americans of the decisive contribution which the struggles of colored peoples' for human dignity are making to world peace heralds a stronger peace movement in our land. This recognition will facilitate the brotherhood and unity between peoples which is so essential in order to achieve an era of international peace and domestic tranquility.

Jan. 12: Secretary of State Dulles declares "new strategy" of United States is "to depend primarily upon a great capacity to retaliate instantly by means and at places of our own choosing."

Jan. 25: Foreign Ministers of the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain and France meet in Berlin.

Jan. 27: Prime Minister Nehru of India denounces proposed U. S.-Pakistan Pact for military aid to Pakistan as step toward war. India likewise aroused against proposed Turkey-Pakistan military Pact.

Feb. 4: Moscow offer of over a billion dollars worth of contracts to delegation of British businessmen, following offers to buy large quantities U. S. surplus butter and other commodities, highlights immense potentialities of East-West trade.

Feb. 9: Senator Richard D. Russell (D-Ga.), ranking minority member Senate Armed Forces Committee, declaring sending of U. S. Airforce technicians to service U. S. bomber planes in Indo-China a "mistake" that might lead to "piecemeal" U. S. involvement in war, urges early withdrawal.

Feb. 10: Mounting expressions of popular and Congressional alarm over Indo-China situation lead President to declare at his press conference that it would be a tragedy for the United States to get involved in the shooting there.

Feb. 18: Four Power Foreign Ministers Conference in Berlin closes with announcement of 1) agreement on conference in Geneva April 26th of representatives of the Four Powers, the People's Republic of China, North and South Korea and other countries which took part in Korean war, to seek peaceful settlement in Korea and restoring peace to Indo-China; and 2) agreement to exchange views to promote solution of disarmament problem.

It was also announced that there had been a full exchange of views on Germany, European security and Austria, but no agreement had been reached.

Feb. 22: Prime Minister Nehru of India calls for an immediate cease-fire in Indo-China, with each side keeping its present battle positions, stating it would be "a pity" for the fighting to continue when the powers were preparing to discuss Indo-China at the coming Geneva Conference.

March 1st: 10th Inter-American Conference opens in Caracas, Venezuela. Public debate before the Conference reveals that U. From Our Mail

North Branch, Minnesota:

On the basis of conversation with a great many farmers, I would say they are in favor of selling our surplus butter stock. I judge sentiment would run about 5 to 1 for selling to the Soviet Union. However, on general trade they are quite confused.

The Farmer's Union members around here are more definitely for general trade with all so-called Iron Curtain countries, and that is no doubt because they have been informed what it would mean in terms of peace and prosperity for our country.

The conclusion I would draw is that there has to be an intensive campaign of facts relating our peace and prosperity to trade with all countries.

The question most farmers are presently concerned with is staying on the farm. The farmer is experiencing a full blown depression. His economic problems are increasing daily.

The response to the "Peace Reporter" has been very good. I think an important point to stress again and again is the relationship of taxes to the war program.

Are Probes Silencing Youth on Peace Issues?

Rhode Island State Education Commissioner Walsh told a parent-teachers meeting in Newport on February 10th that because of Congressional investigations, some Rhode Island high school students recently refused to answer a questionnaire on Universal Military training lest their answers be used against them in future years.

In reporting this fact to a parent-teachers meeting Walsh said that federal and other inquiries were making a sharp impression on the minds of American youth.

He called the investigations as "perhaps the most serious undermining of American principles in history."

New Home for APC

On January 1st, the American Peace Crusade moved into more spacious quarters at 35 West 26th Street, New York City.

Volunteer workers have transformed a loft into an attractive place, fit not only for APC offices, but also for forums and parties for peace.

The first public function to be held in the new APC home was a house-warming on January 23rd attended by over 100 people.

Peace News Across the Country

NEW YORK CITY

An APC luncheon in honor of Tomoka and Louis Wheaton, who had spent ten months recently in China, was attended by 125 persons December 12.

Mr. Wheaton was Chairman of the U.S. delegation to the Asian and Pacific Region Peace Conference held in Peking in October, 1952.

The Wheatons have spoken to many groups since their return of what they saw in China. As a trade unionist, Mr. Wheaton has been especially interested in the possibilities of trade with China to help prevent unemployment in the U.S.

Seven thousand Christmas cards to President Eisenhower calling for peaceful settlement of differences between nations were sent from New York City.

Two thousand cards to the President in support of negotiations in Berlin, in Korea and on atomic energy were distributed in January.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Northern California Peace Council, recognizing the importance of trade between nations, is sending out a reprint of an article calling for trade with China. (Reviewed in Peace Publications, page 4)

During the holidays, the Alameda-Contra Costa Peace Committee issued 10,000 and collected 3,500 signatures on petitions and cards calling for negotiations. Over 100 sets of silk-screened Chinese paper cuts with messages of friendship were sold; 5,000 Peace and Job matchbooks were sold by Trade Unionists for Peace.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Over the holiday season, the Southern California Peace Crusade mailed 2,800 copies of a special issue of Peace Notes to churches, unions, mass organizations and individuals. One thousand two hundred copies of this photo-offset paper were given to community groups to be distributed by personal contact or through the mails.

Other activities of the Southern California Peace Crusade include distribution of 7,000 greetings cards, urging peaceful negotiations addressed to President Eisenhower. Among the new groups who sent out this card were several churches.

In Pasadena, 10,000 leaflets urging popular activity to insure peace in 1954 were distributed at the New Year's Day Parade.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The third semi-annual Minnesota Women's Peace Conference was attended by women from many parts of the state.

At the direction of the Conference, the Minnesota Women Peace Conference has issued a pamphlet quoting from the broadcast of Colonel Ben. C. Limb, South Korean representative to the U.N., in which he stated clearly South Korea's readiness to start the war again.

The Conference sent a resolution to President Eisenhower urging negotiations, and set up a Continuations Committee, authorized to call women's lobbies for peace whenever necessary, in order to see to it that peace will be an issue in the 1954 elections.

that the Berlin Conference "bring about an end to the cold war and the realization of maximum world-wide trade between nations so as to provide more jobs and peaceful prosperity for the American people."

A letter to President Eisenhower from the American Peace Crusade signed by 60 prominent Americans urged the continuation of the Berlin negotiations "until agreement has been reached on at least some of the issues under dispute" since "if some issues are settled, hope in future meetings will be strengthened."

The letter said that the APC recognizes that "no single government is wholly to blame for past failures or for the present dilemma," but pointed out that "the irreconcilable attitude of certain political leaders who demand all and would concede nothing is not that of the American people."

to take with reference to Red China is to lift our embargo on non-strategic goods and trade with Peiping in all things except military weapons and accessories."

Restore Peacetime Trade

The National Foreign Trade Council favors restoration of trade in peace-time materials with the Soviet Union and the nations friendly to it. At its mid-November convention, the Council adopted a resolution which states, in part:

"In the case of materials and goods which are clearly of a non-strategic nature, the convention believes that the free world is likely, on balance, to experience greater disadvantage than advantage from any attempt to prohibit the shipment of such materials and goods to the Soviet area.

"The restoration of trade patterns where they are feasible and where they have economic validity today, could serve to lessen rather than increase existing tension—both between the free world and the Soviet bloc, and within the free world itself."

Ease Taxpayers' Burden

Resumption of normal trade would ease the American taxpayer's burden, the resolution says. And it warns that while the Government maintains severe trade barriers some of its allies are doing a brisk business with the countries whom we ignore.

Gravely concerned because recessions mean less jobs for its members, the CIO National Maritime Union is calling for trade with the Soviet Union.

The NMU Pilot, official organ of the union, says in its January issue: "This is a trading nation. Under the capitalist system there must be trade. Under the Communist system, too, there is trade. . . .

"The world has long thrived on trade. You take my wares, and I take yours.

Trade's Best

"Trade is the best method the human race ever devised as a means for getting out of a mud hole for a better dry spot."

Noting that our self-imposed trade embargoes against the Soviet Union and its allies are not affective, the NMU Pilot observes:

". . . We do know that many of our Western European allies in one way or another are trading with the Soviet Union.

"And we are about to discover that our allies are hell-bent on taking some of this good, solid American market, right under our noses."

Employment Declining

The decline in employment has been hitting basic industries. General Motors' 28 Chevrolet plants with 63,00 workers were put on a four-day work week. Layoffs and slowdowns were also recorded at the Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp., Nash and Studebaker. Hudson cut its work schedule to three days per week, and announced it would keep closed for one whole week.

Anaconda Copper has cut down its work week at its mines and plants from a six-day to five-day operation, slashing 12 hours of wages per week from its workers. Kennecott, largest non-ferrous metal industry in the country, is also reducing its work week.

Affected by curtailment of operations in the auto and copper industries, thousands of anthracite miners are also being laid off.

In New York alone the clothing industry has over 72,000 persons laid-off; construction trades, 15,893; service trades, 12,502; retail trades, 9,716; knitting, textile mills, 9,266; leather manufacturing, 7,331; electric machine manufacturing, 4,911.

As of Feb. 19, registered unemployed persons in New York City totaled 191,300, an increase of 55% over the figure this time last year. However, this figures does not include all unemployed but only those receiving state unemployment benefits.

Need For Action

The need for positive action to provide jobs for those now without them is quite apparent.

The NMU Pilot warns that if Washington does not act realistically in the face of unemployment, "Our warehouses will bust open for depression buying."

To prevent this from happening, the NMU suggests we "Trade with friends and enemies," meaning trade with the Soviet Union, China and other Eastern countries.

The lack of the Chinese market is being felt particularly hard on our west coast. Before the embargo was levied against China, there was much trade with her of grain, flour, lumber and other products. Today it is non-existent.

China Wishes to Buy

Despite our embargo, China's over-all trade has managed to increase over the previous year. It has expanded with both Communist and non-Communist countries to over 2 billion dollars, according to the N. Y. Times.

Govt. Commision For Trade

Recommendations by the Administration-appointed Randal Commission on U. S. Foreign Economic Policy are that "so far as it can be done without jeopardizing military security, and subject to the embargo on Communist China and North Korea, the United States acquiesce in more trade in peaceful goods between Western Europe and the Soviet bloc."

Despite this recommendation, our Government has recently blocked the sale of 20 million pounds of U. S. butter to the Soviet Union for a reported price of 10 million dollars.

Churchill Favors Soviet Trade

Sir Winston Churchill urged the expansion of British-Soviet trade and patient diplomatic negotiations with the Communist powers.

Addressing the House of Commons recently, the British Prime Minister called for eventual relaxation of the "cold war" embargoes as a means of reaching "a work-a-day" understanding with the Soviet Union.

Although he did not recommend trade with China at this time, Sir Winston indicated that was something Britain hoped might develop out of the conference in Geneva in April where China would be represented.

New Advances By Peace Movement

MIDDLE EAST

A Conference in Defense of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East, held in Beirut December 18th and 19th, adopted a Common Program for Independence and Peace, demanding peaceful solution of international disputes and respect for the sovereignty of peoples.

Among the delegates from 8 countries of the Middle East were former Prime Ministers, former Ministers, Members of Parliament, religious leaders, tribal chiefs, representatives of major political parties, the Moslem Brotherhood and the Peace Movement.

The Common Program denounced military pacts and foreign bases and called for trade and cultural relations with all nations.

CANADA

1,500 delegates at the Congress of Support for Negotiated Peace held in Toronto January 30-31st called on the Parliament and Government of Canada to pledge never to be the first to use atomic weapons and to seek such a pledge from other nations.

The Congress said world peace requires that China be restored her rightful place in the council of nations.

World Meeting Proposed To Ease Tensions

The World Council of Peace, meeting in Vienna from November 23 to 28, adopted a Message to all organizations and notables desiring a relaxation of international tensions.

The Message proposed the "joint preparation for a meeting allowing free exchange of all viewpoints and the study of possible solutions" of urgent world problems.

"An international meeting of this nature, held as soon as possible," the Message said, "would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension."

Among those present were Nobel Prize winner Frederic Joliot-Curie, World Peace Council President; Petro Nenni, Italian political leader; Major-General Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey of India, former Assistant Director of the UN World Health Organization; Pastor Martin Niemoller, of Germany; Baltasar Castro, President of the Chilean Chamber of Deputies; Ilya Ehrenburg, Soviet writer; General Edgard Buxbaum, of Brazil; Mao Dun, Chinese writer; Gabriel D'Aboussier of Senegal, secretary of the African Democratic Assembly.

Great interest in the proposed meeting has been shown by organizations and individuals outside the Peace Movement seeking in their own way the lessening of tensions.

FULL TEXT OF MESSAGE:

The armistice concluded in Korea has given an uneasy world the hope at last of seeing a decrease in tension between the Great Powers. Negotiations which were opened, however, have come up against renewed obstacles.

Agreement is proving difficult on other questions vitally important for the peace of the world.

Nevertheless, the people long for a relaxation of international tension. The economic shackles and political pressures

A Council, representing groups which have worked with the Chicago Peace Crusade was organized in December to give coordinated leadership to the Crusade's work in that city.

Among the groups included in the new body are the South Side Peace Committee, the Jewish People's Peace Committee, two Community Peace Committees on the north side, several nationality groups, and the Chicago Women for Peace.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

On February 3, the Louisville Peace Crusade, reviving its activities, elected new officers and voted to accomplish at least one project for peace each month. For their first project, the members are distributing one thousand peace leaflets at shop gates and factory corners.

Students Vote For Soviet Visit

The Student Council of Swarthmore College submitted to other colleges a proposal that an intercollegiate student delegation tour the Soviet Union this summer.

The Student Council of City College of New York endorsed this proposal and a referendum was held among City College students on this idea.

2,266 students voted in favor of the tour. 723 voted against it.

Since the CCNY members of the intercollegiate delegation would be elected by the students who would have to meet the costs of the trip, students were also asked if they would be willing to help finance the tour.

285 students said they would contribute $1. 455 would contribute 50c. 1,100 would give 25c. 1,210 were not willing to help.

An editorial in the Observation Post pointed out that the Student Council had endorsed the tour "on the ground that it may reduce world tensions and that international student exchange is a good thing in principle."

CHILE

In Santiago de Chile on January 17th, 10,000 people crowded the largest theatre in the capital to hear Senor Baltasar Castro, President of the Chamber of Deputies, give his report on the last session of the World Council of Peace, in Vienna which he attended.

As the third ranking political figure of Chile, Sn. Castro had to have the permission of Parliament, under the Constitution, to leave the country to go to Vienna. Permission had been granted by a unanimous vote.

INDONESIA

The President of Indonesia gave a reception for the delegates to the first Indonesian National Peace Congress held in Djakarta January 25-29th.

The continuations Executive Committee elected by the Congress included the Ministers of Labor, Public Works, Justice and Agriculture, as well as the second Vice-President of the Parliament, many members of Parliament, the Chairman of the Peasants Union, the General-Secretary of the two million strong SOBSI (trade union council), and other public figures.

The Congress denounced the proposed U.S.-Pakistan military pact; called for a Five Power Conference with People's China; opposed the rearming of Japanese militarists; and supported full trade with all countries.

world the hope at last of seeing a decrease in tension between the Great Powers. Negotiations which were opened, however, have come up against renewed obstacles.

Agreement is proving difficult on other questions vitally important for the peace of the world.

Nevertheless, the people long for a relaxation of international tension. The economic shackles and political pressures accompanying this tension are becoming increasingly difficult to bear.

We believe it is possible to rescue the world from this condition.

Today, a wide range of polical and social forces in all countries are working for an improvement in international relations.

New voices among eminent scientific, religious and political authorities are condemning the use of weapons of mass extermination. Public opinion is becoming alarmed at the growing accumulation of armaments of all types.

All people of good sense realise that it is not possible to settle problems of world importance or guarantee fulfillment of any agreement made without the participation of the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Responsible representatives of all political groups in most West European countries have made a public stand against the rebirth of German militarism in any form.

In these conditions, we think an opportunity should be given for all organisations or personalities, who are striving for the relaxation of international tension, to concentrate their efforts on this question. The resolution, passed in Vienna by the World Council of Peace on November 28, 1953, is an expression of our point of view on this matter.

The joint preparation for a meeting allowing the free exchange of all viewpoints and the examination of possible solutions is now necessary.

A meeting of this nature, to be held as soon as possible, would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension.

Supplementary action instruments are also used along with the ballot to enable public reaction to urgent issues arising in the international situation. Thus, a postcard to President Eisenhower urging no U.S. involvement in Indo-China and an end to the war there, as well as a leaflet on the war in Indo-China, are being used at present in the ballot campaign in New York City.

Canvassers report a warm response from the people, whether they are seen at factory gates or in their homes.

Two canvassers in one neighborhood, just to make an experiment, devoted one hour to calling on neighbors who had not been previously seen about peace. They got four subscriptions to the PEACE REPORTER in this time.

Canvassers are finding that the printed Appeal to the People of the United States adopted by the National Committee of the APC and endorsed by many prominent Americans is a useful thing to carry around with them in order to answer questions about the American Peace Crusade. The Appeal shows what is the platform of the APC. The list of endorsers on the Appeal, which includes persons who are Republicans, Democrats, Progressives, etc., and who are prominent in many fields of American life, reveals to what degree the Crusade has been successful in joining together in the work for peace persons of varied background and of different political and religious convictions.

EDITORIAL:

THE GREAT HOPE OF MANKIND

The editor of the world peace review, Horizons, writes from Paris.

By PIERRE COT

MANKIND is entering the atomic age with a feeling of fear and despair. All that has been said about this subject can be summed up in Aesop's adage on language: it is the worst or the best of things, according to the use it is put to. Made good use of, atomic energy can be a powerful and speedy contribution to the liberation of man. In the hands of criminals or madmen it can bring about great suffering and jeopardize the people's march forward towards the future.

Atomic energy puts before our conscience a problem that no one can evade. So that each one of us can give thought to his responsibilities and make up his mind, we asked a number of well-known scientists to outline for us in this issue (and in the next two issues) of our magazine the technical facts of the problem. As a preface to the documentation assembled here, I would like to put a few general observations before the readers of Peace Review.

What if a New Hitler Should Arise?

And first of all, let each one of us weigh up the magnitude of the danger to which we are exposed!

It was not without good grounds that millions of human beings signed the Stockholm Appeal and demanded that atomic weapons should be banned. An atomic war would be thwart with horrors. We may tremble to think what would have become of our civilization if Hitler had had the atom bomb at his disposal: and in the present situation, no one can guarantee that a new Hitler may not arise.

What is more, each year the atomic arsenal is enriched with new inventions and the Hiroshima bomb has now become outdated.

Finally, if atomic war broke out, the belligerants, spurred on by military necessity, would be led to take risks which go beyond any possibility of control. Our world would be thrown into an adventure whose consequences no one can foresee.

For all these reasons, it is not necessary to be a great scholar to agree with Professor E. Burhop "Atomic war will be a war of extermination," or with Frank Beswick: "Over great distances and for the whole of a collective, there is no possible protection against atomic bombing."

It should, however, be pointed out that these technical facts are not, luckily, the only things to be taken into consideration. Human and political factors should also influence out judgment.

Fatalism or Cowardice?

From the magnitude and the imminence of the atomic threat it might be concluded that mankind is doomed to destruction. But the greatest danger in this respect is not the danger of under-estimating the horrors of atomic war. It is the danger that we may give in to fatalism and, as we say, to throw in the sponge.

Those who keep on repeating that the decision to use atomic weapons in no way depends on the peoples but on a group of leaders whose attitude cannot be influenced are giving in to fatalism.

This fatalism has no foundation—or rather, it is based on a resignation which is near to cowardice.

To counteract such an attitude we should note that in the course of his long history man has seen many such things. Since he came out of his rock-caves he has shown himself to be singularly resistant and capable of adaptation. The human race is strong and it clings to life.

Above all, to counteract fatalism, let us remark that the will of the peoples can and should be an obstacle to the development of atomic war.

There Are no Atom Secrets

The anxiety of the peoples and their will to survive can force the governments to give up arms whose effects could be more dangerous for those who use them first than for those who are to be the first victims.

In this respect, the conscience of the peoples is heightening throughout the world as the atomic threat grows. What is happening in the United States bears witness to this evolution. For a long time the ordinary U.S. citizen lived in a dream: he believed in "the secret of the atom-bomb" and in "the monopoly of the atom-bomb."

After this he thought that his country had a sufficient start, both from the quantitative and the qualitative point of view, to make it safe from atomic war.

Today he knows that there is neither an atom-bomb secret nor an atom-bomb monopoly. The best scientists have told him that their Soviet colleagues have, in any case, caught up to them and perhaps even surpassed them in the atomic field. His viewpoint has been modified. It will change more and more.

Peaceful Uses for the Atom

Once the threat of atomic war is done away with, the peoples will demand that atomic energy should be used to help them to fight against suffering, sickness and death.

Here again, in the pages of Peace Review, our readers will find very important articles which will enable them to look into the future, while avoiding premature or purely imaginary anticipation.

For my part, I would like to draw their attention to three points:

First, it is not only a new source of energy that science is putting at the disposal of mankind. Tomorrow the atom will be used in the service of medicine, industry and agriculture. Thanks to the atom, all technique will make enormous progress and we shall be able to attack and to solve problems which have, until now, been insoluble.

Secondly, by adding a new source of energy to those already at his disposal, man will not only increase the number of "slaves" working for him; he will be able to use what I call the classic sources of energy more rationally.

For example, we are still burning the vast majority of the coal we extract from the earth's crust: this is a waste. In the future it will be more sensible to use our coal reserves for the chemical industry. Something which would have been impossible without the discovery of atomic energy will then become very simple.

Thirdly, history shows that social progress is bound up with technical progress. Not only will atomic energy make it possible to equip those under developed countries which are poor in coal or in electricity but, what is still more important, it will modify the world distribution of the raw materials used by man. In each country, in each continent, it will crack the old social and political framework.

No one can know how men will live in the atomic age. But everyone should know that their life will be very different from the life we lead now, in the age of the steam engine and the electric motor. Thanks to the atom, and following a formula now become famous, man will come out of pre-history.

MEN of my generation will not know the full flowering of the atomic age. But it is up to them to greet the dawn of a new day which lights the horizon. And even more, it is up to all those who have faith in the destiny of mankind to prevent an atomic war from blasting this great hope to dust.

Marcelle Auclair's Notebook

A Cigarette Burn Hurts, Let Me Say

Last autumn I drove through the north and the east of France. There the names of towns and villages are the names of battlefields. Peace is only brought to mind by the thousands of graves in hundreds of military cemetaries.

And thinking of the period before the two world wars, I said to myself: "Under these stones lie socialists, French action supporters, radicals, communists, conservatives of all labels, liberals of all hues, those who had said, "I don't bother with politics." They did not understand in time that war is a plague; they did not want to fight together against war; they all died in the war. Peace be with them: they have not died in vain if the eyes of those who come after them can see further ahead."

Today the atom bomb puts the question with decisive sharpness: either men will fight together against the atom bomb or one day they themselves may be mingled together, without distinction of party, in the vast solidarity of logic.

The danger is imminent. On March 13th the Chairman of the American Federation of Scientists, Dr. Livingston, declared in a television program that the scientists were worried about the amount of radiation found in the atmosphere, as a danger-point for the future of the race would soon be reached. Yes, you read it correctly.

We are against the bomb. We are also against despair. This business that has been called "cosmic" is the personal business of every one of us. Let each of us come to understand this and join in the collective struggle.

Some women wrote to me, to ask: "But how can we struggle?" The reply is: By uniting with all who work for the same aim. We can only survive if we unite, without any outside consideration!

The signature campaign carried out in Japan against the A-bomb and the H-bomb gives us an excellent framework and some very fine examples to follow.

The first step is born of individual initiatives launched independently one of the other in various localities. (From April to June 1954).

The second step unifies the campaign on a national scale (from July to December 1954). The Japanese National Council Against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs, formed on August 8th 1954, brings together personalities of all opinions and religious sects. By October ten million signatures had been collected throughout Japan, 20 millions by December.

The third step gives the campaign international significance (from January 1955).

In an interview given to the Information Service of the World Council of Peace, the General Secretary of the Japanese Council Against Atomic and Hydrogen bombs, Mr. Kaoru Yasui, explained the results of his practical experience:

"If the Japanese had had the feeling that the campaign was a partisan campaign, we would not have obtained all these signatures, nor the participation of many conservatives in our action."

He spoke of the "kind of moral and spiritual revolution" which had taken place among the Japanese people because of the war "and first of all among women and mothers . . . The mothers, above all, have decided to keep their children safe from the suffering of atomic death. It is first and foremost on this basis that the peace movement has developed in Japan since the end of the war."

He stressed: "Women, Japanese housewives, are trying to understand international problems, they believe it is there that they can find a way to stop war. For example, in my district of Tokyo, at Suginami Ward, the workers' wives formed a reading circle. In the beginning 24 housewives attended the study circle and now there are more than a hundred. Last May, one of the members of the circle began to collect signatures. In this part of the city which has 390,000 inhabitants, including children, 280,000 signatures against the bomb were collected. And it should be added that the children were not allowed to sign.

"One woman supporter of the Liberal Party, a very conservative party, collected 15,000 signatures, while another woman, a member of the Progressive Association of Women, collected 14,000. These examples show that progressive and conservative people are coming together in this campaign which, in our country, is considered the best example of a national campaign."

It is sometimes said that the experience of others is useless: nevertheless, let the experience of Japan, the first victim of the atom bomb, guide us. This is what is awaiting us if we do not act: the Nobel prize-winner, Professor Power, declared in Westminster that the dropping of one atom bomb alone would be equivalent to 1,000 raids of 2,000 bombers in the last war.

And let me say that a cigarette burn hurts. How do you feel about atomic burns?

You must choose: either to struggle together against the atom bomb or to give up together to atomic death.

Winner on Intriguing Clipping of the Month

A second-time winner of a Chinese wood block water colour print is indefatigable F. W. Park of Toronto, who easily outstripped all other contestants again in submitting the most intriguing clipping of the month.

THOU SHALT NOT . . .

Mr. Park's clipping relates how the German Nazi V-rocket experts who had been responsible for "buzz-bombing" London had been led by Dr. W. von Braun, in 1945 fled the Red Army into U.S. custody and have been helping U.S. research on guided missiles ever since. Now they are to become U.S. citizens.

"As time goes by," said Dr. Braun, "I realize ever more clearly that it was a moral decision we made that day at Peenemunde, that somehow we sensed that the secrets should get only into the hands of a people who read the Bible." (New York Times 11-4-55).

THE TRUTH FROM THE MAN WHO KNOWS

The Atom Sickness

Is Still a Killer in Hiroshima

The funeral of the Japanese fisherman Aikichi Kubayama, who died after the H-bomb experiment at Bikini. His nine-year-old daughter, Mo Kayo, carries his portrait at the head of the procession.

By DR. NOBUO KUSANO
Member of the Institute for Infectious Diseases, University of Tokyo.

At the end of August 1954, I visited Hiroshima. On my arrival I found myself in the midst of such deadly chaos as had never before been experienced in human history.

Some twenty days before my arrival the first atomic bomb had exploded over the city and my job was to make a first-hand inspection, or, to put it more precisely, to investigate the "atomic disease" which from that time on, has never ceased to torture its victims.

What is the "atomic disease"? Some of those who, were within 1,000 to 1,500 meters of the ground centre over which the atomic bomb exploded, had, fortunately, not been so badly burned or wounded as to have died. They felt almost nothing, except a slight nausea, for a couple of days immediately after the explosion. They carried on as they were. But a fortnight or so later they found that their hair was falling out rapidly. It took no more than two or three days to make them completely bald.

Blood Poisoning

Blood spots appeared on their skin and many patients suffered from diarrohea accompanied by a loss of blood, as in the case of dysentry. Their tonsils swelled up and then gradually putrified. Their gums bled continually. Their injuries and burns which had started to get better took a turn for the worse and spread. A temperature as high as 104° lasted indefinitely.

By this time the whole organism of the patients was so badly attacked that the hemorrhagic diathesis had developed to an extremely high degree. Vomiting, spitting of blood, haematuria and so forth — these were the plainest symptoms of blood-poisoning.

Camps to Die in

Emergency camps were permeated with the nauseating odor of putrefying human organisms. For the patients there was no hope. They died a week after they became ill. This is what the citizens of Hiroshima fearfully call the "atomic disease."

Examine the blood of such a patient and you will find that the number of white blood corpuscles has decreased to as low as one-tenth or one-fiftieth the amount found in the blood of a normal man, while the blood platelets have gone down to less than one-tenth. The intense radioactivity (especially the gamma rays and neutron which have a very strong penetrating power) of the atomic bomb effects the blood producing organs, for instance the bone-marrow, lymph nodes, etc., causing the patient to lose a great proportion of his white blood corpuscles. The decrease of white blood corpuscles, lowers the body's ability to fight off bacteria.

In such a condition a man is defenseless against the continual external and internal attack of bacteria while the mucous membrane of the mouth, of the large intestine, etc., would be destroyed. Due to a remarkable loss of the blood patelets, the blood is no longer able to coagulate. Once this happens, capillary bleeding occurs.

The Body Ruined

Although the appearance of a patient suffering from radiation sickness appears to be less serious than that of one suffering from simple injuries or burns, if you were to examine his tissue through a microscope, you would be shocked to see the drastic destruction of his organic system. His bone marrow, lymph nodes and testicles—where the cells are the most densely organized and most active in splitting up—are almost completely destroyed. This is the most shocking proof of the destruction caused by radioactivity.

Most Died Early

We now call it the subacute period of the "atom bomb radiation sickness." Its characteristics are:

1) Destruction of blood producing organs;

2) Secondary infection by bacteria or sepsis.

It is believed that in Hiroshima and Nagasaki the number of victims who died during the subacute period (from two weeks to two months after the explosion) amounted to as much as 10 per cent of the total number of atomic bomb victims (in Hiroshima there were more than 200,000 victims and in Nagasaki 100,000). Almost 70 per cent of the total number of victims died on the day of the explosion and another 20 per cent within the following two weeks. This means that 90 per cent of the victims were murdered in less than two weeks. It appears that most of them died, either directly, or indirectly, from burns, while the rest died of radiation sickness.

The Death Ash

However, this does not necessarily mean that the casualties were mainly caused by the heat and mechanical energy of the atomic bomb. Those who were believed to have died because of injuries and burns were also affected by the radioactivity and rushed away to an earlier death. Even if they had not suffered from injuries and burns, most of them would not have survived. It was their tragic fate to die within a few weeks.

It must be noted that an atomic bomb is not only destructive as a bomb; it is a devastating radioactive weapon which inflicts deadly destruction upon us. This can clearly be seen from the casualties caused among the innocent Japanese fishermen who were working in the Pacific Ocean when the Bikini hydrogen bomb was exploded. Apart from the injuries to the fishermen, so-called "death ash" floated from the Bikini district over Japan and was so dangerous that agricultural crops were affected, not to speak of the extensive losses to the Japanese fishing industry.

If exposed to strong radioactivity, animals used in experiments die in a few hours, or at most, in a few days. Not only such sensitive and highly active cells as those of the bone-marrow, or of the lymph nodes, the spleen and sex glands are destroyed, but also the less sensitive cells of the skin and epithelial cells of the mucous membrane of the intestine and the endocrine glands are destroyed. Such terrible destruction of human beings as that caused by radiation had never been seen in history until Hiroshima.

The characteristic symptoms of the above-mentioned acute period of the "atomic bomb radiation sickness" could be summarized as follows:

1) Vomiting,

2) Acute loss of vitality,

3) High fever (without bacterial infection),

4) Bleeding through the skin or of the internal organs.

If the radioactivity to which a patient was exposed is light and the damage caused to blood-producing organs slight, if the white blood corpuscle count was over 1,000 per cubic millimetre (the normal count is 8,000), then the patient will recover in about five weeks, as the number of white corpuscles increases and cures bacteria infested organs. But, in fact, the patient cannot be said to be free of the effects of radioactivity.

The Subchronic Period

Two to six months after exposure to the atomic bomb—the period we can call the "subchronic period" — the death rate becomes very low. Nevertheless, the patient will still suffer from a disorder of the testicles or ovaries, owing to the destruction of the cells. The drop in the count of red blood corpuscles during the acute period is lower than that of the white corpuscles, and the patient will suffer from anemia for a long time.

The most important symptom of the chronic period — that is, after about six months — is leukemia. The frequency of this disease among those who were exposed within two kilometres of the atom bomb is ten times as high as that of the normal, or control rate.

Deaths Now

Even today, ten years after the bomb explosion, the rate of occurrence of this disease is not on the decrease. In the past year 10 patients died of it.

Other disturbances reported are as follows:

1) Chronic anemia,

2) A high rate of cataract cases,

3) Retarded physical and mental development of children who were exposed to the explosion.

4) Retarded brain development of the foetus (for instance, malformation such as microcephalus) where the expectant mother was closely exposed to the explosion, and so on.

At the same time, many more cases

KEEP UP WITH THE DOCTORS

Hemorrhagic diathesis: a proneness to bleeding.

Haematuria: blood in the urine.

Platelets: small oval discs floating in the blood which play a part in blood clotting.

Gamma rays: radioactive emanations or particles with high speed and higher frequency and penetrating power than X-rays.

Neutron: one of the components of the nucleus of the atom. It is electrically neutral and has neither a positive nor a negative charge.

Lymph nodes: gland-like structures made of lymphatic tissue which enlarge when infected (for example those at the angle of the jaw enlarge when you have a sore throat).

Mucous membrane: the inner lining of many body cavities. For example look in your mouth and see the inside of your cheek.

Capillary: the smallest blood vessels. They are invisible and red or white blood cells flow through them in single file. The red cells bring oxygen and pass it to all body cells, trading it for carbon dioxide through the walls of the capillaries.

Sepsis: decay leading to poisoning in the body.

Spleen: a ductless gland about the size of the kidney situated at left of the stomach. It processes blood.

Epithelial: inner lining of body cavities and blood vessels, etc.

Endocrine glands: Hormone-forming glands such as the pituitary gland in the head or the adrenal glands on top of each kidney.

Testicles: the male organ or gland that creates the semen.

Ovaries: the female organ that creates the ovum.

Leukemia: a blood disease in which the white blood cells are increased from the normal 7,000 per cubic millimetre to many times that number.

Foetus: the child before birth.

Microcephalus: abnormally small brain (cephalon—the brain).

Sarcoma: a malignant tumour which often occurs in the bones.

Genetic: having to do with heredity.

SCIENCE

THE FACTS about the Unborn

By PROF. PHILIPPE L'HERITIER

PROFESSOR AT THE PARIS FACULTY OF SCIENCES

The best answers science can yet give to questions everybody is now asking are outlined here by one of France's most celebrated geneticists. He speaks of the effects of radioactivity on the future of the human race and of the great care we must take in this atomic age to see that radioactivity does not menace the humanity of tomorrow that is being born from the humanity of today.

On several occasions reports have appeared in the press of the alarming results of an investigation into the health of the child survivors of the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs in Japan. Although it is difficult to judge exactly the statistical value of these observations, it seems clear that they indicate a real increase of deformity and of congenital physiological defects among these children. In reality, there is nothing in this to surprise genetecists, who have known for a long time now that any exposure to ionizing radiation and X-rays is capable of producing unfavourable mutations.

This genetic danger is perhaps one of the most serious problems which mankind faces on entering the atomic age. Any unwise use of radio activity carries the risk of an increase in the occurence of hereditary defects in human populations. Eventually this increase could become catastrophic and turn future generations into a collection of monsters.

Not Only War Dangerous

This danger is not solely bound up with large-scale military use of atomic energy. For mankind, a generalized atomic war would, in fact, mean so great a catastrophe that doubtless its genetic aspect would fade into the background. But the experimental detonation of ever more powerful nuclear engines which is resulting from the mad arms race is enough to increase the genetic danger. Even the peaceful industrial use of atomic energy can be dangerous unless very thorough precautions are taken to protect the human organism against all exposure to ionizing radiation.

What We Inherit — and How

Although in the present state of our knowledge it is difficult to estimate accurately the extent of this danger, its reality is already quite certain.

It is known that the hereditary patrimony of any organism is formed of a multitude of hereditary units which are called "genes." Each gene can exist in one or more forms which the geneticists call "Alleles" and these alleles determine the various forms that can be taken by a certain characteristic of the organisms, such as the colour of the eyes or the way an organ functions.

For a large number of genes of the human species, several different alleles exist in the population and it is the particular proportion of alleles present at the moment of conception which constitutes the genetic basis of the personality.

It is upon the coexistence of all these alleles that the hereditary diversity of the individual human being is based. This diversity is familiar to all of us and covers intellectual and moral aptitudes as well as the physical aspect.

The Good and the Bad

A certain fraction of this variability is immaterial and even socially advantageous. It does not worry anyone that heads of fair hair or dark hair meet in the street, perhaps this even contributes to make life more pleasant. At the same time, a certain variety of tastes and aptitudes is clearly useful for the working of society.

But a great part of hereditary variation is in no way desired. This is the variation which corresponds to the mass of anatomic or functional infirmity of all types that human generations have carried with them through the centuries. In the picturesque words of the U.S. geneticist Muller, we all bear a part of this genetic burden to a greater or lesser extent.

Lucky and Less Lucky

For those who are less lucky it is expressed in the poor functioning of the internal secretion cells of the pancreas, bringing with it diabetes, or by lesions in the essential organs, such as the heart or the liver.

For the luckiest, it can be expressed simply, for example, by the defective conformation of the eyes, making spectacles necessary.

In between these two extremes we could fill in a long list of congenital infirmities and illnesses which are recognized and classified. However, there is no doubt that these are only a tiny fraction of all those which generally exist.

Mutations

This multitude of hereditary defects bears relation to the existence of abnormal allels which are transmitted from generation to generation according to rules discovered by Mendel almost a century ago. These alleles lessen naturally the chances of reproduction in those who carry them and thus would disappear fairly quickly, eliminated by natural selection or by chance, if their occurence was not continued by the phenomenon of mutation. Actually, it happens that the different alleles of the same type of gene can be born one out of the other and it is this phenomenon of transformation of an element of hereditary patrimony that has been given the name of mutation.

In normal circumstances, each individual mutation is a very rare phenomenon. For example, it can be estimated that two or three sexual cells out of a hundred thousand bear a gene of haemophelia which has appeared through mutation. But since in fact there is a very large number of possible mutations, an important fraction of the sexual cells contains within them one or more alleles, the fruit of recent mutation.

The vast majority of mutations give rise to unfavorable alleles. For the Drosophila (a tiny fly) it can be seen directly that for one mutation which simply modifies the pigmentation of the body, there are more than fifty whose effect is to lessen more or less catastrophically, the vitality and fecundity of the organism.

Like Filing a Motor

Thus the mutation could be compared to strokes of a file given to a delicate motor. Some of them have no effect and are even, in the long run, useful; but the vast majority are clearly harmful.

As long as the rhythm of the filing in each generation is not too quick, the populations can bear the genetic burden. But if the rhythm speeds up, the situation can become serious. An increase in the number of strokes of the file given haphazardly to the delicate construction that is the human hereditary patrimony is exactly what is risked as the aftermath of any kind of unwise use of atomic energy.

What Happens to Children?

It is known that the ionizing rays thrown out by radio-active bodies are capable of raising the frequency of mutations to a considerable degree. This phenomenon has been observed in all organisms used for study purposes, whether they are bacteria, moulds, plants, insects, or even mammals, such as the mouse.

There is no chance established in advance that Man can be the exception to such a general biological law and, indeed, though experiments are lacking, we do possess for the human species at least two series of supporting observations. One is in connection with the children who survived the Japanese bombs, the other is a series of statistics worked out in the United States on the health of the children of doctors specializing in radio-therapy. These people's profession obliges them to be subjected to irradiation of X-rays which, while generally light, is often repeated. Among their descendants a marked increase of the occurence of various genetic defects has been observed, such as cardiac and ocular malformations, abnormalities in the composition of the blood and so on.

Slow Death

Naturally, we have known for some time that this radiation has a destructive effect on the body tissues. These effects are particularly marked in respect to cells in the course of multiplying. Frequently, they only become evident after a certain delay and it is these that are responsible for the slow death of which the story of the Japanese fishermen, contaminated by radio-active dust, has recently made us so terribly aware.

But if the rhythm with which the organism is subjected to the influence of radiation is sufficiently slow, the destructive action only reaches a small number of cells at a time and no serious damage to the organim results.

Unsafe Safety Limit?

It is this that has led to the adoption — after an international convention — of a maximum limit to the amount of radiation to which people working in atomic plants or research centres can be subjected. This limit is one third of a roentgen unit per week and the security margin thus sufficiently large to ensure that the organism is not visibly upset.

But the genetic effect does not always obey the law. It accumulates in a manner not yet defined. The germinal cells are always present in the organisms and they store all the shocks of electrons which could produce mutations.

Thus, 0.3 of a roentgen unit per week make 15 in a year and 150 in ten years. Thus, for a man who has worked 10 years in these conditions it will be as though his testicles had actually received a dose of 150 roentgen units.

The increase of the frequency of the mutations which result from this cannot, unfortunately, be correctly estimated at the present stage of our knowledge. But it is certainly considerable.

What We Have to Know

The following result stems from the cumulative or stored up character of the genetic effect of radiation. The general effect on the population of an increase of the surrounding radioactivity will depend on two factors: on the one hand the average total dose of radiation received by an individual from the time of his conception to the moment he reaches a reproductive age, and on the other hand the frequency of mutations produced in the human species by one roentgen unit.

Unfortunately, little is known of either of these factors. The first will evidently depend on the development that the peaceful use of atomic energy will follow, on the precautions taken and, of course, above all on the explosion of bombs, even if these remain "experimental."

In any case, it seems that to put it at 50 roentgen units is a very modest estimate. In the near future, modern man will be exposed to a far greater extent to radiation, whether this is used for medical or industrial purposes—fifty roentgen units scattered over the 30 years which separate two human generations represent an average daily dose which is extremely minimal.

The Mouse Experiments

Since no experiment is possible on man, the effect of a roentgen on the human patrimony is not directly known. It thus seems most sensible to adopt the ratio which, has been determined for the mouse which, like us, is also a mammal. In the mouse, a roentgen increases the frequency of the chances of mutation in a quantity equal to two ten millionths. Multiplied by 50, this makes one hundred thousandth and it is exactly the scale of occurence of spontaneous mutations. From this calculation, whose basis is somewhat uncertain, it would seem that in the near future the normal occurence of mutations will be doubled, and perhaps even multiplied by a much more important factor in all civilized populations.

100 Years From Now

What will be the result? Obviously, there will be no visible result for our generation, and perhaps nothing visible for the two or three generations which will follow us. But from that moment, that is, a century hence, the degredation of the general state of health will certainly be felt and the moment will come when the maintenance and care of innumerable persons with congenital abnormalities will become a social burden very difficult to bear.

Will We Now Waste Man?

In conclusion, it is clear that the danger exists, but we do not know enough to enable us to estimate exactly its importance. This uncertainty itself should warn us to be prudent, for the real situation could be more serious still than present estimates.

We could, of course, consider that since the eventuality is far off, all this has little to do with us. The flood comes after us . . . this is a policy of the human species which is as old as the hills. It is this policy which has lead to a probably irremediable waste of certain natural resources on our planet, such as that of arable soil.

Is it now going to lead to the waste of the most precious capital, Man?

Of his own hereditory patrimony?

A SHORT STORY

NEW YORK 2660 BY NIGHT

RALPH 124 C 41+.

That is the name of a book.

This book is today considered a classic of science fiction. Its author, Hugo Gernsback enjoys in the United States something of a reputation accorded H. G. Wells in Britain or Robida and Jules Verne in France.

Written in 1911, this book represents the world of the year 2660 and its marvellous inventions. Many of them already exist today, such as television. But others are yet unknown, such as the control of the weather for entire cities.

Let us hope the world will not have to wait till the 27th century to see realized the astonishing expectations born in the particularly fertile imagination of Hugo Gernsback.

Ralph 124 C 41+, the hero of this book, is one of the most learned men of his time. In fact, he is one of the ten men on the planet who has been given the right to add the sign + after his name.

FROM the stores Ralph took his guests to the roof of an aerocab stand and they boarded a fast flyer.

"Take us about 10,000 feet up," Ralph instructed the driver.

"You haven't much time," the man answered, "at 12 o'clock all cabs must be out of the air."

"Why?"

"This is September 15, the night of the aerial carnival, and it's against the law to go up over New York until it's all over. You have 25 minutes left, however, if you wish to go up."

"I forgot all about this aerial carnival," said Ralph, "but 25 minutes will be time enough for us if you speed up your machine."

The aerial flyer rose quickly and silently. The objects below seemed to shrink in size and within three minutes the light became fainter.

In ten minutes an altitude of 12,000 feet had been reached, and as it became too cold, Ralph motioned to the driver not to rise further.

The spectacle below them was indescribably beautiful. As far as the eye could see was a broad expanse studded with lights, like a carpet embroidered with diamonds. Thousands of aerial craft, their powerful searchlights sweeping the skies, moved silently through the night, and once in a while an immense transatlantic aerial liner would swish by at a tremendous speed.

Signalizers

Most beautiful of all, as well as wonderful, were the Signalizers. Ralph pointed them out to his guests, saying: "In the first period of aerial navigation large electric lamps forming figures and letters were placed on housetops and in openfields so that the aerial craft above might better find their destinations. To the traffic flying 5,000 feet or higher such signals were wholly inadequate, as they could not be correctly read at such a distance. Hence the signalizers.

"These are powerful searchlights of the most advanced type, mounted on special buildings. They are trained skyward and shoot a powerful shaft of light directly upward. No aerial craft is allowed to cross these light shafts.

"Each shaft gives a different signal; thus the signalizer in Herald Square is first white; in ten seconds it changes to red and in another ten seconds it becomes yellow. Even an aerial liner at sea can recognize the signal and steer directly into the Herald Square pier, without being obliged to hover over the city in search of it.

"Some signalizers have only one colour, flashing from time to time. Others more important use two searchlights at one time, like the one at Sandy Hook. . . ."

From on high Ralph's guests marvelled at these signalizers, which pierced the darkness all around them. It was a wonderful sight and the weird beauty of the coloured shafts thrilled Alice immeasurably.

"Oh, it is like a fairyland," she exclaimed. "I could watch it forever."

But presently, the aerocab was descending rapidly and in a few minutes the strong light from below had obliterated the light shafts. As the craft drew closer the streets could be seen extending for miles like white ribbons and the brilliantly lighted squares stood out prominently. They landed at the stroke of 12. Ralph suggested a light lunch before they retired for what remained of the night. The others agreed and Ralph led the way to the Bacillatorium.

Germ-Killer

The Bacillatorium, invented in 2,509 by the Swede I A 299, was a small room, the walls and bottom of which were composed of lead. On each of the four sides were large vacuum bulbs on pedestals. These tubes, a foot in height and about six inches thick and two feet in diameter, were each equipped with a large concave Radioarcaturium cathode. The glass of the tube in front of the cathode had a double wall, the space between being filled with helium gas.

The rays emanating from the cathode, when the tube was energized with high oscillatory currents, were called Arcturium Rays and would instantly destroy any bacilli exposed to them for a few seconds. Arcturium rays, like X-rays, pass through solid objects, and when they are used alone they burn the tissue of the human body. It was found, however, that by filtering arcturium rays through helium no burns would result, but any germ or bacillus in or on the body would be killed at once.

The Bacillatorium was prescribed by law and each citizen ordered to use it at least every other day, thus making it impossible for the human body to develop contagious diseases. As late as the 20th century more than half the mortality was directly attributable to diseases communicated by germs or bacilli.

The Bacillatorium eradicated such diseases. The arcturium rays, moreover, had highly beneficial effect on animal tissue and the enforced use of the Bacillatorium extended the span of human life to between 120 and 140 years, where in former centuries three score and ten was the average.

A Newspaper

After having wished his guests good night, Ralph went, via the elevator, directly to his library, and asked for the evening news. His man handed him a tray on which lay a piece of material as large as a postage stamp, as transparent and flexible as celluloid.

"What edition is this?" he asked.

"The midnight New York News, sir."

Ralph took the News and placed it in a metal holder which was part of the hinged door of a small box. He closed the door and turned on a switch on the side of the box. Immediately there appeared on the opposite white wall of the room, a twelve column page of the New York News and the scientist, leaning back in his chair, proceeded to read.

The New York News was simply a microscopic reduction of a page which, when enlarged by a powerful lens, became plainly visible.

Moreover, each paper had eight pages, in separate sheets, as was the fashion centuries ago, but eight pages literally on top of each other. The printing process was eletrolytic, no ink whatsoever being used in the manufacture of the newspaper. This process was invented in 1910 by an Englishman, and improved by the American 64 L 52 in 2031, who made it possible to print in one operation eight different subjects, one on top of another.

These eight impressions could be made visible only by subjecting the paper to different colours, the colour rays bringing out the different prints. The seven colours of the rainbow were used, while white light was employed to show illustrations in their natural colours. With this method it was possible to print a newspaper, fully ten times as large in volume as any newspaper of the 21st century, on a piece of film the size of a postage stamp.

The Menograph

Each paper published an edition every 30 minutes, and if one did not possess a projector, one could read the paper by inserting the News in a holder beneath a powerful lens which one carried in one's pocket, folded when not in use. To read the eight different pages, a revolving colour screen was placed directly underneath the lens, to bring out the different colours necessary to read the paper,

Ralph soon had read all that interested him and he began to write his lecture: "On the prolongation of animal life by rays."

He attached a double leather headband to his head. At each end of the band was attached a round metal disc that pressed closely on the temples. From each metal disc an insulated wire led to a small square box, the Menograph, or mind-writer.

He then pressed a button and a low humming was heard; simultaneously two small bulbs began to glow with a soft green fluorescent light. Grasping a button connected with a flexible cord to the Menograph, he leaned back in his chair.

After a few minutes reflection he pressed the button, and at once a wave line, traced in ink, appeared on a narrow white fabric bank, the latter resembling a telegraph recorder tape.

The band which moved rapidly, was unrolled from one reel and rolled up on another. Whenever the inventor wished to write down his thoughts, he would press the button, which started the mechanism as well as the recording tracer.

The Menograph was one of Ralph 124 C 41+'s earliest inventions, and entirely superseded the pen and pencil. It was only necessary to press the button when an idea was to be recorded and to release the button when one reflected and did not wish the thought-words recorded.

Instead of writing a letter, one sent the recorded Menotape, and inasmuch as the Menolphabet was universal and could be read by anyone—children being taught it at an early age—it was considered that this invention of Ralph's was one of his greatest gifts to humanity: 20 times as much work could be done by the means of the Menograph as could be done by the old-fashioned writing, which required considerable physical effort. Typewriters soon disappeared after its invention. Nor was there any use for stenographers, as the thoughts were written down direct on the tape, which was sent out as a letter was sent centuries ago.

The Hypnobioscope

Before he fell asleep he attached to his head a double leather headband with metal temple plates, similar to the one used in connection with the Menograph.

He then called for his man, Peter, and told him to put on Homer's Odyssey for the night.

Peter went down to the library on the 15th floor, and took down from a shelf a narrow box, labeled Odyssey, Homer. From this he extracted a large but thin reel on which was wound a long narrow film. This film was entirely black but for a white transparent waveline running through the centre of it.

Returning to Ralph's bedroom, Peter placed the reel containing the film in a rack and introduced the end of the film into the Hypnobioscope. This wonderful instrument, invented by Ralph, transmitted the impulses of the waveline direct to the brain of the sleeping inventor, who thus was made to dream the Odyssey.

It had been known for centuries that the brain could be affected during sleep by certain processes. Thus one could be forced to dream that a heavy object was lying on one's chest, if such an object was placed on the sleeper's chest. Or one could be forced to dream that one's hand was being burned, or frozen, simply by heating or cooling the sleeper's hand.

It remained to Ralph, however, to perfect the Hypnobioscope, which transmitted words direct to the sleeping brain, in such a manner that everything could be remembered in detail the next morning.

This was made possible by having the impulses act directly and steadily on the brain. In other words, it was the Menograph reversed, with certain additions.

Thus, while in a passive state, the mind absorbed the impressions quite readily and mechanically and a story read by means of the Hypnobioscope left a much stronger impression than if the same story had been read while conscious.

For thousands of years humanity had wasted half of its life during sleep—the negative life. Since Ralph's invention, all this was changed. Not one night was lost by anyone wherever conditions permitted using the Hypnobioscope. All books were read while one slept. Most of the studying was done while one slept. Some people mastered ten languages, during their sleep-life. Children who could not be taught successfully in school during their hours of consciousness, became good scholars if the lessons were repeated during their sleep-life.

The morning newspapers were transmitted to the sleeping subscribers by wire at about 5 a.m. The great newspaper offices had hundreds of Hypnobioscopes in operation, the subscriber's wire leading to them. The newspaper office, notified by each subscriber what kind of news is desirable, furnished only such news. Consequently, when the subscriber woke up for breakfast he already knew the latest news, and could discuss it with his family, the members of which were also connected with the newspaper Hypnobioscope.

The Strategy of Calamity

By CLAUDE MORGAN

PARIS

EACH day, in our suburban train, an acquaintance of mine — a very good chap — puts up the following argument: "The discovery of Thermonuclear weapons makes war impossible from now on. The results are so horrible that no one would dare to use them."

And when I express my astonishment that he himself should hold such an opinion, he replies that it is held by such and such a well-known person. Then he adds: "That was why gas was not used during the second world war."

He adds this question: "Do you really think that the head of a government would be as stupid as to deliberately bring about the end of the world?"

REAL OPTIMISM

This is a catch question that has been widely spread these last few months. And, like many such phrases, it is a dangerous over-simplification. If any government whatsoever embarked on nuclear war, it is clear that it would count on beating its adversary by the shock of surprise or by the superiority of its own atomic weapons, without itself being wiped out. But things can work out quite differently. The universal anger that such a crime would evoke, including in the aggressor's own country, could bring it to account.

Unless, says my friend, jumping from optimism to the deepest pessimism unless we all disappear in a cosmic catastrophe.

Now that we are nearing our 2,000th year, it would be curious if mankind was once again to be caught up in the terrors of the year 1,000 — a date our ancestors believed marked the end of the world.

The world can only come to ruin if we accept this as inevitable. It is not optimism to say that the discovery of atomic weapons makes war impossible. It is blindness.

THE ATOMIC CANNON IS READY

But it is being optimistic to say that the action of all the inhabitants of the world can prevent the unleashing of atomic war and that if, unhappily, a criminal should embark on such a road, outraged humanity will punish him.

Naturally, we should not minimize the effects of atomic war. Such a war would wipe out millions of human beings as well as peerless treasures of culture. It would throw humanity far into backwardness. Neither can there be any doubt of the painful fact that today certain governments foresee and actively prepare such a war.

PREVENTIVE WAR

When, even before the end of the last world conflict, the United States had the first A-bombs at their disposal, this fact determined their foreign policy. They increased their military bases from which, when the moment came, heavy bombers could take off. And when, in 1949, the Soviet Union possessed the A-bomb, U.S. strategy was not immediately altered, for in official U.S. circles the opinion prevailed that their country had a comfortable start in the nuclear field.

Nevertheless, certain circles began to dream of a preventive war, that is, a war aimed at wiping out the alleged adversary before he could develop his full strength.

While the first policy could be dubbed a policy of intimidation and included within the framework of the cold war, the second policy was one of the hot war based on unleashing an atomic conflict. Admiral Radford, General MacArthur and others in the United States were ardent supporters of this policy. The vigilance of the peoples, and particularly the prolonged and wide-spread effects of the Stolkholm signature campaign, blocked this plan.

THE H-BOMB

Then in 1952, the United States detonated a hydrogen device (a thousand times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb). But in 1953, the Soviet Union produced an H-bomb which was more easily handled and which marked some progress over the U.S. H-bomb. It was clear that the Soviet Union was in no way behind, as certain people believed.

We could have hoped that, in such conditions, agreement could be reached to outlaw atomic weapons and to destroy the existing stocks built up by both sides, as the Soviet Union proposed once more at that time.

Nothing of the sort. On the contrary, the atomic arms race was whipped up. After the injuries to the fishermen drew attention to the 1954 Bikini explosion, a breath of panic swept through the United States, fanned by sensational revelations in the press and on the radio. They were speaking of decentralizing industry in order to reduce the vulnerability of the big towns, of evacuating the population, of building underground factories, and so on and so forth.

In the collective hysteria there was even a note of burlesque. Civil defense headquarters published a recommendation to the population of big cities which ran as follows: "In case of attack, take refuge in your car with all the windows shut. This is your best shelter."

This campaign resulted in intensifying and speeding up the United States' efforts to ensure atomic supremacy. Heated controversies arose between military leaders over the most effective way of carrying out such a war. Large sums were allocated to strengthen the strategic air force and to make it capable of straight away threatening both the vital centres and the rear of the adversary. The idea of preventive war became an obsession for certain leaders, and its supporters no longer counted on the start they had had, but on the advantages which the attacker would possess.

The orientation was switched to research on new guided weapons, atomic robots which render anti-aircraft organization useless.

'TACTICAL' WEAPONS

However, it became clearer that the atomic weapon capable of wiping out whole populations was not sufficient to win a war, and that land armies could not be dispensed with. The Atlantic Council regarded German rearmament as being more essential than ever.

Once they had perfected the so-called "tactical" atomic weapons (which are, in reality, nothing less than weapons of mass destruction — capable of wiping out a town for the purpose of smashing a bridge or cutting a railwayline), the NATO Council decided, during its meeting last December, to adopt them in Europe.

The communique published after the meeting does not contain the words "atomic weapons". It speaks only of new material which is now being assigned to forces in Europe. Yet statements made by the heads of the participating states, like Mr. Dulles, Sir Anthony Eden and M. Spaak, leave no doubt that in reality this new material consists of atomic weapons.

"The decision taken," declared Mr. Spaak, "are in complete accord with the wishes of the military chiefs by authorizing them to prepare for atomic war."

The decision of NATO marks a new stage in atomic strategy. Until this moment, in the conception of the military chiefs, nuclear war was essentially an air war, the A-bombs or H-bombs being carried by bombers or teleguided missiles. Land forces would only play the role of occupation forces.

But now that they have embarked on the manufacture of special atomic guns which can project A-bombs 19 to 25 miles, land forces will also have to play their part in atomic strategy.

At the same time, Britain and West European countries are putting their armies through new training. Now they do nothing but talk of "adapting the armed forces to the atomic age" so that right from the beginning of a war they would possess extremely mobile units trained to handle nuclear weapons.

The whole structure of these armies will be changed.

GERMANY AND THE BOMB

Consequently, those who imagined that at a last moment, if war broke out, it would not be atomic war, are making a big mistake. It would become impossible for the nations which had prepared it to launch any other kind of war. The new structure of their armies would chain them to atomic warfare.

Thus the decision of the NATO Council, which is bound up with the ratification of the Paris agreements, can be seen in all its seriousness. These agreements authorize Germany from the beginning — and Germany will not stop half-way along such a promising road — to have military forces of 50,000 men. This is more than France has at the moment, even counting the forces stationed in North Africa which are very large. In this way, through the Paris agreements, German military forces will be the dominating forces in Europe, equipped — according to the decision of the NATO Council — with atomic weapons.

On the other hand, it is no secret that Germany has allocated vast credits to nuclear research. Her industrial capacity will enable her to produce the new weapons in a very short time and at a rapid speed, becoming the dominating atomic power in Western Europe.

ASIA AND ALL COUNTRIES

These very concrete preparations for a nuclear war are an extremely grave danger hanging over the continent of Europe and over the whole world. Events follow one after the other with distressing rapidity. In a recent speech Sir Winston Churchill openly raised the question of an atomic world war. Britain's decision and the intentions expressed by certain French circles to play their part in producing A-bombs and H-bombs can only increase international tension and the vulnerability of these two countries.*

If we look at the development of the international situation we can see that it is bound up with the possibility of atomic war. The events in Formosa, the signing of new military pacts in the Middle East and the Far East, the establishment of the chain of bases sown more thickly than ever from the Arctic to Formosa, from Spain and Morocco to Pakistan and Thailand, which daily heighten people's anxiety, only take on their full meaning when considered from the standpoint of nuclear strategy.

In Asia, as in Europe, atomic war is being prepared. It threatens all continents and all countries . . . no matter whether they are industrially developed or under-developed. Even the Sahara desert cannot escape, for there, too, it is planned to build nuclear plants.

The universal will for peace which inspires men and women today won through in the wars of Korea and Indochina. But the tiniest spark which may fly up tomorrow from some spot on the globe would this time bear with it the risk of setting alight an atomic war.

Thus the most effective way of protecting this incomparable treasure that is human life, lies today in doing everything possible to make this war impossible. And what other method is there but to come to a mutual agreement to ban nuclear weapons?

Certain people say: "It is not the bomb that must be banned, but war." This is putting the cart before the horse. Naturally, the abolition of war is our aim. But how can we abolish war as long as atomic strategy feeds international tension, making it still sharper and filling us with anxiety?

The banning of atomic weapons, the destruction of existing stocks, international control of the ban and of the destruction of stocks, would, on the contrary, immediately result in lessening international tension.

All this would be the first step, an essential step on the road to general disarmament and, consequently, to peace. This is the real import of the campaign which is being launched to outlaw nuclear weapons and those who seek to use them.

After this, mankind can enter the true atomic age which is that of heightened creation and life.

*Since these lines were written the French government has refused to make atomic weapons, perhaps a first fruit of the present world campaign—ED.

SICKNESS IN HIROSHIMA

of cancer and sarcoma are reported. In addition to these symptoms, there are those patients whom we can only call "patients suffering from lack of vitality." And it is still impossible for us to discover where the trouble really lies.

It is impossible to deal at greater length with the problem of genetic disturbances in such a short report.

It is supposed that when the atomic bombs exploded over Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the external radiation of the radioactivity was only of short duration and the internal radiation was not so heavy. However, in the case of the Bikini H-bomb explosion, things were quite different. The combined external and internal radiation affected the victims very seriously.

What if Many Bombs Are Dropped?

Even in the case of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, where the residual radioactivity was weak, a number of cases of leukemia have been reported among people who only visited the cities after the explosions. I regret to say that our present medical knowledge and achievements can do very little to cope with such diseases and disturbances.

I have so far reported on "the effect of the radioactivity generated by a single atomic bomb" dropped over Hiroshima, but the problem we have to face is not now the effect of a single atomic bomb, but rather the effect of atomic warfare on humanity as a whole. I earnestly hope that such a short report as this will be of some help to people investigating this problem which is becoming ever more serious.

SILENCE ON SWITCHOVER

Nobody Is Talking About the Big Decision

Our strategists contemplate using atomic weapons, which Red China may also possess. And in the present "climate of world opinion", the first belligerent to use them will let loose a hostile uproar throughout the world.

—Dorothy Thompson in the Globe and Mail, 28-3-55.

By BRUCE MICKLEBURGH

OTTAWA

Mr. Pearson is not quite sure about this bomb business, and that, in a sense, is good.

Last year he compared the spectacle of two sides confronting each other, each armed with H-bombs, to "two scorpions in a bottle", each able to sting the other to death.

At the moment he seems to be under the influence of Churchill's "defense through deterrents" theory, but he also seems to have some second thoughts about it.

A most important debate on external affairs has started in the House of Commons as we go to press. Today that once mysterious subject of external affairs means whether a number of Canadian cities and most of our population can continue to exist or not—and whether, before today's school children grow up, we shall enjoy the golden benefits of atomic energy for peace.

What is the basis of peace, according to Minister Pearson? He gave his answer: "a balance of terror," and gave Churchill credit for the thought.

He explained, "that in one sense it is true that the greatest deterrent against a general war, although not against a limited one, is the certainty of nuclear retaliation."

He thought that might give time to solve world problems.

But he almost looked back over his shoulder when he quoted Indian Prime Minister Nehru's description of what dependence on the big bombs (in the absence of solutions) would mean: "Mankind would be doomed to hover indefinitely on the brink of catastrophe."

There is an unsolved mystery in what Mr. Pearson did say, and, even more, in what he did not say.

Is it not strange that in his report which started the debate Mr. Pearson still said nothing about the most important decision the Canadian government has ever made? That this decision has not yet (up till the time of the Easter recess) been reported to parliament or people?

• Size of the cloud of radioactive particles thrown up by the H-bomb may be judged in this picture. It was snapped from such distance and height that the curve you see on the horizon is the curve of the earth's surface.

I refer to the decision of the NATO Council in Paris last December to actively prepare for atomic war. There the Canadian government joined the other NATO powers in approving a report from the military which unalterably transforms the nature of warfare.

The NATO forces are to be equipped with so-called "tactical" atomic weapons. They are to be trained and readied to use them. Presumably this is happening in the forces of other countries too.

We wonder if it is possible that Mr. Pearson has not reported this major decision because he has not grasped its significance. Has he not realized that, among the many NATO meetings he has attended, this one is different? We find it hard to believe.

HON. L. B. PEARSON
A new look?

Yet, in the words quoted above, Mr. Pearson says the H-bomb may be "the greatest deterrent against a general war, although not against a limited war."

The point is that the NATO decision, when carried through, makes it all but impossible any longer to fight a limited war. A war like that in Korea or Indochina would be out of the question.

For once armies, navies and air forces are equipped, trained and organized to fight nuclear war, they cannot fight any other kind of war, even if they want to.

This is something for Mr. Pearson (and Defense Minister Campney) to explain after Easter. Surely the Opposition has noticed this vital matter.

If Canada is to remain rivetted into the system of rival atomic blocs then we have less security than we have ever known. The first shot from an atomic cannon anywhere in the world (Quemoy, Matsu, Germany or wherever) pulls the trigger for the powers to try to "git there fustest with the mostest" death and torture. We are in the middle.

Last spring when the country was anxious over the Bikini H-bomb test Mr. Pearson said perhaps we should approach disarmament with a greater sense of urgency. Since then Canada's Hon. Paul Martin was able to move a resolution, which was unanimously adopted at the UN Assembly, to bring Canada, the Soviet Union, the U.S., the U.K. and France back into session on how to achieve under control the banning of atomic weapons and the reduction of conventional armaments.

The decision to prepare for atomic warfare is in contradiction to this. It threatens to singe the earth's surface before the discussions are over, with quick death and death slow and lingering. The unborn are threatened.

● Here is what a plain old-fashioned A-bomb would do if dropped over Queen's Park in Toronto: all buildings in 2-mile radius obliterated (12 square miles) and serious damage to all those in 3.68-mile radius. External Affairs Minister Pearson says if an H-bomb bust near the earth at Ottawa the city would be wiped out and the fall-out would endanger all those exposed in Montreal. If the winds turned out to be blowing with exceptional speed at 80,000 feet, the area of lethal contamination would be larger.

Thus it is to be welcomed that Mr. Pearson now says, "the introduction of the H-bomb into these discussions has really brought in a new element, and it may be that all of us will have to take a new look at this problem."

Several members have spoken in the debate to insist on a new look at a lot of problems.

Conservative John Diefenbaker produced the interesting statistic that every minute $165,000 is being spent on armaments in the world and wondered whether much of what had been spent since 1945 had been realistic. However he felt the need for more. On the other hand he argued strongly for an exchange of parliamentary delegations with the Soviet Union, and urged increased economic aid to under-developed countries. He also asserted that "all is not as well as the propaganda agencies would have us believe when it comes to our defense against the potential danger of the H-bomb and atomic warfare."

CCF leader M. J. Coldwell warned that, "We are told by atomic scientists, as outstanding as those who deny the truth of the charges . . . that these (H and A-bombs) explosions may endanger the future welfare of mankind, indeed, the future continuance on earth of mankind. It seems to me we must pay some attention as a country to these experiments and use our influence wherever we can to prevent this danger becoming more and more imminent."

He accused Mr. Pearson of assuring our support should the U.S. be involved in a major war with China and insisted that, "the Canadian people want our government to state forthrightly and without equivocation that we will do everything we possibly can to ensure that Canada's influence and Canada's policy, especially in its relations with the United States, will be directed towards the avoidance of conflict, political and economic."

He said, "I have no use for a communist government, but I do not want to see this country dragged into a war by the policies that are being pursued by the secretary of state of the United States . . .

"To use precision projectiles of atomic power against the mainland is one which, if put into effect, would forever destroy any effort of support of the democratic cause in which we should be interested, by the masses of the whole continent of Asia."

He wanted Mr. Pearson "to state categorically that we shall have no part in U.S. adventures on behalf of Chiang Kai-shek," whose cohorts he dubbed "bloodthirsty warlords."

Though he felt that Taiwan (Formosa), which is Chinese territory, could be "neutralized," he also said, "Canada should support the removal of (nationalist) Chinese representatives from the UN and from the security council and support the seating of the effective government of the Chinese people."

Carried the ball last fall but not enough facts now for Mr. Knowles.

Mr. Coldwell suggested that "a four-power conference should be called immediatey if for no other purpose than to endeavour to negotiate an agreement regarding nuclear weapons."

The CCF, of course, maintained its long-standing pressure for an increase in technical and economic aid to under-developed countries.

"Canada," he said, "could perform a very useful service in publicly and explicitly taking the lead in calling for such a conference (on disarmament as part of a general settlement) . . .

"In spite of what the minister said this afternoon I still think . . . that the solution of the present world problems will not be found in the development of nuclear weapons, the building of strategic bases from one end to the world to the other in order to contain communism."

He was disappointed that the U.S. Secretary of State had acted in Ottawa "rather as a war minister" than one interested in matters like the above.

There was considerable pressure for Canada to accept the Soviet offer to exchange parliamentary delegations. In the course of this discussion, Apposition leader George Drew said something that could well be taken as a motto by the forthcoming World Assembly for Peace in Helsinki: "At this time what we need more than anything else is some meeting between the people who themselves in the end will decide whether there is to be peace or war."

Conservative and Social Credit spokesmen pressed Mr. Pearson for more specific commitments to Mr. Dulles' policy but A. M. Nicholson of the CCF said, "I think the Canadian people just cannot be sold on the idea that Quemoy, at the mouth of one of China's main harbours, and less than five miles from the mainland, is necessary to the defense of the U.S."

M. J. COLDWELL
Canada must speak plainly

CCF whip Stanley Knowles felt that both Britain and Canada "have a tremendous stake in avoiding the outbreak of war of any kind because our two countries know that if that happens there will be devastation of our lands."

He asked Mr. Pearson "to take another look" at U.S. policy in which we are "just another pawn."

He felt Hon. Paul Martin's earlier statement on radioactive poisoning of the atmosphere "did not answer the fundamental question as to what the level of radioactivity now is as a result of these test explosions, and how far away that level is from the level that could do damage to the human race."

PANDIT NEHRU
He and other Asian premiers are meeting at Bandung to seek to establish a vast area of peace and independence for two thirds of mankind.

Harold Winch effectively compared the complacent statements of 1937 with the complacent statements of today and asked, "Because of our status and our influence among the nations, although a nation of only 15 million people, can we not give consideration now to providing a lead in matters of policy and program in this trying age and these troubled times resulting from the development of thermonuclear weapons?"

Despite the serious thoughts which have begun to be expressed, there is an air of unreality about the debate. One might judge from listening to it that this is another question which will take many, many years to solve.

This is not to be critical of patience.

It is to insist that there is no matter of public business more urgent than getting rid of the big bombs and the conditions in which they could start to go off.

When two scorpions are in a bottle the inclination is to get in the first sting.

Steadily as some statesmen insist that H-bombs are a "deterrent", the temptation to strike first is mounting.

The main deterrent now is that 500 million people have pledged their signed support to the World Appeal against the Preparations for Atomic War, insisting on the destruction of the bombs to make the earth safe for people to live and parliaments to debate.

A great deterrent is the World Assembly for Peace, to open May 22 in Helsinki. Peaceful solutions may be found in that unofficial but potent consultation.

The statements of the Pope, the World Council of Churches and Walter Reuther are deterrents.

The prospect of an Austrian peace treaty may break a diplomatic log jam, and the Bandung conference may well create a vast area of disentanglement in Asia.

And all this, each signature gathered and delegate sent to Helsinki, will help our parliament to find the way.

Not Any Government

A U.S. war with China over "Formosa" would be "not our war," British Labour Party leader Clement Attlee said during his brief visit to Canada.

"I don't think any government would take part in a war of that kind," he said, underlining the word "any."

He urged that China be allowed to assume her seat in the Security Council of the United Nations.

If a Labour government is elected, he said, he "definitely" will seek "a parley at the summit."

On China, he said, "there has been an armistice since the Korea war, and added, "You have to recognize realities."

Two Poems for Mother's Day

TO MY DAUGHTER

Daughter sleeping, daughter
Distant in sleep, daughter
Dearer then the widening smile of northern spring,
I gave you birth.

May my work for peace
Be a ladder you may climb laughing
With many others
To grasp that fruit in its fragrance
In the orchards of peace.

THOUGHTS OF A MOTHER

My heart could break
As I watch my sleeping sons,
For if war comes there are no more lucky ones.

And these two laughing
Thoughtful cherished boys
Will be tossed on history's junk pile
Like smashed toys.

II.

I watched the beautiful set of
My daughter's head as she went by.
Her grey eyes sparkled
Over the sweetness of her mouth.
Life was in every gesture
Proud, untutored and head strong.
But to-day the very air
Is radioactive deadly.

My child, my child,
We must make the world a nest of peace
For you to grow in,
A wide warm nest
Where no child can be smirched or maimed
Or blotted out by war.

WHAT PEOPLE ARE SAYING

NOT ANGELS AND DEVILS BUT MEN WHO ARE FELLOWS

At a time when mankind, according to Sir Winston Churchill, is "roaming and peering around on the rim of hell," some wise and cultured words have been spoken by Professor Donald Creighton of the Department of History, University of Toronto. In the course of an address at a conference of the Humanities Research Council in Ottawa, Professor Creighton urged a renewal of faith in the study of the humanities (languages, literature, history, philosophy).

Among other things he reminded us that, "The humanities constantly serve to remind us that our culture is not a creed which we are divinely justified in imposing by force on others, nor yet a set of techniques by which we can more quickly satisfy our animal urge for destruction."

PROF. CREIGHTON

He warned that men "cannot afford to behave like primitive deities, flinging hydrogen bombs, like thunderbolts, around in all directions, and they cannot permit themselves to degenerate into savages for whom the only significant part of their culture is its fiendish technical ingenuity."

He deplored the idea of a "world divided into two armed camps, two strategic empires, one of which, called the 'West' is inhabited, we are told, by uniformly virtuous democrats, and the other, called the 'East', by uniformly deplorable communists. These militaristic fictions are the product of what might be called the diplomacy of advertisement and the politics of promotion. The physical and biological sciences, as well as the social sciences, all help, in their different ways, to explode these inhuman abstractions. But the humanities stand opposed to them in even more implacable contradiction.

The humanities are concerned not with angels and devils but with men, with what they have suffered and achieved, in a world of their fellows."

ALL CATTLE ALREADY INJURED, CANADIAN CLIMATE AFFECTED?

Dr. James G. Foulks, professor of pharmacology at the University of British Columbia is reported in the Toronto Star as calling for a moratorium on the "big bomb" tests because of possible mounting radiation effects of cancer, human mutations, aging and premature death. He warns of long-range, "build-up" effects.

Dr. Foulks says there is a report "that the thyroidal radio-iodine content of cattle all over the world appears to have been significantly increased by the contamination to date.

"Conceivably, grazing animals may concentrate the radioactivity falling out over a considerable area, and over a substantial period of time. The possible role of the edible fish in the Pacific area has also been widely publicized."

Canadian Chemical Processing magazine, which published Dr. Foulks' article, also published a cabled appeal from British Nobel laureate Prof. Frederick Soddy, stating: "As co-discoverer with Rutherford of atomic energy, I beg Canadian scientists to demand a moratorium, forbidding its further mass liberation. Even so-called peaceful applications pollute the atmosphere and may change climates, endangering the economy of neighbouring nations."

RHEE AND CHIANG WANT A BIG WAR

"Syngman Rhee would welcome any opportunity to start a conflict, since he realizes this is his one chance of unifying Korea before he dies. Likewise Chiang Kai-shek sees that solely through war can he hope to return to the mainland. And such a war would have to be massive. For only if the Communist regime is smashed can he hope to regain control . . .

"Chiang's adept propaganda is now trying to stir our emotions over Matsu and Quemoy which he would like to use as a fuse to major war. The alarmist pebbles he has been casting into the Pacific from Formosa have reverberated in astonishingly high waves at Washington."

—C. L. SULZBERGER in The New York Times (11-4-55).

Legislature of Saskatchewan Asks for Abolition of Nuclear Weapons

REGINA

Fourteen Saskatchewan MLA's including several cabinet ministers signed the World Appeal against the Preparations for Atomic War during the peace lobby recently conducted by the Saskatchewan Peace Council. Two hundred delegates from 17 centres all over the province came to the Legislative Building in Regina to talk to their MLA's.

Highpoint was a meeting in the legislative committee room attended by Premier Douglas, several cabinet ministers and many MLA's. The meeting heard a brief read by Dorothy Morrison, secretary of the Saskatchewan Peace Council.

Premier's Four Points

Premier T. C. Douglas spoke to the meeting of the importance of mobilizing public opinion in all countries of the world to ask governments to agree to the following four points:

(1) international agreement not to use atomic weapons.

(2) nations should agree to discontinue manufacture of atomic weapons.

(3) nations should agree to international control and inspection and under that control all existing stocks of atomic bombs should be destroyed.

(4) A disarmament conference to set up a program for the reduction of other weapons.

The Premier declared that any campaign designed to get people to think about this problem was all to the good.

The many speakers all endorsed the idea of a negotiated settlement of world problems. Two cabinet ministers spoke favourably of the idea of sending a Saskatchewan delegation to the forthcoming peace assembly in Helsinki.

The meeting was chaired by R. H. Wooff, MLA for Turtleford and the peace lobby was led by Mabel B. Hanway, chairman of the Saskatchewan Peace Council.

Youth Asks Less for War

Winnie Horkoff of Kamsack spoke for the youth of Saskatchewan. She pointed out how educational and cultural programmes could be improved if less money were spent for war.

Making a presentation to the Speaker of the Saskatchewan Legislature, Joan Konkin of Kamsack said it was being made on behalf of the children and young people of the province in appreciation of the action for peace already taken by the Saskatchewan Legislature.

In reply Mr. Johnson said, "We will do all we can to further the interests of peace." He pointed out that war can no longer be localized. He commended all those who work for peace.

Mr. A. H. McDonald, House Leader of the Saskatchewan Liberals, told the meeting he felt that heads of governments should negotiate for peace.

A call for the abolition of all nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, and for the peaceful use of atomic energy, was unanimously adopted by the Saskatchewan Legislature shortly afterwards. (See text on this page.)

Supporting the resolution, the Hon. I. C. Nollett, Minister of Agriculture, condemned what he described as "the hysteria of hate" and emphasized that the possession of nuclear weapons did not provide security.

The mover of the resolution, Arnold Feusi (CCF-Pelley), contrasted the 41.9 percent of Canada's budget spent on defense with the 1.8 percent allocated for health and welfare. War, he said, was never a permanent solution to any problem.

The ordinary people who had seen the "devastation and butchery" of past wars wanted no part of modern weapons, Harry Gibbs (CCF-Swift Current) declared. Condemning passivity, he said, "we don't know what these infernal weapons are capable of doing."

Full Text of the Resolution

THAT THIS ASSEMBLY URGES the government of Canada to intensify its efforts to achieve world disarmament by mutual consent, together with abolition of the use, possession and manufacture not only of all nuclear weapons but also of all other weapons of mass destruction to the end that the marvellous new forces made available to man may be used for welfare not warfare and the peace may be based on the solid foundation of mutual understanding and cooperation.

Doukhobours Say Ban A and H-Bomb

"A good slogan for the celebration of Saskatchewan's Golden Jubilee would be 'Peace and Brotherhood'," stated a brief from the Doukhobour Society of Veregin presented during the peace lobby. The brief, read by George Bloodoff, pointed out that many nationalities live together peacefully in Canada, and continued, "It is our belief that all problems confronting all nations can be successfully solved through the medium of peaceful conferences . . .

"We urge upon you as our representatives to voice an energetic protest against all preparations for a horrible atom-hydrogen war that can destroy all living things . . . that God created for the happiness of all."

ARTS

RARE EXPERIENCE

During March, in the Print Room of Hart House and in the large, open-shelf room of the Central Circulating Library of Toronto, the public had an opportunity to see a collection of engravings, lithographs and posters that speak in a most eloquent manner of the work accomplished by the members of the Workshop for Popular Graphic Art, Mexico (Taller de Grafica Popular—TGP).

This organization was founded in 1937 by a group of artists, including Pablo O'Higgins, Leopold Mendez and Luis Arenal. In the February issue of Peace Review an article by Luis Arenal tells of the ideals that brought this group together to work collectively in spreading enlightenment, hope and beauty — through their art — among the great masses of Mexican people.

The prints under review were sent to the Canadian Peace Congress by the Taller de Grafica Popular as an expression of unity of purpose with the peace movement and to further the understanding of Mexican life and work in Canada.

The fresh, vigorous and profoundly educational aspect of the prints exhibited in Hart House and the Circulating Library cannot be overlooked by even the most casual observer.

Black and white engravings predominate (there were only a few with colour) although linoleum is used as a base, the sharp, clear lines of the engravings would lead one to believe that either wood or metal had been used. The TGP member's mastery of technique in the use of linoleum is unique. The subjects are executed with conviction and communicate in a most direct way the various truths of living.

The dignity of labour finds expression in Seed Time by Leopoldo Mendez; the proud and confident beauty of their women, in Tzeltal Women by Lorenzo Jiminez; the quiet, pleading voice of their children's innocence and fragile beauty in No School for Me by Marianne Yampolsky; and the Right to Eat by Elizabeth Catlett. The engravings are characterized by short, staccato lines that impart a living and dynamic rhythm to the compositions.

There are several splendid lithographs, with all the freedom of drawing that is possible in this medium, including three by the well known Pablo O'Higgins and one by Fanny Rabel called In the Street which shows a young girl carrying a child in her arms. Through the soft pencil quality of the lithograph the artist has created faces of warm tenderness and exquisite sensitivity, which speak their own message through wide-open, half-questioning and half-bewildered eyes.

The brutal injustice that has characterized the treatment of miners in Mexico is portrayed with the power of truth in the engraving by Francisco Mora — Homage to the Miners. A woman with desperately sobbing face dominates the centre of the composition with clenched hands raised in enraged protest, while the body of a miner lies prostrate before her.

Every print deserves to be seen, for each one covers some vital aspect of life, and although each print deserves special attention in this review it is impossible to give it in such short space. However, one cannot omit at least a mention of the Two Spains and Mother against war by Andrea Gomez. The themes of Gomez are self-evident in their dramatic, human content — the bejewelled bishop and bemedalled generalissimo contrasting with the grim wan faces of the barefooted woman who represent the bleeding heart of present-day Spain; the mother fiercely guarding her child against danger speaks for all women protecting life from destruction.

There were also several fine posters displayed in the Library, the subjects dealing with anniversaries and festivals in honor of past and present heroes and artists of the Mexican people.

The World Council of Peace is encouraging such exchanges among the countries of their cultural treasures.

This exhibit is now to be shown in Montreal and Sudbury. It is to be hoped that many thousands of people in all parts of Canada will be able to enjoy the rarely exciting experience of viewing it.

To be able to do this is to gain something new in one's life, for which gratitude is due mainly to the TGP and also to the Cultural Committee of the Peace Congress. (C.K.)

PERISCOPE on the United States

By OBSERVER

LOUD and threatening noises continue to come out of Washington directed, as one correspondent said, "towards letting the Chinese know the U.S. is not fooling this time." (Was Washington fooling before?)

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles says it is "up to the Communists," whether the U.S. forces use tactical atomic weapons in the straits of Taiwan. This, of course, is like blaming a man for being shot if he moves when held up for robbery.

The danger of a world nuclear war is involved.

Most people have heard these loud noises. But what about the people of the United States, who more than once have had the final say?

Politicians in Ottawa are fond of excusing the hair-raising statements made in Washington by saying, "After all, they have to reckon with domestic public opinion."

President and Congress have to reckon with public opinion alright, but it is public opinion that checks Washington bellicosity, and not vice versa.

It is a mistake to identify "as public opinion" the narrow special interests before whom contending groups in Washington compete with truculent statements. In fact, some of the shifting currents of peace currently apparent in Washington are due to the fact that the time is approaching when elected representatives have to reckon with the electors.

Though the danger of mass deception by an international "frame-up" is all too present, the fact remains that the electorate does not want war in China, war in Germany or elsewhere—least of all does it want war with H-bombs.

Thus every effort at restraint exercised by Canada meets an important response from the U.S. public, which, in general, exercises a similar restraining influence. This is a fact of major significance. Its full recognition will encourage a good deal more "restraint."

All very well for some Washington Senators last spring to fulminate and rave at Britain for not being prepared to follow the U.S. into a disastrous adventure in Indochina. But nobody should have taken that completely at face value. If Sir Anthony Eden were not sought out as the scapegoat, or some other alleged weak-kneed target found by these paragons of courage and principle, then they would have had to face up to the fact that an unprecedented and instantaneous flood of mail from all parts of the United States had forbidden them to commit U.S. strength to even greater dangers than those discovered in Korea.

What then is the present temperature of U.S. public opinion? How does the man in the street view the Congressional authorization for the government to go to war with China? Does he think like the press thinks?

No, says the New York correspondent of the conservative Canadian journal, Saturday Night, Mr. Anthony West.

Anthony West made it his business to go about New York and find out. By no stretch of the imagination can Mr. West be considered unfriendly to the U.S. Here are some extracts from his report:—

First of all he sought impressions on the case of the U.S. fliers convicted of espionage and imprisoned in China (remember the recent headlines about the torrent of indignation said to be flowing through the U.S.)?

Mr. West found a vast disparity and public comment: "I found that very few people felt that the prestige or the usefulness of the United Nations was involved."

What's the matter with the Chinese? Why don't they let us neutralize their island? Don't they think the United Nations is fair to them?

The Saturday Night correspondent examined another issue: "A glimpse of the real nature of New York opinion . . . was afforded by the Cyprus question, which embarrassingly got on the UN agenda a little while ago and then was hustled out of sight in deference to British sensibilities."

Noting, that the Cypriot demand for Enosis (union with Greece) "conflicts with the necessities of Anglo-American strategy, Mr. West said, "The plain fact remains that four-fifths of the population apparently feel that they are Greeks and seem to want Greek nationality."

Using this point to illustrate what he discovered about Taiwan, which he calls Formosa, Mr. West said, "The President's declaration is a reasonable piece of soldier's thought. But the fact that it is a Chinese island remains, and a very large number of Americans think it is the dominant fact."

After discussion whether Chiang Kai-shek could win an election in Taiwan, he said, "The soldiers and the preventive war group may say that" the U.S. "has to fight" on the "thus far and no farther line" regardless of "all other considerations."

"But," he says, "these groups said the same thing about China."

"If Saigon goes, they said, all Southeast Asia goes, and they wanted to fight before Dienbienphu fell. The fact remained that the American public would not stand for a war to preserve French Colonialism.

Similarly, in the days after the war, when hearty voices were calling for the Marine Corps to march in and settle The Mess in China, there was no possibility of getting American popular support for such a move."

Mr West outlines his strong feeling that the U.S. public has had "a good look" at the President's declaration" and have seen that it is the end product of the last ten years of propaganda by the China Lobby, the preventive war crowd, and the soldiers.

"The American public seems to have decided that the beguiling voices of these groups apparently calling on it to put the interests of America ahead of the interests of the United Nations have at last produced a plain statement of what they are calling for—the commitment of United States power to the defense of an untenable position in an unjust cause."

There are other witnesses. Mr. J. B. McGeachy, conservative commentator on the Canadian national radio network, not long ago made a coast-to-coast broadcast criticizing Washington's Taiwan policy. Picking up a U.S. slang expression, he said this policy is "screwy."

Three weeks leter he said he had received more letters about this broadcast than any other broadcast he had made in five years, that the replies were 25 to one in favour of his position, and that "all the letters from the United States were friendly."

Mr. McGeachy went on to say that standing with fixed bayonets at various points on the Asian perimeter cannot be the best way to live at peace with the people of Asia. He felt negotiation and economic aid was the way.

Many U.S. citizens listen to Canadian radio stations to get a more accurate picture of what is happening in the world.

The disturbance of U.S. public opinion has begun to make itself felt. A resolution was introduced in the Senate to limit the President's discretion re Quemoy and Matsu.

Fourteen of the most influential Protestant spokesmen in the U.S. (including three bishops and six church editors) have just issued a long statement denouncing in angry terms "the current drift in Washington toward war."

They tell the President they "are shocked" that he is being advised "to consent to all-out war and the use of atomic bombs. Such an irresponsible policy would expose the United States Government and the American people before the whole world as wanton aggressors . . .

Why "shall we start all-out war against the Chinese mainland . . . There are millions of upright Americans whose Christian conscience would never tolerate such an action.

"We think that to risk world-wide atomic war for the prestige of Chiang Kai-shek would not only be a folly, but a crime of the first magnitude."

Noting the statements that the U.S. is "honor bound" to defend Quemoy and Matsu, the churchmen ask, "Why should Russia, also 'honor bound' by treaty, stand idly by and see her ally destroyed by atomic war?"

They quote the New York Times which said it would be "a vast tragedy" if the U.S. should "stumble into war against the intentions and wishes of the majority of our people and our Allies."

The churchmen recall that, "In years we negotiated the Berlin Blockade, the thorny question of Trieste, the Korean war, and the jungle war in Indochina. Shall we now plunge mankind into the abyss for the tiny islands of Quemoy and Matsu? These islands are a part of the Chinese mainland and we should evacuate them."

On Taiwan (which they too call Formosa), they are not so clear. Yet they do not favour holding it come what may: "We must negotiate either on the basis of the 'two-China' concept or as a neutralized sanctuary for Chiang Kai-shek under the trusteeship of the United Nations."

This picture was taken shortly after the end of the Korean war. It shows Robert Smith, first quadruple amputee to return from the Korean war. He is shown cuddling his son, Don Eugene, only a few weeks old at that time. Who could imagine that the mothers of the United States, any more than the mothers of any other country, wish to see their sons become "amps"—and worse?

Perhaps the higher in society one lives, the more rarified the atmosphere. This is different from the man-in-the-street's position reported by Anthony West: Formosa is Chinese, that's what counts.

And the sharpest reaction at the moment is coming against the idea of hostilities over Quemoy and Matsu. That seems to most people in the U.S. to be the imminently dangerous situation, with Taiwan a question not quite so urgent. The realization is not yet so widespread that it will be difficult to offer the Chinese something which is theirs already (Quemoy and Matsu) for something that is also theirs (Taiwan). We shall see if the man in the street gains the day.

Perhaps the most significant development in the U.S. is this: The Defense Department has admitted that four of its personnel received injuries — two possibly permanent — in atomic tests held in Nevada in 1952 and 1955. It was the press that forced this admission, which came after a handbook issued jointly by the Atomic Energy Commission, the Defense Department and the Civil Defense Administration had said that there had been no injuries in the Neveda tests.

What does this make of all the reassuring official pap designed to accustom people to the idea they might survive nuclear war intact (at lease some of them)? Three official sources have lied, and been caught at it.

No people in the world fears nuclear war more than the people of the U.S. The world campaign against the preparations for atomic war, and the World Assembly for Peace, will help the people of the U.S. too to find the road to peace.

10,000 Times More Energy Ready

WHAT WILL MAN DO WITH HIS FORTUNE IN URANIUM? IS IT TO BE COLD WAR OR PEACEFUL COMPETITION?

By MICHAEL HINCKER

LORD Salisbury, Lord President of the Council, recently made an historic announcement in London. "The more we need uranium," he declared, "the more we find it." A fortnight later, Professor G. Petrovsky wrote in Soviet Weekly that a recent estimate of uranium resources revealed that there was a supply of energy which was 10,000 times greater than that of the known reserves of petrol and coal.

But what is going to be done with this fortune? Supposing it is not used to destroy the world, but to make life more pleasant, that it is not stocked in the form of bombs, but expended to lighten man's toil, how could it be distributed and consumed? This problem is in the minds of a great many people.

War or peace?

Peaceful coexistence or international tension?

Poverty or comfort for the people of under-developed countries?

These are the questions which take on a new look in this year of 1955.

The most advanced countries can, from now on, speedily help the poorer ones to have at their disposal easily produced energy on a large-scale, help them to build a nation that is prosperous and peaceful. But will they do this, and how will they do it? The future of peace seems so full of marvels that one does not want to question it.

AN ATOMIC MARSHALL PLAN

Since the beginning of the year three plans have been put forward. The first, in chronological order, is a United States plan, of private origin but approved, it appears, by President Eisenhower. On January 17 the Soviet government published its communique on "scientific, technical and industrial aid," which it offered to other states. Finally, a White Paper was published in London on February 15.

Last September eleven electric companies of the north-east part of the United States formed a company to build atomic power stations with private capital. The Edison group has announced that a factory is being built which would have a power output of over 100,000 kilowatts. Considering the international connections of this group, it may be guessed that the atomic energy produced will not be just for New York and New England.

Another company, unknown to the public, is concerned with worldwide atom plans of the U.S. Formed recently, it has expanded rapidly: already in 1953 its turnover was over a billion dollars. It is the General Atomic Corporation, a creation of the main corporations of the U.S. electric-engineering, electronic, aviation, oil and armaments industries.

Until now this group, which aspires to be the General Motors and the General Electric of the atomic era, has shown little interest in industrial energy. Its business has been primarily military—submarines, rockets, bomb-parts and so on. When its Chairman, Mr. John Jay Hopkins, put before the last Congress of American Industry the idea of an "Atomic Marshall Plan" he was heard with great attention. It is known that he spoke with the government's agreement.

This plan would run for one hundred years. Its official aim: to improve living conditions in the under-developed regions. Its method: to finance and construct atomic reactors in countries poor in energy. Its status: a government initiative carried out by private enterprise, the "friendly countries" being invited to take part both in the initiative and in its realization.

Mr. Hopkins outlined the following stages:—

(1) The construction of experimental reactors (training for technicians and production of radioactive isotopes);

(2) The construction of pre-fabricated reactors for delivery to regions where access is difficult;

(3) The construction of industrial reactors (100,000 kilowatts or more);

(4) The construction of "breeder reactors", that is, reactors which would produce their own combustion material.

The chairman of the General Atomic Corporation even went so far as to suggest a selling price for the third stage: 250 dollars for every kilowatt of power of the installation.

SOVIET TECHNICAL HELP

There have been many reports that one or more reactors are already supplying industrial energy to the Soviet distribution network (in the United States "atomic current" will be on the market sometime next summer). It is also known that the use of radio active elements in the metal industry is becoming current practice in the Soviet Union. The government decision of January 17 is thus no surprise from the technical point of view. It is in the political and economic field that it has dumbfounded some western circles.

The U.S.S.R. offered systematic help to several people's democracies or people's republics (China, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Eastern Germany) both for the production and the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. What is more, "the question of increasing the number of countries to which the U.S.S.R. could also give her help and her assistance" was studied in Moscow. The Soviet proposal is very precise:

It deals with atomic furnaces of 5,000 kilowatts which could be used industrially, but which would be more or less experimental with the aim of creating the scientific bases for work with a view to the peaceful use of atomic energy.

The Soviet Union would supply these countries with fissionable material for use in the furnaces and would receive from these countries "the corresponding raw materials."

Soviet laboratories would be opened to research workers and engineers from the countries to whom such aid was given.

In London some references were made to the relatively small power of the furnaces, whereas larger reactors are being built in Britain. But faced with evidence that the technical advance of the Soviet Union shown in the production of model small range power stations, is also likely in the development of other categories of reactors, this position had to be abandoned.

Indeed, it has been announced by Professor Petrovsky that the most recent type of Soviet reactor is the size of an ordinary car and is almost as powerful as the Kuibyshev hydro-electric station being built on the Volga. In other words it is capable of developing about two million kilowatts.

BRITAIN AND ATOMIC EXPORTS

Great Britain has just fixed her atomic power target at two million kilowatts for 1965 and 15 million kilowatts by 1975). This ambitious programme which is quite feasible from the technical point of view, was published on February 15 in the White Paper. In the next ten years, Britain hopes to spend 1.2 billion pounds on new coal and petrol power stations, a quarter of this being reserved to finance the 12 atomic power stations which will cost progressively less and less, falling from 400 pounds per kilowatt of power to less than a hundred at the end of the plan — estimates which can be compared with Mr. Hopkins 250 dollars.

But what interests us here is what Mr. Geoffrey Lloyd, British Minister of Fuel and Power, called the "delicate question" of the government plans, that is, the export of reactors. The White Book is discrete on this, declaring that the moment should also be foreseen when Britain can establish an important export trade.

Asked to comment and particularly to reply to the question: "Will you export your technical knowledge in the matter?" the head of the Atomic Office, Sir Edwin Plowden, replied rather vaguely: "The British Government has approved the Eisenhower plan for an international atomic pool."

In reality, observers believe that British electro-atomic material will be exported, but to the Commonwealth countries, and that only when private companies will be producing sufficient quantities.

THREE DIFFERENCES IN THE SOVIET AND WESTERN PLANS FOR AID

There is a great chasm between these two plans. First, from the practical point of view, the Soviet Union presents a firm offer, while the United States announces a plan for the future and the British reply with a vague statement of principle. In the present stage of atomic development, the use of a furnace of 5,000 kilowatts is worth more than the promise of a reactor of 60,000, especially since the latter can be manufactured from the former without waiting for ten or twenty years and paying a high price to get a nicely packaged reactor from the General Atomic Corporation.

Another technical difference which also has political consequences concerns the supply of fissionable material. According to the British White Book, a reactor has to be "refuelled" every three or five years, and the cost of this refuelling for a power station of 60,000 kilowatts is about five million pounds sterling.

Thus, it is not enough to help a country to build an atomic power station. Its supplies of fissionable material must also be ensured in a satisfactory way, at least until all countries possess "breeder" reactors. The Soviet contract envisages these supplies on the basis of an exchange of raw materials for processed products, but the British and U.S. statements do not mention the question at all.

This is a very important aspect of the problem. If the terms of the aid are not clear, the countries to whom the reactors are offered risk becoming dependent on the good will of a foreign power for maintaining their nuclear supplies (even if they themselves are rich in radioactive minerals) for the West these minerals are already in the hands of the mining trusts of the great industrial countries.

It has been extremely difficult for the Swiss financial groups which want to build an experimental power station, to get the U.S. companies to promise to deliver fissionable material to them, and it is not known what this cost the Swiss Republic, either politically or financially. And what will it cost the Sudan, Indonesia, Bolivia, Pakistan, Spain or Egypt?

The third technical question which is extremely serious for the countries who will be given atomic aid is: what will this cost? The Soviet proposal does not mention the price, but if we look at the usual trading methods of this country we can suppose that this aid will not mean an exchange of currency.

Prices have been estimated by the Western side, and the British have suggested that the atomic kilowatt-hour would cost 0.6 of a penny, compared with 0.7 of a penny for the coal or oil power stations. But in fact all these figures mean very little. There are a number of elements which will modify them in the years to come and they leave out of the picture one essential element: private industry is to dominate all the western atomic market and thus we can expect it to demand royalties on its patents.

RIVALRY OR PEACEFUL COMPETITION

However, the fundamental difference between these proposals of atomic aid goes deeper. The Soviet Union has offered her atomic aid not only to the socialist countries but also to other countries" (and it is thought in the West that Yugoslavia and India will want to accept), while the western comments centre around the British and American plans which only speak of "friendly countries."

We should thoroughly understand the point of view of the Western countries who for years have been bringing up plans of plenty for the under-developed countries, such as Point Four, and the Marshall Plan.

Up to June 1953, they criticized the Soviet Union in the United Nations because she could not at that moment "aid" the poor countries.

But today, the U.S.S.R. is building a steel plant in India on a financial basis advantageous to India, the German Democratic Republic is sending a sugar refinery to Indonesia, and so on.

The Western criticism now runs along different lines because, they say, "the Soviet bloc has increased its offers of technical and economic aid to various nations, particularly to the under-developed countries of the Near East, the Middle East and the Far East," and because "the offers to provide technicians, engineers and scientists have been made to some 16 countries," and because "this kind of assistance covers all fields," we are supposed to draw the conclusion that "the cold war between Russia and the West in the technical and economic field was greatly intensified during 1954."

These declarations were made on February 21 in Washington by Mr. D. A. Fitzgerald, the administrator of the Foreign Operations Administration.

What then does the West consider this economic aid

SCIENCE

DISCOVERIES OF THE MONTH

EAT CHLORELLA

Science has found a quick and simple way to put the sun's rays to work and produce food from a test tube. The recipe calls for chlorella, an alga which looks like tiny green confetti.

The "confetti" is immersed in warm water and carbonic acid is added. When exposed to the sun's rays it develops rapidly and turns the water and carbonic acid into sugar and protein.

Chlorella is cultivated in plexiglass tubes. Large scale tests are planned in France, Japan and Israel.

NEW USE FOR ULTRA-SOUNDS

The Soviet engineer, A. Berezhnoi, has used ultra-sounds in a new gadget called the "defectoscope". This instrument can in many cases detect structural weaknesses in different pieces of machinery on board ship. This can be done without dismantling the machinery. The gadget is merely applied to one end of the part to be tested.

The "defectoscope" gives warning of the weakness long before any failure takes place.

MACHINE TO MAKE YOU SLEEP

A number of clinics in Paris are experimenting with a machine for making people sleep, to be used in sleeping cures. A continuous electrical current passes through the patient's body between two electrodes on the brow and a lower limb. It is a very weak current — about four volts at a twentieth of an ampere. It causes no discomfort, but rather induces a feeling of well-being.

AND TO KEEP YOU AWAKE

It is dangerous for a stratospheric pilot to fall asleep at the controls. But that is what he is prone to do, especially if a defect in pressurization reduces the amount of oxygen. An American engineer has brought out a gadget with a dial lighting up at regular intervals. The dial says, Are You Asleep? The pilot answers by pressing a button. If he doesn't, a siren screams into his ear. If he still doesn't react, he is automatically ejected, with his seat, on the end of a parachute.

TEN THOUSAND TIMES MORE

to be, in which they include their atomic aid? In a study published last January by The Banker, their aim is quite clearly outlined, as follows: The White House seeks to stem the communist advance in the poorer countries of Asia by increasing the flow of U.S. capital being invested in these countries and by increasing technical aid.

The same definition was used in a recent leading article in the French big business review, l'Usine Nouvelle, which said, "it would not be any more difficult to direct . . . export mainly to those zones where the economy should be built up both in our own interest and to strengthen the security of the free world."

A NEW WORLD ATOMIC STRATEGY

What is necessary now, wrote The Banker once more, is acceleration of the flow of capital and a sharper sense of urgency. . . . The plan should catch the imagination of the peoples both in the creditor countries and in the benefitting countries. Drums and trumpets should be part of the game. An atmosphere of urgency should be created. . . . Whatever the name given to the plan, the stake for which it is launched is immense. For it is probably in Asia and not in Europe that the contest between communism and liberty will finally be settled.

Although Great Britain prefers to go her own way with her Colombo Plan and restrict the export of nuclear reactors to the Commonwealth countries, Holland replied in the affirmative to Mr. Stassen.

In France big business circles, terrified by the defeat they suffered in Indochina, tend to support the American program on the following conditions: (1) that each nation shall contribute a proportion of its national revenue; (2) that the national industries of the western countries should be able to find a place in the scheme proportionate to the financial assistance given by their governments.

This is the beginning, this is the opening of atomic competition.

Let us hope that this contest, with the help of the peoples who are given aid, can remain a peaceful match whose results will be full of bright promise, corresponding to the infinite energy of the atom.

The real state of urgency, proclaimed for so many centuries by the trumpets of human conscience, is that of the hunger and dependence in which hundreds of millions of men languish.

Today atomic aid can put an end to this state of urgency and eliminate from human speech the sad words: under-developed countries. But this atomic aid must be peaceful aid, serving the freedom of the peoples.

A Stamp Collector

NAGOYA, JAPAN

I am a stamp collector who lives in Japan. I would like to correspond with someone living in your country in order to further international friendship through personal contact. I would also like to exchange stamps but as I have no friends overseas I wonder if your paper could help me get in touch with someone.

I graduated from high school this last spring and am now helping in the cleaning and laundry store which is our family business. My home is situated in the centre of Nagoya, which is one of Japan's three largest cities. Its population is about 1,200,000 and it has a very fine transportation system.

I hope that we shall be able to establish some kind of contact in the future. My address is: 28 Ikeda-cho, Naka-ku, Nagoya.

Parliamentary Exchange?

TORONTO

We are gratified to learn that the Parliament of Canada has received an invitation from the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. to undertake an exchange of delegations between the parliaments of the two countries. The statement of the Hon. L. B. Pearson, to the effect that the invitation is being seriously studied, will be welcomed by the great majority of Canadians, who heartily support any moves leading to the lessening of international tensions and to the improvement of relations between Canada and the U.S.S.R.

However, as has been pointed out by a number of newspapers, Mr. Pearson's reaction to the invitation is one of extreme caution . . .

There is no doubt that an exchange of delegations would only serve to strengthen still further the bonds of understanding and friendship between our two great countries.

A Peace Worker in Mexico

VALLE DE BRAVO, MEXICO

I have fallen in love with Mexico — with the climate, the beauty of everything, with the people, especially the latter. Now I at once qualify the extent that I speak of "Mexico," since all I have seen of it is the little 100 mile strip between its capital and Valle which is as though I spoke of Canada having say travelled only from Toronto to Montreal; and I haven't been here much more than two months.

I have had the dry season and may change my tune when the rains begin, or I'm told I may. Others say the rains are not much, they come in quick tropical storms with sunshine right until the drops start coming down and sunshine once more as soon as the rain is over—no long cloudy spells as feature B.C.'s climate.

Coming from our climate, the country amazes me. For instance, I was asked to a house-warming near-by a couple of weeks ago. One of the amusements was combing the peach trees for ripe peaches. Now picture that—winter here is just over, these peaches, oranges, lemons, avocodoes ripening now have been maturing to that all winter, which to me makes things just topsy-turvy.

Just in case a Peace Review reader might visit the country, and how tickled I would be if a fellow peace worker showed up in Valle, I give two hints. The days are warm to very warm, but the nights are always chilly. One can stand woollen clothes in the evenings at least. I made a big mistake and suffered for it, in leaving my winter outfit in B.C. I needed it here badly in January—Valle is 550 feet elevation.

And, if possible, it is a good idea to learn a little Spanish, just those phrases necessary to a traveller, if no more. I find it very true that the people here like visitors to use the Mexican language when in Mexico, and will go to a lot of trouble to help visitors pronounce words the right way.

I expect to visit the Mexican committee for peace when in Mexico City as I am lonely for the company of peace workers.

Mothers of the Whole World

TORONTO

"In the name of the life we give, let us unite to save our children," is the theme of an Appeal for a World Congress of Mothers to be held in July, 1955. The theme is adopted by the Canadian Preparatory Committee in its appeal to "Mothers of Canada" now in circulation.

Endorsed by the Congress of Canadian Women, the appeal is directed to every Canadian woman, particularly mothers, but also to all interested in the future of our Canadian children. Mrs. Rae Luckock, national president of the CCW, is taking the initiative in inviting representation from all women's organizations on the Canadian Preparatory Committee.

Appeals for Help

TORONTO, ONT.

I read in your good little paper that Mr. Yalowega had donated fifty dollars to the peace movement. It shows a good example to the rest of the people in Canada.

Perhaps everyone cannot afford so much. A poor man as myself I give ten dollars and hope it may help a little. If everyone who would like to live a few years more would give as much or a little less, then the Peace Congress could proceed with its work faster and without worry.

I appeal to everyone who would like to see our children and old people enjoy life now and in the future, to help and help now because tomorrow may be too late.

Perhaps some Ukrainian paper might also publish this appeal.

PEACE CAN BE WON

Day after day, hour after hour
Radio, screen and press,
Tell of the war that is bound to come,
Tell of the world in a mess . . .

Repeating again that the bomb must fall
Trying to deafen us to hope's call.

The call that something can be done,
The fact that Peace can be won.

Listen! the people are talking back
Rising in wrath at the threat of attack
Signing the pledge to destroy the bomb
And make life safe for people . . .

That is something that can be done,
That is how Peace is won.

What have we done to swell the cry,
That never again shall our sons die
Never again shall the skies rain fire
Destroying millions in a funeral pyre,

Have we let the papers tie our hands
With their tales of woe and gloom
Or are we part of the world wide cry
That will save the world from doom?

Harken, there's something than can be done
There is a way that Peace is won!

Out to the streets with the World Appeal,
Urge all to sign, sign, sign,
Then will our hearts rise high when we feel
The warm sun of Peace and the freedom from fear,

When we know that together when we are as one
The people have shown that Peace can be won.

Nature and Man

Industrial rape of nature, deforestation, soil-depletion and erosion followed by floods, forest fires, air- and water-pollution, insect pests and plant diseases. Extreme overpopulation. Worldwide extinction of wild life as for example the death of sea-birds by oil-pollution. In the wake of H-bomb experiments we get radioactive rain, fish, grass, change of weather and unknown after-effects on future generations. Simultaneous destruction of man's inner nature and of his environmental nature. Cruel hunting, vivisection, bull-fighting. Mechanical interruption of natural processes. Organic components being scorched in engines and converted by machines, thus reverting to physical elements. In trying to conquer nature, man has himself succumbed to the machine, making it his master instead of this tool.

SOCIAL INTEGRATION

The 20. century — the most warlike and bloody century of all ages. While three fourths of humanity are undernourished, race of armaments continue. Everybody fighting somebody. Violation of social contracts; treaties hardly worth the sheets on which they are written. Crisis affecting science, art, philosophy, morals, habits and all the different aspects of civilization. Attempts to make societies function like machines; fixed boundaries, static formal systems and conventions take the place of natural organic patterns and add to social discord. Hopeless moves to «win the peace» and to stop Hell-bomb experiments; all efforts to «save the world» seem fruitless. Economic, political, cultural, educational, mental, religious and sexual problems are all tied up in a Gordian knot which cannot be untied as long as their inter-relationship is not understood. The Cobolt-bomb holds the lead in the race between technical and social development. Man has to «pull his mind together» or perish.

Mentality

The intense social pressure and the drive for efficiency and haste cause apathy, insecurity, restlessness, impatience, hysteria, tension, frustration, anxiety, rootlessness, emptiness and despair - the mental climate for war. People resort to daydreaming as they do to alcohol, narcotics, sleep, or diversion, excitement, sensation, speed and other forms of escapism. Standardized education and the monotony of mechanized life produce stereotyped characters, who are quite susceptible to propaganda and mass suggestion, who copy each other and are afraid of being themselves. Impersonal relationships cause intense feelings of loneliness. Fear-hate complex engender individual suspicion, egotism, aloofness, arrogance, snobbishness, greed, recklessness, hypocrisy, dishonesty — and collective antagonism, intolerance, isolationism, scapegoatism and discrimination, all permeated and nurtured with a false philosophy of contradictions between peoples, races, sexes, religious creeds, classes, political ideologies and social positions, undermining the recognition of the sanctity of the human person.

Let us Organize A Preventive War Against the Causes of War

All causes of international and social unrest are knit together, but with the aim of expediating direct world-wide coöperation and promoting studies, we must elaborate a basic classification. In the outline on this page I have divided the causes into fifteen main classes. Under each class I have listed two groups of «social physicians», i.e. persons who devote a great part of their lives to the solution of social problems:

A. Those who examine conditions leading to crisis and disaster (Marked with an arrow pointing down), and
B. Those who promote healing ideas, plans or projects (Marked with an arrow pointing upwards).

Everywhere we run across very able, often publicly unknown, individuals with knowledge and constructive ideas for a world-wide renaissance. We must bring about the coöperation between these people by listing them in an international «Who's who». The handbook should include all relevant addresses and also references to books, films, institutions and journals which deal positively with social relations. Thus it should aid all who want to collaborate across frontiers to emancipate humanity. I hope that among the selected persons to whom I am mailing this first outline, there may at least be one who can stir the interest of a great sponsor or institution under whose auspices we may achieve this practical step. Useful references and suggestions, as well as criticisms and corrections for the next edition of this outline, will always be appreciated. Those who return this issue with their comments will receive additional copies.

To make certain of being on my mailing list, please send a note or some printed matter. But do not expect individual answers to all letters. I am hammering many irons on my anvil, I work slowly and I have no office or organization.

Yours faithfully,

Ulf Christensen, Bygdøy allé 26, Oslo - Norway.

Personal Development

People who are degraded to purely mechanical functions are restricted to the development of some highly specialized dexterity at the cost of a world of productive impulses and faculties. Schools and universities, «educational factories», walled off from the living world, serving established system rather than human happiness. Over-specialization stifling personal development. Mass training instead of individual tuition. Over-emphasis on theoretical knowledge, textbook-tyranny, uniform curricula and limited means of expression — frustrate abilities and creative desires, impoverish emotional life, impede the freedom to develop, kill children's tremendous urge for knowledge and lead to: levelling of personalities, careerist ambitions, honour-seeking in education, competitive-mindedness, anti-social behavior, professional idiotism combined with ignorance, the whole «learner system» whereby people are graded according to book-knowledge, exams and titles while more important qualities are overlooked such as intuition, open-mindedness, grace, warmth, kindness, sincerity, sensitivity, self-expression, sense of humour, harmonious character and integrated personality. Threats, dishonesty, coaxing and punishment in upbringing corrupt the growing soul, cause neurosis and disturb the abilites to think logically or to concentrate.

Comprehension and Expression

The tyranny of words - words of intellectual confusion and blind agitation, demagogy, abused phraseology and empty verbosity. A lot of illusions, abstract notions which are confused with reality. Unclear religious and political symbols. Distorted news. Cramming of same ideals into millions of minds, oversimplification, overstressed principles, extremist «black and white» thinking. Hard and fast definitions instead of artistic expression. So many think in terms of such rigid categories that relationships between things escape them. Little understanding of the process of learning, the laws of thought and elementary semantics. Division between theory and practice, between reason and emotion. Dishonesty against oneself and others. People react shallowly, do not have time to use their mental abilities, fail to think for themselves and to use independent judgement. Feeling of hopeless isolation when natural abilities of expression and contact have been inhibited and crippled. International language still in the embryo form.

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION

In industry and the public services: Too many employed in unproductive work. A chaos of areas, of authorites and of rates. Too much red tape, manipulation of responsibility, domination in administration instead of team-work, diciplinarianism instead of encouragement. Lack of consideration going on from owners to directors, to managers until it reaches the very least member of the staff. Isolated management and absentee- or state ownership instead of part-ownership, profit-sharing, incentive management and rational division of responsibilites.

In organizations: Mechanical, centralized, pyramidal formations and fixed policies which lead to: detrimental pressure upon the individual mind, regimentation, restrictive and exclusive practices, lack of flexibility, social climbing, string pulling, antagonism, formation of factions, cliques and sects — instead of lateral association and central liason, which would inspire unity in diversity, harmony in variety and promote richness of initiative.

Economics

Money for money's sake, omnivorous business-mentality, investments for the Golden Calf and not for general welfare lead to: Waste of natural and human resources, products «heavy with human tears», monopolistic practices, trade wars, manipulation of credit, financial interest in soaring armament budgets to secure profits out of public treasury. The debt-interest-dividend system thrives on under-consumption and causes: housing shortage, poverty, misery, bribery, theft, larceny, dirty speculation, tricks in all trades, deceptive and excessive advertising, superfluous middlemen, economic short-circuits, hard times, unnecessary class-warfare between the «have-nots» and those who have, mass labour strikes, unemployment instead of «technical disemployment». Unsatisfactory alternatives to «conservatives poverty» are «socialist restrictions»: Check on industry, imports, production and trade, regulations and controls everywhere, abolition of free enterprise, nationalization instead of direct co-ownership, the ordeal of bureaucratic mismanagement, taxation far exceeding the amount of governmental services given in return — still making people dependent on the very services which they are taxed to provide.

Government Power

The state as a means of domination instead of an agency of service. False authority based on power and prestige, destroying freedom — instead of genuine authority based on understanding and insight, which would increase freedom. Ballot-systems, party-systems, communistic and capitalistic orders are all blueprints of the machine, imposed upon society, making people tools of established systems and leading to: Centralization of power, an unscrupulous tug-of-war for positions, usurpation, party-political prestige, nationalism and chauvinism, billions of words of frothy debating, failing international negotiations, armies of wealth-squandering politicians in office, tax-exploitation of producers driving them to waste human and natural resources, all kinds of political chicanery — instead of true sociology and scientific government. A wide chasm between governments and peoples: Man versus the state.

General Principles of Future Government

IT IS BETTER TO LIGHT A CANDLE THAN TO CURSE THE DARKNESS

(Chinese Proverb)

Man's free thought is his most important tool. When the surgeons decide on operation, when the fire-men attack the flames, they do not use lobby agreements or diplomatic chess moves, but experience and insight. In order to master the problems of society that surge up in front of our generation, we must stand so independently that we do not let our approach to the facts be destroyed by party politics, back stage intrigues or opportunism. Knowledge is something objective that binds us together in the same way. Therefore people with professional experience usually reach an understanding in the course of their discussion. In the World Health Organization, FAO, ILO, The World Postal Union and the Meteorologic World Organization, where professional people lead the work, the problems are greatly mastered. But from the UN, the Security Council and other political assemblies, the press and radio incessantly report about negotiations that come to a standstill or fail. Most political news does not give great hope for those directly concerned. The politicians are captured in a wilderness. They fail because they let their ideologies, religions, personal motives or matters of prestige interfere with their understanding of the facts. They also fail because they are compelled to decide in so many and differing matters that it becomes totally impossible for them to judge each case conscientiously.

Let us put a spotlight on the conditions under which the party-politicians work. The individual member of a political assembly is often forced to demonstrate his ignorance. One day he must take a decision about one of the state industries, the next day about NATO and German Rearmament, next day about for instance the Witch-Craft Act, about prices and trade restrictions etc. etc. To orientate himself he receives bundles of papers that not even the most voracious reader would be capable of ploughing through. In some cases the debates and votes show real knowledge, but often they expose striking incompetance. When insight fails, the politician toes the party line and gives far-fetched reasons. A veil of secrecy is readily used to hide deficiencies that otherwise would have been too obvious. In many cases any society of housewives, farmers or high school pupils would have come to better conclusions than the national assemblies. When professional people prepare excellent committee-reports, they are often vitiated by the tug-of-war between the members of political bodies. Well administered public institutions are also run by professional people; the good results are rather achieved in spite of the parties than because of them. When leading professional people avoid participating in political life, it may be due to fear of the majority of politicians who are ill-informed or who see the problems through coloured glasses. It must be rather depressing when a good professional effort is voted down because of ignorance, power-complexes or prestige. All politicians can never become qualified as encyclopedists. Therefore, the only solution is to establish an organization which can solve local, regional and international problems in a far more rational way than the present assemblies of politicians.

This organization or institution should concentrate on all problems which cry for a solution, but which the political bodies have failed to solve. With this in mind, we divide the causes of social disintegration and human unhappiness into groups (see other page). At the same time we enlist those men and women who most clearly diagnose the ills of society and explain how to heal them. By analyzing all kinds of social literature one may deduce many fields of work and study for those who attack the causes of international and social unrest. In this paper fifteen main fields are delineated. In this connection it can be mentioned that large modern hospitals are generally divided into fifteen departments. The division below may be improved and further divided into subdivisions. The main point is that we achieve a practical division of labour. People who devote themselves to the general welfare of mankind might be organized rationally by coming to an agreement on these special fields of work:

1. Man and nature. 2. Social integration. 3. Mentality. 4. Comprehension and expression. 5. Personal development and education. 6. Organization and administration. 7. Economics. 8. Social and public security. 9. Government, power. 10. Violence, non-violence. 11. Sex. 12. Health. 13. Material civilization. 14. Cultural life, art — and 15. Religion.

For each of these fields we need local discussion forums and professional teams, regular regional congresses and international scientific councils («Brains Trust»). The teams should work along the same principle as scientific teams, where they first define the problems and then cooperate to solve them. To awaken popular interest in the scheme, and to engage top-ranking professional people in all countries, further teams of organizers would be needed. These assistants might also be coordinated by means of a directory (see other page). Partly they could be grouped according to language area and geographical area, partly according to personal possibilities. One must experiment in order to trace the best division of labour. In the meanwhile one may consider the following division into groups:

A. Contact groups for local registration and exchange of contacts in connection with the international work. B. Assistants within all political parties, as well as independent representatives who work upon political assemblies, departments, official committees and municipal councils. C. Contacts within press and radio to keep the public informed about all matters that are taken up. D. Groups of people who provide economic means to begin the scheme (The money which is needed to launch the plan is equal only to the cost of world military expences in the time that it took to read this sentence.) E. Linguists, illustrators, commercial artists, photographers, film producers, actors and composers who give the new solutions such inspiring expressions that they carry the people with them.

The suggested scheme would signify that all proposals for social reform might be raised at open discussion meetings, and then be dealt with by professional teams and congresses. Through the press and radio the public would be kept informed so that anybody might participate with criticism and suggestions. When presented for the political assemblies, the solutions would be so thoroughly contemplated and prepared that all irrelevant objections would be dropped. In this way the function of the national assemblies would be limited to their original main task: to act as popular organs of control. We would take the step from illusory to rational democracy. The «government of the people, by the people and for the people» would at any time consist of the most able in each field. The best in present thinking and learning would be given a chance instead of hindered. Thus civilization may find itself.

If a situation is vacant as conductor of an orchestra, a factory manager or a theater director, the election among the candidates is carried without any voting-system. The right people are engaged in view of the recognition bestowed upon them by earlier achievements, and the position they have won in the esteem of their fellow men. The national voting-systems with four or five lists of a few persons nominated in each district every few years give greater possibilities for framed elections than genuine selection. In future society such formal elections will appear not only irrational, but impossible as a means to select the most able social leadership. If persons like Gandhi, Nansen, Michael Scott or Lord Boyd Orr personally could organize social teams, get their work financed and receive as much publicity as the politicians do today — we would no more feel the necessity of political governments. We would achieve a social order where no one would feel the domination of a hierarchy. Such factors as threats and suppression, servility and fear of authority would be out of date. The pilot on the ship does not need the cold hand of law to defend his authority. All passengers and crew rely on his responsibility and knowledge about the shoals, and all are equally interested in getting the ship well into the harbour.

Since 1950 a «third way» in foreign policy has been suggested. A world community of societies presupposes also a third way for the social order. Many people have set their wits to work to find an advanced alternative to eastern Socialism and western Capitalism. The solution presented here signifies that social awareness and responsibility can replace imposed authority. The orchestra of democracy can be properly tuned by rationalizing the whole public administration. Insight and understanding can be placed in the high seat. Only knowledge can be power. After an eventful development Parliaments and Governments can silently slide into the background and at last only be conserved as social antiques like palaces and royal houses. This is how I presently believe we can win the peace. U. C.

Public and Social Security

Crime, larceny, theft, juvenile delinquency, prostitution etc. resulting from unjust economy, social insecurity, frustrations in homes, schools, the forces etc. Victims of social injustice need aid but are treated with seclusion and austerity. Roman law is still being practised. In many countries political opponents and blunted criminals end in the same prisons. The first ones should go free, the others cured or re-educated for life in special schools, psychopatic and psychiatric institutions and asylums. The legal system, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, the cold hand of law, myriads of decrees and regulations, often sustained with forced labour, police spies, witch hunts and judicial crimes are all used to safeguard obsolete systems, political despotism, militarism, social and economic injustice, deceptive notions of property.

Rigid legislation undermines people's sense of personal responsibility and promotes legal trickery. The result of the cases may depend on the lawyers' fees. Human rights are ignored by most governments. Nine years since the war there are still whole populations of displaced persons. Care for old people is generally inadequate. Too much life in institutions, both for old people and children.

SEX

Discrimination against women who are paid less and not admitted to all jobs. Sexual frustration resulting from prejudices and puritanical church morals, which together with the hard momentum of regimented life stint vitality and sensitiveness. Cold-hearted, intellectual love-making stimulated by cheap press, advertising and fourth class movies. Lack of knowledge of contraceptives and sterile periods, impeded rights to birth control, fifty per cent of all children are born against the desire of their parents. Lack of suitable social amenities frequently render it impossible to contact the right partners. Individualized love. Many false marriages that are preserved by means of formalities instead of love. Exaggerated monogamy, even combined with artificial insemination. Loss of possibility — or ability — to love without fear. Widespread frigidity and impotence lead to: Aggressive aversion to the natural, humane and pristine ways of life, perversion, rape, sadism, the cult of violence, men seeking outlet for their repressed impulses in militarism, using revolvers, guns etc. as unconscious phallic symbols. Sex conflicts, complexes and frustrations probably bottle up enough energy to create a completely new world.

Others:

Material Civilization

Separation of material life from art, «art for art's sake» while daily life is surrounded by ugliness; drab and dingy human beehives where unattractiveness is the dominant note, disorderly urban districts, «jerry-building» and «ribbon developements», slums, stereotyped clothing, neglect of aesthetic values. The oppressive dullness of buildings without character, with identical stairs and flats, no play of light and shadow, cold and warm colors, reflexes, proportions, no accordance with environment and nature — sap vitality, kill the imagination. Large industrial areas looking like neurotic volcanic eruptions. Gadgets complicating life rather than making it easier. Quantity before quality in mass-production. Old houses and constructions of cultural value are not maintained, but rot away. Vast expanses of bomb-ruins remain while there is lack of vision in rebuilding. Mania for grandour marked by mediocrity. Abnormal expansion of cities. Continuous world-wide housing shortage, war on want not yet declared while science is still applied for destructive purposes. Conspicious waste.

Lewis Mumford, Charlie Chaplin, Stuart Chase, Harold Rugg, Alfred Ewing, Krabbe°, l'Abbe Pierre † Gandhi, Karel Capek, Walter Rathenau, Oswald Spengler, Emile Zola, Leopardi, Eilert Sundt°, Thomas Hood, Ruskin, Carlyle, Tolstoi.

Others:

Violence, Non-violence

Acceptance of violence between peoples as a means to settle disputes between groups of politicians in office. The whole burden of violent assault is put upon impressionable youths; by means of conscription they are paralyzed into fearing commands rather than to trust their own personal judgement — and forged into smooth running cogs in the political and military machine. The power of weapons that do not kill is not yet properly realized. Uniformed forces are occupying the whole world, while the burden of defense budgets destroys the economy of most societies. Arms industries, financially interested in enormous national expenditures on modern means of annihilation, propagate international insecurity. Vast expenditure on obsolete methods of warfare continue and in many countries conscientious objectors are punished, although there is no defence against Hell-bombs.

Health

People whose lives are chained to rigid time-tables and methodical movements suffer from: Persistent fatigue, jangling nerves, ulcers, inability to relax, excessive use of drugs. Degenerative diseases resulting from distress, wrong eating habits, over- or undernutrition, wrong composition of diet, lack of vitamins, minerals, etc. Tooth cavities, poignant symptom of industrialized food provision, over-refining of flour, sugar etc. Belches of smoke, a layer of poisonous fumes and smog that stains lungs and clothes and kills vegetation. Dangerous pollution of streams and rivers. Inorganic farming, excessive use of chemical fertilizers and poison sprays devitalize crops, take away good old flavour, undermine health. Diseases of civilization spreading in pace with industrialization such as cancer, diabetes, polio, multiple sclerosis and lesions, deformities and abnormities caused by radio-activity. Caricature of sports: Watching the game instead of participating. Cruel boxing.

RELIGION

Wide chasm between teaching and practice. Worship and hypocrisy instead of beneficial advice for living. Churches linked up with states, powerful organizations or big business. Clericalism and ritualism. Preachers scaring congregations with hell to maintain own status. Even convinced atheists believe in evil as a diabolic possession — instead of analyzing its causes. Worship of symbols and false authorities: «big» politicians, «fuehrers», national anthems, uniforms, flags (as most children are taught to do), states, organizations (as party-politicians do, their temples are the state capitols), prominence, positions, wealth (as the bourgeois do), the Golden Calf, Mammon, gilt-edged securities, bank-notes, money (as businessmen do, their temples are the banks), and other idols and abstract symbols — — instead of Nature, Universal Laws and Christ in Man. CULTURAL LIFE, ART, SENSE OF BEAUTY

Old rural culture, folklore, folk songs, work songs, folk dances, dialects, handicrafts and traditions are dying out, while our minds are stuffed with advertisments, flimsy magazines, sensational headlines, noise, juke-boxes, hoarse propaganda, the cult of fashions, uninspired textbooks and banal programmes. Sense of beauty is broken down. Further disruption of cultural life through political interference. Lack of knowledge about other lands and peoples. When creative cultural activity is confined to over-crowded cities, the cleavage between town and countryside is accentuated. Days & events move with an ever increasing momentum, we are enslaved to the hours, minutes and seconds and do not have time to «have time». We become robot-minded and end up despising culture, freedom, love, beauty, nature and life itself.

Peace and Freedom

Mid-April saw two noteworthy developments in the United States in the interlocked spheres of peace and freedom. One was the sudden creation, and equally sudden damping-down of the April 15 Formosa war scare; the other was the holding in New York on April 16 of a crucial civil liberties conference calling for a "rebirth of freedom".

At the beginning of the month a statement attributed variously to Adml. Carney, U.S. Chief of Naval Operations (who later denied it), and to unnamed officials in the Pentagon, the American War Office, said there was evidence the Chinese were going to attack Matsu about the middle of the month. Some reports went so far as to name the exact date—April 15. And it was suggested that the American Government was giving serious thought to the advisability of taking "defensive action" before that date.

President Eisenhower at once made it clear that the Government had no evidence of any such intention of the Chinese to attack, administered a firm rebuke intended, apparently, primarily for Adml. Carney, and generally deprecated "war talk". He was supported by John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State. But the question remained, how did the "scare" begin?

The President indicated that steps would be taken to discourage public speculation by military leaders and officials on the likelihood of war, and James Reston, writing in the New York Times on April 3, referred to the "unco-ordinated press sections of the various departments", and to the public relations failure. But it was also hinted that the reports had been a form of kite-flying to test U.S. public reaction to the prospects of war over the off-shore islands.

Staged leaks

In this connection a particularly significant comment was made in the Conservative British Daily Telegraph, where, in the post-strike supplement of April 21, Peregrine Worsthorne wrote:

"Staged leaks by American Service leaders, prophesying early atomic war over the off-shore islands, have jolted the Administration into a tentative re-appraisal of its Formosan policy . . . The various accretions which Service leaders and certain Republican Senators attempted to graft on to this policy have been rejected in forthright statements by both President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles.

"The reasons for the shift in American policy appear to be two-fold. First, public opinion has increasingly opposed the risk of world war over two islands which are generally regarded as having little or no strategic value.

"Second, there is alarm in Washington at the prospect of being involved in war with China without allies. Canada and Britain would not support America, but Moscow, it is feared, might well support China. The Democrats have been putting much pressure on the Administration to get itself off the Matsu and Quemoy hook."

Stevenson plea

Moreover, when Adlai Stevenson, who was the Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1952, called, in a nation-wide radio address for a general condemnation of the use of force in the Formosa Strait, Mr. Dulles immediately claimed this as peace. The messages are heartening because they show that their authors have given serious thought to world disarmament and to how it can be achieved."

Role of Individual

Senator Everett M. Dirksen, Republican, Illinois, calling for "spiritual armour", and a recognition of the rôle of the individual in maintaning peace in the atomic era, said in New York on April 20 (New York Times, April 21):

> . . . if man could devise something to snuff out 100,000 lives, he could devise something to save 100,000 lives. [Senator Dirksen] asserted that just as scientists had gone back to the smallest unit of matter, the atom, so must mankind go back to the smallest unit—the individual man—for "our answer to the challenge of this hour."
> "All this imposes upon us as members of this great confraternity vast personal responsibilities," Mr. Dirksen continued. "The guided thought must be the answer to the guided missile. The spiritual slowdown is the antidote to sonic speeds. The human will is stronger than titanium or steel. With these moral weapons at our command we cannot fail in the search for spiritual fission as the one answer to the challenges of the nuclear age."
> What is needed, he said, is a "great chain reaction" of individual human resolve as the "one counterforce to the nuclear potential."

Freedom Rally

Appeal to Congress

The conference on freedom, which also marked the tenth anniversary of Roosevelt's death, was held in Carnegie Hall, New York, under the auspices of the U.S. Emergency Civil Liberties Committee The principal address was delivered by Senator William Langer, Republican, North Dakota, member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Discussions were held on the following topics:

Orthodoxy, Heresy, and the Individual Conscience; Labour and Livelihood under Tyranny; Passports, the Right to Travel, and World Understanding; Conformity versus Creativity in Art and Education; and The Politics of Fear.

The various discussions were summed up in a symposium on "The people's right and duty to speak up." The conference endorsed the following appeal to Congress:

> We call upon the Judiciary Committee of the House and Senate to establish a joint committee to investigate abridgments of civil liberties throughout the land.
> We urge the joint committee to review all existing legislation that limits constitutional freedoms of belief, expression, and association.
> We urge the Sub-committee on Constitutional Rights of the Senate Judiciary Committee to conduct hearings regarding the goverment's use of paid informers,
> We urge Congress to adopt a code of fair procedures for its investigations.
> We urge Congress to strengthen present legislation forbidding wiretapping and protecting the privacy of the mails.

Proud and Happy

In its report of the conference the New York Herald Tribune said (April 18), in part:

> Before he spoke, Senator Langer was asked why he was willing to address an organization whose top leaders have been cited for contempt of the Congress in which he sits.
> "I've been addressing them for three years," he said. "I like them very much."
> Senator Langer told his audience of 1,000 persons about the question he had been asked before he spoke. and added: "I reiterate to the press that I am delighted and proud and happy to be here."
> He then spoke about his friendship for Mr. and Mrs. Corliss Lamont. Mr. Lamont, vice-chairman of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and a lecturer in philosophy at Columbia University, has been cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions before the Senate Investigations sub-committee.
> The Emergency Civil Liberties Committee was formed in October, 1951, by some 150 clergymen, educators and professional men to aid persons and causes in cases involving Constitutional rights.

(In view of the importance of this conference, summaries of and extracts from some of the principal statements and discussions will be published in the next issue of UNITED STATES REPORT.)

I have no time . . .

I have no time for World Peace groups;
I am a mother.
My days are spent with cod-liver oil and baths in the sun—
So my son's sturdy limbs will better adorn
A barbed barricade
Somewhere afar, years to come, slain
By a lad like himself.

I have no time to write Congressmen
Urging neutrality,
Indeed no! I am too busy cooking dried prunes—
So the blood from his young brown chest
Will redder and richer run
Where he drops lifeless in some foreign land
Protecting investments.

I have no time to study why wars are;
I am raising a son,
Cleaning, polishing, ironing white rompers—
Then, hypnotized by fife and drum,
Stabbing with madness,
Ripping out hearts with a bright bayonet,
He will slaughter his brothers.
I have no time!

The Cloud over Mankind

The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission reported to Congress on April 15 that investigations had "failed to show any harmful effects from atomic tests in Nevada. The experts of the A.E.C. which is primarily concerned with the production of atomic weapons, declared:

The radio-active fall-out from the Nevada tests had created "no recognizable health hazard".

The possibilities of any genetic effects or changes in hereditary factors that would cause difficulties in unborn generations were remote.

Long-term Dangers

Growing concern in the United States as well as in other parts of the world over the actual, potential, and long-term dangers of atomic and hydrogen bomb tests was not greatly allayed last month by the A.E.C. scientists' assurances. For example Philip Morrison, one of America's outstanding nuclear physicists, in an article which underlined a recent request by the Federation of American Scientists for a disinterested United Nations' examination of the problem, wrote:

Are the tests, which are in no way scientific experiments, but wholly military in design and purpose, really necessary?

That they are yet a grave hazard seems unlikely; that they have the seeds of general danger is certain; that by chance at least some unsuspecting people will be affected by a test sooner or later is very possible . . . The Los Alamos Laboratory itself has published a manual for radiation workers which carries the sound admonition: "Any unnecessary exposure to radiation is too much".

If Tests go on . . .

And here are other authoritative American comments:

It should be clear that future accelerated H-bomb test programmes by several atomic Powers will ultimately reach a level which can be shown to be a serious threat to the genetic safety of all people of the world . . .

—Federation of American Scientists' proposal for a U.N. study of radiation effects.

It is inexcusable to state, as has been done, that no hazard exists . . . If the world's fall-out rate continues as it did last year, nuclear tests should cause one deleterious mutation (physical or mental deformity) in each 50,000 conceptions. In the entire world the present fall-out will cause 1,800 deleterious mutations each year among the 90 million births . . . I have made every effort to be conservative . . . (it) could possibly be 100 times greater.

—Dr. Alfred H. Sturtevant, Professor of Genetics at California Institute of Technology and Member of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences.

Flimsy Evidence

We may have to wait years or generations to determine the full effects of radiation on the human body . . . The 'no danger' reports are based on the sheerest, most flimsy evidence . . .

—Dr. Theodore Puck, head of the Biophysics Dept., and Dr. Ray R. Lanier, head of the Medical School Radiology Dept., Colorado University.

Leukemia [a degenerative disease of the blood] is one of the great dangers. Some people are much more likely to get leukemia than others. A small extra amount of radiation may push them over the threshold.

—Linus Pauling, Nobel prize-winner in Chemistry, calling for an end to atomic tests.

Future Generations

Hidden mutations in the second generation and after can lower the average vigor and health of a population for hundreds or thousands of years after a single exposure, according to Dr. H. J. Muller, Nobel prize-winner for his work on the effect of X-rays on fruit flies, who wrote before the H-bomb was perfected: "Even an atomic explosion like that of Hiroshima probably results in the death of more people of future generations, all told, than those killed now, and in the handicapping of many more".

—New York Times, March 27.

The duty of the Intellectual

Prof. Einstein's warning

Prof. Albert Einstein, whose death on April 18 deprived the world not only of one of the greatest scientists it has ever known, but also of one of its noblest workers for peace, humanitarianism, and civil rights, gave the following answers to questions on academic freedom put to him last year by the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee in America;

Q.—What is the essential nature of academic freedom and why is it necessary for the pursuit of truth?

A.—By academic freedom I understand the right to search for truth and to publish and teach what one holds to be true. This right implies also a duty; one must not conceal any part of what one has recognised to be true.

It is evident that any restriction of academic freedom acts in such a way as to hamper the dissemination of knowledge among the people and thereby impedes rational judgment and action.

Q.—What threats to academic freedom do you see at this time?

A.—The threat to academic freedom in our time must be seen in the fact that, because of the alleged external danger to our country, freedom of teaching, mutual exchange of opinions, and freedom of press and other media of communication are encroached upon or obstructed.

This is done by creating a situation in which people feel their economic positions endangered. Consequently, more and more people avoid expressing their opinion freely, even in their private social life. This is a state of affairs which a democratic government cannot survive in the long run.

Q.—What in your view are the particular responsibilities of a citizen at this time in the defence of our traditional freedoms as expressed in our Bill of Rights?

A.—The strength of the Constitution lies entirely in the determination of each citizen to defend it. Only if every single citizen feels duty bound to do his share in this defence are the constitutional rights secure.

Q.—What in your opinion are the special obligations of an intellectual in a democratic society?

The Informer's Trade

The confessions of Harvey Matusow (United States Report, April), have drawn world-wide attention to the use of paid informers by U.S. Government agencies in the prosecution of every kind of radical or non-conformist or militant trade unionist who can, with or without justification, be labelled "Leftist". But the problem so dramatically floodlit by Matusow is not new. A year ago the Nation, the American liberal weekly wrote:

"Today scores of political informers, most of them ex-Communists, have become circuit-riding witnesses, appearing again and again in Smith Act and similar prosecutions, deportation proceedings and before legislative committees . . . Almost every day their testimony is helping to send someone to jail or ruining someone's reputation, or disrupting a home by bringing about the deportation of some member of a family.

"The demand for the services of political informers is fed by the frequently sensational stories they tell on the witness stand. The more they talk, the more they are in demand; and the more they are in demand, the more they talk."

Matusow has implicated other professional witnesses. When asked whether he would be willing to plead guilty to a perjury charge, he indicated he was not willing to be made a "scapegoat" for the other informers he says have lied. He named Elizabeth Bentley, Louis Budenz, Whittaker Chambers, Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson, Matthew Cvetic and Herbert Philbrick.

Profitable Side-lines

The political informer is, generally well paid not only as a witness but for all kinds of profitable side-lines. Usually he gets a full time or half time job as an "adviser" or "consultant" on subversive organisations either to a government organisation or some private corporation.

There are lectures, radio talks, television appearances and, of course, confessions and autobiographies. Budenz wrote three books that brought him 17,000 dollars in royalties. He was given a Professorship at Fordham University. He also earned 20,000 dollars for magazine articles and 24,000 for lectures. All this was in addition to his fees as a witness.

Matthew Cvetic received 12,500 dollars for the film rights of his material and 6,500 dollars for a magazine article based on his experiences as an informer. He is reputed to earn between 10,000 and 15,000 dollars a year from his activities.

"Imaginative Powers"

Religious Freedom News, published by the American Religious Freedom Committee, wrote recently:

> Last summer when publicity was given to discrepancies in the testimony of Paul Crouch, Attorney General Brownell promised an investigation of Crouch's reliability.
> [Crouch once said in an interview with the Honolulu Star Bulletin: "I am in the habit of writing imaginary letters to my friends and imaginary persons, sometimes to kings and other foreign persons, in which I place myself in imaginary positions. I do that to develop my imaginative powers."]
> Brownell called a press conference to explain that he was asking a grand jury to look into the Matusow and other cases. A reporter asked if he planned to do anything about the over-a-year-old request of the United Nations that the Justice Department look into the false testimony of Manning Johnson and Leonard Patterson against Ralph Bunche, prominent U.N. official who was unanimously cleared. Brownell replied he had never heard of this request.
> Matusow is only the latest paid informer to be exposed. Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, Leonard Patterson, David Brown—all these preceded Matusow as exposed or confessed perjurers. The same Patterson, Johnson and Crouch who testified against Ralph Bunche and others, testified in Pittsburgh against Steve Nelson and others. (See page 5)

"Contempt" charge

Matusow himself was released on 10,000 dollars bail from the El Paso, Texas, county jail on April 4. He was sentenced on March 19 to a three-year prison term for criminal contempt of court, after swearing that he gave false evidence in the trial of Clinton Jencks, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' Union official. Matusow's sentence is being appealed against.

On April 22 Alexander Trachtenberg, aged 70, and George Black Charney, 50, serving a three-year sentence on charges of "conspiracy to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the Government"—and convinced on the perjured testimony of Matusow—were granted a fresh trial. But Federal Judge Dimock held that the Government prosecutors were "in no way responsible for Matusow's lies".

(New York Times, April 23)

"Thinking must be stopped."

"Unreason and anti-intellectualism abominate thought. Thinking implies disagreement; and disagreement implies nonconformity; and nonconformity implies heresy; and heresy implies disloyalty—so, obviously, thinking must be stopped."

Adlai Stevenson.

"Insistence on the rights of the individual conscience seems to be the new communist line".

Thomas J. Flynn, urging, on behalf of a branch of the American Legion, the New York Board of Education to require public school teachers to be informers or be dismissed.

A.—In principle everybody is equally involved in defending the constitutional rights. The "intellectuals" in the widest sense of the word are, however, in a special position since they have, thanks to their special training, a particularly strong influence on the formation of public opinion. This is the reason why those who are about to lead us toward an authoritarian government are particularly concerned with intimidating and muzzling that group.

It is therefore in the present situation especially important for the intellectuals to do their duty. I see this duty in refusing to co-operate in any undertaking that violates the constitutional rights of the individual. This holds in particular for all inquisitions that are concerned with the private life and the political affiliations of the citizens. Whoever co-operates in such a case becomes an accessory to acts of violation or invalidation of the Constitution.

"Sedition" goes back to 1798

Of particular concern to liberals in the contemporary American scene is the number of "sedition" cases brought under State statutes, some of them stemming from panic security legislation immediately after the first World War, and many of them in conflict with both the spirit and the letter of the Federal Constitution and laws. Such cases are pending at present in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Kentucky, Florida Michigan and Pennsylvania.

The Nelson Case

Outstanding among these cases is that against Steve Nelson, former Lieutenant Colonel of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade in Spain. Nelson was convicted of "holding the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania up to contempt and ridicule" in 1952 and given 20 years in prison.

The "sedition" law under which he was sentenced was modelled on the Federal Sedition Law of 1798, which Thomas Jefferson consigned to oblivion in 1801. It is so vague that anything said or written which powerful interests decide "brings the government into 'hatred and contempt'" is considered "seditious".

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court reversed the Nelson case decision holding that the Federal Smith Act had superseded "sedition" laws.

The Attorney General of Pennsylvania thereupon appealed against the reversal to the U.S. Supreme Court and got 27 other State Attorneys General to support his petition. The Supreme Court has agreed to review the case.

This appeal is still pending in the Supreme Court. If it reaffirmed the conviction against Nelson it would not only send him to prison for 20 years (he is over 50) but would validate ancient sedition laws on the statute books of many States, and extend them to other States as well.

And this is what I. F. Stone, distinguished American liberal journalist, wrote about the Pennsylvania "treason" conviction:

"It would be difficult to find a more dangerously vague sedition statute or a more dangerously vague indictment than those under which Steve Nelson has been sentenced in Pittsburgh. The statute recalls the old English common law of seditious libel under which Seventeenth and Eighteenth century editors were often sent to jail.

"The flavour of the indictment may be gathered from one of its 12 counts. This alleges that Nelson 'did incite and encourage a certain person and persons whose name and names are to this inquest unknown, to commit an overt act and overt acts with a view to bringing the government of this State and of the United States into hatred and contempt . . .'

"When Nelson, who was deprived of the right to counsel, asked for a bill of particulars, so that he might know what persons he is alleged to have incited to what overt acts, the motion was denied."

Carl Braden

Trials in the Louisville, Kentucky, "sedition" case against Carl Braden and others were postponed last month to Nov. 16 or later, to await a decision, expected in the U.S. Supreme Court in the autumn, on the validity of state sedition laws in the Steve Nelson case. The seven Louisville defendants had been charged with "sedition" or "conspiracy to advocate" it following their defence of the right of a Negro to live in a "white" neighbourhood.

The case was summarised in the CHURCHMAN, an independent journal of the U.S. Episcopal Church, on Feb. 1, as follows:—

Was the Good Samaritan a communist? And if so was it subversive to receive his aid? These are problems which an ambitious Commonwealth's attorney in Louisville, Kentucky, has forced the people of that community to examine.

Brotherly love, by helping a Negro family live securely in a decent home, has caused seven white people to be indicted for sedition. Carl Braden, a journalist who was employed by the Louisville Courier-Journal, has been sentenced to fifteen years in jail for sedition and his bond has been set for 40,000 dollars.

Braden was approached in the winter of 1953-54, by Andrew Wade, a Negro electrician in Louisville, who asked for his help. Wade had tried to find a house outside the high-rent area in which most Louisville Negroes have to live. Every time he found one that he liked he was told that it could not be sold to a Negro. Wade asked Braden if he would buy a house and sell it to him. Braden agreed and did so.

Similar things had happened in the past in Louisville with some disturbance but with ultimate acceptance . . . Coincidentally, however, a few days after the Wades bought their house, the United States Supreme Court rendered its decision against [racial] segregation in the public schools. The resentment in some quarters against that decision emboldened the ku kluxers and their real estate backers throughout the south to form new anti-Negro groups.

A cross was burned on the lot next door to the Wade home. A rock broke his front window; rifle shots were fired through his kitchen door. His wife was pregnant and Wade called for help. A Wade Defence Committee was organized and a white truck-driver named Vernon Bown, who worked at night, agreed to stay at the Wade home during the day time to protect Mrs. Wade.

Miss Louise Gilbert, a social worker, leader of the Louisville branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, sent a letter to the white citizens of the community into which the Wades had moved, urging Christian tolerance and forbearance.

Just after midnight, in the early morning of June 27, dynamite exploded under the Wade house. Wade and his wife were on the front porch at the time and saw what looked like flashlight signals just before the bomb went off. Although it made a great deal of noise and caused tremendous damage to the house, no lights appeared in any of the houses of the white neighbours and they apparently took no notice of what had happened.

The Louisville Courier-Journal, although deploring the fact that the Bradens had helped the Wades buy a house in the white community, pressed the police officials to prosecute the guilty hoodlums. It was reliably reported that an ex-county policeman had confessed to the bombing, although no formal statement was made on the subject by the law enforcement officials. Subsequently, it was said that he had only confessed to burning the cross near the house . . .

After letting one grand jury go by without presentments, the Commonwealth attorney, under considerable local pressure, began action. But to the astonishment of practically everyone, he asked for indictments against the white friends of the Wades, accusing them of helping the Negroes in order to stir up racial trouble. The Courier-Journal published a strong editorial on September 17 under the heading, "The Crime was Bombing, Not Beliefs", but a thirty-four-year-old state law against sedition was used to indict seven of the Wades' white friends.

They include Carl Braden's wife, Miss Gilbert and her friend Miss Spiker, and a man named Lewis Lubka, who was a member of the Wade Defence Committee.

Vernon Bown, the truck-driver who volunteered to protect Mrs. Wade, was in Wisconsin at the time of the bombing. This has not prevented his indictment not only for sedition but for the actual bombing. [He] has been in jail since September 24, 1954, without trial. He has not been able to raise 10,000 dollars bail.

Furthermore, Bown's room-mate, 79-year-old I. O. Ford, has been in jail since October 1. It appears that when the police searched Bown's apartment they found literature belonging to his room-mate which they considered subversive, so they arrested Ford too.

Carl Braden has asserted under oath that he is not and never has been a communist. The prosecuting attorney raided his home while Braden was in jail and produced some books which he contends prove that Braden is a communist. Some of the material produced, Braden asserts, was not in his home but was obtained elsewhere by the prosecutor. A woman who was convicted in 1952 of a morals charge but alleged that she had been working for the F.B.I. since 1951, was the only witness the county could produce to contest Braden's sworn statement.

Trials postponed

The trials have been postponed for Mrs. Anne Braden, Vernon Bown, Ford, Lewis Lubka, Louise Gilbert and Miss Spiker. Ford's bail was reduced from 10,000 to 3,000 dollars on April 6, and, after seven months in gaol, he became the last to be freed on bail before trial.

But although the State had officially recognized that the law is in question, the first of the seven victims, newspaperman Carl Braden, remains in La Grange reformatory, unable to raise the 40,000 dollar appeal bond set for him.

Miami Prosecutions

In Florida an extraordinary story of State "sedition" prosecutions began last year when the State Attorney, George A. Brautigam, issued subpœnas to more than 100 Miami residents for questioning before a grand jury and in his private office about their political beliefs and associations.

Thirty-one who pleaded the privilege against self-incrimination were convicted of contempt, and 30 were sentenced to one year in gaol. Of the 31, 29 were Jews, many of them associated with the Jewish Cultural Centre at Miami Beach.

Florida Supreme Court reversed the convictions on the grounds that the accused had the right to refuse to answer questions on "Communist ties" because the U.S. Supreme Court had decided that the Fifth Amendment could be invoked in cases "where the answers might provide a link in a chain of evidence" as well as in cases where they would be directly self-incriminating.

But the Florida court coupled its decision with a suggestion that State "anti-subversive" statutes should also ban mere membership of the Communist Party and "Communist-front" organisations. In February Brautigam issued a new batch of more than 40 subpœnas. The recipients included several of the 31 freed by the Supreme Court.

He said the same procedure would be followed as in the "contempt" cases: individuals would be questioned first in his private office; if they refused to answer, they would be called before the grand jury; if they refused to answer there, they would be subject to indictment. He added, "In the eyes of the law, once a Communist, always a Communist—unless they can prove otherwise." The 'proof' required was to 'co-operate' by supplying names and information which would allow similar proceedings to be taken against others.

Florida law provides that the State Attorney can bring indictments in any felony through a grand jury, but can prosecute only in capital crimes. All other felonies are prosecuted by the county solicitor, who may refuse to proceed with the cases for lack of evidence.

Brautigam caused the indictment of Sam Hirsch, former director of Miami Beach's Biltmore Playhouse, on eight counts of perjury (each carrying a 20-year sentence) for denying Communist Party membership. His only witness was a man who had been convicted 22 times in the previous five years for drunkenness, and had been tried twice for disorderly conduct and twice for assault. John Marsh, Dade County solicitor declined to take the case further. He said "I don't believe in investigating a man for belief in a theory."

To the Editor, United States Report:-

Sir,—I have just read your first issue. The foreword seemed full of promise but I don't think the contents measured up to it . . . I looked in vain for anything about the Negro people, the economic situation, recent and current legislation in Congress and what the people are doing. I trust that a "balanced study of U.S. government policy and public opinion" will find more expression in future issues.

F. J. BERRY.

Newton Grove, W.4.

Sir,—I agree there are "gaps in our knowledge of day to day life in America" but your No. 1 issue does not appear to attempt to cover more than one aspect of present-day American life . . . and not a word about all the good progressive things many Americans manage to do and publish. What we need in England is much more awareness of what Americans are doing to fight this victimisation, "security makers", etc., so that we can give these Americans our support.

Some issues of the* REPORT will deal in greater detail with one or two major problems of outstanding current importance.—THE EDITOR.)

"The two biggest obstacles to democracy in the United States are first, the widespread delusion among the poor that we have a democracy, and second, the chronic terror among the rich lest we get it."

Her home for 48 years

Within three years more than 400 men and women have been arrested for deportation on political charges. Of these 90 per cent have lived in the United States for more than 20 years. Mr. Brownell, Attorney-General, has announced that he will seek to deport more than 10,000 non-citizens, and to de-naturalize 12,000 other people.

The Walter-McCarran Immigration Act, passed in 1952 over President Truman's veto and in spite of the opposition of major religious, labour, and civic organisations, provides that any non-citizen, no matter how long he has lived in the United States, may be deported for any of more than 100 offences, including failure to be possession of a registration card "at all times".

Membership of any one of hundreds of proscribed organisations, no matter how long ago, or for how short a time, is grounds for deportation. According to the law, deportation is not punishment, so there is no question of trial. Evidence is usually provided by paid informers, and to challenge the findings involves a costly appeal to the Federal courts. The law also provides for revocation of the citizenship of naturalized Americans, who then become liable to deportation.

Families Broken-up

Recent legislation provides for citizenship to be withdrawn from native-born Americans convicted under the Smith Act, which declares it a criminal offence to advocate, or to conspire to advocate, the overthrow of the government by force. Each case involves the breaking up of an American family, typical of millions founded by immigrants.

Many of these cases concern men and women born in Britain or otherwise possessing British citizenship. Here are some of them;

Mrs. Annie Hobson, who had her 71st birthday on April 29, was born in Netherthong, Huddersfield, Yorks., and emigrated with her husband to the United States in 1907—48 years ago. They have three children, two boys born in the United States, and a daughter born when her mother was on a visit to Victoria, British Columbia.

Last October Mrs. Hobson's daughter, Mrs. Peggy (Mignon) Wellman, 42, was ordered to be deported on charges that she is foreign-born, and holds nonconformist political views. At her deportation hearing in March, while her husband was in gaol on a conviction under the Smith Act, two paid informers said they had seen her at meetings of the Communist Party. That was enough for the Walter-McCarran law to work on.

Mrs. Hobson's testimony was sought by the immigration authorities to establish that her daughter was "foreign born". After refusing three times to testify against her daughter, Mrs. Hobson was finally prevailed upon to do so under threat of indefinite imprisonment for contempt of court. Now Mrs. Hobson is herself under orders to be deported to England.

John B. Williamson, 51, who was born in Scotland, has lived in the United States for over 40 years. He has an American wife and two young sons. His widowed mother, 79-year-old invalid, lives at 23 Montgomery Street, Eaglesham, Scotland.

Convicted, with eleven other leading members of the American Communist Party, on Smith Act charges in 1949, he was sentenced to five years in goal and a fine of 10.000 dollars. When he completed his term on March 1 last he was immediately arrested on a further charge under the Smith Act, that of membership of the Communist party while knowing its purpose as alleged in the conspiracy charge. He, too was subject to a deportation order and made arrangements to sail for Britain on May 4.

Citizenship Medal

Claudia Jones, who was born in Trinidad, British West Indies, is 38. She was brought to the United States by her parents in 1924, when she was nine. Educated in New York she received, in 1934, the highest award given by the city's Board of Education, the Theodore Roosevelt Medal for Good Citizenship. As a Negro Miss Jones dedicated herself to the constitutional struggle to end the discrimination suffered by her people in the United States.

As secretary of the Women's Commission of the U.S. Communist Party she was charged with others in the second Smith Act trial with "conspiring to advocate and teach the duty and necessity to overthrow the U.S. Government by force and violence", and with joining and helping to organise the Communist Party

'No Union can feel Safe'

The independent International Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers' Union figures prominently in U.S. labour and industrial news. Its Secretary-Treasurer Maurice E. Travis. was accused by the Precision-Scientific Co. of signing the Taft Hartley non-Communist affidavit while being "an admitted Communist", and the National Labour Relations Board ordered the withdrawal of the union's statutory facilities on Feb. 1. The Washington Court of Appeals reversed the NLRB ruling a few weeks later, but Travis, while denying the charges against him, resigned so as not to stand in the way of the union's right to protect itself against its enemies.

Another prominent union member, Clinton Jenks, was convicted on the false testimony of Harvey Matusow (United States Report, April), and is still seeking redress The following are extracts from the report presented to the union's Fiftieth Convention held at Spokane, Washington State, in March.

No union in America can feel safe as long as this law [the Brownc l-Butler so-called 'Communist Control' Act of 1954] is on the books. Meantime, the numbers of Americans indicted or convicted for so-called "political crimes" has increased tremendously.

Under the Smith Act, hundreds of Americans continue to be indicted and convicted for dissenting and unorthodox opinions. Speeches, hearsay evidence and quotations from books, some written a hundred years ago, are the basis for the government's case against these individuals.

In addition, our time-honoured rules of fair play for the alien are being set aside. Thousands of individuals who for all intents and purposes live and think as Americans are being threatened with deportation under the McCarran-Walter act. Many of these individuals have resided within our shores for as much as 40 or 50 years and have contributed immensely to the struggle in our country for a better life for all Americans.

Negroes' Rights

A great historic advance was made last year with the Supreme Court's outlawing—in principle—of segregation in schools. This climaxed a long legal and organizational battle by the National Association for the Advancement of Coloured People, supported by many other organizations. A factor leading to the decision undoubtedly was the growing embarrassment in Washington over discredit brought on our country in world opinion by racial and national discrimination.

Atom Bomb peril

The news that disastrous fall-out effects would cover an area of 7,000 square miles after explosion of an atom bomb has been an eye-opener for millions of Americans.

I don't think there is an American living today who does not understand exactly what Ernest Weir, chairman of the National Steel Co., means when he says the world's people have only one real choice—to live together or to die together.

Co-existence

The new idea, "co-existence", is now getting full, serious discussion by common people everywhere. The idea is simple: that the Western capitalist nations can live on the same planet as the Eastern socialist countries—without going to war.

The general who some four years ago wanted to drop atom bombs on the Chinese side of the Yalu River today says "war has become a Frankenstein to destroy both sides." That man is General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, who recently challenged the world to outlaw war.

Way to Prosperity

"It would not only remove fear and bring security," he said, "it would produce an economic wave of prosperity that would raise the world's standard of living beyond anything ever dreamed of by man . . . Sooner or later the world, if it is to survive, must reach this decision. We [the U.S.] should now proclaim our readiness to abolish war in concert with the great powers of the world."

United States Report

The following is an an extract from the statement of aims published in the first issue of United States Report last month,—

THE GREAT MAJORITY of the American people seek the things that we, too, cherish; the "unalienable rights" of the individual; freedom from fear and want; the protection, impartiality and incorruptibility of the law, and freedom of thought, speech, publication and discussion.

IT IS IN THE HOPE of serving these ideas and aims that we shall endeavour, month by month, to summarise from as wide a range of American sources as possible, those developments and trends which are of the greatest importance in a balanced study of U.S. Government policy and public opinion, but find little or no expression in the British Press.

Auto-workers' Programme

THE BASIC FREEDOMS

America's biggest union, the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.) last month called on labour, farm and other allied groups to meet in a national conference early next spring, before the Republican and Democratic Parties nominate their candidates, to organise united industrial action in the Presidential campaign.

This was one of the decisions in a political action programme voted by 3,000 U.A.W. delegates in conference in Cleveland. The U.A.W. delegates, who, in foreign affairs, gave general support to the U.S. Government line on Formosa, West German rearmament, and big Power negotiations "from strength", made the following recommendations:

Union members who avail themselves of the Constitutional safeguards of the Fifth Amendment must be protected from victimisation by employers.

Government prosecutions of individuals should be initiated only "for what they do, not for what they say".

The Internal Security Laws should be re-codified to repeal those sections which deny freedom of speech, association and political action.

Witnesses denounced

The convention condemned the use of the Smith Act and other ostensibly anti-Communist legislation as a "step towards Government control of the unions", and denounced the use of such witnesses as Harvey Matusow and Paul Crouch.

Walter Reuther, President of both the U.A.W. and the C.I.O. (and probable head of a new Council of Industrial Organisations under the C.I.O.-A.F.L. merger), said the struggle now beginning in the automobile industry for a Guaranteed Annual Wage ("a workman eats 52 weeks a year; he should be paid 52 weeks a year"), was attainable only in a world at peace.

"Nobody," he said "can win a war fought with atomic or H-bombs, and therefore what we need to realise is that we can win only if we can find a way to avoid a war".

The Coming of Peace in 1945

THERE IS A PICTURE millions of us remember: The meeting of the Allies on the Elbe, when the Americans swam across the river to shake hands with the Russians. In those days TOSCANINI was conducting the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and playing «The International», whilst «The Stars and Stripes» was heard in Moscow, under the rain of fire-works. Cheering crowds everywhere felt that the world was at last to be united.

General EISENHOWER declared: «American-Soviet friendship is one of the cornerstones on which the edifice of peace should be built.»

President TRUMAN said: «Nations which can plan and fight, shoulder to shoulder, in the face of such obstacles as distance, language and communication, can live and work together in the common task of the organization for world peace.»

STALIN had already decleared that, «the alliance between Soviet Russia, Great Britain and the United States is not founded on casual and temporary trends, but on lasting and vital common interests.»

Mrs. CHURCHILL started the fund in aid of Stalingrad and urged everyone to help.

9 Years

Have Passed Since Then

Now, every third working day in America is devoted to war preparations directed against their former allies. If we imagine a foreign army to have occupied USA, it would hardly have dared to make such demands upon the American people. In «communist» Czechoslovakia, posters showing the output of heavy industries have been defaced by workers writing across them such bitter remarks as: «Where do the goods go?» Continuous war budgets are crippling the economic life of people everywhere, whilst the ghost of the H-bomb haunts our modern civilized world. Today a handful of scared men could expose us to radio active fogs and titanic floods resulting in utter disruption, famine and sickness.

A VOICE FROM NORWAY:

Think for Yourself

NOBODY CAN DO IT FOR YOU

Please accept this as our answer to letters and printed matter which we have received from individuals and groups all over the world.

We want as many people as possible to know our fundamentals in order that they may help us to obtain the right connections. The task is to solve once and for all the problems which divide the world and soak it in blood.

It is our plan to create a universal Brains Trust, which by influencing public information and propaganda sources would contribute to the realization of an harmonious society.

We appeal especially to those who try to be open-minded, and whose reactions are independent of any political party. We are not going to stress any uniformity, but unity in diversity. Peace is indivisible and must give room for all.

The coming of peace in 1945: American and Russian boys were making friends with girls from the Red Army. Under portraits of Roosewelt and Stalin the bond of East-West friendship was forged, but later we lost the pervading sense of peace which might have brought harmony into our lives. When «big four», «big brass» or «big business» engage in conflicts, why do we accept their conflicts as ours?

The Mess of Politics

When men get absorbed in strategy and the policy of power, they lose their most important contacts with life. Some of them realize that they act irrationally and are fooled by each other, though they dare not admit this for fear of losing their prestige. Shakespeare saw through the quackery which men indulge in for the sake of formal standing:

Man, proud man!
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As make the angels weep.

Pure interest in position entails, as Einstein put it, a «ruthless lack of responsibility.»

World Law No. 1: Our Human Rights

Man needs a consciousness — that he has basic rights which authority cannot violate. According to the Nuremberg Trial, individuals have human duties which transcend the duty of obedience to any state. No war-criminal can ever protect himself by relying solely upon national law. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was the first step in safeguarding mankind against the abuse of power — by irresponsible politicians, financiers or generals.

THE THIRD WAY

Attlee admitted that «A better world order does not depend upon governments, but upon the People». It is now evident that some individuals are beginning to realize this; they are getting tired of the futile attempts to «govern» our world away from the precipice of war. It reminds us of an incident when the American John Steinbeck visited war-stricken Russia. At one of the meetings, a Georgian composer raised his glass and said: «To hell with politics!» Have we not reached the point where all who seek a third way should find a common denominator in the oneness of man?

Individual Autonomy

No power on earth can keep down a society, once individuals stop acting like mechanical cog wheels in a superimposed system. The concentration of power in the West and the East can only exist so long as individuals accept it. Mahatma Gandhi said of India: «It is not so much British guns that are responsible for our subjection, as our voluntary cooperation.» Your own freedom is also the freedom for others and for society. Dare to think — and act what you think — and you will free yourself from the domination of imposed authority. It is primarily as individuals we should serve our world.

Your Responsibility and Mine

The only thing which can save the world is that as many as possible will arise and shoulder their own responsibilities. Those who call for the strong leader can visualize their fellow men only as defined groups, i. e. classes, parties, friends or foes; whereas independent individuals are able to conceive each other as human beings. Aldous Huxley warns us against «.....tyrants who want to herd their subjects into crowds in which the individual is reduced to a state of intoxicated sub-humanity.»

Whatever You Do —

Justice William Douglas pointed out: «The most effective bases we can get in Asia are bases in the hearts of Asia's millions, not bases in their lands.» We must put plain human understanding above worship of money, systems, power and all the 'isms. When you follow the banners and giant portraits, remember that they also are the emblems of the war machine. Capitalists who are not at all concerned with the service of their fellow men, gear the economy to war and undermine their own security. Whatever you do—and remember this in case of emergency:

BE HUMAN!

OUT OF UNIFORM

Heintz Kraschutzki, a Berlin citizen, reported of a Russian officer who had torn off all his distinctions, decorations and metal buttons. The Russian explained: «I've just been demobbed. I couldn't wait, I ripped off the buttons and distinctions and flung my decorations into a drawer. All this military nonsense has come to an end. I shall become a teacher again, and a happier man.»

The purpose of life is to develop individual minds, not regimented ones. All awareness in the world is individual awareness.

ALL HAVE THE SAME GOAL!

The goal of liberalism is the greatest possible freedom. The goal of socialism is economic dignity for all. The goal of conservatism is to preserve the best we have. The ultimate goal of communism is a society where the authoritative state withers away. The goal of anarchism is to let men rule themselves. The goal of Christianity is Heaven on Earth. Thus, all the ideals of the 'isms are only different expressions of the same yearning, in the heart of hearts of every human being.

The famous cartoon: The Third Way.

The Effort — Now!

Gift deliveries to the USSR during the war comprised almost 30 % of all shipments from USA ports. They sent 375 000 trucks, 52 000 jeeps, 14 700 airplanes, 11 000 railway wagons, 2 000 locomotives, mountains of foot-wear, rubber tires, cloth, 415 000 telephones and enough telephone wire to stretch around the globe five times.

Why do men seem to be less selfish in war-time than in peace-time? Why do we act more wholeheartedly and genuinely in the shadow of death? Are we afraid of the effort needed to live a full life in peace-time?

Unity through Understanding

The things which men have in common are greater than those things which separate them.

After the hell of 1939—45, we all agreed, that we now ought to build a lasting peace. In order to do this, we must smelt all iron curtains inside and outside ourselves with human warmth. Thomas Paine said: «The world is my country!» The fight for understanding while the guns are silent will decide whether we will have peace in which to live, or the peace of the grave.

WARS OF ILLUSIONS

War originates in men's minds because all of us, journalists, teachers, ideological leaders, no less than the rest — believe in imaginary conflicts and contradictions. We talk of decisions between this or that, within human and social fields, where there are lots of possibilities to be worked out. In politics we talk about different systems that cannot be merged, yet communism is the child of capitalism and the two have developed together as worldwide counterbalances. In economics we have been drilled into the private and acquisitive point of view, but still money, passing indiscriminately from hand to hand, is the most illustrative symbol of universal co-operation.

Have you observed how citizens of one nation take great care of visitors from another nation? How different points of view are necessary for fruitful discussion? How essential it is for a thriving enterprise that workers and management get along together? There is no genuine reason for frontiers and dividing lines, for organizing people of one opinion against people of another opinion, for class division or political parties.

Some accumulate a vast store around themselves, but happiness eludes them. Why? Because happiness is not a thing apart but a matter of inter-human relations — it is the smile on the face of others. Those who serve others, best serve themselves . To make the interest of others your own interest is to be «intelligently selfish.»

A ray of hope in 1953: Churchill thanked Gromyko for immediate Russian aid to the flood-ravaged districts in England. Why do the politicians need a catastrophe to ensure cooperation?

THE RAVAGING OF THE EARTH. The cutting down of forests, the overgrazing of grassland and desperate soil-mining is bringing total ruin to land in North and South America, Africa, Asia and Southern Europe. In the United States alone top soil enough for 400 average Norwegian farms is washed or blown away every day. Is it not more sensible to ally ourselves against such catastrophes, rather than against each other? When will it be possible for us to direct our combined energies against the common enemies of man?

Most of you know how morality is often stressed to the extent of obscenity; how injustice is inflicted by overemphasizing justice; how normal is considered abnormal because abnormal has become normal.

This is universal logic: Good and evil, left and right, radical or reactionary, are only shades of a greater composition, the moving and changing creation. That's how universe is — that's humanity — that's nature. A play of contrasts, but no real split, roles that are interchanged, extremes that approach, harmonies that suddenly break and convert into new harmonies.

We have been forced to broaden our comprehension. People are beginning to grasp the synthesis. They see how everything is linked up in an all-encompassing relationship. With the philosophy of integration, present antagonisms and conflicts will be lifted from our minds. The problems of the individuals and those of society will be solved together. The world will be one.

The last way to learn this, for the great industrialist as for the party communist, is through the medium of war. We have only a short respite in which to overcome the illusions.

Give us food!

Nearly four-fifths of the people of the entire world live on the brink of starvation, while food production is falling further and further behind the needs of the ever-growing world population. We need 150 to 200 per-cent more food production merely to keep the present world population healthy. We cannot get peace of mind before we declare an international war on want. Eisenhower proclaimed: «We pay for a single fighter plane with half a million bushels of wheat. Every warship launched, every rocket fired signifies—in the final sense—a theft from those who hunger and are not fed.»

Please enlarge upon this and introduce it to others who may become a link in the chain to avert a worldwide catastrophe. We communicate in Scandinavian, English, Russian, German, French, Spanish or Italian. Your response is essential to our continued effort, in particular as our funds are becoming exhausted with this issue. Send suggestions and criticisms to:

NO GENERAL ELECTION?

WE believed Ceylon asked for Independence, or at least accepted it on a platter, as the men who guided Ceylon's destinies believed it would provide the avenues by which the nation would enjoy the fruits of true freedom. What do we enjoy today—the sight of a slowly disintegrating nation divided deliberately by the fostering of varied issue calculated to realise anything but peaceful co-existence. Hence the unconscionable humour implied when the Prime Minister on his return spoke thus: "Ceylon's re[illegible]tion as a pattern of a b[illegible]y and peace loving democ[illegible] ranked high everywhere I went." And now we have before us a plot to postpone the general elections in order that those who have entrenched themselves in the seats of power may continue to enjoy that power. Democracy means government by consent and not by coercion. Free elections are the basic fundamental of a democratic government. The last general elections were rigged. It seems the Premier is nervous to try rigging them this time thanks to the Trine exposures, for on the next occasion the nation will be on its guard. The forthcoming elections in 1957 are not to be regarded as merely ordinary elections for a state legislature. They are going to be of profound and epoch—making significance for the entire progressive movement of the country. It will be a first rate trial of strength between the forces of usury and reaction represented by the group in power and its hangers on and the forces that have fought consistently against this fascist, antinational, adventurist regime. Of course the usual betraying third force of opportunists may came out in their true colours as the vanguard of the extreme right wingers.

If the Premier is hoping to postpone the elections he may be well advised to cry halt lest he finds himself forcibly bundled out. In the meantime we advocate mobilisation and a broad coalition of all anti-reactionary forces, instead of their languishing in divided groups that damage the cause of freedom and ultimately merely serve to strengthen the pillars of reaction.

Another Pact to Sabotage China Pact

The country views with apprehension the scheme Premier Kotelawala brought back with him on his return of a proposed rice-rubber pact with Burma. It views with more apprehension the proposal to send Food Minister J. R. Jayawardena to Rangoon to clinch the deal.

The whole country knows the shabby part this Minister played in co-operation with America and Lake House to sabotage the China trade agreement and coerce Ceylon into accepting inequitable agreements imposed by the usurious powers that be. China displayed a spirit of generosity and fair dealing in this agreement in conformity with her accredited codes for the realization of international goodwill. While America tries to strangle and jeopardise by binding codes of unfair conduct the worlds' trading system, the Peoples Democracies, enter into pacts on terms of mutual benefit. The profits accruing from the China trade pact have gone to swell the national income of Ceylon. If this pact is abrogated the profits will find their way into American pockets via Rangoon. We have in this paper from time to time exposed the varied manoeuvres of this Minister to sabotage the pact. Mr. Dudley Senanayake last year very rightly put his foot down at a Parliamentary group meeting on the idea of this Minister going to Peking. We hope that both he and Mr. R. G. Senanayake will adopt the same attitude on his proposed trip to Rangoon. In any case it is the Minister for Commerce who has to negotiate in these matters and not the Food Minister.

Our memories are not so short as to forget how Burma too tried to exploit us on this issue. Even if there is a radical change in trade policy on Burma's part now, Ceylon need not be so ready to accomodate herself to Burma's overtures when the Chinese trade agreement is proceeding to satisfaction, and the national income is benefitting thereby. We strongly condemn this move to conform ourselves to the dictates of the American Battle Act.

Move to Postpone General Elections?

The Nation Has Its Reply Ready

ON the pretext of taking steps to enable Ceylon to be declared a Republic in May 1956 with the inauguration of the Sambuddha Jayanthi celebrations, the general elections, we understand, are to be postponed.

There is a so-called "progressive" bloc of the Government Parliamentary Group which very obligingly acts as the mouthpiece of the Premier when any step to march progressively backwards is contemplated. We would all desire Ceylon to be a Republic within the Commonwealth (or even without it,) but what the nation does not desire is that such a move need necessarily coincide with a purely religious event and be thereby made an issue to be exploited for the purpose of dodging the general elections.

The life of the present Parliament terminates in 1957. An attempt is now being made to extend the life of the Parliament on the pretext that a "few years" are needed to make provision for the necessary constitutional changes.

The nation can now see the last election malpractices in the true perspective, if it has hitherto been cajoled into the belief that Democracy had triumphed. We were all led to believe that by the end of the prescribed term of the present Parliament, a new world would have been sighted. So the new world we are about to sight is not the extermination of mass misery, the setting free of the productive forces of our country from the oppression of imperialism, enabling the national economy to advance along the road of Socialism according to plan, or raising the economic and cultural life of the nation, but a proposed Republic. The brave new world we have sighted so far is the shameless parading of opportunism, wooing foreign loans and racketing on them too, imposing more and more burdens on the people, resorting to deficit financing, ignoring the basic measures to be taken in order that material and human resources be mobilised for the task of national reconstrution and last but not least even an attempt to prostitute our legal system.

The crowning point will be reached when an attempt is made to postpone the elections. It is then that the the mighty outbreak of a long suffering people's protest against this oppressive regime will be given its amplest demonstration. The days when people could be deluded are over. Neither the holding out of hollow promises, threats nor repression can dam the wave of mass discontent which is daily mounting. The Government of charlatians will cease before long.

Must Economic Aid Provide "Cuts"?

THE Indian Government, it is reported, is considering the terms of economic aid offered by the Soviet Union. One of the projects under consideration is the construction of a million ton Steel Factory.

The Soviet terms are very favourable to India. They undertake to construct the Factory within 18 months on a differed payment basis. The Soviet Union undertakes to supply the Engineers and materials and the work is to be completed with the assistance of Indian Engineers and labour. They ask for no advances. Once the work has been completed and the staff trained to run the establishment the Soviet technicians will leave the country. Payment to the Soviet Union is to commence only after the factory starts producing. Payment is to be spread over a fifteen year period either in cash or kind. The Indian Government has the option of repaying the debt by supplying such goods as she has for export valued at the world market prices.

Ceylon Refused Offer

This is really and truly economic aid without strings. The Soviet Union does not seek India's support politically nor does she ask for military bases in India.

The Government of Czechoslovakia made similar offers to the Government of Ceylon in 1948. But the Ceylon Government accepted the American "economic aid". Gal Oya is a living memorial of the type of "aid" that comes from the U.S.

The terms on which the Government of Ceylon contracted with the American firm of Morrison Knudsen Inc. Co. is worthy of comparison. In brief, the American firm undertook to build a dam at Gal-Oya. A hypothetical figure of 10½ million dollars was agreed upon. But this figure was not binding on the firm. The Government of Ceylon agreed to pay the firm II per cent on their expenditure each month as the scheme progressed. Two Bank accounts were opened by the Government of Ceylon—one in California and the other in Ceylon. Vast sums of money were deposited in the respective banks. The American firm kept drawing on these accounts. When the accounts were running out the Government reimbursed them.

There was however a clause in the contract which made the Government liable to a further payment of a slice of the saving effected in the event of the contractors completing the scheme below the hypothetical figure of 10½ million dollars. But before the scheme ended the firm had exceeded the 10½ million dollars. However the firm had a way out. They also drew the bonus. Morrison Knudsen had, in addition to the specified work on the dam, undertaken to do any other work such as the construction of roads, buildings etc., on the same terms, namely, 11 per cent on expediture. They therefore opened an "Outside Contract" account. To this account they transferred vast sums of expenditure from the "Contract" account. They received their II per cent in any case on each of those accounts but by transferring from one account to the other they also made room for the bonus.

Wilful Waste

It was found later that the American firm had wilfully ordered excess machinery, foodstuffs, etc and paid high salaries to Americans. For example Rs. 3500 a month plus food and allowances was paid to truck drivers when Ceylonese could have been employed at less than one tenth the cost. It also transpired that they had paid prices on local purchases at much higher rates than the ruling market prices from mushroom firms that had sprung up overnight.

In other words the American "economic aid" bled us to the bone.

But the question is often asked why the Government was so shortsighted. They were not. They knew what was going on and a number of Government politicians benefited through sub contracts with their hangers on. The reason therefore why the present government prefers American "aid" of this type to the genuine "economic aid" as offered by Socialists countries is that American aid carries not only "strings" but also "cuts". Whereas Socialist aid gives no "cuts" and has no "strings."

The savings effected benefit the country instead of lining the pockets of the unscrupulous.

Doria Shafik Stresses on Sacrifice

Madame Doria Shafik founder president of the Daughters of the Nile, the Egyptian women's social and political organisation, was in Ceylon last week. A Sorbonne graduated doctor of philosophy, poetess and journalist, ardent fighter for the rights of women and children she stands eminent among the women of Egyyt.

We give below a resume of her speeches.

Politically backward

"We Egyptain women have enjoyed social, economic and cultural rights for a very long time, but were kept politically backward. One day I felt it was the greatest slur on our country and womanhood that we should number among the countries where women were denied political rights. We started in 1948 our women's movement—the Daughters of the Nile. In fact we were only continuing or recommencing the Egyptain women's fight started in 1919 against centuries-old oppression, suppression and tradition.

The Association had as its main objective the fight for full political rights for women. We could not demand without giving our services in return so the movement also commenced social service projects like adult education, sewing classes and child welfare. We have 50 schools for the education of adult women training 2000 women every 6 months to be members of our movement. As I felt that no country could be called progressive if it did not recognise the principle of equality of status for women and as I firmly believe that without the active cooperation of women no government can plan a full programme for a country we launched our struggle to win those rights. Men have only five senses, women have six—the extra sense being intuition which can find a solution to even the most knotty problems.

Storming Parliament

We won the sympathy of the press for our struggle and programme of work. We utilized the press as a means of making our purpose known to the country. Our efforts to storm the Parliament was kept a dead secret till all the women had assembled at a meeting. Once you tell a secret to men you know it is no secret. If you tell it to women also it no longer remains a secret. Once all had met together I unfolded our plan to get through the barred gates of the Constituent Assembly, once the guard opened them to admit the large cars of Parliamentarians during Farouks time (now the age of the large limousines is no more). Every woman agreed to follow the plan and 1000 members blocked the gates of the Constiuent Assembly and a forced entry was made into the House, when we extracted promises that our demands would be given consideration. The promises given by the government were not fulfilled.

I felt we had to change our methods. Perhaps violent demonstrations had also lost a certain amount of public sympathy for us. And women should know when to adopt tough methods, when to attempt to charm her way through and when to heed the final call of sacrifice.

Sacrifice and Non-Violence

I now came to the conclusion that the Gandhian technique of non-violence and sacrifice was the only way to achieve success. I decided to fast. I chose as my venue the press office of the President. He asked me whether I could not possibly find another place. I said I felt this was the best place. I commenced my fast alone in March last year, but by evening by the time the news appeared in the Press scores of women in many parts of the country had gone on sympathy hunger strike. Finally the doctor announced that if I continued for ten hours more I may not live. The principal of the school where my two girls study requested me to break the fast as my children were crying all the time. I felt at that time that I could not think of anyone else but the rights of my country women. The loss of one life would not matter if thousands would win a new way of life from that sacrifice. A fight for freedom of any kind demands the greatest personal sacrifice. Without sacrifice there can be no faith in the purpose.

When the verdict of the Doctors reached the ears of the President of the Constituent Assembly he promised me he would provide the women of Egypt will full constitutional rights in the new Constitution of Egypt. Our battle was won and I broke my fast. The President honoured his promise.

Very soon many of us will be contesting elections to the Egyptain parliament.

We women are wedded to peace and democracy. For the sake of women and children we must fight the menace of the atom bomb.

We have met with opposition. But we are undaunted. We have got our rights recognised and women must attain an important position in the political and social hierarchy of the country. We love a fight in a good cause and I am very happy to see women engaged in the same struggles. Women must play their part in making laws for the people because only women can understand the magnanimity of the problems facing women and children. We are fighting polygamy and easy divorce. Our activities are not against Islam but against superstitions. The Koran says polygamy is acceptable only if a man can treat all women without differentiation and this is very difficult. 4% of the population in Egypt practice polygamy. We shall fight hard against it. The dowry system is degrading. It is the other way about in Egypt—the husband gives the wife a dowry which is equally degrading.

The final message I have to give to my fellow workers in the world is that service and sacrifice are closely linked.

Mr. Dulles Call For Vigilance

The capital is this morning brooding over the French vote yesterday on rearming western Germany. Outwardly officials appear pleased, but it is possible to detect an atmosphere of reserve in the State Department, and this feeling is reflected to some extent in to-day's editorial comment.

The Baltimore Sun says that rarely had a nation's assent been more reluctantly given and that the narrowness of the margin was "not flattering to France's allies. Nor ... do they speak well for the firmness of French intentions." The New York Times is a little kinder. The closeness of the vote, it says, shows what an agonizing decision it was for France to rearm the traditional foe, and that she was to come to this decision reflected to "the sound heart and clear mind of her people." But Mr. Reston in the same paper observes that the associates of Mr. Dulles are really "sick at heart about the political instability of France and full of doubts about her reliability as an ally."

How far Mr. Reston's observations are reflected in Mr. Dulles's mood this morning when he addressed the Press is a matter of opinion, but his face did not appear happy when he read a prepared statement on the political credits and deficits of his department for the year.

Manila Pact

His only reference to the Paris vote was that French approval had been made in the teeth of "unparalleled pressure from the Soviet Communist bloc." Earlier he had talked about the defeat in France of E.D.C. and the setback in Indo-China. However, he grew more cheerful when he spoke of the Manila pact, which, if it was carried out adequately, "could limit the scope and consequence of the loss." He announced his intention of going to the first meeting of the "Manila nations" at Bangkok in February, at which they would consider inter alia how to use the Mobile striking force on which they must rely. Did that mean, asked one journalist, that Anglo-American and French naval and military forces were intended for the area? Mr. Dulles thought this was the general idea, but ways and means had to be explored. One of the main problems that the Manila nations had to consider was an effective way to combat subversion in the area. Was there to be a permanent rotation for a secretariat? Mr. Dulles did not think so at the moment. The Manila pact was not like N.A.T.O and other countries might have different ideas, but no pact like this was effective unless there was an organization behind it.

He was then asked what importance he attached to the Afro-Asian conference in Indonesia and whether it clashed with the Manila pact? Mr. Dulles spoke carefully, if not coldly, about it. The meeting did not directly involve the United States, he said, as this was not "an Afro-Asian country." He did not seem to take kindly to the idea in reports reaching here to-day of the offer by the Prime Minister of Ceylon to help if Mr. Hammarskjold's mission to Peking failed. He had every confidence in the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Soviet Note

As for reports that the Soviet Union had delivered a Note to United States Embassy in Moscow, Mr. Dulles indicated that he had some ideas about the subject involved, but he would not comment, as the text had not reached Washington.

Turning to events in the western hemisphere, the Secretary of State said the Caracas declaration was a momentous answer to international Communism, but he did not comment on the coming visit in February of Vice-President and Mrs. Nixon to Central America and the Carribbean area—an indication, perhaps, that all was not well in these parts, at least in American eyes.

But, generally, Mr. Dulles found much to comfort him in his review of 1954. He faced the New Year with confidence, but gave a warning against over-confidence. "Indeed" he said, "we cannot hold our own much less increase our net gain unless we maintain our vigilance and our efforts on a basis of national unity."

Civil Liberties Today in the U.S.S.R.

BY D. N. PRITT

With that rather long explanation, let me try to answer the question as to the position of civil liberty in the U.S.S.R. to-day. And let me take some rather smaller points than those of the right to work, or the right to leisure. Let me think of some of the things that the sincere student of the U. S. S. R. has in mind. What of the right of foreigners to enter the Soviet Union, and travel about in it. And not just "foreigners" in general, but foreigners known to be by no means favourably inclined to the U. S. S R. What of the right of anyone, foreigner or not, to take photographs of this, that, or the other building? What of the right of the Soviet citizen to read what he wants, to write about it to discuss it—and not only the right, but what I might call the social feasibility? By this I mean that whilst it was never unlawful to discuss and criticise Stalin, it was formerly the sort of thing that one wouldn't normally do with a casual acquaintance. But a month or two ago, a Soviet air-pilot whom I met by chance on an aerodrome in Kazakakhstan asked me quite simply what I thought of Stalin. And I answered him.

Restrictions Relaxed

I feel that after my recent visit (September 1954) my previous post-war visits being in 1946 and 1950, I can report most emphatically that on all these points, and on all other similar points, there is a greatly improved atmosphere. In the past, when confronted by all sorts of minor restrictions, I have always expressed my belief that such restrictions were imposed because they were really necessary, generally because there was always some hostile activity being operated or attempted from outside, which compelled the Soviet authorities to exercise strict control. And I always expressed at the same time my conviction that, as soon as they felt that such measures were no longer necessary they would drop them, that they used them not because they liked them, but because they held them to be necessary, and that they would be as happy to be rid of them as we would be in England to be rid of similar restrictions.

I was thus trebly glad to see, this year, that many restrictions were relaxed or gone altogether, and that there was a much greater feeling of "free and easiness" not easy to define or desirable but very easy to sense, than before. I say "trebly" because I was glad for three distinct reasons. Firstly, it was pleasant to feel the new atmosphere, secondly it was nice to be proved right, to see that nobody had become infected by the virus of restriction for its own sake, and thirdly, above all, because I felt that the root cause of the new attitude and atmosphere lay in the convicton of the Soviet people and Government that they need no longer worry about anything that their enemies might attempt in the way of subversion, because such enemies have no longer the power to do anything against their country and their way of life, now happier more secure, more prosperous than ever before.

As I have said, it is not easy to give concrete examples but two spring to my mind. The first is one which may be better appreciated by lawyers than by laymen, but will—I feel—be understood by everyone on reflection. It consists in what a lawyer would call the limitation of the criminal legislative field. Every country declares this or that activity to be a crime if it thinks it sufficiently anti-social to require criminal sanctions, the border line between what must be made a crime and what need not be may well be uncertain: some countries will leave some bad habits to be cured by public opinion, while others will make them crimes (every State makes murder criminal but ringing door-bells and running away, or "jay-walking" in crowded streets, is sometimes not,) And it is to my mind a measure of civil liberty that a country should find it possible not to cast the net of criminal law too wide. Well, of recent years, the Soviet Union has repealed a good deal of legislation creating minor offences, and has left people who commit the smaller anti social acts which have thus ceased to be classified as crimes, but are still anti-social, to be dealt with administratively, i. e. those who commit them can be rebuked or stopped by the organisation which employs them or by the people in charge of the railway station, or who ever it may be. That is a distinct advance, a help to ease and relaxation.

Free Discussion

The other example, quite a different one, lies in the realm of discussion. Visitors to the Soviet Union who, like myself know most of the slanders, even the more beastly ones, that are paraded about the Soviet Union, and want to have the fullest factual answers to them, have sometimes in the past felt reluctant to insult their Soviet friends by even telling them about such slanders and asking for their comments. On this visit I felt—and I found by experiment that I was right—that in the present easy atmosphere I could put even the most disgusting story before them, as one would put a putrid corpse before a surgeon, and ask them to analyse it and discuss it. Only a combination of serene confidence and real toleration could have led my friends to discuss with me some of the things they did freely discuss with me.

Yes, Civil Liberty, whatever its precise definition or pattern is on the upgrade in the Soviet Union, like every other fruitful thing.

Removal of Teeth with Anaesthetic

Risk of Explosions in Mouths

People having their teeth out under an anaesthetic run the risk of an explosion in their mouths, according to two anaesthetists who claimed today they had produced visible sparks with teeth and dental forceps.

The warning was given by Mr. J. G. Bourne of Saint Thomas Hospital, London, and Dr. H. J. V. Morton of a West London hospital, writing in this week's issue of the Lancet a leading British medical journal. They said the best display of sparks was obtained when fine root forceps were strongly applied to the crowns of healthy molars and then were made to fracture the enamel, "the hardest substance in the body."

Results of experiments suggested that if sparks were formed during the extraction of teeth when cycloprophane (an anaesthetic) had been administered, the likelihood of an explosion depended mainly on the concentration of oxygen in the mouth at the time.

Ignition was unlikely when the concentration of oxygen did not exceed 30 per cent and was improbable when it was 25 per cent or lower. But the oxygen concentration in the exhibitions of 13 patients did not decrease to 25 per cent until several breaths of air had been taken.

The danger of an explosion might be avoided if the dentist wanted until these few breaths had been taken but, the writers commented, "this could not be relied on since dental surgeons are wont not to pause at this stage."

As a safeguard they suggested that 50 per cent cyloprophane should be administered not with oxygen but with an equal mixture of oxygen and nitrogen.

WAY Sets up Centre In Ceylon

Forty-seven member countries of the World Assembly of Youth will be sending their youth leaders for training in Ceylon from the beginning of next June.

For this purpose WAY has leased out for three years a 17-acre block of land at Hatton. Prof. Ralph Lynton of the Harvard University has been appointed the Director of this Youth Leader Training Institute.

This scheme of running a training institute was mooted out by the Ceylon delegation, at the second general assembly of WAY held in Singapore last August.

Qualified teachers from foreign countries will be employed to do the training. Scout masters and youth leaders awarded U. N. or WAY-sponsored scholarships will be given training in this centre.

The headquarters for the East and Far East will also be centred here. Dr. George Carter, Travelling Secretary of WAY, will inspect the regional work.

YOUTH COUNCIL TO BE GIVEN A STATE FARM

THE Wellawaya State Farm which was closed down recently will be handed over to the South Ceylon Youth Council so that it could be run by the students of the Okuruwaya Centre.

This was revealed by the G. A. Mr. K. M. D. Jayanetti, presiding at the District Agricultural Committee meeting held at the Kachcheri, when Mr. W. A. Ratwatta, M.P. for Haputale, asked what the Government proposed doing with the farm.

The Committee unanimously decided that 50 per cent, of the farm should be reserved for agricultural students who pass their final examinations.

Chaucer's Canterbury Tales Rs. 2.00

Ananda Kumar's translation of six of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales is a welcome venture and adds to the collection of good translations of the English classics. It is not everyone who can capture the flavour of Chaucer's style and subtle humour but the writer has succeeded in doing it.

In a world which clamours for Swabasha but in which there is in actuality very little reading material, this book is a very material addition.

Dear Mr. Editor

Conduct of V.I.P'S.

The Newspapers recently contained a lengthy well considered and fearless judgement. There is no doubt that all Ceylon should be proud of our independent judiciary who fearlessly have held the scales of justice. The rich and the poor, humble and the proud, the millionaire and the beggar, have the same justice administered. There is another aspect of this judgement which has to be considered. What will government do when a prominent man, a man who has been honoured by the king, a man who is permitted to sit in the highest legislative body in land, is found guilty of Machiavellian conduct. The dictionary says that this is conduct of an 'unscrupulous schemer.' There is in the country a rising tide against the government recognising and giving all aid to persons of this type. 'Meetings all over the country complain of the private conduct of our public men. Will the government be bold enough to strip these wolves of their honours and prevent them strutting about as powers in the land. When will government set a standard of conduct which is decent and moral. Will a church of God permit a machiavel to hold high honour. Let the government beware for things are moving fast—very fast.

Admirer of Independent Judiciary.

ROLE OF SOVIET TRADE UNIONS IN IMPROVEMENT OF WORKING CONDITIONS

BY A. SIVAKOV

A non-party public organization, the biggest mass organization of the working people, the Soviet trade unions, have a membership of more than forty million. The trade unions are open to all industrial workers, office employees and professionals who may desire to join, irrespective of race, nationality, sex and religion.

The trade unions of the USSR take an active part in the political and economic life of the country, in drafting legislation relating to production, labour, living conditions and cultural services, and they are doing everything to ensure undeviating implementation of this legislation.

Soviet trade unions are constantly concerned with improvements in working conditions in industry, transport, and in the offices and institutions. They exercise daily control over the observance of Soviet laws on labour protection, of the rules and standards of safety engineering and industrial sanitation. This control is maintained through special instructors of the Central Committees of the trade unions, and through the labour protection commissions of the factory, local and shop committees of the trade union organizations. Chosen by the workers and other employees, these commissions are composed of 3 to 21 members, depending upon the size of the personnel in the given factory or institution. Furthermore, every trade union group allots public labour inspectors.

Labour Protection Commissions

The trade unions take full advantage of the extensive rights granted to them by Soviet laws for constant improvements in working conditions. For example, the labour protection commissions of the factory and shop committees, and the public labour inspectors at the Ural Machinery Plant, together with the management of the plant, succeeded in raising the efficiency of production, in ensuring exemplary sanitation in the shops, dressing rooms, shower rooms and other services. On the recommendation of the labour protection commissions the management equipped the shops with 476 powerful ventilating systems which pump in 2.8 million cubic metres of fresh air in one hour. Important results have been accomplished by the labour protection commissions at the Stalin Auto Plant of Moscow, where new ventilation systems with a total capacity of 10,000 kw. have been installed in all the shops.

Air Conditioning

Special air conditioning systems are installed in many factories and mills, where that is necessary for ensuring healthful working conditions. For example, air conditioning installations have been introduced in the shops of the Orekhovo-Zuyevo textile mills with the active co-operation of the Labour Protection Commission.

Voluntary Functionaries

For example, at the Bytosh glass factory, in Bryansk Region, the Commission is divided into several groups to enable it to cope more effectively with its duties. With the assistance of voluntary functionaries each group exercises control over a definite sector of labour protection and safety engineering. One group is responsible for the uninterrupted work of the ventilation systems, for the provision of proper lighting at the machines, for air conditioning in the shops. Another group is responsible for the sanitation in the wardrobes, shower rooms and all the services. A third group is responsible for sanitation in the shops; the fourth group sees to it that all the workers are instructed in safety engineering rules; the fifth group controls safety engineering and ensures that all the tools and machines are in proper condition; the sixth and seventh groups are responsible for the condition of the internal hoisting and transportation services, for the timely provision of working clothes and shoes, soap, and milk issued to workers in certain trades. They check up on the supply of drinking water in the shops, on the provision of protective eyeglasses, special working clothes, and of the necessary safeguards required by safety engineering standards, etc.

Under Soviet laws, the labour protection commissions have the right to inspect the shops and machines and to examine the documents relating to labour protection. The recommendations of the commissions are subject to fulfilment by the management in the factory or institution.

One of the results of the constant concern of the Soviet Government, the Communist Party and of the trade unions for the man of labour, is expressed in the fact that accidents and disease in Soviet industry have been reduced by about 66 per cent in the last few years.

Facilities

Labour protection and the provision of rest and recreation facilities for the workers and other employees are the most important tasks of the trade unions which take full charge of the social insurance fund. In the enterprises and institutions these functions are performed by the Social Insurance Councils formed at every factory and local committee of the trade unions if the given enterprises or institution employs at least 100 workers. In enterprises and institutions with a smaller personnel these functions are performed by the social insurance agents elected, just as the Social Insurance Councils are, at general meetings of the workers.

Functioning under the Social Insurance Council at the Dniepropetrovsk steel mills are groups for the prevention of disease and accidents, groups for comradely assistance to sick workers, and special groups for controlling the work of the medical services and sanitation, for the child services, and pensions and finance groups. Each group is headed by a member of the Social Insurance Council. Social Insurance commissions and insurance agents are elected in the shops.

Social Insurance

The social insurance agents control the enforcement of social insurance legislation, the payment of sickness benefits, pensions to invalids and to families which had lost their breadwinners, and the payment of maternity benefits to mothers of large families and unmarried mothers. They keep a record of the workers, requiring treatment at a health resort and assist in securing accommodation for them at sanatoria and rest homes. The insurance agents inspect the conditions at the factory polyclinics, dispensaries, hospital and prophylactic services, at the kindergartens, creches and summer camps for children; about three million children were accommodated in these camps this summer.

One of the important duties of the trade union organizations in the USSR is to ensure constant improvements in housing and living conditions of the working people. The trade unions exercise public control over housing construction and the maintenance of existing houses with the assistance of hundreds of thousands of voluntary functionaries of the trade union housing and services commissions of the factory, shop and local organizations.

Public control over housing and utility services for the working people is exercised mainly by appointing voluntary functionaries to check on the construction of houses, cultural and utility services, the dining halls, bath houses, laundries, stores and polyclinics, to check up on the progress of construction, on the condition of the apartment houses, on the correct assessment of housing rent, gas, electricity and other charges.

Many trade union organizations assist the workers in building private homes themselves. They help them to receive long-term state loans, the ground for construction (allocated free of charge), to acquire building materials and transporation facilities, etc.

In the last few years, steel workers alone built private homes for themselves with a habitable floor space exceeding one million square metres. That was done with the aid of long-term state loans.

Thus, with the generous assistance of the socialist state the Soviet trade unions are able to secure constant improvements in the working and living conditions of the people.

Partial Loss of Life

NEW METHOD OF TREATMENT

A new method of treating total or partical loss of voice has been developed by the Moscow Research Institute for Ear, Throat and nose Diseases.

The older methods employed required a lengthy period of treatment. The new method is a comprehensive one, including many of the older methods, but in such a combination as to yield the best and most rapid effect.

What is this comprehensive method?

Treatment usually begins after a thorough examination when it has been difinitely established that there are no organic changes in the patient's vocal chords. First the nature of the treatment is explained to the patient. Next the electrodes of a low-frequency alternating current apparatus are placed on the patient's neck and fastened by means of banage. When the apparatus is switched on the electric current causes a movement of the vocal chords. The doctor simultaneously conduct breathing and orthophonic exercises, the patient repeating after the doctor at first different sounds and then whole words and phrases, with the doctor correcting him in the process.

The comprehensive method is based on Pavlov's conditioned reflexes theory. The reflex causing hoarseness which becomes set during illness is removed as a result of the treatment. The patient gains his voice after a few exercises, sometimes after the very first session.

The Mary Magdalene of Ancient India

BY R. P. N. SINHA

OVER two thousand years ago, there lived in the city of Vaishali (the capital of the Republic of Lichchhavis) a courtesan of the name of Ambapali. She was universally famed for her unsurpassed beauty and supreme artistic talent. People came to her from the farthest corners of India and the city of Vaishali grew more and more prosperous. When King Bimbisar of Magadh learnt of this, he, too, appointed an official courtesan so that his own capital city of Rajigrih might grow and prosper as Vaishali had done.

So lovely was Ambapali that when she arrived at Kotigam to pay her respects to Lord Buddha during his third and last visit to Vaishali, he considered it necessary to warn his disciples against her charm. But as the story of her life will tell, her beauty was to her more a curse than a blessing.

Ambapali was found as a baby in a mango orchard in Vaishli and brought up by the gardener. That is how she got the name of Ambapali, which means "One who was nourished by the Mango." None ever knew the name of her father or mother. Ambapali grew up to be a girl of exquisite beauty and by the time she attained the age of sixteen, she started to attract the attention of the sons of the noblemen of Vaishali. There were bitter disputes among her suitors and things came to such a pass that the elder statesmen of the Republic had to intervene. After long deliberations it was decided that Ambapali should not marry any particular individual but should belong to all.

When this proposal was conveyed to her and her consent sought, Ambapali was bewildered and unhappy. The idea of leading the life of a courtesan was repulsive to her but the elder statesmen of the Republic were powerful and it was not easy for her to go against their wishes. At long last she decided to accept the proposition on condition that five demands were conceded to her, namely, that:—

(ii) None should enter her house while there was a visitor already.

(iii) None who had not at least five "Karshapens" to offer her should be allowed to enter her house.

(iv) During "Gilhvichaya" (the weekly house-search) her house should not be searched except on the last day of the week.

The conditions Ambapali laid down were readily accepted. The elders gave her the title of Sri Ratna and appointed her Nagar Vadhu, or the Bride of the City.

The fame of her beauty and stories of her skill in dance and music soon spread throughout the country and visitors from far and wide started to come to the city of Vaishali in ever-increasing numbers. It is said that King Bimbisar visited her secretly several times. There is an account of such a visit in the "Vinayvastu". It is said that as Bimbisar entered the apartments of Ambapali, the big bell in the heart of Vaishali, which tolled when someone who was hostile to the Republic entered the city, started ringing. Bimbisar, a sworn enemy of the Lichchhavis knew that the ringing of the bell would be followed by a search of all the houses, and turned pale with fear. Ambapali hastened to assure him that her house would not be searched for another seven days and that he should not let anxiety spoil his visit. Bimbisar stayed on for six days, and then prepared to return to Magadh. He gave Ambapali a ring and a piece of white cloth (Virali) and said that if she bore him a son, she should send him to Magadh with the ring and the cloth and he would then accept him as his son. The story goes that Ambapali's famous son, Vimal Kondan, was born of Bimbisar.

But in spite of her dazzling beauty, her untold wealth and her ever-increasing fame, Ambapali was not happy. The life she lived gave her no peace of mind, and feelings of remorse and shame never left her.

At last, the day of her redemption came. On his way to Kushinagar, where he attained Paranirvan, Lord Buddha stopped, for the third time, at a place a few miles from Vaishali. When Ambapli heard of this, her desire to see him knew no bounds. So impatient was she, that she drove her own chariot to the place Lord Buddha had stopped. She begged him to honour her with a visit to Ambapali Van, her famous mango grove, the next day. Lord Buddha accepted her invitation and declind those of the noblemen who came to pay him homage.

Ambapali returned to Ambapali Van, full of hope and a new happiness, and prepared with care the food which was to be offered to Lord Buddha the next day. When he came, she asked him to take her house and her famous garden for the use of the Sangha. She fell at his feet and prayed that he might accept her as a disciple which he did for, after all, it was with the sole intention of redeeming her that he had come to Vaishali for the third time. That day, Ambapali became a Bhikkuni and after the Lord had left for Kushinagar, she took a begging bowl, and left her house for ever.

Thus was Ambapali redeemed, and she has the proud privilege of being the first nun in the order of the Buddha Bhikkunis. In course of time she became one of the most prominent theris in the Sangha and attained to Arhantship. Nineteen couplets in Therigatha (Songs of the Sisters) are said to have been composed by her and bear testimony to deeply philosophic mind and to her great literary gift.

So striking is the similarity between the lives of Ambapali and Mary Magdalene, the famous courtesan of the time of King Herod, that one is compelled to wonder at the universality of human experience. Both these extraordinary women had beauty, wealth and fame, and the strange fascination they exercised over men has become proverbial. And yet, they lived lives of spiritual anguish and yearned always to be what they were not. Their salvation came, at last, through the very intensity of their desire to leave their lives of shame behind them. One was redeemed by Lord Buddha, and the other by Jesus Christ, but the manner of their redemption was, perhaps, too alike to have been mere coincidence.

The Legacy of Hiroshima

"Their effects will not be restricted to the Present generation but will also remain in future generations."

This was stated by Dr. Synge, a British scientist, Fellow of the Royal Society and Nobel Prize winner, in describing the character and danger of of thermo-nuclear weapons. He also said: As a biochemist I am tormented by the new mass destructive weapons, primarily the atom bomb and radio-active poisons, and also perhaps bacteriological weapons. If these weapons come into use it will not be possible to control them in either time or space.

In February 1954, at a meeting of Japanese and American doctors in Tokio studying the effects of atomic rays on the human body, a doctor from Hiroshima told how when Hiroshima was atom-bombed by an American plane one of the survivors was a six year old Japanese girl. Over seven years later, in January 1953, she suddenly developed anaemia and could only be kept alive by continuous blood transfusions. After two days she suffered a servere haemorrhage of the nose and mouth mucouses and died.

This is the work of the atom bomb; at Hiroshima it killed 247,000 people and today it goes on killing.

Listen to Mrs. Masako Hosotani of 206 Sekiguchi-machi Bunkoyu, Tokio, Japan: "The moment I saw three young women coming up, their faces exposed to a brilliant sunshine, I felt surely they are the atom-bombed girls from Hiroshima, for I knew that the Koishikawa branch of Tokio University was near, where seven young women are staying to undergo a plastic operation to mend their faces that the atom bomb had distorted. I felt as if my heart were breaking at the grotesque appearance of these young women, whispering to each other and bending their faces down as low as they could. Cruel it is, too cruel it is to look at them, I cautioned myself, but I could not help looking back at the moment they passed by me side their wounds swelling up into a big lump of flesh from mouth to chin. That is the very thing we call by the name of 'Keroido', which though it can be removed, again and again grows up anew."

This is the legacy of atomic Warfare!

In his book "Hiroshima", the American writer John Hersey gives a description of an atom-bombed city. The following is an extract from his book:

"Mr. Tanimoto, fearful for his family and church ran towards them.....he was the only person making his way into the city; he met hundreds and hundreds who were fleeing and everyone of them seemed to be hurt in some way. The eyebrows of some were burned off and skin hung from their faces and hands. Some were vomiting as they walked. Many were naked or in shreads of clothing. On some undressed bodies, the burns had had made patterns of undershirt straps and suspenders and on the skin of some women (since white repelled the heat from the bomb and dark clothes absorbed it and conducted it to the skin) the shapes of flowers they had on their kimonos. Almost all had their heads bowed, looked straight ahead, were silent.....under many houses people screamed for help, but no one helped...When Mr. Tanimoto reached the park it was very crowded and to distinguish the living from the dead was not easy...to Father Kleinsborg the silence in the grove by the river where hundreds of gruesomely wounded suffered together was one of the most dreadful and awesome phenomena of his whole experience. He gave water to some of those whose faces had been almost blotted out by flash burns. Mr. Tanimoto found about twenty men and women on the sandpit.....he reached down and took a woman by the hands but her skin slipped off in huge gloves. THE HISTORY OF THE OYLMPIC GAMES

By Hellmut Schmidt

Olympics and Peace—two words that belong together, you will agree. Historians note that in ancient Greece, the approach of the Olympic Games, each four years, denoted the approach of peace. Then all fighting ceased, kings and cities were bound to allow free passage to all the competitors towards Olympus. Pierre de Coubertin and his fellow founders of the Olympics of our times firmly believed that one day noble and friendly sports competition would replace bloodshed. They were not alone in their ideas and every year the number of people who carry the torch of Peace from one Olympic Games to the next, multiplies.

The Legend of the Olympics

The origin of the Olympic Games is lost somewhere in the mists of the past. The name of Hercules is figured largely in an old Greek legend. He represented the strength & youth. According to the legend. Hercules, after having cleaned out the stables of Augias, king of Elis (which was the task of a Labourer obliged by the gods to accomplish as a punishment for a past misdeed), Denied a promised reward of 12 oxen by Augias, Hercules became enraged, gathered an army and attacked the king. Later. falling ill, the king concluded an armistice. However, the kings' nephew, disregarding the truce, attacked and massacred Hercules army. In revenge, Hercules attacked once more and slew the king and his family. To mark his victory he organised Games, with the olive branch as a prize. He decreed that the games should be held every five years.

The Olympic Games in History

The name Iphitos of Elis brings us out from the mist of legends into the light of historical facts, We have good reason to believe that the games existed over a period of centuries, going back, probably to the time of the Trojan Wars. For some reason, later the Games ceased and up to the time of Iphitos seem to have been forgotten. Iphitos wishing to put an end to the continual wars which were ravaging the cities and countryside of Greece, Iphitos took the step (Records say, on the advice of the gods) to revive the Olympic Games. He made an agreement with the King of Sparta, declaring the place of the Games neutral. At first, only the inhabitants of Elis took part, but later sportsmen came from all over the country. The last games took place in 393 B.C. after which they were discontinued on the order of the Roman Emperor Theodosius the First. They were to reappear again only in A. D. 1896.

The Rebirth of the Olympic Games

Towards the middle of the 19th century, a German Historian Curtius, drew the attention of the world to the Olympics. He found a ready response and in 1859, the Greeks revived one of their finest traditions. This was the first of five National Olympics. 1870, 1875, 1888, 1889 being the dates for the others.

On the 16th June, 1894, on the initiative of the Frenchman Pierre de Coubertin, a meeting took place in the Sorbonne, where it was decided to revive the Olympics. It was proposed to organise the Olympic games during the first year's of the 20th Century. However, on the insistence of the Greeks, it was possible to hold them already in 1896, in the Greek capital Athens. At this meeting in Paris the International Olympic Committee was formed.

1896 Athens

The first modern Olympic Games attracted attention not only from the Greek people but from the entire world. The Marathon race, over the original course, was the centre of attention. After a hard struggle it was a Greek Spyros Louis who won in 2 hours 58 minutes, 50 seconds.

1900 Paris

Known as the "pell-mell Olympics," and for a good reason, they were opened at the same time as the Great Exhibition in Paris. The organisers hoped to profit from the coincidence, and in effect they did not occupy themselves very much with the sporting side of the organisation. Nevertheless good results were produced. In the 100 metres, the world record (10.8 seconds) held by an American was beaten for the first time in 24 years, by Abrahams of England.

1904 St. Louis USA

In spite of the fact that certain of the organisers seemed more interested in the commercial side, the Games produced some remarkable results. Putting the weight (1480.8 cms.)! Hammer throwing (51.23m.); 15000 metres (4.5.4"); long jump (347.75cm.) and high jump (149.5 cm.).

1906 Athens

The Games became more interesting through the addition of other branches of sport. For the first time the classic pentathlon standing long jump, discus, javelin, 200 metres race and wrestling were held. Also for the first time Hellenic discuss, tug-of-war and football (won by Denmark) were added.

1908 London

The best sportsmen of the world took part, en masse. Credit must go to the British who provided a new stadium, a fitting place for the Games. The Italians renounced their right to hold the games at the last minute. Again there were new branches introduced including water polo and skating.

1912 Stockholm

The 5th Olympic Games showed a great advance in swimming. At the previous games 149 competitors from 14 countries, at Stockholm 223 competitors from 17 countries. Due to the large number of competitors demi and semi finals were introduced.

The First World War prevented the holding of the next Games.

1920 Antwerp

Known as the "mutilated games." Competitors from the nations defeated in the War were not allowed to take part. The Finnish competitors took the laurels. They won 10,000 metres (Nurmi 31.45.8) javelin and other branches, often breaking world records.

1924 Paris

Many world records were beaten. Abrahams (England) set up a new time for the 100 metres with 10.6 seconds, which stayed unbeaten until the 1932 Olympics.

1928 Amsterdam

Women took the field in a remarkable way, in new branches which up till then had not appeared in the Games. 100 metres was won by E. Robinson with 12.2 As well as discus (39.62), high jump (159 cm.), 800 metres flat (2.16.8) and the 4X100 metres relay (Canada 48.4.) All world records.

1932 Los Angeles USA

The great economic crisis nearly put an end to the Games. Up to six weeks before the opening, there was still no hard and fast decision to hold the Games. However, despite the uncertainties, they were a great success. They earned the name "World Record Olympics." All mens events except two produced records. The American Tolan with 10.3 in the 100 metres set up a record which still exists to-day. Here for the first time the "Olympic village" was built.

1936 Berlin

51 nations with 5,400 competitors took part. There were 12 world records and 68 Olympic records. Jesse Owens, American Negro was the star of the day with a long jump of 806 cms., still unbeaten. An interesting thing to note is that outside the competitions, during filming he jumped 820 cms. Jesse Owens victory was all the more significant due to the open attempts of the Nazi state of that time to make use of the Olympic Games for self glorification, quite in contrast to the Olympic principles.

The next games were proposed for 1940 at Helsinki and 1944 in London. However, once again the clouds of war loomed and the Games were abandoned.

1948 London

The first world sports competition after the war. A record participation and excellent results. It is notable that for the first time the New Democracies of Eastern Europe took part and gained excellent result.

1952 Helsinki

A landmark in the history of the games. A tremendous interest was aroused throughout the world. New world records, hundreds of excellent results. The USSR took part for the first time and scored remarkable victories, sharing the hononrs with the United States. Zatopek., Czechoslovakia set up a new world record in the 5,000 metres (14.6.6.), S.G. Iness (USA) in discus 55.03 m.) Olympic record. Zybina (USSR) set up a world and olympic record of 15.28 m. in putting the weight. The swimmers from Hungary, like many of their colleagues, shook the world with their successes.

And now 1956 ?

The next Olympic Games are scheduled for Melbourne in Australia. But, according to the world press, it seems that these games are in danger; The Australian Government is not disposed to lift the horse quarantine restriction of 6 months, which makes uncertain the equestrian events. We await the result of the next Olympic Committee meeting this May in Athens.

The Olympic Games badge, the five coloured circles interlocking signifies the five continents united in a common interest in everlasting friendship. We are sure that the future Olympics will be even greater than their predecessors for the number of young people entering the field of sport grows daily. And it is certain that the spirit of Peace and Friendship which surrounds the Games will grow stronger too. The 1956 Olympics, wherever they are held, will, like those in Helsinki send out their message of hope to the world.

WHAT IS RELIGION?

Religion consists in burning from head to foot in search of Truth,
Its end is love, and its beginning is propriety of conduct or discipline.
It is a fault to bring a bad word on the lips,
The 'infidel' and 'faith' are all creatures of God.

Humanity means honouring men,
Be aware of the lofty position of man!
A devotee of love takes guidance from God,
He becomes affectionate towards the "infidel" and the "faithful".

He takes in the breath of his soul both 'infidelty' and 'faith',
If the soul seeks refuge from another soul, woe be to that soul!
Although the soul is the prisoner in water and earth (the human body),
Yet all this universe is the universe of the soul.

MISCELLANY

BY NIHAL

Parliament on the Air.

Mr. W. Dahanayake, M. P. for Galle has suggested that proceedings in the House of Representatives be broadcast to the nation. He has already given notice of a motion to this effect. The public at large, I feel sure, will welcome his suggestion.

At present only an insignificant minority are in a position to know at first hand all that goes on in the House. One has either to be present in the galleries or read Hansard to learn what his representative is doing, in the absence of a faithful and impartial report in the daily press.

If Mr. Dahanayake's motion is accepted it would go a long way to sharpen the political consciousness of a much wider circle of people and keep them informed of the vital matters which effect their lives. It would also force a greater sense of responsibility on Members and make the voter cast his vote for the correct candidates when the occasion arises, in the future.

If the Government uses its steam-roller majority to throw out this motion it would indicate that it has something to hide from the public.

Communal Discrimination in Police?

The majority of Police Officers allege that communal discrimination exists in the Police Department. They allege that one particular community—and a minority at that—are receiving preferential treatment. They point out that most of the plum jobs in Colombo are held by this community.

A further point stressed is that some of these officers are kept at their posts in spite of the repeated failures, as, for instance, the recent unsolved murders, the now famous currency note forgery case, the existence of Illegal Bookies in the heart of Colombo who continue to operate with impunity.

One of the reasons adduced by some of the frustrated officers is that the I. G. P. favours the officers of this community because they can be depended on to use the police force for the advancement of the Party in power.

The American Spies and U.N.O.

The U. N. O. has lost no time in setting its machinery in motion on behalf of II American airmen sentenced by the People's Republic of China for spying. It has gone to the extent of sending the Secretary-General of the U.N.O. to China. But when a protest was lodged by Gautemala at the overthrow of a democratically elected Government by American sponsored stooges, the matter was side tracked by the U. N. O.

Thus it makes it apparent that II Americans mean more to the U.N.O. than an entire country. As any further proof necessary to convince the world how the U. N. O. has been reduced to an arm of American aggression under the guise of peace.?

Air Ceylon Gold Racket

"When a Leftist M.P. who is also a Red wheel visited Velvatturai quite recently, a deputation of smgglers visited hum in return.

"They had one request to make. Would he ask Parliament to ask Air-Ceylon to please stop competing in their decades-old trade?

"What the M.P. said in return has not been conveyed to Contact."

Who contacted "Contact" roundabout we do not know. But it is a long time since the smugglers of Velvatturai were swallowed up by the 'distinguished' ring, now operating on an international scale. Velvatturai and Air-Ceylon, apart from competing, are only two of the many chanels used by the ring that controls both!

C. T. C. Sweep Tickets

Some time back there were hot rumours afloat concerning the C.T.C. Sweeps run each raceday. There were suspicions that all was not well with the manner in which this sweep was conducted. Letters appeared in ths press which certainly made some improvement but which failed to ally public suspicion. Since then the prize money started shooting up. But those in the know felt that, considering the island wide sale of C.T.C. Sweep tickets, the prize money was still low.

The sweeps run by the Galle Gymkhana Club during the Race Meetings have been a revelation. The obvious question asked by the public is how the comparatively small G.G.C. Sweeps could have paid out larger prizes than the C.T.C. was doing with a much larger organization and with more experience.

If the suspicions of the public are to be dispelled and the good name of the Ceylon Turf Club upheld, it is imperative that an exhaustive enquiry must be made and the findings given wide publicity.

'Scab' Trade Unions

The Ceylon Workers' Congress has been accepted as the rightful Union of plantation workers. Since of late, however other mushroom bodies have commenced operations in the plantations. It was only recently that a certain revolutionary leftist party met with defeat when they attempted to gain control of the plantation workers. In frustration they raised racial cries, intimidation, and even attemped to force themselves over the workers with the aid of Superintendents of the estates. But the solidarity of the workers saved them from a split.

It is now reported that another such body has commenced operations in the Hatton District. They term themselves the Union of Ceylon Plantation and General Labour. When the Ceylon Workers' Congress was gripped in a life and death struggle for the fundamental rights of the plantation workers this scab union stepped in and joined the bosses. They have, it is understood, approached the the Superintendents of the estates and requested them to provide police protection to enable scabs to be sent in to break the strike.

If anything has ruined real trade unionism in Ceylon, it is political opportunism of a few schemers. To these individuals the welfare of the worker is only a means to the end of their political power. There have been many examples in recent times where mean men have used workers as stepping stones to political power. The Spinning and Weaving Mills strike was one such case. Here the workers were sacrificed for narrow and selfish individual and party ends. The same sorry state of affairs has spread to some other Unions. It is very fortunate that the sober counsels that prevailed among the G.C.S.U. rank and file defeated the splitters when these tactics were attempted in this union.

It is high time that the rank and file of trade unions took a keener interest in the affairs of their unions and put a stop to this rot that has set in.

What must be driven in is that workers are all equals. Caste and creed must not be used to split their solidarity and they must have the right of joining any political party of their choice, or remaining outside party politics if they so desire.

ARDENT LOVE

Short Story by EUGERIU CAMILAR

Madalina's Vasile, of Udesti. I have memories of him from long-past, blue spring-times of childhood. Then, Vasile used to take sheep up to the pastures, or the ducklings to the ponds of Alisandrosia. And I saw him again last summer.

The wheat had ripened in the fields, the maize-stalks had reached the height of a man's arm-pits. One burning night the field smelt of grain like a mighty oven. On the morrow the men were to start work with their sickles. Then, suddenly, towards morning, the heavens lightened and thundered. The rain came in torrents, followed by the ominous clattering of the roofs to a deluge of hailstones as big as pigeon's eggs. The storm lasted a long while.

Vasile had not lost his head, he merely gazed in silence at his drooping grain with its ears flattened to the ground. What was in his mind? As soon as the earth was dry, he went out to the field with his whole family, sickles in hand. Stalk by stalk, they began to cut off the ears of the wheat. And they did not rest until the field was swept clean like the palm of your hands, the whole of the grain having been rescued from the tide of calamity. Then he set to ploughing his land until he reached the thick layer of chernoziom or black earth. His neighbours first watched in amazement. Then, they too seized their sickles and learned Vasile's way of fighting the terrible scourge from the heavens. Afterwards they plough[illegible] land as he had done, so that very soon new maize, flowers and wild alfalfa were sprouting from the ravaged earth. From graveyards the fields had become gardens.

But the villagers were even more surprised to see Vasile at work among the fallen maize-stalks, raising them up one by one. He would caress the cob-leaves, adjust them, straighten the drooping ears. And Vasile soon made it obvious that his autumnmaize crop was not lost.

So it is not surprising that Vasile gets on well. It warms your heart to see his house with its vine border, his orchard with princely apples and imperial pears. You see well-fed cattle in his stables. The udders of the cows are heavy with milk. He rubs them down at night by the light of a lantern; you can see the result in their glossy hides.

I heard him winnowing his grain by night. I saw him carrying his sacks up to the loft, and the stairs creaked beneath the weight. When he goes out on Sunday, he comes home with a book or a newspaper stuck in his belt, and often I have seen him reading under the shade of a walnut, or in the grass on a carpet.

Nor is it surprising that the next time I saw him it was as a guest at a meeting of the People's Council of the village. He modestly seated himself in a corner, and when asked to tell how he had cropped 4000 kilos of barley per hectare last year, he blushed violently, fearing to be accounted a braggart. And what of it?' his glance challenged.

"Aren't 4000 kilos a lot? In good times, even our best ploughmen scarcely get 1500."

"What about it"? mumbled Vasile. Then he began to talk. He seemed to be consumed by an ardent love. He did not sing his own praise, but that of the land.

"...but as the land is far away and cannot hear us, I'll just say a thing or two about it." he added with a laugh. "There's one thing I can tell you, men! For me, the land is a live thing! Our State helps us to cultivate it well, to love it. See for yourselves: the more you manure it and the better you plough it, the more willingly it bears fruit. It's no use flogging a tired horse, it's no use expecting crops from starving land!"

"Still, 4000..." said a wondering voice.

Vasile turned up his broad palms in deprecation.

"I listened to the advice of the agronomer, sowed my barley under the autumn rains; it had the added benefit of the snow in winter. My barley went on growing with the strength collected last autumn."

The meeting listened to him in rapt interest. Vasile spoke unhurriedly, as one speaks of everyday occurrences. He said you had to be blind not to realise what help you were getting to increase the yield of the earth; to ignore what was new in the science of the land. Could you afford to ignore an experimental station? Could you roll cigarettes from the leaves of a book—a book on agriculture? Could you turn your back when selected seed was issued at the cooperative, when the agronomer came to tell you of the latest discoveries of scientists in the experimental fields? Could you keep it to yourself when you heard talks given over the radio by discoverers of still more methods of increasing your bread? Standing round smoking or gossiping beneath the willows doesn't help you to get on. It's no use cursing life when you see that even your sheepskin cap is wearing thin. You've a burning love...

"If I respected the land, if I gave it its due," went on Vasile, "it has now returned everything to me a hundredfold. Clothing for the family, food, my house with its corrugated iron roof, my cattle—all that I got from wrestling with the land! But it wasn't wrestling as enemies, it was friendly wrestling! Only a fool gets on bad terms with the land. As soon as it feels you're trying to cheat it through laziness and neglect, out come its thorns! But excuse me honest husbandmen, for letting loose all this talk, keeping you here part of the evening listening to me."

"No, no! Go on, go ahead!"

"What more am I to say? With the permission of you, husbandmen, there's something on my mind. I'll tell it to you right now: you praised me for cropping 4000 kilos per hectare, I don't know whether I deserve praise or not, but I'm thinking that with the help we get nowadays, with the seed, the machines, the fertilizer, the agronomers who help us, couldn't we do better?"

There was a murmur among the villagers.

"More! Who could hope for more?"

Tall and ruddy cheeked, Costan Griga stood up.

"I'm ready to do it!

But let nobody imagine I'm your set up!

Put it there—I'm taking you on!"

"Over 4000?"

"Right. But with equal help."

"That's only fair. We'll see who uses it best!"

The two farmers shook hands strongly and fell silent, eye to eye.

"They both mean what they say," came a voice. But shall Vasile said Costan be the only ones in the village?"

It was deputy Ion Tociuc who had put the question.

"I feel like taking on the nearest village," he added.

"Wait a minute, lads!" interrupted Gheorghe Pop." "Can we do it! Let's consider it as husbandmen."

"While the secretary of the People's Council was drawing up the challenge forms for emulation in the fruits of the land, Madalina's Vasile stood silently apart. Maybe he now felt ashamed of talking so much and challenging Costan to this test!

"That's settled, then," he said at last from the threshold. "Thanks for giving me your attention and inviting me to your meeting."

He was frowning slightly on his way home. "Wouldn't Costan prove cleverer than he? "No!" said Vasile." "I've got to beat him with over 4000. I wonder what he'll do, what methods he'll use."

The Sibiu State Philharmonic

RECENTLY the Sibiu State Philharmonic Orchestra celebrated its fifth anniversary (1949—1954).

This Philharmonic orchestra conducted by Henry Selbing was created from existing amateur musical circles in Sibiu whose activity and artistic mastery could not be utilized until the requisite conditions were provided by the people's democratic regime.

Sibiu is an old Transylvanian town at the foot of the Carpathians. Walls of the old fortress and mediaeval stairways blend with the outlines of modern factories and blocks of flats. Sibiu has an old musical tradition. Haydn's Symphony in G Major, also called the Sibiu Symphony, written in 1786 and recently discovered in this town, was interpreted for the first time by the Sibiu State Philharmonic.

Mozart's Zauberflote and Haydn's oratoria were heard in Sibiu as far back as 1790, and soon after a series of cultural societies [illegible] as well as bands and choirs were created. Nevertheless, musical life was limited and the repertory was small.

In the one hundred years between 1839 and 1939, only 50 symphonies were performed in Sibiu, whereas 139 symphonies could be heard in the same town during the last five years.

The Sibiu State Philharmonic does everything possible to make more and more workers, peasants and ordinary folk confirmed music-lovers. In the last five years it has given several hundred concerts in public halls, workers' clubs and Houses of Culture, attended by nearly 200,000 listeners.

The concerts of the Sibiu Philharmonic have a high artistic level and are much appreciated in the town and the neighbouring localities. The orchestra performs compositions by the classics of all countries, by Rumanian classics and modern composers. Local composers such as Ilie Micu, Gheorghe Soima and Iorgu Sandu are encouraged and their works are performed by the Sibiu Philharmonic.

The orchestra has grown considerably during the last few years, and engaged many young talented musicians. It includes experienced artists such as the conductor Henry Selbing, the leader of the orchestra Alfred Salmen and the pianist Hanns Schuler as well as young soloists who have graduated from the Orasul Stalin Popular Art School, such as Geta Goranescu, Gavril, Amiras, Judith Molnar and others.

The Sibiu Philharmonic is composed of Rumanian musicians and members belonging to the national minorities and takes an active part in the cultural life of the region. Members of the orchestra help amateur artists belonging to the teams of Houses of Culture, trade-union formations, orchestras and bands, who take part in local and national competitions, to achieve good performances.

The activity of the Sibiu State Philharmonic has earned the appreciation of the Government which has decorated the composer Henry Selbing, director and permanent conductor of the orchestra, with the Labour Medal in 1949, and in 1954, on the occasion of the orchestra's fifth birthday, with the Order of Labour. On the same occasion nine other members of the Sibiu Philharmonic were awarded the Order of Labour and the Labour Medal.

Excellent stars operate this week and you should find plenty of money rolling in from various directions. Before the 16th and between 18—20 you will feel satisfied.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

That bomb again

When American prestige is found rock bottom low and American tactics have proved bankrupt American Generals become increasingly fond of bragging about their atomic weapons. John Stevenson, commander of U. S. 49th Air Division stationed in Britain bragged about atomic war against the Soviet Union, in West Europe recently. Close upon it followed Radford, Chairman of U. S. Joint Chiefs of staff—who threatened atomic war against Korea and China. Once before this when the H-bomb was actually exploded, it proved to be such a damp squib that America was routed at the Geneva Conference and as an aftermath U.S. was forced to pay 2 million dollars compensation to Japan. If once again having not learnt a lesson, U.S.A. clamours for atomic explosions and obviously [illegible] to intimidate and coerce the [illegible] to her militarist schemes, one can forecast a tremendous success for the Afro-Asian conference. Hence no one should attempt to dissuade American traders in armaments and their political middlemen in talking of atomic pie in the sky.

Japan turns to China and Soviet Union

While Washington news releases frantically indicate Japan will not negotiate with China and the Soviet Union, Hatoyama, Japanese Premier is preparing to send trade Missions to these countries. He has gone a step further and defied American trade monopolism barriers in Japan by indicating he would lift trade restrictions and permit free travelling to the two countries. He said "I count on the purchasing power of these countries. Resumption of normal relations with China and the Soviet Union would contribute to the preservation of world Peace." And we may add "to the preservation of Japan as well!" For Radford is still feverishly trying to find "military muscle" for U.S. war plans by providing planes and warships for the expansion of Japanese forces—"in case of renewal of military action in Korea." This is a move to block the convening of the Afro-Asian conference, which U.S. fears will achieve results diametrically opposed to her schemes to save the world for "democracy." It is the now familiar "bag of tricks."

Further Asian Splits

Admiral Radford is very busy trying to persuade Thailand and the Phillippines to keep out of the Afro-Asian conference. Washington news releases have already announced that Phillippines will be boycotting the conference. But no official intimation has been issued from Manila. U.S. officials on the basis of "reliable diplomatic indications" consider Phillippines and Thailand cold to the conference plans. If U.S. blesses this brand of approach to a conference primarily concerned with promoting peaceful coexistence then the conclusion has to be drawn, U.S.A. does not want Peace, and is keen to create antagonisms and divisions on the Asian-African region. A consignment of U.S. military supplies valued at 17 million dollars arrived at Manila on December 14th.

Slap to Trade Policy

A further slap to U. S. trade policy is in store when several countries withdraw from GATT in the near future.

DISCOURS

Introduction

CE QUE FUT LE IIe CONGRES MONDIAL DE LA PAIX

L'INITIATIVE du Deuxième Congrès Mondial de la Paix fut prise par le Comité émanant du Premier Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, qui eut lieu à Paris, salle Pleyel, en avril 1949.

Le principe de la convocation du Second Congrès Mondial fut adopté en mars 1950, à Stockholm, en même temps que le célèbre Appel contre la Bombe atomique, qui devait recevoir l'approbation signée de plus de 500 millions d'hommes et de femmes par le monde.

Le 16 août 1950, le Bureau du Comité, réuni à Prague, lança des propositions de discussion pour de larges débats publics en vue de la préparation du Congrès qui devait avoir lieu à Sheffield (Grande-Bretagne).

Ces propositions portaient sur les points suivants :

— Interdiction des armes atomiques;
— Réduction des armements;
— Dénonciation de l'agression;
— Solution pacifique du conflit de Corée;
— Interdiction des propagandes de guerre.

Sur la base de ces propositions, se tinrent dans le monde des milliers d'assemblées populaires et de réunions d'organisation, qui discutèrent et élirent, démocratiquement, des délégués.

Le Congrès empêché par les autorités britanniques de se tenir, comme prévu, à Sheffield, à la date du 13 novembre, se transféra à Varsovie, où il siégea du 16 au 22 novembre.

Ces Assises Mondiales rassemblèrent 2.065 délégués et invités de 83 pays. Une discussion large s'ouvrit sur les rapports présentés par le Président JOLIOT-CURIE et le Vice-Président Pietro NENNI.

Cette ample et franche discussion aboutit à l'élaboration et au vote démocratiques de dix résolutions importantes ainsi qu'à l'élection d'un Conseil Mondial de la Paix, comprenant 235 représentants, placé sous la Présidence du grand savant Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE.

Ces décisions, mises aux voix, furent adoptées à la presque unanimité des délégués, moins trois abstentions.

Les résolutions adoptées par le Congrès constituent tout un programme, qui trouve son expression dans deux textes fondamentaux : « Le Manifeste aux Peuples » et l' « Adresse à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ».

Tous ces actes et résolutions du Congrès auront la force que leur donneront la volonté de Paix et le soutien des peuples. Le Congrès Mondial n'est pas une fin, mais un nouveau départ pour une action plus ample de tous les peuples en faveur de la paix.

PREMIERE SEANCE DU LUNDI 20 NOVEMBRE 1950

Le Président, M. UPHAUS (Etats-Unis) :

— La parole est à :

M. Charles HOWARD

Monsieur le Président,
Messieurs les Membres du Présidium,
Mesdames, Messieurs,

Avant de commencer mon discours, je voudrais transmettre à ce second Congrès Mondial de la Paix le salut du grand citoyen du monde, Paul Robeson, auquel le Département d'Etat a refusé le droit de venir ici, en personne. J'ai aussi le grand honneur d'apporter à la jeunesse de ce Congrès les vœux personnels de son fils, Paul Robeson junior, qui, lui aussi, se vit refuser son passeport au dernier moment. Quel triste spectacle ! Le gouvernement américain persécute une famille entière parce qu'elle parle au nom de notre peuple et qu'elle défend la cause de la Paix. Je vous assure que tout ce que je dis ici a été approuvé à la fois par Paul Robeson et par son fils.

Lorsque j'ai traversé la Tchécoslovaquie et la Pologne et que j'ai vu les terres ravagées qui faisaient contraste avec les beaux visages heureux et confiants des enfants, mes yeux se sont remplis de larmes, mon cœur fut baigné d'amour et je me suis voué, pour toujours, à la cause de la Paix parmi les êtres humains de tous les pays — l'Europe, l'Asie, l'Afrique, les Indes, la Chine, le Pakistan, les Amériques, les îles de l'Océan, et mon propre pays bien-aimé, les Etats-Unis. En tant que Noir Américain, je comprends ce que ces peuples ont souffert, et je ramènerai à mon peuple cette affection sincère que j'éprouve envers eux et qui est née de la misère et de l'oppression communes. Je désire exprimer toute la gratitude que je ressens envers les peuples de Tchécoslovaquie et de Pologne, en consacrant le reste de ma vie à la cause de la Paix.

Nous avons entendu beaucoup de réflexions, d'idées importantes à ce Congrès. Je désirerais m'arrêter sur quelques-unes d'entre elles. Par exemple, j'ai été très impressionné lorsque M. Ilya Ehrenbourg, délégué de l'Union Soviétique, déclara que son pays désirait la Paix, « non seulement avec l'Amérique de Robeson et de Fast, mais aussi avec celle de Truman et d'Acheson ». En tant que dirigeant du Parti Progressiste, et en tant que fils de mon peuple, j'ai de dures critiques à faire à l'Amérique de Truman et d'Acheson, mais je comprends ce que M. Ehrenbourg veut dire, et je voudrais que tous les Américains le comprennent aussi. La lutte pour la Paix n'est pas le fait d'un seul Parti, d'une seule croyance. Elle n'est pas, comme beaucoup d'Américains ont été amenés à le croire, le fait de soi-disants éléments « subversifs ». Cette lutte est celle de tout être humain, et surtout celle qui sauvera tout l'avenir national de mon pays. Nous attaquons le gouvernement de Truman et d'Acheson parce qu'il prépare la guerre, mais nous voulons nous unir avec les millions d'hommes qui ne voient pas encore le véritable rôle de Truman et d'Acheson. Voilà l'esprit qui doit nous aider à construire le mouvement de la Paix américain.

Et puis, il y a eu encore une autre pensée exprimée ici, hier matin, par le délégué français, Pierre Cot, je crois. Il a dit : « Nous sommes accusés d'être le soutien de l'Union Soviétique et l'ennemi des Etats-Unis. Cela est faux. Nous sommes Partisans de la Paix, et ennemis de la guerre. » Ceci frappe une corde qui, je crois, trouvera un écho aux Etats-Unis, car on a fait croire à beaucoup de gens que cette lutte pour la Paix était une question de choix entre les U.S.A. et l'Union Soviétique. On leur a fait croire que la Paix était, en quelque sorte, contre leurs intérêts, en tant que nation, et que seule la préparation à la guerre peut défendre ces intérêts.

Nous, qui appartenons au Parti Progressiste, nous avons mené cette lutte pour la Paix; nous avons été le Parti de la Paix aux Etats-Unis. Plus d'un million de membres du Parti Progressiste, en votant aux élections de 1948, ont rempli leurs bulletins pour défendre la Paix. D'autres millions d'hommes ont été influencés par notre campagne électorale. Le désir de Paix a une grande force parmi les Noirs de mon pays, et ils ont de bonnes raisons pour vouloir la Paix, car ils souffrent de la discrimination raciale en temps de paix, et sont les premiers à supporter le poids d'une guerre. Groupés dans des unités spéciales, ils doivent accomplir les pires travaux matériels de la guerre, et, ce qui est encore plus criminel, ils sont envoyés par leurs dirigeants pour combattre leurs frères et les maintenir dans l'esclavage. Aujourd'hui, c'est la Corée, demain ce seront leurs frères d'Afrique.

La guerre froide a déjà causé d'indescriptibles souffrances à mon peuple. Il est transformé en bouc émissaire. Par exemple, à l'instant où je vous parle, le 24e régiment d'infanterie, une unité noire, a été placé au plus dur du combat. Un officier noir, le lieutenant Gilbert, qui refusa d'accepter un ordre qui le menait à un véritable suicide, fut traduit en cour martiale et condamné à mort. A ce moment-là, le moral de l'armée était bas, et ce fut un Noir qu'ils choisirent comme bouc émissaire. De tels boucs émissaires, il y en a beaucoup; pour n'en citer que quelques-uns : les sept de Martinsville, Mme Rosa Ingram et les six de Trenton.

Voilà pourquoi je suis d'accord avec M. Cot. Le meilleur système de défense pour mon peuple et pour mon pays, c'est la Paix elle-même. La lutte pour la Paix n'est pas une lutte pour la cause de n'importe quel individu, mais pour notre propre cause. Telle est la seconde des idées précieuses que nous avons entendues ici ; elle nous aidera chez nous.

Mais voilà qu'hier nous avons entendu le long discours désordonné de M. Rogge. Il avait le droit de parler ici, car le but de ce Congrès était d'entendre différentes opinions. Et certainement personne ne peut dire qu'il n'ait pas été entendu.

Je ne veux pas perdre beaucoup de temps à répondre à M. Rogge, que je connais bien. Je l'ai rencontré pour la première fois lorsqu'il vint, en 1948, dans l'Etat d'Iowa, invité, en tant qu'orateur, à l'assemblée de fondation du Parti Progressiste de l'Iowa. J'ai eu des rapports avec lui en tant que membre du Comité National de ce Parti.

Je puis dire fermement au Congrès que M. Rogge n'a pas parlé ici au nom du Parti Progressiste. Il n'a pas parlé non plus au nom du peuple noir de l'Amérique. Hier, il a annoncé qu'il renonçait à assumer la défense des six de Trenton. Je suis Noir, je suis avocat, et je comprends naturellement que, dans la situation actuelle, il est plus dangereux et moins profitable de défendre la vie de six noirs, victimes innocentes, que d'être l'avocat de l'Ambassade de Yougoslavie à Washington.

M. Rogge n'exprime pas les opinions de la délégation américaine dont le Dr. Uphaus a donné ici, samedi dernier, le point de vue. Bien qu'il ait été membre du Comité Mondial sortant, il s'est abstenu de contribuer, en aucune façon, à la préparation de ce Congrès. M. Rogge est un employé rémunéré du gouvernement yougoslave, et je crois que tous ceux qui assistent à ce Congrès doivent estimer son discours d'hier à la lumière de cet emploi.

Mais occupons-nous d'une seule de ses idées. Dans le texte original de son discours, une phrase qu'il omit plus tard de prononcer dit : « En ce qui concerne mon pays, j'ai révisé mon opinion sur la guerre civile. Je ne pense plus du tout le bien que je pensais de notre guerre civile. Et lorsque je vois les rapports étroits qui unissent les Etats-Unis et la Grande-Bretagne, je doute aussi de la valeur de notre guerre révolutionnaire. »

Voilà une déclaration remarquable, n'est-ce pas ? M. Rogge s'est tellement transformé l'année passée, qu'il regrette maintenant que la guerre civile et même la révolution américaine aient eu lieu.

Eh bien, je ne vais pas discuter avec lui au sujet de Tito. Je dirai seulement qu'il est non seulement devenu l'avocat de Tito, mais, aux dernières nouvelles, celui de l'esclavagisme, de Jefferson Davis lui-même et même du roi George III.

Beaucoup d'hommes blancs se font une renommée de liberté. De temps en temps ils s'identifient à notre lutte, mais l'abandonnent lorsqu'ils sont acculés. Tout comme certains qui ont épousé la cause de la Paix dans le passé et ne peuvent maintenant être distingués des fauteurs de guerre eux-mêmes.

En tant qu'avocat, M. Rogge devrait savoir qu'il y a maints signes évidents de l'agression américaine en Chine, et qu'ils sont décrits dans le Bulletin Officiel de Washington qui a pour titre : « Relations entre les U.S.A. et la Chine », avec référence à la période 1944-1949, bulletin publié par le Département d'Etat, le 30 juillet (page 809).

Mais je laisserai à la délégation chinoise le soin de répondre à l'arrogance insolente d'un homme qui veut dire à un peuple, en lutte pour son indépendance pendant vingt ans, s'il est indépendant ou pas.

Quel est le véritable problème ? Oui, nous sommes contre les guerres d'agression. Nous défendons la Paix. Mais nous ne soutenons pas le statu quo. Nous, Noirs Américains, nous voulons la Paix et nous défendons le droit inaliénable des peuples, y compris du peuple américain et du peuple noir, à choisir le régime qui leur plaît. Nous défendons le droit de tous les peuples à changer leurs conditions d'existence et à mettre de l'ordre dans leur maison. La Paix est nécessaire, mais on ne doit pas la confondre avec le durcissement des conditions d'oppression, tel qu'on le pratique aujourd'hui. L'argument du gouvernement de Truman, selon lequel nous devons nous préparer pour une guerre contre une « agression », ne tend rien moins qu'à empêcher le monde de se transformer (ce qui aurait dû arriver depuis longtemps), surtout en ce qui concerne les peuples coloniaux avec lesquels mon peuple, le peuple Noir, est intimement lié.

Il est évident que, pour le monde entier, ceux qui sont au pouvoir dans ma chère Patrie ainsi que leurs valets, ne sont que des hypocrites lorsqu'ils déclarent qu'ils luttent pour établir la démocratie parmi les populations opprimées du monde. Mon peuple n'est-il pas sujet, chez eux, à la discrimination et à une différenciation des plus horribles ? Un seul exemple illustrera ce que je viens de dire : il est impossible à moi ou à tout autre noir, de se rendre dans les beaux quartiers de la capitale de mon pays et de demander une tasse de café pour soulager notre soif ou une « aspirine » pour calmer notre douleur.

Oui, la lutte du peuple Noir, en Amérique, est directement liée à celle des peuples coloniaux à travers le monde, du peuple de l'Afrique Britannique, de l'Afrique Française, des autres parties de l'Afrique dominées par les puissances colonialistes, de l'Amérique Latine, de mes frères des Indes Orientales, et du grand peuple Noir à travers le monde. A eux tous, je tends une main fraternelle. Nos luttes sont les mêmes. Et je vous promets que, avec l'aide de tous les Partisans de la Paix sur terre, et de tous ceux qui combattent sincèrement pour l'abolition de notre inique condition de vie, nous devons triompher, nous triompherons.

M. le Président, en tant que descendant de ceux qui ont été amenés en Amérique comme bétail humain, et dont le sang et la sueur ont contribué à la construction de ce grand pays, j'attends avec impatience, ainsi que tout mon peuple, le jour où, dans notre pays, nous serons traités avec la même dignité et le même amour, qu'en Tchécoslovaquie et en Pologne.

Cela n'est possible que dans un monde de Paix. (Applaudissements.)

DEUXIEME SEANCE DU SAMEDI 18 NOVEMBRE 1950

Le Président, M. JAMES ENDICOTT:
(Canada)

— La parole est à :

M. KUO MO JO

Monsieur le Président,

Chers Amis,

Le second Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix se tient maintenant à Varsovie. Au nom du Peuple Chinois, je salue le Peuple de Pologne et son président Bierut. Nous transmettons l'expression de notre chaleureuse gratitude au gouvernement de la République Populaire de Pologne.

La Délégation chinoise, tout comme les Délégations des autres pays de l'Extrême-Orient, a fait un long voyage pour venir en Europe, un voyage de quelques 10.000 kilomètres. A l'origine nous nous attendions à rencontrer le Peuple Britannique à Sheffield. Aujourd'hui nous voici à Varsovie.

En Extrême-Orient nous avions entendu parler du « Rideau de Fer ». Tout au long du chemin de la Sibérie à l'Europe Orientale nous n'en avons rencontré aucun. Il en existe tout de même : il est en train de tomber sur la Manche. (Applaudissements.)

Le Gouvernement Britannique a en fait empêché les gens des autres pays de rencontrer le peuple de Grande-Bretagne. Il a peur de la Paix et il a agi contre le Mouvement de la Paix. Aux yeux des peuples d'Asie ceci cependant ne paraît pas étrange. En Extrême-Orient, aujourd'hui, le bloc des agresseurs, à la tête duquel se trouvent les impérialistes américains, ne se contente plus de faire obstacle à la Paix, il en sape les bases; il ne se contente plus d'appeler à la guerre, il passe à l'agression directe.

L'invasion de la Corée par les aventuriers impérialistes de Wall Street s'est poursuivie jusqu'à la frontière sino-coréenne. Les Etats-Unis, en même temps qu'ils envahissaient la Corée, ont également envahi Formose, transformant nos détroits de Formose en ligne de défense avancée pour l'Amérique. De plus, ils ont violé le territoire aérien du Nord-Est de la Chine et de la Province de Shantung, aussi bien que les eaux territoriales le long de la côte de Shantung, bombardant et mitraillant sauvagement nos populations.

Les Etats-Unis interviennent en outre ouvertement et répriment

sauvagement les mouvements de Libération nationale au Viet-Nam, aux Philippines et dans d'autres pays du Sud-Est asiatique.

Pour se livrer à des agressions et pour intervenir dans les affaires intérieures des autres pays, les impérialistes américains accusent délibérément les autres d'agression.

Ils disent par exemple que les Coréens envahissent la Corée et que les Chinois envahissent Formose. Puis ils se proclament les « sauveurs de l'humanité ». Ils qualifient leur propre agression d'aide, d'amitié et de justice et leur domination du monde de secours généreux.

Ainsi, quand vous parlez de défense de la Paix et de sécurité, ils parlent aussi de « défense de la Paix et de sécurité ». Et quand vous parlez de lutte pour la liberté et la démocratie, ils parlent aussi de « lutte pour la Liberté et la Démocratie ». Ils assurent même que, seule, leur liberté est véritable et que la vôtre n'est que mensonge. MM. Truman et Acheson n'ont-ils pas affirmé récemment qu'ils étaient nos bons amis à nous, peuple d'Asie ? Ah ! oui, ils sont bien plus que cela, ils sont les grands bienfaiteurs des peuples d'Asie !...

Pendant cinquante longues années le peuple de Chine a souffert de l'agression des impérialistes japonais. Conséquence de la politique de trahison du traître Tchang Kaï Chek, les Japonais déclenchèrent une invasion sur une grande échelle en 1937. Ce ne fut qu'au bout de huit ans d'une guerre difficile que nous sommes arrivés à vaincre l'impérialisme japonais avec l'aide de nos alliés. Dès le début de notre guerre de Résistance extrêmement dure, le premier et unique pays qui nous soutint fut l'Union Soviétique. Que faisaient les Etats-Unis ? Ils continuaient à faire du commerce avec le Japonais, lui vendant de grandes quantités de fer, de pétrole, de coton, et des machines, le tout utilisé pour assassiner le peuple chinois. Le résultat fut les pertes incalculables en vies humaines et en biens que nous avons eu à supporter. Tel fut là le « grand bienfait » accordé par nos « bons amis » américains.

Après la reddition du Japon, quand le peuple de Chine désirait une reconstruction pacifique, les Etats-Unis firent de leur mieux pour soutenir Tchang Kaï Chek, traître à notre pays, et lui fournirent des avions, canons, tanks, navires de guerre, dollars, munitions et secours de toute sorte. Ils s'emparèrent de droits nombreux sur notre terre, notre mer, notre air même, et poussèrent Tchang a déclencher une guerre civile. Le peuple chinois a dû subir ainsi quatre autres années de souffrance et de sacrifices, pour arriver enfin à la victoire de libération nationale d'aujourd'hui.

De cette victoire nous devrions en vérité remercier nos « bons amis » américains, car la plupart des avions, tanks, de l'artillerie, des vaisseaux, des munitions et du matériel qu'ils donnèrent à Tchang Kaï Chek, tombèrent par la suite dans les mains de l'Armée Populaire de Libération Nationale. Tchang Kaï Chek est ainsi devenu notre intendant militaire, et les Etats-Unis notre arsenal. Ceci fut encore un des « grands bienfaits » accordés par nos « bons amis » américains.

Et aujourd'hui ce sont nos bons amis américains qui soutiennent encore Tchang Kaï Chek, ce sont nos bons amis américains qui, n'ayant pu s'emparer de notre terre ferme, se sont saisi de Formose et poussent en avant leur ligne de défense jusqu'au détroit de Formose.

Les impérialistes japonais sont nos ennemis jurés, et maintenant, avec la protection et l'accord de nos bons amis américains, ils reprennent chaque jour un peu plus de leur ancien caractère. C'est le grand bienfait que nous donnent nos bons amis américains.

En tenant entre leurs mains les Nations Unies pour en faire une dépendance américaine, les Etats-Unis camouflent leurs actes criminels. Les Nations Unies donnent abri à l'envoyé de Tchang Kaï Chek, qui ne représente personne d'autre que Tchang lui-même. Elles rejettent avec persistance la participation des vrais représentants de la République Populaire de Chine. Voilà encore un des grands bienfaits de nos bons amis américains.

Naturellement les bons amis américains vous diront gravement : « Eh bien, vous voyez, nous respectons la forme démocratique. Toutes les décisions des Nations Unies sont adoptées par un vote de la majorité. » Mais si l'on considère sérieusement les chiffres des votes, les tours joués par les manipulateurs de la machine à voter peuvent être dévoilés immédiatement. Comme nous le savons, la population totale des soixante pays participant aux Nations Unies est de un milliard huit cent cinquante-cinq millions. Si l'on respecte réellement la majorité, on doit compter le nombre de gens représentés lorsqu'un vote est fait. Comment cela s'accorde-t-il avec le fait que Tchang-Kaï-Chek possède aux Nations Unies une voix qui ne représente que lui-même et une poignée de réactionnaires, alors que les 475 millions d'hommes de la République Populaire Chinoise n'ont pas de voix ? Est-ce là ce qu'ils appellent forme démocratique ?

Les Nations Unies ont été violées par les impérialistes américains, particulièrement pour couvrir leur acte criminel d'agression contre la Corée. Ceci est en vérité une grande insulte aux 1.855.000.000 hommes qui sont représentés aux Nations Unies.

L'agression américaine en Corée ne commença pas en juin dernier. Depuis la reddition japonaise en 1945, l'Amérique a rem-placé le Japon en occupant la partie du pays au sud du 38e parallèle. En moins de cinq ans, le capital américain est devenu 91,23 % du total des capitaux investis en Corée du Sud, monopolisant ainsi son commerce avec l'étranger et lui imposant une balance de commerce très défavorable. L'industrie et l'agriculture en Corée du Sud furent pratiquement réduites à néant. Dans la première moitié de 1949 par exemple, la fabrication des machines représentait à peu près 5 % de ce qu'elle était en 1943 sous l'occupation japonaise. La surface de terre labourée avait été réduite de 55 % par rapport à l'année d'avant la reddition japonaise. En conséquence la Corée du Sud, renommée autrefois pour sa production de riz, manqua de grain. Encore un grand bienfait de nos bons amis américains au peuple de Corée.

Aujourd'hui ce bienfait devient encore plus grand. Les forces des Etats-Unis ont déjà traversé le 38e parallèle, et leurs armées d'invasion vont jusqu'à Pyong Yang et Wensan, poussent jusqu'à la rivière Yalu et au delà. Chaque jour des avions américains bombardent des cités pacifiques et des villages du Nord de la Corée, mitraillant les habitants, femmes, vieillards et enfants compris.

Chaque jour, leurs avions traversent la rivière Yalu et bombardent et mitraillent au hasard nos habitants de la Chine du Nord-Est et du Shantung. Tels sont les grands bienfaits que nos bons amis américains accordent aux peuples de l'Asie.

Tout ce que je viens de dire naturellement a rapport aux agresseurs impérialistes américains, et non pas au peuple américain. Tout comme le peuple chinois et les peuples des autres pays, le peuple américain aime la paix et est soumis à l'oppression et aux menaces des impérialistes américains.

Je pense que ce n'est pas la peine d'en dire plus sur tous ces grands bienfaits : ils défient l'énumération et la description. En manière de contraste, parlons de nos impressions sur l'Union Soviétique.

Quelle a été l'attitude de l'Union Soviétique envers le peuple chinois ? Cela, nous le savons beaucoup mieux, nous Chinois, que MM. Truman et Acheson.

L'Union Soviétique, après la victoire de la Révolution Socialiste d'Octobre, a aboli de sa propre initiative tous les traités inégaux conclus entre la Chine et la Russie Tzariste. Elle a constamment sympathisé avec la cause de la libération de notre peuple. Elle a établi des relations diplomatiques avec nous le lendemain de la fondation de la République Populaire Chinoise, le 1er octobre 1949. Ce qui fut suivi par la conclusion du Pacte sino-soviétique d'amitié, d'alliance et d'assistance mutuelle pour une défense commune de la paix mondiale et de la sécurité, contre l'invasion impérialiste en Orient, et pour toute aide mutuelle culturelle et économique, basée sur le principe d'égalité et d'assistance mutuelle. Ce sont là des faits qui ne pourront jamais en aucune manière être déformés par les mensonges des faussaires.

Ce contraste n'est-il pas encore assez frappant ? L'Union Soviétique aide le Peuple Chinois. Alors que les Etats-Unis aident le boucher du peuple chinois Tchang Kaï Chek, l'Union Soviétique se joint à nous pour empêcher la renaissance de l'impérialisme japonais, tandis que les Etats-Unis ont fait tous leurs efforts pour pousser sa renaissance dans le but d'une agression. L'Union Soviétique nous aide dans notre construction pacifique, tandis que les Etats-Unis envahissent notre Formose aussi bien que nos voisins, menacent notre sécurité nationale et détruisent la paix en Asie, si bien que nous ne pouvons construire notre pays en paix. L'Union Soviétique fait tous les efforts possibles pour faciliter notre entrée aux Nations Unies, alors que les Etats-Unis font tout pour la rendre impossible. L'Union Soviétique fait des propositions de paix devant l'Assemblée Générale des Nations Unies, tandis que les Etats-Unis manœuvrent les Nations Unies pour qu'elles aident l'agression. L'Union Soviétique se sert de l'énergie atomique pour transformer la nature, tandis que les Etats-Unis se servent de la bombe atomique pour intimider l'humanité. L'Union Soviétique construit actuellement la gigantesque station hydro-électrique de Stalingrad et Kuibyshev et creuse le canal de Turkman, le plus long du monde, tandis que les Etats-Unis étendent leurs bases militaires à travers le monde, établissent ainsi un grand filet guerrier, et étendent leur ligne de défense à travers l'Atlantique jusqu'à l'Europe de l'Ouest et à travers le Pacifique jusqu'à notre territoire. L'Union Soviétique annonce la création du blé arctique, alors que les Etats-Unis impriment des nouvelles sur la bombe hydrogène et la guerre bactériologique.

Est-ce que ce contraste n'est pas assez frappant ?

On ne peut, avec des mots, recouvrir les actes criminels faits avec des bombes. Nous comprenons très bien qu'aujourd'hui le vocabulaire des agresseurs devrait être expliqué par son contraire : la soi-disant « morale universelle » sur laquelle bavardent les agresseurs n'est autre que brutalité et tyrannie. Leurs soi-disant « idéaux élevés » ne signifient que leur ambition et désir d'agression. Leurs soi-disant « Paix et Justice » signifient « guerre et domination ». L'esclavage et le massacre sont leur « dignité humaine » et le bombardement des villes et des villages pacifiques, et le mitraillage des paisibles habitants, des femmes et des enfants, voilà leur « valeur spirituelle de la vie ».

Dans un discours prononcé lors du 5e anniversaire de l'O.N.U., le 24 octobre, M. Truman a aussi réclamé une « réduction des armements ». Mais les chiffres astronomiques du budget de guerre des Etats-Unis s'accroissent chaque année et l'on pousse la production des armes atomiques et l'on intimide avec la bombe à hydrogène.

M. Truman a aussi réclamé la protection des « droits humains ». Mais l'intellectuel chinois Tsien Hsueh Sen fut retenu en Amérique et on lui interdit de retourner en Chine. Un autre intellectuel, Tchao Tsoung Yao et deux de ses étudiants, retournant en Chine, furent kidnappés par Mac Arthur lors de leur passage à Yokohama. Ainsi, pour les agresseurs, « réduction des armements » signifie en réalité développement des armements et « protection des droits de l'homme » la violation des droits de l'homme.

Aujourd'hui nous devrions remercier les impérialistes américains d'un tel enseignement. Quelles que soient les choses auxquelles s'opposent les hypocrites, nous devrions les bien accueillir ; quoi que ce soit qu'ils favorisent, nous devrions nous y opposer. Nous réalisons clairement que ceux qui font le mal prétendent être bons simplement parce que les forces du bien l'emportent sur eux et parce qu'ils doivent être hypocrites. La tyrannie des impérialistes n'est pas une preuve de force, mais une preuve de faiblesse.

Nous, Chinois, aimons la paix. Cela ne peut être mieux démontré que par le fait que déjà 223.500.000 Chinois ont signé l'Appel de Stockholm. Cependant, parce que justement nous aimons la paix, nous nous opposons résolument à l'agression. Notre nation a, pendant plus d'un siècle, fait la guerre contre des agresseurs qui menaçaient, troublaient ou tentaient de saper la paix. L'histoire du peuple chinois au cours du siècle dernier est l'histoire de cette lutte même pour la défense de la paix.

L'impérialisme américain a soutenu Tchang Kaï Chek de tout son pouvoir. Bien qu'il ait subi une défaite ignominieuse dans son agression contre la Chine, il refuse d'accepter cette leçon évidente et persiste à mettre la paix en danger à l'Est et à l'Ouest. Nous, peuple de Chine, pour la sauvegarde de la paix, nous ne céderons jamais aux agresseurs et nous ne resterons pas inactifs et indifférents en face des désastres que subit actuellement le peuple coréen.

Les impérialistes américains foulent actuellement le vieux sentier de l'impérialisme japonais en Extrême-Orient. Pour conquérir l'Asie, il faut conquérir d'abord la Chine. Pour conquérir la Chine, conquérir d'abord la Mandchourie. Et pour conquérir la Mandchourie, conquérir d'abord la Corée. Mac Arthur cherche maintenant à réaliser les rêves de Tanaka Giichi. Mais le peuple coréen d'abord ne permettra jamais cela et non plus le peuple de Chine. Pour la défense de la paix en Asie et dans le monde, nous devons nous opposer jusqu'à la fin à l'agression américaine.

Le peuple chinois donne son entier soutien à la convocation du deuxième Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix. Nous, la délégation chinoise au Congrès, sommes complètement d'accord avec tous les points du rapport du président Joliot-Curie, particulièrement avec le point concernant les Nations Unies.

Les Nations Unies furent formées après la seconde guerre mondiale pour servir comme organisme de sauvegarde de la paix et de la sécurité mondiales. Et pourtant aujourd'hui, elles ont été transformées en un organisme de camouflage des agresseurs. La Charte des Nations Unies est devenue lettre morte tandis que le principe de l'unanimité des cinq Grands au Conseil de Sécurité ne rencontre que mépris. Le résultat est que les Nations Unies ont perdu leur autorité et leur prestige. Nous espérons que les Nations Unies seront capables de restaurer leur autorité et leur prestige perdus et qu'elles se rendront libres de la domination des impérialistes de Wall Street, qu'elles travailleront pour la sécurité et le bien-être de tous les peuples épris de paix du monde, de façon honnête et raisonnable, et qu'elles se retiendront de faire quoi que ce soit de contraire à cette cause.

Pour atteindre ce but, la Charte des Nations Unies aussi bien que le principe d'unanimité des cinq grandes puissances doivent être respectés, et toutes décisions illégales en violation de la Charte ou de ces principes doivent être promptement annulées. Le délégué de l'une des cinq grandes puissances doit être le représentant véritable des 475 millions d'hommes de la République Populaire chinoise et non pas le faux représentant d'une poignée de réactionnaires de Tchang Kaï Chek. (Applaudissements.) Avec une nouvelle vie donnée au Conseil de Sécurité, tous les peuples du monde arriveraient petit à petit à voir leur sécurité protégée.

Nous chérissons l'espoir que les Nations Unies adoptent des mesures immédiates pour l'accomplissement de cela. Cet espoir, nous en sommes sûrs, est partagé par tous les peuples qui aiment la paix et s'opposent à la guerre d'agression. Nous ne pouvons rester inactifs et laisser la paix du monde être menacée et sapée tandis que les Nations Unies sont constamment rendues incapables de répondre à un tel espoir.

Le peuple chinois désire joindre ses mains à celles de tous les gens épris de paix de Grande-Bretagne, des Etats-Unis, de France, d'Italie, d'Union Soviétique, de Pologne, de Corée, du Viet-Nam, de Mongolie, et de tous les autres pays, afin que l'on puisse adopter des moyens plus efficaces de défendre la paix et la sécurité.

La délégation chinoise tenant ses pouvoirs du peuple chinois, propose au Congrès un programme en cinq points qui, nous le pensons, est conforme à l'esprit du Congrès :

1. Arrêter la guerre d'agression en Corée, déclenchée par les Etats-Unis et d'autres pays, demander le retrait de toutes les forces d'invasion étrangères de Corée et assurer un règlement pacifique de la question coréenne : c'est le point focal de la lutte d'aujourd'hui pour la défense de la paix ;

2. Exiger que les Etats-Unis cessent immédiatement toute intervention dans la libération de Taiwan (Formose) par le peuple chinois ;

3. Demander que Mac Arthur soit fortement condamné pour ses provocations à la guerre. Il est le principal fauteur de la guerre d'agression en Extrême-Orient et le principal instigateur de l'expansion de la guerre de Corée en une guerre mondiale ;

4. S'opposer résolument à l'emploi de l'arme atomique et demander que le gouvernement qui, le premier, s'en servirait, soit déclaré criminel de guerre et puni en conséquence ;

5. Demander la réduction simultanée des armements par tous les pays et l'établissement d'un contrôle effectif, proposer que les peuples des pays différents s'aident les uns les autres dans leur travail de construction économique et culturelle.

La fin de Hitler, Mussolini et Tojo est encore présente à notre mémoire. Aussi oublieux de cela que puissent être ceux qui portent les germes du fascisme, les peuples du monde entier ne l'ont pas oublié. L'ennemi du peuple doit être puni par le peuple. Les ennemis endurcis du peuple doivent être punis encore plus sévèrement. Et quiconque essaye de fondre en une seule les ambitions de l'Allemagne nazie et du Japon impérialiste sera doublement puni.

Avant de terminer, je salue chaleureusement, au nom du peuple chinois, tous les défenseurs de la paix qui assistent à ce Congrès. Nous souhaitons au Congrès tous les succès. (Applaudissements.) L'action concertée de tous les peuples dans le monde entier vaincra dans cette campagne engagée contre les germes du fascisme.

Luttons pour une paix mondiale durable.

Combattons les fauteurs de nouvelles guerres et les agresseurs impérialistes.

Vive la grande solidarité des peuples épris de paix dans le monde entier.

(Le Congrès, debout, acclame M. Kuo Mo Jo.)

DEUXIÈME

CONGRÈS MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Madame PAK-DEN-AI

DISCOURS

« Les faits désignent les vrais fauteurs de guerre. »

Introduction

CE QUE FUT LE IIe CONGRES MONDIAL DE LA PAIX

L'INITIATIVE du Deuxième Congrès Mondial de la Paix fut prise par le Comité émanant du Premier Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, qui eut lieu à Paris, salle Pleyel, en avril 1949.

Le principe de la convocation du Second Congrès Mondial fut adopté en mars 1950, à Stockholm, en même temps que le célèbre Appel contre la Bombe atomique, qui devait recevoir l'approbation signée de plus de 500 millions d'hommes et de femmes par le monde.

Le 16 août 1950, le Bureau du Comité, réuni à Prague, lança des propositions de discussion pour de larges débats publics en vue de la préparation du Congrès qui devait avoir lieu à Sheffield (Grande-Bretagne).

Ces propositions portaient sur les points suivants :

— Interdiction des armes atomiques;
— Réduction des armements;
— Dénonciation de l'agression;
— Solution pacifique du conflit de Corée;
— Interdiction des propagandes de guerre.

Sur la base de ces propositions, se tinrent dans le monde des milliers d'assemblées populaires et de réunions d'organisation, qui discutèrent et élirent, démocratiquement, des délégués.

Le Congrès empêché par les autorités britanniques de se tenir, comme prévu, à Sheffield, à la date du 13 novembre, se transféra à Varsovie, où il siégea du 16 au 22 novembre.

Ces Assises Mondiales rassemblèrent 2.065 délégués et invités de 83 pays. Une discussion large s'ouvrit sur les rapports présentés par le Président JOLIOT-CURIE et le Vice-Président Pietro NENNI.

Cette ample et franche discussion aboutit à l'élaboration et au vote démocratiques de dix résolutions importantes ainsi qu'à l'élection d'un Conseil Mondial de la Paix, comprenant 235 représentants, placé sous la Présidence du grand savant Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE.

Ces décisions, mises aux voix, furent adoptées à la presque unanimité des délégués, moins trois abstentions.

Les résolutions adoptées par le Congrès constituent tout un programme, qui trouve son expression dans deux textes fondamentaux : « Le Manifeste aux Peuples » et l' « Adresse à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ».

Tous ces actes et résolutions du Congrès auront la force que leur donneront la volonté de Paix et le soutien des peuples. Le Congrès Mondial n'est pas une fin, mais un nouveau départ pour une action plus ample de tous les peuples en faveur de la paix.

PREMIERE SEANCE DU LUNDI 20 NOVEMBRE 1950

Le Président, M. DEMBOWSKI (Pologne) :

— La parole est à :

Madame PAK-DEN-AI

(Corée)

Au nom du peuple coréen luttant pour l'unification de son pays, pour sa liberté et son indépendance, je salue chaleureusement le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix. Nous, Coréens, sommes fiers de nous être trouvés, dès la création du mouvement de lutte pour la Paix, dans les rangs du camp mondial des Partisans de la Paix.

Immédiatement après la publication de l'Appel de Stockholm a commencé dans la République Populaire Démocratique de Corée une campagne pour recueillir les signatures en faveur de la paix, campagne organisée par le Comité National des Partisans de la Paix de toute la Corée. Ce mouvement s'est étendu à toute la population de la Corée du Nord. Dans un délai de temps très court, tous les Coréens adultes ont apposé leur signature sous l'Appel de Stockholm, exprimant par ce geste leur volonté de sauvegarder la paix, et aussi leur protestation indignée contre les impérialistes essayant de déclencher un nouveau cataclysme mondial. La population du territoire libre de Corée a souligné ses signatures par des actes concrets, par son travail pacifique de tous les jours et par l'édification démocratique du pays.

Pendant cinq années — dès la libération de la Corée par l'Armée Soviétique, — la Corée du Nord a enregistré des progrès jusqu'alors inconnus dans son histoire, grâce à l'aide fraternelle et désintéressée du peuple soviétique, et aussi grâce au travail plein d'abnégation des ouvriers, des paysans et des intellectuels. L'aide de l'Union Soviétique nous a été particulièrement précieuse.

Plus d'une fois au cours des siècles, le peuple coréen a vu sur son territoire des soldats étrangers, qui semaient la destruction dans nos villes et nos campagnes et s'efforçaient de soumettre la nation coréenne.

Mais pour la première fois dans son histoire, le peuple coréen a vu des soldats étrangers lui apporter la liberté, lui venir en aide pour l'édification de l'Etat et la renaissance de la vie économique et culturelle du pays.

Les soldats de l'Armée Soviétique nous ont aidés à reconstruire les fabriques, les lignes de chemin de fer, les hôpitaux et les écoles détruites par les Japonais. Pour la première fois, grâce aux médecins soviétiques, nous avons réussi à éliminer de Corée le choléra et la peste. Les médecins soviétiques nous ont aidés à trouver les moyens de guérir l'encéphalite, cette maladie terrible qui passait pour inguérissable et qui, depuis des siècles, décimait les peuples de l'Asie.

Après avoir rempli leur mission libératrice, les armées soviétiques ont quitté le territoire coréen.

Par suite des changements démocratiques fondamentaux qui se sont effectués pendant les cinq dernières années, l'aspect de notre pays a changé.

Les entreprises industrielles, les banques, les moyens de communication et de transport ont été nationalisés. La reconstruction des entreprises détruites par les Japonais et la construction de nouvelles usines d'Etat, de fonderies et de mines ont créé des conditions permettant de passer à une économie planifiée.

La réforme agraire instituée dans toute la Corée du Nord a mis fin pour toujours à la domination féodale des grands propriétaires fonciers et à l'exploitation impitoyable des paysans.

Plus d'un million d'hectares de terre arable ont été distribués à 725.000 anciens petits paysans et ouvriers agricoles.

La réforme agraire est devenue un stimulant puissant pour le développement de l'agriculture de la République.

Jamais, au cours de son histoire, le développement de l'agriculture en Corée n'a atteint un tel rythme.

Le niveau culturel de la nation coréenne s'est élevé très sensiblement. En 1950 nous avons institué l'instruction obligatoire. De nombreuses écoles et institutions d'enseignement supérieur ont couvert le pays entier. Dans la partie nord de la République, l'analphabétisme a été liquidé en principe. Avant la libération il n'y avait pas une seule école supérieure en Corée du Nord, alors qu'en 1950 il y en avait déjà 16 et, en plus, 55 écoles techniques.

Durant l'occupation japonaise, la publication en langue nationale de livres et de journaux était interdite.

Après quarante années d'esclavage le peuple coréen a reconquis le droit de se servir de sa langue maternelle, aussi bien parlée qu'écrite. Dans la République Populaire Démocratique de Corée commençaient déjà à être publiés dans tout le pays plus de 80 journaux et périodiques, alors que le tirage des livres atteignait des centaines de milliers d'exemplaires.

De tels résultats ont été acquis par le peuple coréen dirigé par son gouvernement populaire à la tête duquel se trouve son chef bien-aimé Kim-Ir-Sen.

Créant de ses mains une vie nouvelle et édifiant l'Etat démocratique, le peuple coréen tenait avant tout à stabiliser la paix dans le monde entier, à maîtriser les fomentateurs de guerre et les oppresseurs des libertés démocratiques.

Alors qu'en Corée du Nord commençait une vie nouvelle et qu'on y posait victorieusement la pierre angulaire de l'épanouissement économique, la partie méridionale du pays se trouvait aux mains des impérialistes américains qui y ont institué un régime fasciste.

Le caractère et les méthodes de ce régime étaient beaucoup plus cruels et plus inhumains que ceux des impérialistes japonais.

Le peuple fut privé de toutes les libertés démocratiques. Tous les partis politiques démocratiques et toutes les organisations sociales durent passer dans la clandestinité. Plus de 150.000 de nos sœurs et frères ont été torturés à mort par les laquais des Américains, les agents de Syngman Rhee, et près de 500.000 ont été jetés en prison. Depuis avril 1948 jusqu'en mai 1949, dans la seule localité de Detsudo on a fusillé 35.000 patriotes et habitants paisibles. On y a incendié 10.000 maisons d'habitation. Dans la ville de Suntchen la police de Syngman Rhee a arrêté 300 personnes dont 200 ont été enfermées dans une école, pour y être assassinées d'une manière sauvage. Depuis janvier 1950 jusqu'en février de la même année, 200.000 maisons d'habitation ont été incendiées et la population civile sans défense a été forcée de chercher un abri de hasard. Tout ceci parce qu'on l'avait accusée d'avoir exigé la retraite de l'armée américaine du pays et l'unification de la Corée.

Le gouvernement fantoche de Syngman Rhee ne se maintenait au pouvoir que par la terreur.

Les Américains devinrent les maîtres absolus des principales entreprises industrielles et pillèrent sans pitié les richesses naturelles du pays. Se servant du soi-disant plan « d'aide économique », les Américains ont fait de la Corée du Sud un marché où écouler les marchandises qui encombraient leurs entrepôts. L'industrie de la Corée du Sud fut menacée de ruine. La baisse systématique des salaires, la faim et la misère accablaient les ouvriers coréens.

A la campagne la situation était tout aussi tragique. D'immenses espaces de terre arable qui, autrefois, appartenaient aux colons japonais, furent vendus par les Américains, pour des sommes énormes, aux propriétaires fonciers coréens. Plus de 80 % des paysans ne possédaient pas de terre ou seulement des parcelles insignifiantes.

Les paysans furent encore plus exploités que pendant l'occupation japonaise. Le riz était réquisitionné et en grande partie vendu au Japon.

Les Américains, transformant la Corée du Sud en colonie, piétinaient ouvertement l'ancienne culture, tellement riche, du peuple coréen.

Prenant exemple sur les fascistes allemands et les militaristes japonais, les Américains pillaient le pays sans vergogne, s'appropriant les chefs-d'œuvre précieux appartenant au peuple coréen.

Des généraux et officiers américains ont pillé en plein jour le musée de la famille royale à Séoul. Des centaines de milliers de tableaux anciens, de sculptures et d'objets d'orfèvrerie exécutés par les plus grands maîtres coréens, ont disparu dans les malles et les poches des Américains.

De cette manière a été pillée la galerie du palais Doksu, qui contenait des chefs-d'œuvre de l'art coréen antique, entre autres des sculptures bouddhistes de l'époque Piaktcha, œuvres d'artistes demeurés sous l'influence de la sculpture gréco-bactriane. Les Américains se sont approprié la couronne en or de l'époque Silla, datant du début de notre ère, conservée au Musée Central de Séoul. Ils ont volé, au Musée de Kaïsang, des chefs-d'œuvre en porcelaine, des stèles en pierre et autres trésors du peuple coréen.

Ce qui n'a pu être emporté fut détruit sur place. Les monuments anciens du parc du vieux palais Kenbokhun ont été démolis sur ordre des autorités militaires américaines. A la place de ces monuments s'élèvent maintenant les casernes des soldats américains. Le comportement des colonisateurs américains a pour but de priver le peuple coréen de ses trésors historiques, témoins de sa culture antique, vieille de quarante siècles.

Non seulement les Américains convertissaient la Corée avec ténacité en colonie, mais ils se sont en même temps efforcés d'en faire une base stratégique en Extrême-Orient. Sur l'ordre de Washington la clique de Syngman Rhee a commencé la construction en grand d'installations militaires, elle a organisé une armée forte de plus de 100.000 hommes, sans compter la police et les détachements terroristes spéciaux ainsi que d'autres formations correspondant aux détachements hitlériens de SS. L'instruction de cette armée, police et détachements terroristes fut menée par les conseillers de guerre avec en tête le général Roberts.

Le gouvernement des USA dirigeait, par l'intermédiaire de ses représentants officiels en Corée, la clique de Syngman Rhee et l'incitait à déchaîner la guerre civile en Corée.

Les détachements armés de la clique de Syngman Rhee, concentrés le long du 38e parallèle, ont systématiquement provoqué des incidents, envahissant le territoire de la République Démocratique de Corée et tuant la population civile.

Le Gouvernement de la République Démocratique de Corée qui, depuis longtemps, était au courant des plans d'agression de la clique de Syngman Rhee, s'efforçait à tout prix d'éviter la guerre civile et a pris toutes les mesures ayant pour but l'unification pacifique du pays.

La majorité du peuple coréen s'est groupée autour du programme de l'unification pacifique de la Corée, programme déjà proposé en juin 1949 par le Front National Démocratique Unifié. Ce programme fut soutenu sans réserve par le Gouvernement de la République Populaire Démocratique de Corée.

Au mois de mai 1950 notre Gouvernement reçut des informations dignes de confiance, d'après lesquelles la clique de Syngman Rhee avait décidé, sur ordre de ses maîtres américains, d'envahir la Corée du Nord vers la mi-juin 1950.

En vue d'empêcher l'éclatement de la guerre civile, le Front National Démocratique Unifié publia à nouveau au début de juin 1950, un appel à l'unification pacifique du pays.

Conformément à cet appel, le Présidium de l'Assemblée Suprême Populaire présenta une proposition d'unification pacifique du pays, par sa fusion avec « l'Assemblée Nationale » de la Corée du Sud.

Peu de temps auparavant avaient eu lieu en Corée du Sud les élections de « l'Assemblée Nationale » de la Corée du Sud.

Bien que la clique de Syngman Rhee ait tout fait pour falsifier les aspirations du peuple en se servant de la terreur policière, bien qu'elle se soit efforcée d'isoler tous les candidats et électeurs dont elle n'était pas sûre, le résultat de ces élections, quoique falsifié, démontra que le régime des fantoches américains ne disposait point du soutien de la population. La clique de Syngman Rhee se trouva en minorité.

La défaite électorale des hommes de Syngman Rhee, ainsi que le fait que la majorité de la population de la Corée du Sud témoignaient leur solidarité avec le programme d'unification pacifique du pays, contraignirent la clique de Syngman Rhee à accélérer les préparatifs d'invasion contre la Corée du Nord. Le 25 juin 1950 au matin, les hommes de Syngman Rhee envahirent la Corée du Nord.

Pour justifier leur agression contre la nation coréenne, les interventionnistes américains essayent de rejeter la faute du déclenchement de la guerre sur le gouvernement de la République Populaire. Le Gouvernement américain a créé la légende d'une prétendue « agression non provoquée » de la Corée du Nord à l'égard de la Corée du Sud.

Cette version concernant « l'agression de la Corée du Nord » du 25 juin 1950 a été imposée par les représentants des U.S.A. à la commission pour les affaires de Corée auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

Le compte rendu de cette commission a été accepté d'une manière illégale par la majorité du Conseil de Sécurité. Afin que ces mensonges ne soient pas démasqués et que la vérité ne devienne pas publique, la majorité proaméricaine du Conseil de Sécurité n'a pas admis aux débats sur l'affaire de Corée les représentants de la République Démocratique Coréenne. Le peuple coréen — qui, au cours des cinq années qui ont suivi sa libération, a démontré par ses actes son inflexible volonté de paix, sa volonté de vivre dans des conditions de paix, sa volonté de poursuivre l'édification pacifique du pays — ce peuple a été qualifié « d'agresseur ».

Mais les faits et les documents montrent indubitablement les vrais fauteurs de guerre en Corée, les instigateurs américains et leurs agents — les hommes de Syngman Rhee. Au cours de la libération de Séoul, l'Armée Populaire s'est emparée d'une série de documents provenant des archives secrètes du gouvernement de Syngman Rhee.

Les paroles s'envolent, mais les écrits restent. Nous avons en effet en notre possession la copie d'une lettre de Syngman Rhee à Tcho-Biou-Oku, son représentant personnel à Washington. Dans cette lettre, datée du 10 avril 1949, il est écrit noir sur blanc :

« Vous devriez discuter de cette situation en observant le secret le plus absolu avec les représentants influents de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et des Etats-Unis.

» Communiquez-leur, en observant la plus grande discrétion possible, nos plans concernant l'unification du Nord avec le Sud. En principe nous sommes actuellement à tous points de vue prêts à entreprendre l'unification, sauf en ce qui concerne l'armement et l'approvisionnement qui nous manquent.

» Des forces armées nous sont indispensables afin que nous puissions nous mettre en marche vers le Nord, pour effectuer

la jonction avec l'Armée qui nous est fidèle (par « l'armée qui nous est fidèle » l'auteur de la lettre comprend les détachements d'espions envoyés en Corée du Nord) et pour reculer le rideau de fer du 38e parallèle sur la ligne du fleuve de Yale et y garder la frontière devant la pénétration de l'extérieur. »

Le 30 septembre 1949 Syngman Rhee a fait parvenir une lettre au docteur Robert Olivier, dans laquelle nous pouvons lire :

« Nous devons chasser les détachements de Kim-Ir-Sen dans les montagnes, où ils seront condamnés à mourir de faim et de froid. A ce moment, les lignes de notre défense se trouveront sur les fleuves de Tumyn et de Yale. »

Plus loin nous lisons : « Nous allons donc travailler tranquillement, vous à Washington et à New-York avec nos deux ambassadeurs et nos amis, nous à Séoul et à Tokio, poursuivant le même but — afin qu'on nous permette de nettoyer le pays et de mettre de l'ordre dans notre propre maison. Je citerai une locution, employée en son temps par Churchill : « Donnez-nous l'instrument, et le travail sera fait. »

Syngman Rhee savait bien qui il fallait citer. Cet instrument a été donné à Syngman Rhee. Le gouvernement américain a fourni des armes à l'armée coréenne du Sud. Conformément aux plans d'invasion du Nord, on a précipitamment aménagé des champs d'aviation et des ports pour l'aviation américaine, la flotte et les troupes de terre. Après la visite des vaisseaux de guerre américains en Corée du Sud, le Chef d'Etat-Major de l'armée de terre et de mer de la Corée du Sud, Wou-Il-Sou, a adressé à l'amiral Redford, chef de la flotte américaine du Pacifique, une lettre datée du 18 juillet 1949, dans laquelle il écrit : « C'est très volontiers que nous mettrons à votre disposition quelques-uns de nos ports, notamment Intchou, Josu, Hokhpo et la base militaire de Tchinhe, pouvant vous servir de bases provisoires pour n'importe quelle unité de votre flotte. »

Le Gouvernement de Syngman Rhee, suivant les conseils des Américains et dans le but de créer une atmosphère tendue sur le 38e parallèle et de préparer effectivement ses troupes, provoquait de nombreux incidents.

En même temps le pouvoir de la Corée du Sud, le représentant américain et la Commission de l'O.N.U. poursuivaient une tapageuse action de propagande, ayant pour but de présenter les hommes de Syngman Rhee comme les victimes de « l'agression nord-coréenne ». Mais les documents dont l'armée populaire s'est emparée à Séoul ont entièrement démasqué les vrais coupables des incidents provoqués. En octobre 1949, au cours du Conseil des Chefs de division de Syngman Rhee, le général Roberts, chef de la Mission militaire américaine à Séoul, a déclaré ce qui suit : « Conformément à mes directives, des attaques sur les territoires situés au nord du 38e parallèle ont eu lieu et elles seront répétées. Néanmoins beaucoup d'unités attaquent ce territoire sans en avoir reçu l'ordre, utilisent un nombre considérable d'obus sans obtenir les moindres résultats et subissent de lourdes pertes. Ces attaques sur le territoire situé au nord du 38e parallèle ne peuvent être entreprises que conformément aux directives des conseillers militaires américains. » En vue de réaliser l'avance vers le nord, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique ont promis à Syngman Rhee un appui militaire total. Selon les aveux de Kim-I-Sok, ancien ministre de l'Intérieur du gouvernement de Syngman Rhee, fait prisonnier par l'armée populaire, le conseiller principal de Mac Arthur, Sbold, promit à Syngman Rhee, en janvier 1950, que la flotte américaine et les avions ayant leurs bases au Japon apporteraient aux troupes sud-coréennes une aide active, dès que celles-ci se mettraient en marche vers le nord.

Jusqu'en mai 1950, on a achevé les préparatifs de l'armée de Syngman Rhee en vue d'une attaque sur la Corée du Nord. Avec l'autorisation des Américains, de nombreux militaires japonais se sont rendus en Corée du Sud, en qualité de conseillers militaires. Le périodique japonais Sinso, édité à Tokio, a fait paraître dans ses colonnes plusieurs informations selon lesquelles des agents du gouvernement de Syngman Rhee ont recruté des militaires japonais à Tokio.

En même temps on annonçait, dans le même périodique, la nouvelle du départ en Corée du Sud de nombreux anciens officiers de l'Etat-Major, avec en tête le colonel Sudrukikejsi. Ces informations, publiées par le journal japonais Sinso, n'ont jamais été démenties.

Les opérations militaires contre la Corée du Nord ont été projetées et notées sur une carte stratégique. Cette carte est tombée aux mains de l'armée populaire. Au début de juin, le ministre de la Guerre des U.S.A., Johnson, le commandant du groupe unifié des chefs des Etats-Majors, le général Bradley, ainsi que le conseiller du département d'Etat Dulles, se sont rendus en Extrême-Orient et ont tenu un Conseil secret avec le général Mac Arthur. Dulles a spécialement visité la Corée du Sud et a personnellement inspecté la région du 38e parallèle.

Dans une lettre d'adieu du 20 juin 1950, adressée à Syngman Rhee, Dulles écrivait : « Selon moi, votre pays jouera un rôle décisif dans ce grand drame qui commence actuellement. »

Ce drame, prévu par Dulles, a débuté le 25 juin — cinq jours après l'envoi de la lettre en question. Dans ce plan de brigands, un rôle tout particulier a été réservé à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Les impérialistes américains et les hommes de Syngman Rhee escomptaient que, sous le couvert de l'autorité du Conseil de Sécurité, il leur serait possible de réaliser leurs opérations agressives en Corée.

Les documents en notre possession dévoilent le rôle infâme qu'ont joué certaines personnalités de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans les préparatifs de la guerre civile en Corée.

Plus haut il a été dit que le plan d'une attaque armée contre la Corée du Nord fut, en grand secret, discuté par les représentants américains, les hommes de Syngman Rhee et les personnalités éminentes de l'O.N.U. Ces dernières étaient donc parfaitement au courant de ce plan d'agression.

Dans la Commission pour les affaires de Corée près de l'O.N.U. et dans son Secrétariat, ont été choisis des membres qui, non seulement resteraient passifs, mais collaboreraient aussi au plan d'une agression contre la Corée du Nord.

La clique de Syngman Rhee et leurs mandants américains comptaient sur l'effet de surprise de leur attaque pour mettre en défaite l'Armée Populaire de la République Démocratique de Corée. Ces calculs ont avorté. Le gouvernement de la République Populaire Démocratique de Corée, connaissant les préparatifs de l'agression, mit d'avance en œuvre tous les moyens de la faire échouer. L'Armée Populaire asséna un coup terrible aux forces armées de Syngman Rhee qui pénétraient sur le territoire de la Corée du Nord.

Les Américains se sont hâté de venir au secours de l'armée de Syngman Rhee. Ils entreprirent une intervention armée manifeste contre le peuple coréen, mettant l'O.N.U. devant le fait accompli. La résolution du Conseil de Sécurité a été votée par Truman, qui donna l'ordre d'engager des troupes américaines en Corée, de bombarder de paisibles villes et villages coréens. L'intervention armée des impérialistes américains dans la guerre déchaînée par les forces de Syngman Rhee a pour but immédiat la transformation de la Corée en colonie américaine et l'asservissement du peuple coréen. Cette intervention se pose également pour but l'étouffement du mouvement de libération nationale des peuples de l'Asie, et la transformation de la Corée en une tête de pont stratégique contre la Chine et l'Union Soviétique. L'intervention américaine éveilla dans le peuple coréen une haine justifiée envers les envahisseurs américains groupés autour du gouvernement de la République Populaire Démocratique de Corée et de son chef Kim-Ir-Sen, le peuple coréen se leva comme un seul homme pour lutter contre les interventionnistes.

Dans le premier mois de la guerre, l'héroïque Armée Populaire libéra une grande partie de la Corée du Sud. Sous le drapeau de la République Populaire Démocratique de Corée, on parvint à unifier 95 % du territoire entier de notre Patrie et environ 97 % de sa population. La population des régions libérées accueillait avec enthousiasme les détachements de l'Armée Populaire. Dans toutes ces régions libérées l'on créait les organes du pouvoir populaire — les comités populaires, dissous auparavant par les Américains — et l'on procédait à toutes les réformes démocratiques, à commencer par la réforme agraire. Le peuple libéré de la Corée du Sud, côte à côte avec les populations de la Corée du Nord, se dressa pour la défense de la Patrie contre les interventionnistes. Par centaines de mille, les jeunes patriotes de la Coré du Sud s'engageaient volontairement dans les rangs de l'Armée Populaire. Sur l'initiative du Front Démocratique National Unifié, dans tout le pays furent recueillies des signatures sous la « Déclaration du peuple coréen ». Dans cette déclaration, le peuple coréen exigeait du Conseil de Sécurité qu'il mette en œuvre les moyens susceptibles de faire cesser immédiatement les hostilités ouvertes par les interventionnistes en Corée, et de faire retirer les troupes étrangères du territoire de notre Patrie. Dans cette déclaration, le peuple coréen fit preuve de sa volonté de maintenir la paix, ainsi que de sa solidarité avec l'Appel de Stockholm. Cette déclaration recueillit les signatures de plus de 13 millions de coréens âgés de plus de 16 ans. Ayant reçu cette bonne leçon de la part de l'Armée Populaire et du peuple coréen tout entier, les Américains, cherchant à se venger de leur mésaventure sur le front, ont employé lâchement des méthodes de guerre criminelles et barbares. Les avions américains protégés par l'emblème des Nations Unies ont entrepris de pilonner systématiquement des villes et des villages coréens sans défense.

Les « forteresses volantes » réduisent en ruines des quartiers d'habitations dans les villes, privent les habitants de leur toit et de leurs biens, massacrant la population sans défense : femmes, vieillards, enfants, rasent les écoles, les théâtres et autres institutions culturelles. font à plaisir pleuvoir les bombes sur les hôpitaux et les trains sanitaires. Voulant réduire à la famine le peuple coréen, les pilotes américains mitraillent et bombardent les champs, tuant ceux qui les cultivent.

Entre le 2 et le 27 juillet, les bombardiers et chasseurs américains ont effectué 12 bombardements de la ville de Wonson. Bombardant la ville à l'aveuglette, ils ont fait choir sur les quartiers d'habitation 712 bombes d'un poids oscillant entre 50 kilos et 1 tonne.

A la suite de ces bombardements, 4.028 maisons furent détruites, 1.647 personnes trouvèrent la mort, et parmi elles 739 femmes et 325 enfants ; 2.367 personnes furent blessées.

Le 13 juillet, les avions américains ont bombardé les villes d'eaux dans la région de Wonson, détruisant 2 bâtiments et tuant 177 ouvriers ainsi que quelques employés des établissements Harmaux.

Le 3 juillet, aux environs de Bon-Son, 4 avions américains ont mitraillé des paysans qui travaillaient aux champs. Dix tués et huit blessés furent les victimes de ce bombardement.

Jusqu'au 25 août, les avions américains ont causé les dommages suivants à l'agriculture : dans la province du Sud Hon-Tchen, ils réduisirent en poussière la récolte de 401.492 phen, dans la province de Sud Phenian celle de 34.182 phen, dans celle du Sud Tchoun-Tchen — celle de 183.971 phen.

Le 14 juillet, 4 avions américains ont mitraillé Moun-Bon-Gou, un élève de troisième, ainsi que huit de ses camarades. Moun-Bon-Gou et trois de ses camarades furent grièvement blessés.

Le 19 août 1950, les bombardiers américains effectuèrent un bombardement bestial de la ville de Tchon-Tsin, laissant tomber les bombes sur les quartiers d'habitation. A la suite de ce bombardement 3.626 maisons furent détruites, 1.034 personnes tuées, 2.347 blessées. Après quelques bombardements de ce genre, la ville de Tchon-Tsin, qui comptait 120.000 habitants, fut changée en un amoncellement de ruines.

Le 3 juillet, les forteresses volantes ont attaqué l'hôpital du Ministère des Communications. Toute une partie de l'hôpital fut rasée, dans laquelle se trouvaient 47 malades; 10 d'entre eux furent tués, 34 blessés grièvement, 3 légèrement.

Le 16 juillet, à la suite des attaques aériennes de Séoul, dans le seul quartier de Yen-Son, 1.100 maisons d'habitation furent détruites, deux écoles, une église catholique et la « Maison de l'Enfant ». 1.096 morts parmi la population sans défense, 742 blessés graves, 458 blessés légers.

Entre le 2 juillet et le 3 août des bombardements chaotiques et des mitraillages de la ville de Hynnam détruisirent : un combinat d'industries fournissant des produits chimiques à l'agriculture, une école chimique professionnelle, les écoles publiques n°s 3 et 4, le théâtre, la bibliothèque, les sièges de l'Association des vieux travailleurs intellectuels des lettres et des arts, de la société de coopération culturelle avec l'U.R.S.S., l'école polytechnique, un dispensaire antituberculeux, un laboratoire épidermiologique et beaucoup d'autres institutions culturelles.

Le 22 juillet, pendant les bombardements de Phenian, les forteresses volantes américaines lâchèrent plus de 70 bombes, détruisant 100 maisons d'habitation. Ils bombardèrent ainsi le village de An-Gak, déjà presque entièrement détruit lors des bombardements précédents. Ils lâchèrent sur ce village 27 bombes d'un poids variant entre 500 et 1.000 kilos, qui transformèrent le village en brasier.

Le 23 juillet, plusieurs dizaines de bombardiers américains, profitant de la pluie, pilonnèrent durant 6 heures, de la façon la plus bestiale, la ville de Phenian. Ils jetèrent 600 bombes de 500 à 1.000 kilos. Ce bombardement détruisit 1.165 maisons d'habitation et tua 439 personnes parmi la population sans défense.

Le 7 août, 51 bombardiers américains du type B29 effectuèrent une attaque aérienne sur Phenian : 574 bombes furent lâchées sur les quartiers d'habitation. A la suite de ce bombardement, 1.945 maisons furent détruites, 211 personnes tuées et 75 autres blessées.

Le 16 septembre, les bombardiers et chasseurs américains ont attaqué Phenian et ont bombardé lâchement la ville, lâchant des bombes explosives et incendiaires.

Les femmes, les enfants, les vieillards se sont réfugiés sur la colline de Motauban. Les meurtriers, voyant ces petits groupes de gens en fuite, les ont arrosés de bombes. 2.396 personnes y trouvèrent la mort et 1.000 autres de graves blessures. Les femmes et les enfants constituèrent 80 % de ces victimes.

Quand le bruit des moteurs décrut, les gens commencèrent à rentrer chez eux. Parmi les survivants, il y avait une jeune femme avec un enfant sur le dos. Elle ne savait pas que l'enfant avait la tête emportée. Personne ne trouvait le courage de le lui dire. Elle retrouva sa maison en flammes, et lorsqu'elle voulut donner le sein à l'enfant elle s'aperçut qu'il était mort. Ce même jour elle quitta la ville, décidant de venger la mort de son petit garçon. Elle s'engagea dans un détachement de partisans.

Est-elle la seule mère de Corée qui ait perdu ses enfants ? Elles sont des milliers, et le nombre de victimes augmente chaque jour. Elles vengeront les crimes des agresseurs américains. A la suite des bombardements de l'aviation américaine, ont été presque entièrement détruites les villes de : Nampho, Tchon-Djou, Wonsan, Tenzon, Kunsan, Rivi, Nambon, Won-Djou, Phentek, Ansan, Ytchonbu, Tchoumoundjin, Dondoutchen et beaucoup d'autres. Dans la guerre contre le peuple coréen les interventionnistes américains ne reculent pas devant le crime le plus abominable.

Battant en retraite devant les forces de l'Armée Populaire Coréenne, les envahisseurs américains massacrent sauvagement la population civile, pillent, violent des femmes.

Au début de juillet, cinq soldats américains pénètrent dans le village de Chedon, violent une paysanne coréenne du nom de Kim San Sum et la fusillent ensuite.

Le 8 juillet, la soldatesque américaine pénètre dans le village de Mia-Tchen sur des autos blindées et armées de mitrailleuses. Sous la menace des armes, les habitants furent conduits dans la forêt voisine où ils furent exécutés. Leurs biens furent pillés. Dans ce seul village, on mit à mort 52 personnes, on en blessa 19.

Pendant le séjour des armées américaines à Tetch-Djon, les viols étaient à l'ordre du jour. Le 19 juillet, avant leur fuite de Tetch-Djon, les soldats américains incendièrent les quartiers les plus populeux. Ils détruisirent 3.740 maisons d'habitation, 35 institutions d'Etat, 140 autres bâtiments, 9 écoles, 12 hôpitaux. Ce jour-là les Américains fusillèrent Sin-Pon, un vieillard de 68 ans, et son fils de 12 ans.

Entre le 28 juin et le 4 juillet, dans la ville de Souwon, on fusilla 1.146 patriotes et habitants paisibles.

Non loin du lycée de jeunes filles de Souwon, on assassina et enterra 30 jeunes élèves du Lycée.

Le 4 juillet, à Tchon-Djou, les soldats de Syngman Rhee, sur l'ordre des Américains, ont arrêté 739 habitants et les ont enfermés dans le bâtiment de l'école communale.

Le 5 juillet, 23 de ces otages furent fusillés au pied d'une colline derrière l'école. 716 autres ont été déportés et par la suite fusillés aux environs du village de Atchon.

Dans la ville de Koudjou, les soldats américains et les hommes de Syngman Rhee ont arrêté 600 habitants. Ils les ont poussés dans un ravin et bestialement fusillés. Les soldats de l'armée de Syngman Rhee tiraient du sol, tandis que les aviateurs américains tiraient de leurs avions.

De cette manière ont été fusillés et assassinés par les Américains, des patriotes, de paisibles habitants des villes et des campagnes de Corée : à Phenthehu 600 personnes, à Anson 600 personnes, à Pou 2.000 personnes, à Tchotchhilone 158 personnes, à Tedjon 8.144 personnes, à Tchon-Djou 2.000, à Tchon-Djou encore 4.000 personnes, à Kunsan 400 personnes, à Anian 400 personnes, dans le rayon de Tchoundjou 2.010 personnes.

Et ce n'est qu'une infime partie de ces crimes. C'est ainsi qu'ils veulent étouffer les aspirations du peuple de Corée à la liberté et l'indépendance.

Mais que les colonisateurs américains se souviennent bien : le peuple de Corée ne pardonnera jamais ces crimes sanglants commis par eux sur le territoire de la Corée; jamais il ne pardonnera la cynique violation des droits du peuple coréen, l'assassinat de nos enfants, de nos mères et de nos pères. (Acclamations.)

Jamais ne s'éteindra dans les cœurs des Coréens la haine sacrée des agresseurs américains qui ont apporté au peuple coréen des malheurs inouïs.

Mais ces actes de terreur n'ont pas eu les résultats voulus. L'Armée Populaire, forte de l'appui du peuple entier, a refoulé les agresseurs vers le Sud et les a acculés à la mer.

Les impérialistes américains, se trouvant devant la menace d'un nouveau « Dunkerque », essayant de sauver leur autorité définitivement compromise, ont mobilisé leurs troupes de terre, leurs forces navales et aériennes se trouvant sur les côtes du Pacifique, et amenèrent dans les eaux coréennes une partie de la flotte méditerranéenne, unités de réserve incluses.

Dans la guerre de Corée ont déjà été engagées 10 divisions de l'armée de terre, ainsi que la cinquième flotte aérienne, se composant de 1.000 avions.

Peu confiants en leurs propres forces, les Américains mobilisèrent de surcroît les troupes anglaises et celles de leurs autres satellites. Ayant acquis l'avantage, les interventionnistes ont obtenu certains succès militaires. L'Armée Populaire de Corée fut obligée de se retirer, et les armées de l'intervention tâchent de percer vers la frontière nord de la Corée. Mais l'héroïque Armée Populaire menant des combats ardus dans les montagnes de la Corée du Nord, intensifie tous les jours la puissance de ses contre-attaques.

Nous savons qu'il y a deux Amériques : l'Amérique de Wall Street, celle qui envoie la jeunesse à la mort pour défendre les intérêts des riches, et l'Amérique des mères en deuil, des mères qui écrivaient à Truman : « Rendez-nous nos fils. » Il y a l'Amérique des fauteurs de guerre que nous haïssons tous et l'Amérique des gens honnêtes, qui unissent leurs voix à celles des millions d'honnêtes gens du monde entier pour crier : « Bas les mains devant la Corée ! »

Notre peuple ayant acquis l'amère expérience de la servitude coloniale, mène la lutte pour une existence indépendante et libre, la lutte pour le droit à une vie calme et heureuse. Notre pays est prêt à faire tous les sacrifices et tous les efforts au nom de son avenir radieux, au nom de sa victoire sur ceux qui inspirent la colère et l'indignation à toute l'humanité progressiste. Le slogan « Bas les mains devant la Corée » est répété aujourd'hui dans toutes les langues du monde, et c'est la conscience de cette solidarité internationale qui aide le peuple coréen à progresser sur la voie de nouveaux succès.

Ayant envahi quantité de régions, libérées auparavant par l'Armée Populaire, les interventionnistes américains et les valets de Syngman Rhee se mirent d'une façon organisée et systématique à assassiner les patriotes. Dès que les interventionnistes trouvent la liste des membres d'une organisation démocratique quelconque, tous ces membres sans exception sont condamnés à mort. Les mots manquent pour dépeindre ce que font en ce moment les interventionnistes, ces « hommes » dépourvus de toutes les valeurs humaines. Les exécutions massives perpétrées lors de l'entrée des troupes interventionnistes à Intchou, à Séoul, ne le cèdent en rien aux exploits meurtriers des hitlériens en Union Soviétique et des Japonais en Chine.

La population de nombre de régions de la Corée du Sud, libérées auparavant et maintenant réoccupées par les armées d'intervention et les valets de Syngman Rhee, ne veut pas voir le retour de l'esclavage, et d'une façon organisée rejoint les partisans dans les montagnes.

Leurs rangs grossissent de jour en jour. (Applaudissements.)

Il en est de même dans de nombreuses régions de la Corée du Nord, où les occupants se sont introduits. Partout brûle la flamme de la guerre Sainte menée au nom de la défense de la patrie contre la sanglante intervention armée. Le sol brûle sous les pieds des occupants haïs qui envahirent notre sainte terre.

Peu de temps avant que je quitte la Corée, 2.700 garçons et filles de la ville Andun, située dans le Sud de la Corée, à l'heure actuelle occupée par l'ennemi, se sont présentés au quartier général de l'Armée Populaire. Ils avaient parcouru mille kilomètres environ, ayant à surmonter d'énormes difficultés dans les montagnes. Ces jeunes gens étaient obligés de franchir clandestinement la ligne du front. Ils se sont présentés à Kim-Ir-Sen pour lui demander des armes, afin de pouvoir combattre contre les impérialistes américains et leurs valets. Ce sont les fils héroïques de pères héroïques.

Notre peuple remercie de tout son cœur tous les travailleurs de Pologne, Hongrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Roumanie et autres nations, pour l'aide qui lui a été accordée.

Malgré de dures expériences et d'énormes sacrifices, le peuple coréen nourrit la foi profonde en la victoire de sa juste cause.

ayant à ses côtés tous les peuples du monde entier épris de paix, avec en tête l'Union Soviétique, bastion de la paix mondiale, dirigée par son plus grand défenseur, Joseph Staline.

Le peuple coréen est convaincu de sa victoire parce qu'il sait que les meilleurs fils de son voisin le plus proche, les fils de la grande nation chinoise, réunis en détachements de volontaires, lui sont venus en aide, afin de resserrer les liens d'amitié entre les deux peuples dans la lutte contre l'agresseur qui, après avoir annexé la Corée, voudrait bien envahir la Chine, et qui répand déjà le sang de la population civile de la Chine.

Que la voix du peuple coréen qui se fait entendre ici, à ce IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, retentisse dans le monde entier. Que tout le monde sache que le peuple coréen, réuni autour de son chef bien-aimé, Kim-Ir-Sen, défendra jusqu'à la dernière goutte de sang son pays contre les interventionnistes et leurs valets — les traîtres de Syngman Rhee.

Le peuple coréen ne se laissera pas dompter.

Le peuple coréen sortira de cette guerre uni, libre et indépendant. (Acclamations).

INVITATION

M _____

C'est au nom de la Paix que nous nous adressons à vous.

Pour arrêter la guerre déclenchée dans une partie du monde, pour éviter la conflagration générale, toutes les tendances de l'opinion pacifique du monde se sont rassemblées.

Le Deuxième Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, dont la tenue à Sheffield fut regrettablement empêchée par le gouvernement britannique, a siégé à Varsovie du 16 au 22 novembre 1950.

En votre nom, 2.065 délégués de 80 pays ont adopté des résolutions qui donnent les moyens de sauver la Paix et dont voici l'essentiel :

Solution pacifique du conflit de Corée. — Opposition au réarmement de l'Allemagne et du Japon. — Interdiction de toute atteinte à l'indépendance des peuples et de toute agression armée, sous quelque prétexte que ce soit. — Punition par la loi de toute propagande de guerre. — Interdiction des armes atomiques. — Réduction progressive et contrôlée des armements. — Echanges économiques normaux et bonnes relations culturelles entre tous les pays.

Le Conseil Mondial de la Paix, comprenant 235 représentants de tous pays, élu par le Congrès et placé sous la présidence de M. Frédéric Joliot-Curie, vous appelle à l'union pour gagner la Paix.

Cela dépend de vous. C'est pourquoi, afin de vous présenter toutes informations et de répondre à toutes questions au cours d'un libre débat, nous vous convions instamment et très cordialement.

DEUXIÈME

CONGRÈS MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Emmanuel D'ASTIER DE LA VIGERIE

DISCOURS : Proposition d'une conférence du désarmement entre les « Cinq Grands »

PREMIERE SEANCE DU LUNDI 20 NOVEMBRE 1950 :

Le Président, M. UPHAUS (Etats-Unis) :

— La parole est à

M. D'ASTIER DE LA VIGERIE

Au moment où le Congrès Mondial se déroule à Varsovie, dans une capitale dont le nom est un symbole, le symbole du martyre de la guerre, il faut souligner que le mouvement pour la paix dans son cheminement vers le but essentiel, la Paix du monde, a déjà atteint certains de ses objectifs.

L'arme dont certains gouvernements, enclins à la guerre ou résignés à la guerre se servaient contre nous était le silence. Ce rideau de silence, combien plus épais que le rideau de fer, est aujourd'hui déchiré.

Grâce au mouvement des peuples, grâce à la hargne de ces gouvernements acharnés à poursuivre et à combattre les partisans de la Paix, les larges secteurs de la presse et de la radio qui nous sont hostiles sur ordre sont contraints, aujourd'hui, de reconnaître l'ampleur de notre mouvement international. Et s'ils cherchent encore à la défigurer, leurs calomnies en sont devenues si grossières qu'elles se retournent contre leurs auteurs.

Nous avons atteint aussi, mais partiellement seulement, un autre de nos objectifs : l'élargissement de notre mouvement. Un seul orateur, M. Rogge, est venu dénoncer à cette tribune le processus de rétrécissement de notre mouvement. Pour ma part, je ne puis témoigner ici que de la situation du mouvement français. Les quinze millions de voix, aujourd'hui dépassées, qui se sont portées sur l'Appel de Stockholm, malgré la contre-propagande officielle, les assemblées populaires de villages et de quartiers qui ont permis d'envoyer dans les chef-lieux 120.000 mandataires de la Paix (parmi lesquels les communistes étaient en grande minorité malgré l'importance du parti communiste en France), les débats les plus libres dans nos assises nous permettent de sourire, comme l'a fait cette salle, aux propos de M. Rogge.

Notre règle restera toujours la même : nous prendrons en considération toutes les propositions des hommes qui cherchent la voie de la Paix, nous chercheront toujours avec eux une base d'action commune, si modeste soit-elle, pour sauvegarder la Paix.

Nous laisserons de côté les divergences sur les notions philosophiques, sociales ou économiques, que nous réserverons pour d'autres tribunes que la grande tribune de la recherche pour la Paix.

C'est ainsi qu'en France, chaque fois qu'un groupe d'hommes ou un homme a apporté de nouvelles thèses précises pour la Paix, même en critiquant nos positions, nous avons accepté, nous avons sollicité le dialogue.

C'est ainsi que nous avons rencontré, dans des journées d'études, les partisans de la réconciliation internationale, qui pensent que l'objection de conscience est la meilleure arme de la Paix. Nous avons rencontré les partisans du gouvernement mondial, qui voient dans l'installation d'un Parlement mondial l'œuvre la plus utile pour la Paix. C'est ainsi que nous avons rencontré les neutralistes, qui voudraient atteindre la Paix pour leur pays en neutralisant la France et l'Europe occidentale.

Et, après Pierre Cot, je dois reconnaître particulièrement la contribution de ceux-ci. En proposant, après le savant atomiste américain Zillard, que l'Europe occidentale soit dégagée des liens du Pacte Atlantique pour être neutralisée, ils apportent une pierre à la maison de la Paix, puisqu'ils cherchent à éliminer un foyer possible de guerre.

Quelquefois, les uns ou les autres de ces groupes peuvent nous paraître à nous, Partisans de la Paix, prêts à s'égarer dans les nuages. Mais nous avons toujours constaté qu'en travaillant avec patience sur les faits, sur les menaces que présentent ces faits, on s'éloigne vite des abstractions et l'on revient sur terre. Naturellement, nous ne sommes pas d'accord sur tout, mais nous nous trouvons vite d'accord sur quelques points essentiels.

Et déjà, avec nous, tous ces groupes que j'ai cités combattent pour que cesse la guerre au Viet-Nam, pour que l'Allemagne ne devienne pas un foyer de guerre et reste démilitarisée, pour que nous ne soyons pas asservis par le Pacte Atlantique. Ils méritent l'attention, l'amitié des combattants de la Paix.

Parlant de notre objectif d'élargissement, j'ai dit qu'il n'était que partiellement atteint. Il faut reconnaître que notre élargissement est insuffisant, non pas dans un esprit pessimiste et destructeur — ni même dans un esprit personnel comme nous l'avons entendu hier — mais dans un esprit de création continue, un esprit de désintéressement et d'amour même, qui est le seul état d'esprit qui puisse conduire au triomphe de la Paix.

Tout notre espoir réside dans le fait qu'il n'y a dans le monde qu'une poignée de partisans de la guerre contre les centaines, les centaines de millions d'amis de la Paix, encore isolés, incertains ou trompés.

Nous devons tendre la main aux honnêtes gens, respecter leurs scrupules ou leurs inquiétudes, accepter les limites qui se posent à leur concours. Et ces bornes tomberont d'elles-mêmes quand ils constateront nos propres scrupules, notre diversité, notre loyauté et l'étonnante fraternité que l'amour de la Paix peut établir entre des hommes de tendances ou de philosophies opposées.

Mais l'élargissement ne doit pas porter seulement sur l'action elle-même. Il ne s'agit pas de réunir seulement de plus en plus d'hommes ayant des buts communs de Paix. Il faut élargir aussi les thèmes de l'action.

Le Comité Mondial a donné cet exemple quand, après l'Appel de Stockholm, il a lancé les propositions de Prague. L'admirable rapport de notre président Joliot-Curie nous en fournit un autre exemple, comme la proposition finale de notre ami Fadeev.

Mais il faut faire plus, il faut étudier avec conscience, avec scrupules, les thèmes que nous apporte n'importe quel groupe d'hommes, n'importe quel homme éloigné de notre mouvement, mais attaché à la Paix.

Je sais que notre tâche est difficile, difficile parce que l'ivraie se mêle au bon grain, que la provocation ou la diversion peuvent se mêler à l'esprit de la Paix. Mais notre patience et notre sang-froid viendront à bout de la provocation et de la diversion et permettront aux honnêtes gens de les reconnaître et de nous rejoindre.

En étudiant les conditions de l'élargissement en France, nous avons trouvé sur notre chemin des hommes qui veulent toujours un peu mieux que les Partisans de la Paix. Quand nous avons fait campagne contre l'arme atomique, quelques-uns nous disaient : « Je ne puis être avec vous que si vous condamnez aussi le lance-pierres. »

Quand nous faisons campagne pour la Paix entre les Nations, nous rencontrons les hommes qui déclarent que la guerre c'est aussi le coup de crosse du policier, tel régime pénitentiaire, telle condition sociale, que c'est aussi bien telle ou telle violence que l'invasion d'une armée étrangère.

Nous répétons à ceux-ci ou à ceux-là : « D'accord contre le lance-pierres, d'accord contre la violence, quelle qu'elle soit, mais pour gagner un jour le paradis terrestre, sans lance-pierres et sans violence, il faut bien d'abord franchir la première étape, c'est-à-dire sauver notre monde encore imparfait en évitant sa destruction par la bombe atomique ou son écrasement par ce feu, ces bombes ou ces canons qui ont écrasé Varsovie, qui écrasent aujourd'hui la Corée. »

Mais nous ne pouvons pas prendre au sérieux un partisan de la non-violence, comme M. Rogge, qui nous propose de modifier tel régime de prisonniers, qui nous propose de condamner toute réforme, si juste soit-elle, et en même temps de conserver l'arme atomique.

Je dois rapprocher cette proposition de garder la bombe atomique avec une autre phrase de M. Rogge. Prétendant parler au nom du peuple américain, il a dit : « Nous ne tolérerons pas les attaques armées et les atteintes à la Paix du monde. »

Un tel langage n'est pas convenable pour un Partisan de la Paix. En effet, un peuple ne peut pas se déclarer à lui seul le gardien de la Paix du monde. Il ne peut prétendre, à lui seul, être le dépositaire du bien dans le monde et s'en déclarer le seul juge.

C'est par de tels propos que l'on parvient à la notion de la domination telle que la conçoit un conseiller de la Maison Blanche, M. Burnham.

Cette domination mondiale par la bombe atomique au profit de ce que certains croient être le bien — et qui n'est que leur conception personnelle du bien — nous ne l'admettrons jamais.

Nous ne voulons pas être des hommes qui élaborent dans leur cerveau solitaire une philosophie ou une morale et qui déclarent qu'ils ne travailleront pas à la Paix tant que cette philosophie ou cette morale ne sera pas acceptée par tous.

Nous ne voulons même pas, sous peine de stérilité, nous ériger en arbitres au-dessus de la mêlée, distribuant dans un mouvement bien balancé le blâme ou l'éloge aux uns et aux autres, aux capitalistes ou aux socialistes. Nous devons laisser de côté leurs défauts réels ou supposés (que nous évoquerons toujours sur d'autres tribunes) pour ne traiter que des conditions de la coexistence pacifique des régimes et des philosophies... coexistence pacifique que nous croyons possible, que nous savons nécessaire.

Mais M. Rogge nous a au moins découvert un des espoirs des dirigeants américains, un espoir bien net : celui d'attirer dans leur camp la République chinoise comme ils y ont attiré la Yougoslavie.

Et les neutralistes les moins avertis seront mieux éclairés par ce propos qui veut établir une confusion entre la neutralité et une caricature de neutralité.

Mais si nous faisons appel à tous les honnêtes gens du monde, si nous pouvons et devons entendre les propos qui nous paraissent les plus singuliers, si nous devons travailler chaque jour à l'élargissement du mouvement, il est bon de marquer aussi les bornes à notre complaisance ou à notre patience.

Je le répète : les hommes qui veulent délibérément la guerre ne sont qu'une poignée. Plus clairement nous désignerons les quelques-uns dont les erreurs monstrueuses ne peuvent plus permettre un espoir, plus vite ils seront isolés.

La conférence de Londres d'août 1945, comme la jurisprudence de Nuremberg, ont reconnu, déterminé la notion du crime contre la Paix, la notion du crime contre l'humanité. Cette notion était un progrès pour l'humanité et nous n'avons sans doute pas le droit de la laisser tomber en désuétude.

Je sais que nous devons être prudents en cette matière et seuls devraient être désignés ceux qui font un appel direct à la destruction massive, à la sauvagerie, dans des textes incontestables.

Je ne fais que poser ici la question. L'homme, fut-il ministre de la Marine d'un grand pays, qui propose le jet d'une bombe atomique sur un autre pays pour régler la coexistence entre deux régimes, ne commet-il pas un crime contre la Paix ?

L'homme, fut-il un chef militaire qui se félicite de son action quand il efface de la carte du monde des villes et des villages avec des bombes au napalm, ne commet-il pas un crime contre l'humanité ?

Je vous propose là un sujet de réflexion, en répétant que les conditions de notre appréciation doivent être si prudentes et si sereines qu'elles ne puissent éloigner de nous aucune bonne volonté.

Et maintenant, après ces remarques, je voudrais, pour ma part, tenter d'apporter une pierre modeste à la maison de la Paix. En le faisant, je souhaiterais que de telles contributions soient plus nombreuses. Qu'elles soient retenues ou non, elles donneront en effet un aliment renouvelé à nos études, à nos confrontations.

Les propositions que je vais faire sont à la fois le fruit des expériences françaises, des réflexions de notre délégation et de mon sentiment personnel.

La grande entreprise du désarmement des nations reste l'objectif essentiel du combat de ceux qui refusent de construire la Paix en préparant la guerre. Je voudrais apporter à cette entreprise la contribution des propositions suivantes, dont l'un ou l'autre point permettrait, avec la contribution essentielle apportée par la délégation soviétique, de nous approcher de cette synthèse que doit être un statut de la Paix.

Voici ces propositions :

1. — Convocation immédiate d'une conférence du désarmement entre les cinq grandes puissances : U.R.S.S., Etats-Unis, République Populaire chinoise, Grande-Bretagne, France.

2. — Engagement solennel entre les cinq Grands, aussitôt la conférence décidée, d'accepter l'arrêt immédiat de la course aux armements et la limitation des budgets de guerre à leur taux de 1950.

3. — Engagement des cinq Grands de procéder au recensement réciproque et simultané de leurs forces armées et de tous leurs armements, y compris les armements atomiques, en vue d'une réduction de tous les armements mondiaux selon un pourcentage déterminé.

4. — Cette première réduction en pourcentage étant admise, les conditions d'une nouvelle étape dans le désarmement seront déterminées par l'examen des forces respectives et en tenant compte notamment du développement des frontières terrestres et maritimes et de la situation démographique.

Je voudrais enfin attirer l'attention du Congrès sur une autre mesure susceptible de limiter les risques de guerre.

Tout le monde conçoit que les énormes profits que la préparation à la guerre apporte à certaines grandes industries est une prime à la politique de surarmement et conduit de grands industriels à favoriser une politique de tension internationale.

Je voudrais donc proposer au Congrès de voter la motion suivante :

« Considérant que le passage de plus en plus rapide de l'économie de paix à l'économie de guerre, dans certains pays, met en œuvre et favorise des forces malfaisantes qui provoquent, par leur développement, une aggravation des risques de guerre, le deuxième Congrès Mondial de la Paix

» Invite les Parlements de tous les pays à voter des lois supprimant les super-bénéfices provenant des commandes résultant de la préparation de la guerre. »

CONGRÈS MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Don Andrea GAGGERO

DISCOURS

« Donnons-nous la main, hommes de toutes croyances. »

Introduction

CE QUE FUT LE IIe CONGRES MONDIAL DE LA PAIX

L'INITIATIVE du Deuxième Congrès Mondial de la Paix fut prise par le Comité émanant du Premier Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, qui eut lieu à Paris, salle Pleyel, en avril 1949.

Le principe de la convocation du Second Congrès Mondial fut adopté en mars 1950, à Stockholm, en même temps que le célèbre Appel contre la Bombe atomique, qui devait recevoir l'approbation signée de plus de 500 millions d'hommes et de femmes par le monde.

Le 16 août 1950, le Bureau du Comité, réuni à Prague, lança des propositions de discussion pour de larges débats publics en vue de la préparation du Congrès qui devait avoir lieu à Sheffield (Grande-Bretagne).

Ces propositions portaient sur les points suivants :

— Interdiction des armes atomiques;
— Réduction des armements;
— Dénonciation de l'agression;
— Solution pacifique du conflit de Corée;
— Interdiction des propagandes de guerre.

Sur la base de ces propositions, se tinrent dans le monde des milliers d'assemblées populaires et de réunions d'organisation, qui discutèrent et élirent, démocratiquement, des délégués.

Le Congrès empêché par les autorités britanniques de se tenir, comme prévu, à Sheffield, à la date du 13 novembre, se transféra à Varsovie, où il siégea du 16 au 22 novembre.

Ces Assises Mondiales rassemblèrent 2.065 délégués et invités de 83 pays. Une discussion large s'ouvrit sur les rapports présentés par le Président JOLIOT-CURIE et le Vice-Président Pietro NENNI.

145 orateurs se succédèrent à la tribune des séances plénières, et des débats importants, auxquels participèrent des centaines de délégués, se poursuivirent dans les sept commissions de travail constituées par des membres des délégations de l'ensemble des pays.

Cette ample et franche discussion aboutit à l'élaboration et au vote démocratiques de dix résolutions importantes ainsi qu'à l'élection d'un Conseil Mondial de la Paix, comprenant 235 représentants, placé sous la Présidence du grand savant Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE.

Ces décisions, mises aux voix, furent adoptées à la presque unanimité des délégués, moins trois abstentions.

Les résolutions adoptées par le Congrès constituent tout un programme, qui trouve son expression dans deux textes fondamentaux : « Le Manifeste aux Peuples » et l' « Adresse à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ».

Tous ces actes et résolutions du Congrès auront la force que leur donneront la volonté de Paix et le soutien des peuples. Le Congrès Mondial n'est pas une fin, mais un nouveau départ pour une action plus ample de tous les peuples en faveur de la paix.

PREMIERE SEANCE DU VENDREDI 17 NOVEMBRE 1950

La Présidente, Mme JESSIE STREET (Australie) :

— Je demande au révérend Père Don Andrea GAGGERO, d'Italie, de bien vouloir prendre la parole devant cette Conférence.

Don Andrea GAGGERO

Je suis un prêtre catholique italien. J'ai accepté de tout mon cœur de venir crier tout haut mon témoignage de Paix à la place qui m'était offerte. Au mois de mai 1940, à Rome, je fus consacré prêtre; à la fin de la cérémonie on chanta pour moi : « Heureux ceux qui marcheront pour prêcher la Paix et le bien. » Et le monde était déjà en guerre.

Ce chant synthétisait la conception qui m'avait guidée pendant les dix années où je me suis préparé à l'offrande de ma vie pour mes frères. Depuis lors, j'ai cherché la Paix, j'ai clamé la Paix, j'ai lutté pour la Paix, mais il n'y a pas eu de Paix et il n'y en a pas. Je porte dans mon cœur le souvenir de millions d'hommes martyrisés, dispersés, tués, dans cette terrible dernière guerre. Chaque jour revient à moi le souvenir de centaines de milliers d'hommes de toutes les nations qui furent mes compagnons dans le camp de la mort de Mauthausen, où les hommes de la guerre avaient étudié et réalisé scientifiquement comment détruire les hommes de la justice et de la liberté. J'ai survécu, un peu comme vous tous, à cette terrible expérience. Mais malheureusement, après ces jours-là, les peuples n'ont pas cessé de souffrir. De nouvelles voix de guerre se sont répandues sur le monde, elles ont troublé les peuples dans leur travail de reconstruction, si nécessaire; il existe des forces qui semblent avoir tout intérêt à détourner les hommes de leurs œuvres de paix, pour les obliger encore à organiser la guerre.

Je ne suis pas ici, officiellement, pour représenter mon Eglise; mais je porte le témoignage de millions de catholiques italiens et de centaines d'excellents prêtres qui sont tourmentés dans leur conscience par cette situation.

Ces mêmes forces, qui ont intérêt à la guerre, semblent aujourd'hui vouloir entraîner dans leurs terribles responsabilités ma foi et l'autorité de mon Eglise. Maintenant je suis là pour affirmer bien haut que cela est impossible, que cela est absurde. Le Christ a découvert à nous-mêmes depuis deux mille ans notre merveilleuse réalité. Tous les hommes sont un seul peuple, une seule famille. Ce sont des frères et ils ont un père unique : Dieu. Une loi unique : l'Amour. Et il me semble superflu d'affirmer que Jésus engagea tous ceux qui le suivaient, tous les hommes, dans la voie de la Paix.

Le Christ est né pendant que les anges prédisaient son objectif essentiel avec le chant : « Gloire à Dieu dans le haut des Cieux, et Paix aux hommes de bonne volonté ». Et dans le discours sur la Montagne, Jésus donna la plus haute qualification qu'on puisse donner aux hommes de Paix, en affirmant qu'ils seront appelés fils de Dieu. Je sais que, dans l'Evangile, le problème de la Paix est contenu dans la loi de l'Amour, un amour sans limites et sans distinction, mais un amour qui ne se prête pas non plus à l'équivoque. Il ne s'agit ni d'une patience sans révolte ni de suicide. Le Christ a dit pour cela : « Je ne suis pas venu pour porter la Paix, mais la guerre » dans ce sens que l'Amour nous engage jusqu'au bout dans une lutte sans répit contre l'égoïsme, contre la violence, et contre le mal en nous et hors de nous. La pensée de Jésus pourrait se traduire dans le cri : « Guerre à la Guerre ! » C'est pour cette guerre que Jésus est mort sur la Croix. Si le Christ avait été un faible, il ne serait pas mort crucifié.

Maintenant, sur ces bases et avec l'exemple du Christ, les Chrétiens ne peuvent absolument pas être pour la guerre. Mais aujourd'hui la propagande crée la plus grande confusion, surtout parmi les catholiques italiens ! J'ai eu la chance de pouvoir traverser quelques pays de l'Est. L'Angleterre a très mal employé sa ruse traditionnelle : ainsi que moi, beaucoup d'autres doivent au Gouvernement anglais la chance de cette expérience. Eh bien ! j'ai vu partout écrit le mot « PAIX », tout le long de mon voyage j'ai entendu crier le mot « PAIX », je n'ai trouvé que des œuvres de Paix, j'ai vu que Varsovie est un immense chantier de Paix. Cependant il y en a qui crient et qui nous tentent, nous invitant à croire que si nous voulons la Paix, nous devons préparer la guerre. Il semble que ces hommes responsables, qui n'ont pas tiré les leçons des événements d'hier, veuillent préparer la venue de nouvelles croisades. Mais les catholiques italiens et la majorité du clergé italien ne veulent pas de nouvelles croisades, parce qu'ils sentent que ceci n'est pas servir le Christ mais servir Satan; que ce n'est pas le moyen d'arriver à l'Amour mais à la haine mortelle.

Ce n'est pas seulement pour ces raisons que les catholiques italiens refusent la guerre : j'oserai dire qu'actuellement, chez les catholiques italiens, il y a une angoisse profonde. Nous sentons que toutes les propagandes de guerre, même sous le camouflage de motifs religieux ou faussement idéalisés, peuvent non seulement préparer la mort de millions d'hommes, mais provoquer des scissions extrêmement douloureuses dans le corps de l'Eglise. Nous y arriverons si nous suivons cette route qui nous mènera à une incompréhension totale entre nous et la majeure partie des courants catholiques chez les peuples démocratiques.

J'ai vu, ces jours-ci, que le mouvement pour la Paix est non seulement suivi, mais organisé par le clergé catholique des pays de l'Est, grâce à ses propres initiatives. Je sais qu'en Italie aussi et dans tout l'Occident, plus la guerre se fait pressante, plus la nécessité de servir la Paix à tout prix devient claire pour des millions de catholiques. Personne parmi nous n'a de doute religieux, personne parmi nous ne veut contrevenir à la discipline religieuse mais, parmi nous, personne ne veut plus se prêter à des équivoques politiques et personne, parmi nous, ne veut plus donner sa bénédiction aux armes. Est-il juste alors en la portant sur un terrain politique, de rendre intenable la situation des catholiques ? Est-il juste de donner motif à des scissions importantes pour des dissensions qui ne sont pas religieuses ? C'est pour cela que je suis venu parmi vous, passant outre à toutes les causes de désunion possible. Je n'abandonne personne et, si vous permettez, je ne retrouve personne parce que j'ai toujours aimé tout le monde, et je continuerai à aimer tout le monde. Ma personne seule est ici, mais je sais que j'apporte aussi la pensée et l'angoisse de tous les hommes bons et simples d'Italie. Ces gens vous approuvent et nous vous disons : « Nous croyons dans vos propositions de Paix, et vous croyez aux nôtres. Nous voulons sauver l'universalité et l'unité de l'Eglise; nous voulons donner le témoignage que les catholiques, non seulement parlent de Paix et prient pour la Paix, mais veulent aussi construire la Paix. Essayez de nous comprendre et de nous aider à réaliser tout cela, ce sera un grand service que vous rendrez à l'unité, à la Paix et à l'Amour dans le Monde. Oui, à l'Amour aussi, surtout à l'Amour. Nous savons qu'aujourd'hui l'Amour semble impossible et que la loi du Christ paraît une illusion : mais l'idéal du Christ ne s'est pas fait illusion à cause d'une contradiction intime ou d'une faiblesse, mais parce que tous les hommes, et plus encore ceux qui se proclament chrétiens et dont les responsabilités sont plus grandes, ont accepté d'être les esclaves de leur propre haine et de celle d'autrui. Le Christ a dit : « On ne peut pas servir deux maîtres : Dieu et l'Argent ; le Bien et le Mal ; la Haine et l'Amour. »

Certes, l'amour est la loi unique qui les réunit toutes. Mais si, aujourd'hui, cet objectif nous paraît lointain, il est évident que, abstraction faite de nos convictions, une guerre ne résoudrait aucun de nos problèmes et ne ferait que perpétuer pendant des siècles la misère et l'esclavage. C'est pour cela que nous devons vouloir la paix avant tout, avec fermeté. Nous devons avoir une grande confiance : les hommes, même s'ils ne sont pas prêts pour l'Amour, sont intérieurement destinés à l'Amour et l'Amour commence dans la Paix.

La Paix doit devenir notre premier pas vers la rencontre. J'ai suivi, en Italie, la longue et généreuse préparation des assemblées de Paix et j'ai vu les hommes les plus différents réunis pour la première fois au sein de ces assemblées. L'homme qui croit et l'homme qui ne croit pas ; le Maître et le Travailleur ; l'Autorité et le Sujet. C'est là la meilleure preuve que nous sommes sur la bonne route et que nous répondons à l'exigence des cœurs.

Point de place en nous pour le découragement, les hommes nous attendent. Ils auront contre nous des réactions violentes, mais nous continuerons à crier, à lutter et, si c'est nécessaire, à mourir crucifiés pour la Paix.

Nous venons de partout, nous avons des croyances différentes, mais nous avons un objectif unique et nous nous aimons sincèrement. Des millions d'hommes, des déshérités surtout, attendent notre parole, notre témoignage. Ce ne sont pas seulement des millions de veuves, d'orphelins, de malades, de chômeurs, de travailleurs de toutes catégories qui nous attendent ; tous les hommes nous attendent sans distinction. Oui ! parce que dans chaque cœur, même le plus sombre et le plus renfermé, il y a un besoin irrésistible de se libérer du mal et d'aimer. C'est comme cela que nous luttons pour la vraie liberté, celle de l'Amour, même pour ceux qui, aujourd'hui, luttent contre nous. Nous devons être sûrs que, par la Paix, nous arriverons à l'Amour.

Il existe aujourd'hui dans le monde une volonté d'union qui est le signe le plus clair que les hommes non seulement ont découvert à nouveau les chemins de la rencontre mais que pratiquement, je dirai même techniquement, le moment est propice pour la collaboration fraternelle. Ainsi le veut le cœur de l'Homme et, si vous permettez, le cœur de Dieu.

Nous avons la chance de pouvoir, d'une façon explicite et dans le sens le plus pur, servir ce courant d'unité qui est aussi un courant d'Amour. Nous sommes au centre du monde comme au centre de chaque cœur. Donnons-nous la main, hommes du monde entier, de toutes les croyances : nous sommes encore divisés, mais nous avons la conscience claire de venir d'une même origine, d'avoir une même loi et de devoir marcher vers l'unité absolue, dans la Paix.

Et, comme prêtre du Christ, je vous dis : si nous faisons ainsi, nous arriverons aussi au Dieu unique qui est Amour immortel.

DEUXIÈME

CONGRÈS MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Alexandre FADEEV

DISCOURS

DEUXIEME SEANCE DU VENDREDI 17 NOVEMBRE 1950

Le Président, M. BERNAL :
(Grande-Bretagne)

— La parole est à :

M. ALEXANDRE FADEEV

Permettez-moi de transmettre aux amis de la Paix en Pologne, à tout le peuple polonais et à son gouvernement, notre reconnaissance cordiale pour l'hospitalité qui nous est offerte, à nous Combattants de la Paix du monde entier, ici sur le sol de Pologne.

J'adresse aussi notre salut à nos amis anglais qui ont tout fait pour que les hommes de bonne volonté puissent se serrer la main à Sheffield. Et ce n'est pas la faute des amis de la Paix en Grande-Bretagne si le Congrès de la Paix n'a pu se tenir à Sheffield parce que le gouvernement actuel de la Grande-Bretagne, ou tout au moins deux hommes de ce gouvernement qui ont assez de pouvoir pour cela, entraînent de plus en plus leur peuple dans la voie de la guerre, contre les intérêts nationaux de la Grande-Bretagne.

L'interdiction du Congrès de Sheffield par le gouvernement anglais a montré qu'il existe une grande différence entre les aspirations pacifiques du peuple anglais et l'esprit belliqueux de son gouvernement.

Les amis de la Paix ne sont pas moins nombreux en Grande-Bretagne que dans les autres pays, mais ils ne se rendent pas tous compte à quel point le danger de guerre est réel. Maintenant ils ont vu que leur gouvernement est animé d'un esprit si guerrier que même le savant de renommée mondiale Joliot-Curie, le compositeur Chostakovitch et l'abbé Boulier lui ont fait peur. Les amis de la Paix en Grande-Bretagne ont pu constater une fois de plus que leur gouvernement a surtout peur des aspirations pacifiques de son propre peuple, qu'il a peur que les hommes de bonne volonté de Grande-Bretagne s'entendent avec les hommes de bonne volonté des autres pays sur le plan de la coexistence pacifique de tous les pays et de tous les peuples.

Nous nous sommes réunis à un moment où l'aspiration à la Paix est devenue un des mouvements les plus irrésistibles des temps modernes. La preuve en est le succès sans précédent de la campagne de signatures pour l'Appel de Stockholm, pour l'interdiction de l'arme atomique. Depuis que le monde existe on n'a jamais vu une seule et même pétition circuler ainsi à travers soixante-dix pays, dans le cœur de millions d'hommes de toutes les nations. L'expérience de l'Appel de Stockholm a montré que des hommes d'opinions les plus différentes sur le développement de la société, la religion et la culture, peuvent réellement s'entendre sur des propositions concrètes susceptibles de contribuer à l'œuvre de la paix dans le monde entier. Nous, les hommes soviétiques, nous sommes toujours prêts, comme par le passé, à accepter toute proposition raisonnable, venant de quelque milieux que ce soit, si cette proposition concourt au renforcement de la Paix dans le monde entier. Nous sommes prêts à nous entendre avec tous les véritables amis de la Paix des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, de Grande-Bretagne, du Canada, des Pays Scandinaves, de n'importe quel pays du monde, indépendamment des opinions qui nous séparent à propos de notre régime intérieur ou de notre conception générale de la vie internationale; nous sommes prêts à nous entendre sur n'importe quelle proposition pacifique concrète; nous sommes prêts à rechercher la solution commune de n'importe quel problème si cela peut nous permettre d'agir en commun en faveur de la Paix. De ce point de vue les possibilités d'action commune des amis de la Paix sont encore loin d'être épuisées. Au contraire, nous qui sommes réunis dans cette salle, nous devons présenter des propositions larges et en même temps toujours plus claires, compréhensibles pour tous, toujours plus concrètes et pratiques, susceptibles de rassembler les innombrables forces des Partisans de la Paix dans le monde entier et de mettre à la raison ceux qui ont intérêt à déclencher la guerre. La nouvelle guerre mondiale frappe déjà à notre porte. Point n'est besoin de chercher à deviner quand la guerre finira par enfoncer la porte ; il faut prendre des mesures pour prévenir la guerre. Sous nos yeux, littéralement en quelques mois, un immense pays, dirigé par des hommes gorgés de toutes les richesses et de tous les biens terrestres, a transformé un autre pays, de trente millions d'habitants, possédant un passé séculaire, en un amas de ruines, en poussière et en cendres. Les villes, les monuments d'une antique culture ont été balayés de la surface de la terre. Les champs d'un peuple, renommé pour son amour exceptionnel du travail, même parmi les peuples les plus laborieux, ont été foulés et brûlés. Le pays baigne dans le sang des enfants. Toutes les horreurs des atrocités fascistes qui avaient donné lieu aux débats judiciaires de Nuremberg ont révécu sous les yeux des mères de la Corée martyre.

Peut-être la Corée était-elle connue dans l'histoire comme pays agresseur ?

Peut-être avait-elle participé au bloc d'agresseurs dans la dernière guerre mondiale ? Peut-être menaçait-elle d'invasion, à présent, le territoire des Etats-Unis ? Non. Ce pays qui avait souffert d'un long esclavage sous la botte de l'impérialisme japonais est un pays devant lequel s'ouvrait pour la première fois la possibilité de vivre librement après la victoire remportée par les Nations Unies dans la dernière guerre. Quant à la Corée du Nord, dans les quelques années qu'elle venait de vivre depuis sa libération, elle avait créé plus d'écoles, plus d'hôpitaux et de crèches qu'il n'en avait jamais été créés tout au long de l'histoire séculaire de la Corée. Des hommes — il m'est pénible d'employer ces mots pour ceux sur l'ordre desquels la Corée a été dévastée — prétendent que c'est précisément la Corée du Nord qui serait responsable de la dévastation de tout le pays et de l'extermination d'une partie considérable de son peuple. Et le président du pays qui a commis cet acte, l'acte le plus sauvage de tous ceux qui ont eu lieu depuis la dernière guerre, affirme que ce fut là sa plus importante contribution à la cause de la Paix.

Je proposerais à M. le Président de laisser entrer aux Etats-Unis cinq simples femmes coréennes, pas plus, à la condition seulement qu'elles fussent choisies non par M. le Président, mais par le peuple coréen lui-même; de laisser entrer cinq femmes coréennes, pas plus, de ces femmes qui ont vécu tout ce qui s'est passé et se passe en Corée, qu'elles soient nées dans la Corée du Sud ou dans la Corée du Nord indifféremment. Qu'elles s'expriment librement dans les écoles et les Universités, dans les réunions ouvrières et dans les communautés religieuses et qu'elles racontent seulement ce qu'elles ont vécu, ce qu'elles ont vu de leurs propres yeux. Toute la presse américaine pourrait développer simultanément le point de vue de M. le Président sur ce qu'on appelle la question coréenne. Tout l'appareil de propagande du gouvernement des Etats-Unis pourrait intervenir dans les mêmes réunions que les femmes coréennes et leur apporter la contradiction. Ce serait encore mieux si, aux côtés de ces femmes, Mac Arthur prenait la parole. Et si la police n'intervenait pas dans cette affaire comme c'est maintenant la coutume aux Etats-Unis. J'ose affirmer que chaque enfant et chaque adulte aux Etats-Unis croirait davantage les femmes coréennes que toute la presse américaine et tout l'appareil de propagande du gouvernement des Etats-Unis, et que Mac Arthur apparaîtrait aux yeux de tout le peuple américain comme un criminel de guerre. Car le peuple américain, lui aussi, aime avant tout la vérité, et il n'y a pas d'homme tant soit peu conscient au monde qui ne frémisse à entendre la vérité sur la Corée. Moi, écrivain soviétique, je sais, ainsi que des millions d'hommes sur cette terre, comment l'agression américaine a commencé en Corée. Mais je veux m'adresser maintenant à ceux qui ne savent pas comment cela a commencé, à ceux qui se sont fait une autre idée du début des événements de Corée. Je leur demande simplement : dites qui a refusé, et pourquoi, d'entendre les représentants de la Corée du Nord lors de la discussion de la question coréenne ? Qui a refusé, et pourquoi, de discuter la question coréenne en présence des représentants légitimes de la Chine ? (Applaudissements.)

Qui n'a voulu, et pourquoi, entendre aucune des propositions faites en vue de régler pacifiquement la question coréenne d'où que viennent ces propositions ?

Il n'est pas besoin d'être juriste ou diplomate, il suffit simplement d'être un homme pour comprendre qu'il est impossible d'envoyer ses soldats envahir un pays qui ne vous a en rien menacé, qu'il est impossible d'écraser dans ce pays tout ce qui vit, de faire entendre à tous qu'on n'a pas l'intention de retirer ses soldats de ce pays, de refuser toutes les propositions pacifiques faites au sujet de ce pays, et de prétendre ensuite apporter une grande contribution à la cause de la Paix.

Cependant chacun voit d'ores et déjà que l'agression américaine en Corée ne s'est pas transformée, ne pouvait et ne peut se transformer en une promenade rapide et facile sur les cadavres des femmes et des enfants coréens. L'héroïque peuple coréen a montré une force de résistance inouïe et son voisin, le peuple chinois, a déclaré bien haut que le peuple coréen n'est pas seul. Ainsi l'agresseur s'est enlisé en Corée et sa victoire est, pour le moins qu'on puisse dire, douteuse. C'est que le sang des jeunes Américains coule aussi à flots, et si la question ne trouve pas de solution pacifique, le sang des jeunes Américains coulera sans fin. Tout homme qui pense, comprend maintenant qu'en ce point de l'Asie le danger d'un nouveau conflit mondial est né.

Mais est-ce qu'une telle situation était inévitable en Corée ? Est-ce que la question dite coréenne ne pouvait être résolue d'une manière pacifique ? Le monde entier sait que dès les premiers jours de la libération de la Corée par suite de la défaite du Japon, dans la dernière guerre mondiale, des propositions ont été faites à maintes reprises pour résoudre pacifiquement la question dite coréenne. La Corée, comme tous les autres Etats, avait et a le droit de vivre unie et indépendante. Le pays dont je suis le fils a fait, à maintes reprises, des propositions partant de la nécessité de retirer les troupes étrangères de Corée et d'unifier ce pays en un seul Etat. Des propositions du même genre ont été faites maintes et maintes fois par la Corée du Nord. Ces documents ont été publiés; tout homme qui veut comprendre cette question peut les lire.

A la suite de la dernière guerre mondiale l'Organisation des Nations Unies a été créée; elle était destinée, à proprement parler, à résoudre les questions de ce genre. C'est justement elle, l'Organisation des Nations Unies, qui pouvait et qui devait favoriser la solution pacifique de la question coréenne. Mais les hommes de bonne volonté dans le monde entier doivent s'apercevoir que les forces ayant intérêt à la guerre n'ont pas voulu de solution pacifique de la question coréenne et que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, au lieu d'inciter, pour le moins, ces forces à mener des pourparlers. est allée jusqu'à commettre cet acte honteux : couvrir de son drapeau l'immixtion de l'armée américaine dans les affaires intérieures de la Corée.

Tout récemment encore, nous avons vu M. Nehru, représentant de l'un des plus grands pays de l'Asie, proposer le règlement pacifique de la question dite coréenne avec la participation des Coréens eux-mêmes, avec la participation de la Chine, vitalement intéressée au sort de la Corée. Mais comme il fallait s'y attendre, l'agresseur n'a pas prêté l'oreille à ces propositions pacifiques. Et non seulement l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'a pas soutenu cette nouvelle possibilité de règlement pacifique de la question, mais elle a soutenu, au contraire, l'extension de la guerre sous le couvert de son drapeau.

L'Organisation des Nations Unies, sur laquelle les peuples du monde avaient fondé tant d'espoir, apparaît sous un jour encore plus défavorable à la lumière d'un autre conflit encore plus important et plus menaçant que le précédent, conflit en train de mûrir à nos portes mêmes et pouvant se transformer en une catastrophe mondiale. Je veux parler de la remilitarisation de l'Allemagne occidentale, de la création des forces armées d'Allemagne occidentale sous le commandement de ces mêmes généraux qui, il y a si peu de temps encore, commandaient les armées fascistes allemandes qui dévastèrent tant et tant de pays représentés ici.

Il n'est pas besoin d'être homme d'Etat, il suffit d'être un homme tant soit peu instruit et réfléchi pour comprendre qu'il n'est pas de moyen pour résoudre la question allemande en dehors de la conclusion d'un traité de paix avec un Etat allemand uni, démocratique et pacifique, et du retrait de toutes les troupes étrangères du territoire de cet Etat. Faut-il rappeler combien de propositions simples, claires et en même temps très complètes ont été faites pour régler d'une façon pacifique et définitive la question dite allemande, cette question cruciale du réglement duquel il dépend que nos enfants jouissent des biens de la paix et du travail ou versent leur sang dans la plus horrible des guerres que l'humanité ait jamais connue ? Pourtant, un accord des grandes puissances avait été obtenu à ce sujet à Potsdam. Il semble aussi que les documents sur la base desquels l'Organisation des Nations Unies a commencé d'exister auraient dû assurer toutes les conditions nécessaires pour résoudre la question allemande par cet unique moyen pacifique.

Et cependant les forces de guerre ne veulent pas accepter une solution pacifique de la question allemande. On crée des alliances et des blocs agressifs dans lesquels une partie de l'Allemagne, sa partie occidentale, n'est pas seulement appelée à jouer un rôle de simple participant, mais à être le plus actif et le plus fort des partenaires européens dans un jeu sanglant. Sur l'ordre d'outre-océan, les gouvernements des puissances occidentales accroissent d'année en année leurs budgets de guerre qui pèsent lourdement sur les peuples. On mène une course aux armements inouïe, on fait le plan du nombre de divisions que chaque Etat doit fournir pour la future guerre d'agression. A ce propos une puissance de l'importance du Luxembourg se voit fixer un nombre de divisions à peine inférieur à celui des Etats-Unis. Evidemment les maîtres d'outre-océan ne sont pas très chauds pour donner des soldats et ils bercent leurs partenaires européens de l'illusion d'une victoire facile grâce à la bombe atomique. Et personne, visiblement, n'est curieux de savoir ce que pense à ce sujet le simple soldat français, anglais, belge ou celui de l'Allemagne occidentale, ou bien encore celui du Luxembourg, parce que c'est lui et non la bombe atomique qui devra verser son sang pour les intérêts des monopoles américains.

Il semblerait que c'est vraiment là l'occasion d'employer toutes les ressources d'influence pacifique que détient l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Hélas ! là aussi l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne répond pas aux espoirs des peuples. Elle est devenue un instrument d'encouragement des forces de guerre, instrument d'autant plus dangereux que l'encouragement des forces de guerre se fait sous le couvert de phrases hypocrites sur l'amour de la Paix.

Voilà pourquoi je soutiens M. Joliot-Curie, dirigeant de notre mouvement pour la Paix, lorsqu'il propose que notre Congrès de la Paix exige de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qu'elle accomplisse honnêtement le devoir qui lui a été tracé par les peuples, à savoir : consolider la Paix, organiser la collaboration pacifique des pays, des peuples et des Etats. Je soutiens également M. Joliot-Curie et M. Nenni lorsqu'ils proposent que nous disions dans cet appel à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, au nom de centaines de millions d'amis de la Paix dans le monde entier :

« Accomplissez votre devoir devant l'histoire et l'humanité. Si vous ne l'accomplissez pas, les peuples du monde trouveront le moyen de s'entendre en dehors de vous. Nous ne voulons rien inventer de nouveau, mais nous voulons que soit réalisé en fait ce qui a été inscrit sur le drapeau de l'Organisation des Nations Unies quand elle a été créée. Nous voulons que soient réellement appliquées les déclarations sur la Paix, sur le caractère inadmissible de l'emploi, à des fins de guerre, des moyens d'extermination massive tels que l'arme atomique, chimique et bactériologique, sur la réduction des armements, etc... Si les forces de guerre à l'intérieur de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne vous permettent pas d'appliquer ce que vous-mêmes avez déclaré, les peuples du monde, infiniment plus nombreux que les cinq cents millions de signatures de l'Appel de Stockholm, obligeront les forces de guerre à reculer, s'uniront sur la base d'une coopération pacifique et réaliseront un programme authentique de paix solide et durable, exprimant les intérêts vitaux de tous les peuples. »

Voilà pourquoi je soutiens M. Joliot-Curie et les nombreux délégués du Congrès qui ont proposé d'intensifier nos efforts jusqu'à l'aboutissement des revendications contenues dans l'Appel de Stockholm : interdiction absolue de l'arme atomique et dénonciation comme criminel de guerre du Gouvernement qui, le premier, emploierait cette arme. Je soutiens également la proposition de compléter la revendication de l'interdiction de l'arme atomique par celle de l'interdiction absolue de l'arme chimique et bactériologique.

A l'Appel de Stockholm pour l'interdiction de l'arme atomique, on a entendu des voix répondre que, dans certains pays, c'était une sorte d'armement qui dominait et qu'ailleurs c'en était une autre; que l'interdiction d'une sorte d'armement serait avantageuse pour les uns et désavantageuse pour les autres. Ces voix étaient hypocrites, ne serait-ce que parce qu'elles partaient en majeure partie du camp où a lieu une course effrénée aux armements de toute sorte sans exception.

Nous, Partisans de la Paix, représentants des Nations les plus diverses, nous avons dit plus d'une fois que l'interdiction de la bombe atomique et des autres moyens d'extermination massive est le premier pas, et le plus important, vers l'établissement et la coopération pacifique entre les pays.

En même temps, la course à n'importe quelle sorte d'armement, l'accroissement des forces armées terrestres, navales et aériennes, font non seulement peser un lourd fardeau économique sur les peuples, mais sont la source de conflits armés qui peuvent être des moyens d'agression, ainsi que les peuples ont pu s'en rendre compte dans le passé comme dans le présent.

Désireux d'apporter ma contribution au Statut de la Paix qui sera élaboré par notre Congrès à la suite des propositions constructives d'une série de délégations, au nom de mes amis de la délégation soviétique et au mien propre, je fais les propositions suivantes que je soumets à l'examen préliminaire des commissions du Congrès.

Au nom du Congrès, proposer aux grandes puissances de procéder au cours des années 1951 et 1952 à une réduction régulière et progressive de toutes les armées, y compris les forces navales et aériennes, dans une proportion allant du tiers à la moitié de leur effectif actuel. (Applaudissements.)

Former auprès du Conseil de Sécurité un organisme de contrôle international disposant d'inspecteurs autorisés qui contrôleraient tant l'application de la réduction des armements que l'interdiction de l'arme atomique, bactériologique et chimique. (Applaudissements.)

Un efficace contrôle international ne doit pas seulement concerner l'armement et la production d'armes déclarés par chaque pays. Sur réclamation de la Commission de Contrôle International, il peut procéder à une inspection de l'armement ou de la production d'armes supposée en dehors de ceux qui ont été déclarés. (Applaudissements.)

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Ilya EHRENBOURG

DISCOURS (Proposition d'une loi internationale contre la propagande de guerre

PREMIERE SEANCE DU SAMEDI 18 NOVEMBRE 1950

Le Président : JAMES ENDICOTT (Canada) :

— La parole est à :

M. Ilya EHRENBOURG

Un poids énorme est tombé sur nos épaules. L'homme n'a pas le droit de se ménager, d'être insouciant ou insensé. Ce n'est pas à notre propre destin que nous pensons maintenant. Sur nous pèse la responsabilité de tous les enfants bruns ou blonds, les enfants de Londres et Moscou, de Paris et Pékin, les enfants qui jouent parmi les gratte-ciel de New-York et ceux qui errent parmi les ruines de Corée. Sur nous pèse la responsabilité de tous les amoureux, de tous les livres du monde, de toutes les villes, de tous les jardins. Angoissés, les gens se demandent : « La guerre encore, est-ce donc possible ? » Peut-on vivre dans un tel désarroi ? Peut-on élever des enfants en se demandant si un jour une bombe ne tombera pas sur eux ? Peut-on penser, créer, pousser la civilisation humaine en avant quand plane l'ombre de la guerre ? La guerre c'est l'œuvre des hommes, et les hommes peuvent l'éviter. La menace est grande, tout le monde le comprend. Nous ne sommes pas réunis ici pour faire un meeting, pour parler et discuter. On attend de nous des mots pesés, des propositions concrètes, des décisions acceptables pour tous. Nous devons éviter la guerre. C'est l'espoir de tous les hommes et de toutes les femmes, en quelque endroit qu'ils vivent.

On dit que la guerre est inévitable car le monde s'est brisé en deux. Parce qu'à Moscou il y a d'autres lois qu'à New-York et qu'il existe des Etats où les communistes sont mis hors la loi et d'autres Etats où les communistes édictent des lois. Les Etats-Unis et les autres nations animées d'un même esprit se trouvent directement contrecarrés par un régime dont les buts sont contraires et la conception totalement différente. Ce régime tient à une philosophie fausse. M. Acheson a repris récemment cette idée de M. Truman en disant :

> « Plusieurs aspects de ce système philosophique, en particulier la façon dont il est mis en pratique en Union Soviétique et ailleurs, non seulement nous sont profondément antipathiques mais posent la notion élémentaire du bien et du mal. »

J'accepte volontiers que, du point de vue de M. Truman, le marxisme soit une philosophie fausse et que M. Acheson ait de l'antipathie pour le système soviétique. Je ne veux pas dire ce que je pense du système philosophique de M. Truman et quel est mon sentiment envers la conduite de M. Acheson. Mais cependant la supériorité d'un système philosophique ne sera jamais prouvée par la guerre. Cent bombes jetées sur cent universités soviétiques ne démontreront jamais que le pragmatisme de James est supérieur au matérialisme historique.

La guerre n'est pas une compétition d'idées. Ce n'est pas une discussion philosophique. La guerre est la plus grande calamité qui frappe tous les peuples et toutes les expressions de leur culture. Si certains Américains n'aiment pas trop les idées ou les livres soviétiques, qu'ils essayent donc de combattre les idées par les idées, d'humilier les livres par les livres. Dans ce domaine les bombes sont impuissantes.

Ceux des Américains qui veulent garder leur économie, leurs idées, leur mode de vie, ne seraient pas raisonnables de miser sur la guerre. Les événements des quarante dernières années ont montré que les guerres accélèrent le changement social. Mais si la guerre ne peut préserver le monde capitaliste de l'influence des idées socialistes, elle n'est pas non plus la voie vers le socialisme. Les gens qui veulent marcher de l'avant comprennent bien qu'une nouvelle guerre mondiale rejetterait l'humanité en arrière en détruisant cette base matérielle qui est indispensable pour la construction d'une société plus perfectionnée. Il n'y a pas un seul citoyen aimant sincèrement l'avenir qui serait prêt à payer la victoire de ses idées un tel prix. La guerre n'est pas la sage-femme de l'histoire, c'est la faiseuse d'anges qui détruit la fleur de l'humanité. La guerre est contraire à notre philosophie soviétique, à notre éthique, à nos aspirations ; nous avons confiance en l'avenir, car tous les enfants du monde, pas seulement les enfants de Moscou mais aussi les enfants de New-York, sont notre espoir, nos amis, nos alliés.

Je crois que l'ordre social américain ne m'afflige pas moins que l'ordre social soviétique n'afflige M. Acheson. Et pourtant je suis pour la paix. Pour la paix non seulement avec l'Amérique de Howard Fast ou de Paul Robeson, mais pour la paix avec l'Amérique de M. Truman et de M. Acheson. Je sais que dans le monde il y a beaucoup de gens à qui le socialisme ne plaît pas. J'espère que M. Truman et M. Acheson à leur tour savent qu'il y a dans le monde pas mal de gens qui préfèrent le socialisme au capitalisme. Il n'y a qu'une seule planète mais elle est bien assez vaste. Il y a bien assez de place pour les partisans des différents systèmes sociaux. On peut s'entendre pour que personne n'enfonce la porte d'une autre maison sous prétexte d'antipathie pour les idées du propriétaire de cette maison et pour que personne ne lance de pierres dans les fenêtres du voisin pour la seule raison que ce voisin pense autrement, parle différemment et vit d'une autre manière.

« Si tu veux la Paix, prépare la guerre. » Cette maxime dangereuse d'un orateur des plus belliqueux d'un Etat également très belliqueux est répétée maintenant par les gens qui préparent la guerre et qui la veulent. Ils tâchent de convaincre leurs concitoyens que plus il y a dans le monde de bombes et d'obus plus est tranquille le sommeil des enfants. Tchekov a dit une fois que si, dans le premier acte d'un drame, on voit sur le mur un fusil suspendu, dans le dernier acte quelqu'un va tirer avec ce fusil-là. On ne peut éviter la guerre en augmentant les armes. On ne peut l'éviter qu'en diminuant et en détruisant les armes.

Nous tous, nous voulons mettre un terme à l'augmentation des armements. Et je suis convaincu que nous y arriverons. Mais cela ne suffit pas. On ne peut pas commencer la guerre, même en accumulant des centaines de milliers de bombes, sans empoisonner la conscience de millions d'hommes, car pour faire la guerre il faut des soldats. Ecrivain, je connais le pouvoir de la parole, je le dis avec fierté et avec amertume. La parole peut amener l'homme à devenir un héros, l'appeler à des actes généreux, attirer l'amour dans son cœur. Mais la parole peut abaisser l'homme, le stupéfier, endormir sa conscience. Quand Hitler a jeté ses armées sur les pays paisibles, les gens se demandaient comment les bourgeois bien pensants, les honnêtes travailleurs pouvaient suivre ces bandits, ces assassins. Lors des différents procès où l'on a jugé les scélérats nazis, il y avait des gens qui ne comprenaient pas d'où sont sortis ces bourreaux cyniques, d'où sont venus ces assassins qui ont allumé les fours d'Auschwitz, d'où est issue une Ilse Koch qui faisait des abat-jour de peau humaine ; les gens se souvenaient de Weimar, de Heidelberg; ils évoquaient la modestie, la sensibilité de l'Allemand se promenant sous les tilleuls séculaires; ils se rappelaient les quilles, ce jeu innocent des grands-pères des SS, les travaux de broderie qui passionnaient les grand-mères d'Ilse Koch. La férocité n'est pas tombée du ciel. Le culte de la force n'était pas caché dans le sang d'un Allemand moyen, le mépris pour les gens des autres races n'était pas la substance mystique des gens de Weimar ou de Heidelberg; l'esprit de rapine, la morgue raciste et nationaliste, la férocité, l'amoralité ont été inculqués à l'homme allemand par les politiciens nazis, par la presse nazie, par l'école nazie.

Quel peuple peut désirer la répétition des horreurs vécues ? Est-ce que Varsovie doit de nouveau revoir les étrangleurs et les incendiaires ? Est-ce que Paris doit de nouveau entendre résonner le pas de fer des occupants ? Est-ce que Londres doit de nouveau prêter l'oreille au bourdonnement du ciel et cacher ses enfants sous terre ? Est-ce que le peuple américain, qui connaît surtout la guerre par les films faits à Hollywood, doit voir sur son sol le feu, le sang et la mort ? Est-ce que nous tolérerons une guerre ? Est-ce que nous ne pourrons pas maîtriser ceux qui la préparent, qui non seulement cultivent des bacilles capables de frapper les peuples dans leur chair mais qui attentent à leur âme en essayant de leur inculquer l'idée de la supériorité nationale, de la haine des autres peuples, et le goût de l'assassinat collectif.

La guerre, pour un homme simple, c'est l'horreur, c'est le sang d'un enfant, c'est le regard fixe d'une mère qui a perdu son fils. Mais il y a des gens pour qui la guerre c'est le salut. Ils ne cachent même pas leurs calculs. Devant tout le monde ils s'installent à table et déploient leur serviette. L'United States News, journal des financiers américains, écrit : « Si la paix est vraiment assurée, tout s'écroule. » Ces gens ont peur de la Paix, et ils ne se calment qu'en voyant l'inquiétude générale.

L'agence de bourse de Zurich offre à ses clients des actions d'usines d'avions américaines en les appelant « War Babies, Bébés de la guerre » ! Rappelons-nous les enfants tués par les bombes, les enfants de Léningrad et de Coventry, les enfants de Corée, et disons : « Il faut mettre un terme à cela. » (Applaudissements.)

Le Times Herald, qui paraît à Washington, écrit :

> « Nous enverrons des avions qui voleront à la hauteur de 40.000 pieds, nous les munirons de bombes atomiques, incendiaires et bactériologiques, de trinitroto-

luol, pour tuer les enfants au berceau, les vieillards en prière et les ouvriers au travail. »

Je ne dirai jamais que de tels appels émanent d'Américains honnêtes, mais je regrette que dans une ville qui porte le nom d'un homme grand et noble peuvent vivre, agir et ouvertement inciter au meurtre, des assassins d'enfants, des assassins des peuples. (Applaudissements.)

On peut me répondre que les journaux sont faits par des gens irresponsables. Je me permettrai alors de citer quelques aphorismes de gens qui malheureusement sont suffisamment responsables, des membres du Congrès américain :

On pourra me dire qu'il y a beaucoup de congressmen en Amérique et qu'ils ne sont pas tous connus pour leur bon sens et leur honnêteté. Moi je crois que les membres du Parlement doivent représenter la Nation, et que si parmi eux se trouvent des criminels ou des aliénés il faut les éloigner de ces organes suprêmes du pouvoir. Mais les appels à la guerre d'agression n'émanent pas seulement de députés; ils viennent aussi de représentants officiels des Etats-Unis, ministres ou vice-ministres. Il y a deux mois M. Matthews, ministre de la Marine des Etats-Unis, a proposé à ses concitoyens ce procédé pour établir la Paix :

« Nous devons être prêts à déclarer la guerre pour obliger les autres à collaborer à la construction de la Paix. Cela nous donnera une caractéristique nouvelle pour une vraie démocratie : nous serons les initiateurs de la guerre d'agression. »

Cet été, l'adjoint du ministre de la Guerre, M. Griffith, a déclaré qu'il a déjà proposé à M. Truman en 1947 de jeter la bombe atomique sur l'Union Soviétique. Si le ministre de la Marine d'Union Soviétique avait exprimé l'idée qu'il faut déclarer la guerre aux Etats-Unis pour les obliger à la collaboration, il serait sans doute poursuivi pour cela. Si l'adjoint du ministre de la Guerre d'Union Soviétique avait proposé de jeter une bombe sur l'Amérique, il serait sans doute placé dans une maison de santé.

Les appels à l'agression, les discours et les articles qui veulent éveiller la passion pour l'assassinat collectif se font aussi dans les autres pays et avant tout dans ce pays dont le Gouvernement offre aimablement à chaque amateur de la guerre la possibilité de lancer des appels pour une tuerie effroyable. C'est justement dans ce pays qu'un vieux philosophe, Bertrand Russel, qui était considéré autrefois comme un humaniste pacifique, insiste maintenant pour que l'on commence au plus vite la troisième guerre mondiale. C'est justement dans ce pays que le très honorable Lord Tranchard chante les louanges de la bombe atomique qui, selon lui, est capable de détruire de 10 à 20 millions d'hommes par mois. Les appels à la guerre affligent davantage quand ils viennent des Anglais, parce que ces appels ne correspondent pas aux sentiments pacifiques du peuple britannique et parce qu'ils démontrent l'aveuglement de certains Anglais qui oublient que leur île serait l'une des premières victimes de cette guerre qu'ils souhaitent.

Les appels à la guerre se font même dans un pays qui se souvient bien des horreurs de la guerre, la France. Je connais ce pays, je l'aime. Et je veux dire d'avance que les gens qui en France appellent à la guerre parlent et écrivent en français mais ne doivent sans doute pas être appelés Français. Leur passé comme leur présent témoignent de ce qu'ils ne font que traduire en français des idées qui ne sont pas françaises. Je ne veux pas évoquer le rapport du Comité international pour l'étude des questions européennes. Sous ce document qui a ému l'humanité entière on voit la signature d'un politicien, Paul Reynaud, qui en son temps a nommé comme son remplaçant le traître Pétain, et celle du poète Paul Claudel qui en son temps a dédié à ce traître une ode enthousiaste. Ce rapport glorifie la destruction en masse. Pour tuer de 60 à 70 millions d'hommes, il propose les bombes atomiques et à hydrogène, les bacilles et le poison, la destruction du bétail et des récoltes, le gaz asphyxiant et tous autres moyens d'extermination des populations interdits par les conventions internationales. Les auteurs de ce rapport n'ont pas été inculpés et, autant que je sache, ils continuent à s'occuper de leur travail rien moins qu'humanitaire. Le passage des paroles à l'action met certaines personnes en extase, et le journal La France de Marseille écrit :

> « Ce que l'on va faire pour la Corée, il faut en étendre le bénéfice à la Hongrie, à la Roumanie, à la Bulgarie, à l'Allemagne orientale, aux Etats Baltes. »

Les événements terribles de Corée donnent au rêve toute sa réalité. Les communiqués signés par le général Mac Arthur se montrent tellement sanguinaires qu'ils stupéfient même des gens qui ont vécu les horreurs de l'invasion nazie. Le journal le Monde, qui exprime l'opinion des milieux industriels de France, ayant publié le communiqué de Mac Arthur du 14 octobre, note que ce communiqué est conçu en des termes « parfois surprenants ». Voici un extrait de ce communiqué, qui est vraiment surprenant :

> Tirant à la cadence de 15.000 coups à la minute, le puissant croiseur américain « Missouri » a déversé hier, en moins d'une heure, plus de 800.000 livres de mort et de destruction sur les objectifs militaires ennemis de la ville de Chongjon qui se trouve à 56 kilomètres de la frontière de Mandchourie et à environ 160 kilomètres du grand port russe de Vladivostok.

Tout est surprenant : et l'extase au sujet de mort et de destruction, et la notion de proximité de Vladivostok qui trahit le rêve du général Mac Arthur. On peut ajouter à cela que, le 1er octobre à New-York, une bande de fascistes a organisé une manifestation dans lequelle les admirateurs de Mac Arthur portaient des banderoles avec l'inscription : « Après le 38e parallèle, Moscou. »

On ne fait pas des assassins en une heure. Les assassins on les élève, on les prépare dès l'enfance. Dans différents journaux pour enfants en Amérique on peut voir des dessins qui montrent comment un « superman », cette variété nouvelle de « l'Uebermensch » nazi, tue le Russe.

Il y a des dessins qui montrent les exploits d'Ilse Koch arrachant la peau des hommes. Dans le journal pour les petits, Sparkler, j'ai trouvé une réclame pour jouets : le fameux Moxley 32 espagnol « copie exacte » était utilisé par les phalangistes espagnols contre la Russie pendant la seconde guerre mondiale. Ce revolver à six balles est fait sur le modèle américain. Le fameux Luger allemand à six balles est fait sur le modèle américain. Le fameux Luger allemand à 9 mm., l'arme la plus parfaite qui existe à ce jour, a servi comme revolver de poche aux officiers. On propose aux enfants de jouer avec les revolvers des phalangistes et des SS. On peut prévoir ce que feront ces enfants quand ils passeront des jouets aux vraies armes.

En Suisse neutre, un professeur de lycée classique, un certain Centinetta, a dicté à ses élèves le texte suivant :

> « Que les Russes viennent, ils verront notre courage. Nous allons nous venger de ces ours pour nos amis étranglés et nos femmes enlevées. En avant à la rencontre de l'ennemi. Punissons-le de tous ses crimes. Mort aux Russes. »

Certainement on pourrait rire devant l'intellect d'un professeur de lycée classique en lui demandant quels étaient les Suisses étranglés par les Russes et quelles femmes des élèves mineurs d'un lycée suisse les Russes ont pu enlever. Pourtant tout cela n'est pas drôle. De pareilles méthodes d'éducation présentent le plus grand danger pour tous les pays et pour tous les peuples.

Dans les manuels destinés aux officiers qui s'occupent de la préparation militaire des écoliers aux Etats-Unis il est dit : « L'instructeur doit stimuler l'instinct naturel de combattre et tuer. » Après cela on comprend que le recteur de l'Université de Floride, le Dr Nanus, puisse déclarer :

L'idéologie des nazis n'est pas seulement prolongée, elle est dépassée.

Partisans de la Paix, c'est avec la plus grande fermeté que nous devons nous opposer à l'arme la plus dangereuse, la plus mortelle, la propagande pour une nouvelle guerre. Nous devons le faire tant qu'il n'est pas trop tard, tant que l'on peut éviter la troisième guerre mondiale.

Si on me dit que je suis partial, que j'accuse seulement une seule partie, je répondrai qu'on peut trouver dans nos journaux des défauts et des erreurs. On peut démontrer que tel ou tel critique émet des jugements superficiels ou injustes sur tel ou tel événement de la vie culturelle de l'Occident. Mais jamais un homme politique, ni député, ni journaliste, ni pédagogue de l'Union Soviétique, pas un seul n'a appelé à la guerre contre les Etats-Unis ou un autre Etat. Dans nos journaux on peut trouver des articles durs dirigés contre la politique menée par les Etats-Unis, contre le système capitaliste. Mais personne ne trouvera dans nos journaux une invitation à jeter des bombes sur New-York, à attaquer Londres, à occuper Paris. Dans nos écoles on n'enseigne pas la haine envers les autres peuples, en particulier envers le peuple américain. Au contraire nos pédagogues soulignent toujours qu'à part l'Amérique de M. Johnson ou du général Mac Arthur, il existe une Amérique vivante qui a donné au monde Lincoln et Roosevelt, Longfellow et Whitman, l'Amérique des grands savants et des travailleurs honnêtes et énergiques.

Je veux, en tant que citoyen soviétique et en tant qu'écrivain, déclarer en toute franchise que la cessation de la propagande de guerre en Amérique et dans certains pays d'Europe occidentale nous aidera à faire connaître mieux chez nous, d'une façon plus complète et plus amicale, la vie et la culture des peuples des Etats-Unis, d'Angleterre ou de France.

Nous sommes venus ici non pour nous disputer, non pour augmenter la méfiance déjà bien assez grande sans cela.

Nous sommes venus ici pour nous entendre sur le maintien et le raffermissement de la Paix.

C'est justement pour cela que je propose à ce grand Congrès de prendre la résolution suivante, qui demande l'interdiction de la propagande d'une nouvelle guerre et qui aide à la compréhension mutuelle des peuples (Applaudissements) :

Le deuxième Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, considérant que :

1° La propagande d'une nouvelle guerre menée dans certains pays représente la plus grande menace pour la collaboration pacifique des peuples;

2° Qu'il s'ensuit que cette propagande est le crime le plus grave contre l'humanité,

S'adresse aux Parlements de tous les pays en leur demandant d'édicter une loi spéciale, la « loi sur la défense de la Paix », qui établisse la responsabilité juridique pour la propagande d'une guerre nouvelle sous n'importe quelle forme, orale ou écrite, qu'elle se présente : journaux, radio, cinéma.

Le Congrès s'adresse en même temps aux Parlements de tous les pays en leur demandant d'assurer dans l'intérêt du raffermis-sement de la Paix l'éducation des jeunes générations dans l'esprit de collaboration avec les autres peuples et le respect des autres races et nations.

Cette résolution n'est pas dirigée contre tel ou tel Etat ni contre un groupe d'Etats. Elle défend l'intérêt de tous les peuples. Elle ne porte pas atteinte à la liberté de parole ou de presse, de quelque façon que l'on comprenne cette liberté. Car dans tous les pays civilisés il existe des lois qui interdisent l'incitation au meurtre. Par exemple dans la loi française assurant la liberté de la presse le paragraphe 24 établit la responsabilité juridique pour l'appel à l'assassinat, au pillage et à l'incendie. Pourquoi serait-il interdit d'appeler au meurtre d'un seul homme et permis d'appeler au meurtre de centaines de millions d'hommes ? Pourquoi serait-il interdit de pousser à saccager une boutique mais permis de pousser à l'invasion d'un pays étranger ? Pourquoi serait-il interdit d'inciter à l'incendie d'une grange ou d'une meule de foin mais permis d'inciter à l'incendie d'une moitié de l'univers ?

Nous devons nous préoccuper non seulement de l'interdiction de la propagande de guerre mais de la création des conditions morales qui sont indispensables pour la coexistence pacifique des différents Etats. Il faut abandonner dans la génération qui grandit le mépris et l'animosité envers les autres peuples. Il faut lutter contre toutes les démonstrations de morgue nationale ou raciste. Le développement de la culture humaine est incompatible avec l'isolement, avec l'érection de barrières, avec les attaques injustifiées contre la culture et la vie des autres peuples. Nous devons appeler les Parlements du monde à prendre des mesures qui assureront l'éducation des enfants, des adolescents, des jeunes, dans l'esprit de collaboration paisible, de compréhension mutuelle et d'échanges des cultures nationales de tous les peuples.

Je ne parle pas de l'unité philosophique ou politique du monde car il existe dans le monde des partisans des différents systèmes. Les soviétiques critiquent et critiqueront le système capitaliste. De leur côté, les défenseurs du système capitaliste peuvent critiquer l'économie ou l'idéologie soviétiques. Par les critiques même les plus sévères ne s'écroulent pas les villes, ne meurent pas les enfants. Les critiques, même les plus âpres, n'empêchent pas l'échange de valeurs matérielles et spirituelles indispensables au développement de l'humanité. Cet échange est maintenant entravé, et tous les peuples souffrent également des barrières artificiellement dressées. Il est indispensable de changer le climat du monde, de dissiper la méfiance mutuelle; il faut éloigner de la conscience de l'homme l'idée de l'inéluctabilité et de la proximité de la guerre. L'interdiction de la propagande de guerre rétablira la confiance perdue. Je suis convaincu que ma proposition sera soutenue à l'unanimité, car je propose de prendre des mesures non contre l'un ou l'autre Etat, non contre l'un ou l'autre parti, contre l'un ou l'autre homme, mais contre la guerre. (Applaudissements.)

J'ai confiance en l'esprit. Je crois au savant qui donne toutes ses forces pour épargner aux gens les maladies les plus pénibles; je crois au poète dont la conviction ardente réchauffe les nuits du terrassier et du maçon ; je crois en la semence dans la main du jardinier et au cœur d'une mère qui sait ce que c'est que donner la vie et protéger la vie. Les gens qui espèrent une nouvelle guerre ont fait tout pour nous empêcher de nous réunir. Le Gouvernement d'un pays fier de son ancienne culture a fermé ses portes devant l'un des plus grands savants de notre siècle pour la seule raison qu'il défend la Paix. Ce Gouvernement, qui se dit socialiste, a fermé la porte au nez d'un des socialistes les plus notoires de notre époque pour la seule raison qu'il est pour la Paix. Les gens qui souhaitent une nouvelle guerre ont beaucoup d'argent, beaucoup de cellulose et beaucoup d'ondes longues ou courtes. Mais que signifient toutes leurs voix à côté du battement d'un cœur humain ? Nous ne permettrons pas à la guerre de commencer. Nous éloignerons les canons de fusil des poitrines d'hommes. Nous sommes tous unis dans cette volonté : communistes et catholiques, libéraux et socialistes, Russes et Américains, Anglais et Chinois.

Délégués du peuple soviétique, de ce peuple qui a connu tout le poids de la guerre et qui, de tout cœur, hait la guerre, nous serrons la main de ceux qu'on veut présenter comme nos ennemis, la main des Américains, des Anglais, des Français, avec la foi inébranlable qu'il n'y a pas de force au monde capable de désunir ces mains.

DISCOURS

PREMIERE SEANCE DU VENDREDI 17 NOVEMBRE 1950

La Présidente, Mme JESSIE STREET :
(Australie)

— La parole est à :

Madame COTTON

Chers Amis,

C'est un grand honneur pour moi d'être, au deuxième Congrès des Partisans de la Paix, comme au premier, le porte-parole de millions de femmes, à commencer par les 91 millions de la F.D.I.F., fermement résolues à barrer la route à la guerre.

C'est en leur nom que je veux d'abord remercier chaleureusement tous nos amis britanniques, hommes et femmes, du grand effort qu'ils ont accompli pour que le deuxième Congrès Mondial ait lieu à Sheffield. La preuve est faite que c'est le gouvernement britannique qui a empêché, de la manière la plus discourtoise, que l'Angleterre fût le siège du deuxième Congrès Mondial. Le peuple britannique, si jaloux de sa réputation traditionnelle d'hospitalité, ne l'oubliera pas. Comme il est aussi plein d'humour, il n'aura pas manqué de remarquer que l'une des rares personnalités autorisées à aller à Sheffield a été le grand artiste Pablo Picasso, celui-là même qui a doté les Partisans de la Paix de leur insigne universellement connu, de la colombe qui va vers son but d'un vol si assuré. Et la présence de Picasso à Sheffield aura communiqué à beaucoup d'hommes et de femmes, soyons-en sûrs, le grand élan vers la Paix qui emporte la colombe.

Sans se laisser paralyser par les brimades indignes d'un grand pays, les Partisans de la Paix ont immédiatement accepté l'hospitalité du peuple qui, tout au long de l'histoire, a donné au monde l'exemple de la grandeur et de la générosité.

Merci au peuple et au gouvernement polonais !

Dans cette ville de Varsovie si durement martyrisée, les Partisans de la Paix comprendront mieux encore les raisons profondes de leur action et ils sauront trouver les moyens concrets d'écarter de notre terre la menace d'une troisième guerre mondiale.

Cette menace, les femmes l'ont sentie grandir depuis le printemps de 1949, date du premier Congrès des Partisans de la Paix.

A la vérité, la guerre n'a jamais cessé de sévir en Indonésie et en Indochine. Mais la possibilité d'un nouveau conflit mondial n'a jamais paru plus proche que depuis le déclenchement des hostilités en Corée.

Quelqu'opinion que l'on puisse avoir sur les origines de la guerre de Corée, et de quelque côté que nous viennent les informations, il apparaît aux yeux de tous qu'il y a dans ce malheureux pays de nombreux et d'effroyables massacres d'innocents.

C'est ainsi que le correspondant de guerre du Monde, le journaliste français Favrel, nous fait assister à la destruction systématique d'un heureux petit village coréen au mois d'août dernier. Pendant deux heures, les escadrilles succédant aux escadrilles s'acharnèrent à ensevelir l'objectif sous une monstrueuse avalanche d'explosifs. « Ce matin-là, à voir cette nature ensoleillée devenir un champ de mort, à regarder les « G.I's » se faire tuer pour cent mètres de terrain, à penser que là-bas, à quelques milles, des femmes et des enfants, crucifiés au sol suffoquaient d'angoisse, je ne me sentais pas particulièrement fier d'appartenir à l'espèce humaine. »

Même son de cloche dans les journaux anglais et américains.

Mr Philipp Deane, de l'Observer, raconte qu'il se trouvait dans une petite maison paysanne quand trois avions à réaction ont entrepris de la faire sauter... Après le bombardement, une vieille femme s'est approchée de lui. Elle portait le cadavre de son petit-fils. Elle ne disait rien, mais les larmes coulaient de ses yeux.

Grande est l'horreur que nous inspirent ces drames isolés ; mais plus grande encore est celle que nous éprouvons devant les massacres en masse.

Voici comment s'exprime le communiqué 513 du Q.G. de Mac Arthur du 30 septembre 1950 :

« ... Aujourd'hui, la ville nord-coréenne de Uijongby est morte sous une pluie de fusées, de bombes et de balles lâchées par l'escadrille de Marines du brigadier général Thomas J. Gushan...

» Lâchant toute leur fureur pour la première fois pendant le conflit actuel sur le front nord, les pilotes de Marines, sur ordre du commandant du Xe Corps, le major général E.M. Almond, ont attaqué à plusieurs reprises la ville de Uijongby, à 20 km. au nord de Séoul, dans une opération qui a duré une heure et après laquelle ce bastion stratégique communiste n'était plus qu'un amas de décombres embrasés...

» A la fin de l'après-midi, Uijongby avait été nivelée et des pilotes de marines bombardaient en piqué et aux fusées ce qui restait et aussi des objectifs dans les environs... »

Arrêtez ce massacre insensé des civils, se sont écrié seize prêtres australiens ! exprimant l'opinion de tous les hommes dignes de ce nom.

Et les femmes, toutes les femmes, qui ont pour mission de donner et de protéger la vie, ont été révoltées jusqu'au fond d'elles-mêmes par ce gaspillage éhonté des richesses vivantes du monde. C'est dans leur chair qu'elles souffrent quand elles pensent que leurs enfants peuvent mourir ou demeurer infirmes. C'est pour sauvegarder la vie de leurs petits, comme le font toutes les mères de toutes les créatures vivantes, qu'elles veulent mettre fin à la barbarie des guerres.

Voilà pourquoi elles ont voulu être parmi les meilleurs Partisans de la Paix.

A la suite du Ier Congrès mondial, on a pu voir, dans nombre de pays, des femmes à la tête des Mouvements nationaux en faveur de la Paix. Cela a été le cas en Norvège, au Danemark, au Brésil, en Tchécoslovaquie, etc., etc...

Leurs initiatives ont été nombreuses et très variées. Partout et très vite, elles ont eu le souci de grouper le plus grand nombre possible de femmes d'opinions différentes mais ayant toutes la volonté commune d'agir efficacement pour sauver la Paix.

C'est ainsi que la Guilde des Coopératives anglaises a envoyé à M. Bevin un télégramme où il est dit :

L'organisation pacifiste aux Etats-Unis « Les mères contre la guerre » a envoyé, au nom de deux mille trois cents mères de quarante-deux Etats, des lettres à Staline et à Truman, dans lesquelles elles déclarent qu'elles feront tout ce qui est dans leur pouvoir pour que leurs fils et filles ne deviennent chair à canon dans une nouvelle guerre.

L'Union des Femmes Italiennes a créé dans le pays un vrai mouvement féminin des « Messagères de la Paix ». Une grandiose démonstration, organisée à Rome le 17 septembre dernier par l'Union des Femmes Italiennes, a été une puissante expression du rôle qu'ont joué les femmes italiennes dans la lutte pour la Paix. Les femmes italiennes, au 16 juillet, ont été félicitées par le Comité des Partisans de la Paix pour avoir déjà collecté sept millions de signatures pour l'Appel de Stockholm.

En France on a fait circuler des « Cahiers de la Paix » dans lesquels les femmes expriment leurs revendications. Une très grande action est menée contre la guerre impopulaire et anti-constitutionnelle du Viet-Nam. Les femmes soutiennent courageusement les dockers, qui se refusent à charger des armes, et l'héroïque Raymonde Dien n'hésite pas à se jeter sur les rails pour empêcher le départ d'un train de munitions.

Les femmes d'Algérie ont envoyé une délégation auprès des marins américains stationnant à Alger. Cette délégation leur a remis le message suivant pour qu'ils le transmettent aux femmes américaines :

« Nous savons très bien que le peuple américain, que les femmes américaines ne peuvent accepter de gaîté de cœur la guerre et le massacre de millions d'enfants, d'hommes et de femmes. Nous les mères algériennes et les mères américaines, pleurons déjà quand on nous annonce le départ de nos fils pour la Corée ou le Viet-Nam. Mais nous aurions à pleurer bien davantage si une troisième guerre mondiale éclatait.

» Notre pays subit le joug colonial, et nous savons par expérience combien est dure et coûteuse la lutte pour la paix. Nous comprenons donc que la lutte pour la paix doit être particulièrement difficile en Amérique, où les fauteurs de guerre sont à la tête de ministères importants.

» C'est pourquoi toutes les actions que les femmes américaines mènent ou mèneront en faveur de la paix seront joyeusement accueillies et appuyées de tout cœur par toutes les femmes qui, dans le monde entier, craignent pour la vie de leurs enfants.

» Nous sommes profondément convaincues que la guerre peut être évitée. Chaque femme, aujourd'hui, porte la responsabilité de centaines de millions de vies humaines et a le devoir impérieux de jouer son rôle dans la lutte commune pour le bonheur, la liberté et une paix durable. »

En Allemagne occidentale, où les réunions en faveur de la Paix sont étroitement surveillées et même interdites, des femmes se rencontrent cependant clandestinement, groupant des chrétiennes, des social-démocrates, des communistes, pour s'élever contre les méthodes fascistes dont elles ont tant souffert sous Hitler et, comme en Allemagne orientale, s'opposer au réarmement allemand pour une nouvelle guerre d'agression.

Et pour la même raison les femmes espagnoles se dressent contre le régime odieux de Franco. Elles demandent que le dictateur soit traité conformément aux accords de Potsdam et que les 20.000 femmes emprisonnées soient libérées enfin !

Ce désir universel des femmes de travailler efficacement, pratiquement pour la paix, s'est trouvé concrétisé par l'Appel de Stockholm. Pour toutes les femmes donneuses de vie, la bombe atomique est apparue comme la forme la plus odieuse du mépris de la vie humaine. C'est pourquoi les femmes ont signé en très grand nombre l'Appel, c'est pourquoi elles l'ont fait largement connaître autour d'elles, réussissant à collecter un très grand nombre de signatures par les moyens les plus variés.

Les femmes soviétiques et le peuple soviétique tout entier sont animés du grand désir de travailler pour la paix. Au moment même où les aviateurs américains bombardent les villes coréennes, les ingénieurs soviétiques construisent sur les rives de la Volga, dans le désert de Kara-Koum, en Crimée ou en Ukraine, d'immenses édifices, des canaux et des centrales hydro-électriques, pour améliorer la condition des hommes. Ne voit-on pas avec évidence qui, dans le monde, travaille pour la guerre et qui soutient le grand effort des travailleurs pour l'édification de la paix ?

En signant l'Appel de Stockholm, parmi les cent quinze millions de signatures collectées en Union Soviétique, les femmes soviétiques toutes ensemble demandent « la Paix dans le monde entier ». C'est comme un appel ardent que se fait entendre la voix de l'institutrice soviétique Catherine Martianova : « Je m'adresse à vous, simples femmes de tous les pays, institutrices, mères... Entrez dans les rangs des Combattants pour la Paix, ne permettez pas qu'on sème dans les cœurs de vos enfants les graines du mal, de la soif du sang et de la guerre. »

Et en Pologne, en Hongrie, en Roumanie, les femmes comme les hommes s'emploient, comme en Tchécoslovaquie, à justifier cette résolution : « En reconstruisant ta patrie, tu travailles pour la Paix. »

Beaucoup de femmes déléguées à ce Congrès ont été élues précisément parce qu'elles avaient été les meilleures collecteuses, et je les salue chaleureusement.

Je salue tout spécialement les courageuses femmes d'Argentine qui sont arrivées à rassembler cinq cent mille signatures dans un pays où elles sont en butte à la répression la plus sévère, aux violences les plus odieuses. Dans ces conditions, comment ne pas admirer cette ouvrière du textile de Buenos-Aires par exemple, qui a réussi à collecter à elle seule près de quatre mille signatures ?

L'ingéniosité des femmes leur a permis d'atteindre le succès de bien des manières différentes. C'est ainsi que les femmes du 7e arrondissement de Paris ont organisé un lâcher de ballons pour les enfants. Un Appel de Stockholm était attaché à chaque ballon, et deux cent cinquante-sept signatures, dont certaines venues d'Allemagne, ont encore grossi la collecte de noms.

A Pékin, dans le 2e arrondissement, deux vieilles mamans, Kao-Yon Chang et Chang-Yan-Tsé, ont brodé sur leurs robes des colombes blanches avec la devise « Contre l'agression des impérialistes américains en Corée et dans l'Ile de Formose ». Elles ont quitté leur maison de bonne heure et ne sont rentrées que tard dans la soirée, après avoir collecté huit mille deux cent trente-quatre signatures.

Begoun Chamson, jeune Indienne musulmane du Bengalor, voilée, n'ayant pas le droit d'aller elle-même voir les voisins, a écrit comme elle le pouvait faire, pas très correctement, en langue Canda, tout ce qu'elle pensait de la Paix, et elle a envoyé sa petite sœur porter la lettre et collecter les signatures à sa place.

On pourrait trouver de tels exemples dans tous les pays et citer des femmes qui ont, comme Jackie Clark de Los Angelès, collecté au prix des difficultés qu'on imagine quatre mille signatures, ou Jeanne Plusquellec de Brest, en France, dix mille cinquante-six signatures, ou Firmina Marzi, de Rome, qui a obtenu à elle seule dix-huit mille signatures. Elles sont ici, et je les félicite chaleureusement.

A côté de toutes ces initiatives particulières il faut signaler une large entreprise de la Fédération Mondiale de la Jeunesse Démocratique et de la Fédération Démocratique internationale des Femmes : la création de la Journée Internationale de l'Enfance, le 1er juin dernier. Cette journée a été l'occasion de faire comprendre à des millions de gens que les enfants que nous appelons à la vie ont sur nous des droits sacrés : droit à la vie, droit à la santé, droit au développement de leurs aptitudes. Le premier de ces droits, le droit à la vie, conditionne tous les autres; c'est pourquoi le premier devoir de tous les hommes et de toutes les femmes est de s'élever contre les massacres d'innocents et en particulier contre l'usage de la bombe atomique, qui entraîne de si terribles hécatombes d'êtres humains.

Au spectacle des milliers d'enfants débordant de vie que la fête du 1er juin avait rassemblés, nombreuses ont été les signatures qui sont venues tout naturellement s'inscrire sous l'Appel de Stockholm.

Et maintenant que l'Appel de Stockholm a opéré le ralliement de centaines de millions de consciences, il faut aller plus loin et rassembler tous ceux qui veulent sincèrement la Paix, même avec des divergences d'opinions sur des points importants.

C'est dans cet esprit qu'a été lancé l'Appel de Prague dont il sera discuté en ce IIe Congrès Mondial.

Les femmes auront à participer au même titre que les autres Partisans de la Paix aux discussions qui décideront de la marche du mouvement dans les mois à venir.

Elles ont reçu des Assemblées Nationales qui les ont élues à ce Congrès des mandats dont je voudrais citer quelques-uns.

Voici par exemple le mandat qui nous est venu du Canada :

« Les femmes canadiennes s'inquiètent des actions militaires en Corée. Il ne doit pas être permis que les différends entre les Etats dégénèrent en guerre, et il n'existe pas de différends qui ne pourraient être réglés pacifiquement et non par l'envoi des avions et des escadres de guerre. Nous, femmes canadiennes, voulons que prennent fin ces massacres, nous ne voulons pas qu'ils se renouvellent quelque part ailleurs, et nous soutenons tous les efforts dirigés vers la réduction de la menace de guerre.

» Nous sommes contre toute sorte de propagande de guerre d'où qu'elle vienne. Et avant tout nous n'approuvons ni ceux qui affirment que la guerre est inévitable ni ceux qui parlent d'une guerre préventive contre l'Union Soviétique, voisine au nord du Canada. »

Et voici le mandat des femmes de Finlande :

« Au IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix :

» Nous n'avons pas oublié les horreurs de la guerre, les lourdes pertes occasionnées à nos villages par la guerre. Presque une famille sur deux avait perdu pendant la guerre le père, le fils, ou tout autre proche parent masculin. Les jeunes mutilés ou ceux dont la santé avait été affaiblie pendant la guerre sont nombreux parmi nous. Ils nous rappellent constamment les terribles destructions que la guerre apporte avec elle.

» C'est pourquoi nous avons signé l'Appel de Stockholm. Nous avons pris beaucoup de peine pour la collecte de signatures et nous avons accompli la tâche qui nous a été fixée par notre organisation.

» Nous considérons que l'union et l'action actives des peuples épris de Paix et travaillant pour celle-ci sont capables de détourner les crimes contre l'humanité de ceux qui préparent une nouvelle guerre.

» Nous attendons du IIe Congrès une série de nouvelles mesures susceptibles d'encourager l'action pour la Paix. Les délégués de notre propre pays doivent faire tout leur possible, afin que le Congrès ait le plus grand succès. »

Dans les vœux formulés par les Françaises je ne relèverai que cette simple phrase qui en dit très long dans sa simplicité :

« Notre plus grand désir est de vivre en travaillant. »

Elle est suivie de cent quinze signatures de femmes du Rhône. Et je terminerai par le mandat qu'une mère roumaine, Hélène David, adresse à une compatriote, déléguée au Congrès, Constancia Cracium :

« Camarade Constancia, dites là-bas où vous allez, au Congrès, que je me nomme Hélène David et que j'habite 34, chaussée Jiulesti. J'ai eu un enfant, et la guerre me l'a pris. Je suis restée les mains vides, mais mon cœur est rempli de haine à l'égard de ceux qui veulent la guerre et déborde d'amour pour les enfants qui grandissent sous mes yeux. Il me semble qu'ils sont tous à moi. Il me semble que je dois travailler pour eux. Il me semble que je dois lutter de tout mon cœur avec toutes les autres mères pour défendre la Paix qui assurera le bonheur et la vie de leurs enfants. »

Ce mandat est celui que toutes les mères déposent à ce Congrès.

Travaillons donc, chers amis, pour que les mères n'aient plus à pleurer leurs fils morts à la guerre, pour que les cœurs n'aient plus de haine, mais ne connaissent plus au contraire que la joie merveilleuse d'élever leurs enfants pour le bonheur et pour le progrès.

Vive la Paix !

DEUXIÈME

CONGRÈS MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Pierre COT

(FRANCE)

LA DEFINITION DE L'AGRESSION

Introduction

CE QUE FUT LE IIe CONGRES MONDIAL DE LA PAIX

L'INITIATIVE du Deuxième Congrès Mondial de la Paix fut prise par le Comité émanant du Premier Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, qui eut lieu à Paris, salle Pleyel, en avril 1949.

Le principe de la convocation du Second Congrès Mondial fut adopté en mars 1950, à Stockholm, en même temps que le célèbre Appel contre la Bombe atomique, qui devait recevoir l'approbation signée de plus de 500 millions d'hommes et de femmes par le monde.

Le 16 août 1950, le Bureau du Comité, réuni à Prague, lança des propositions de discussion pour de larges débats publics en vue de la préparation du Congrès qui devait avoir lieu à Sheffield (Grande-Bretagne).

Ces propositions portaient sur les points suivants :

— Interdiction des armes atomiques;
— Réduction des armements;
— Dénonciation de l'agression;
— Solution pacifique du conflit de Corée;
— Interdiction des propagandes de guerre.

Sur la base de ces propositions, se tinrent dans le monde des milliers d'assemblées populaires et de réunions d'organisation, qui discutèrent et élirent, démocratiquement, des délégués.

Le Congrès empêché par les autorités britanniques de se tenir, comme prévu, à Sheffield, à la date du 13 novembre, se transféra à Varsovie, où il siégea du 16 au 22 novembre.

Ces Assises Mondiales rassemblèrent 2.065 délégués et invités de 83 pays. Une discussion large s'ouvrit sur les rapports présentés par le Président JOLIOT-CURIE et le Vice-Président Pietro NENNI.

145 orateurs se succédèrent à la tribune des séances plénières, et des débats importants, auxquels participèrent des centaines de délégués, se poursuivirent dans les sept commissions de travail constituées par des membres des délégations de l'ensemble des pays.

Cette ample et franche discussion aboutit à l'élaboration et au vote démocratiques de dix résolutions importantes ainsi qu'à l'élection d'un Conseil Mondial de la Paix, comprenant 235 représentants, placé sous la Présidence du grand savant Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE.

Ces décisions, mises aux voix, furent adoptées à la presque unanimité des délégués (moins trois abstentions).

Les résolutions adoptées par le Congrès constituent tout un programme, qui trouve son expression dans deux textes fondamentaux : le « Manifeste aux Peuples » et l' « Adresse à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ».

Tous ces actes et résolutions du Congrès auront la force que leur donneront la volonté de Paix et le soutien des peuples. Le Congrès Mondial n'est pas une fin, mais un nouveau départ pour une action plus ample de tous les peuples en faveur de la paix.

PREMIERE SEANCE DU SAMEDI 18 NOVEMBRE 1950

Le Président, M. KUO-MO-JO :
(Chine)

— La parole est à M. Pierre Cot.

M. PIERRE COT
(France)

Monsieur le Président,

Mesdames, Messieurs, chers Amis,

Nous avons entendu hier les magnifiques rapports de notre Président Joliot-Curie et de notre ami Pietro Nenni et je pense que nous approuvons tous, sans réserve, l'argumentation qu'ils nous ont présentée et le programme du travail qu'ils nous ont proposé.

Mais, après ces discours, nous avons écouté également d'autres beaux discours et vous me permettrez de dire que ces discours rendaient tous un peu le même son de cloche et je crois qu'il est grand temps que la discussion commence et que nous puissions confronter, à cette tribune, des thèses différentes. (Applaudissements.)

Cette discussion, en effet, est la principale raison d'être de notre Congrès et de notre venue à Varsovie. Il est naturel que nous ne soyons pas tous d'accord dans cette salle sur des questions posées et peut-être plus encore sur la façon de poser ces questions et de formuler certains jugements.

Il ne pourrait en effet pas en être autrement. Nous venons de pays très différents, nous appartenons à des mouvements et à des partis politiques qui, souvent, sont opposés les uns aux autres.

On trouve parmi nous des admirateurs de la démocratie populaire ; mais on trouve aussi des partisans du capitalisme, des chrétiens convaincus, des athées qui ne le sont pas moins. Dans ces conditions, si nous essayions de masquer ces différences, peut-être pourrions-nous nous faire illusion à nous-mêmes. (Applaudissements.) Mais nous ne tromperions personne et nous ne pourrions pas aboutir au grand rassemblement de tous les hommes et de toutes les femmes pour la Paix et contre la guerre, rassemblement que nous voulons et que nous devons réaliser. C'est en effet la diversité de nos origines et de nos convictions qui fait la force de ce Congrès et qui inquiète nos adversaires, ceux qui prétendent que nous agissons toujours en amis de l'Union Soviétique et en ennemis des Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Ce n'est pas vrai. Cela ne doit pas être vrai. Nous sommes les amis de la Paix et nous sommes les ennemis de la guerre. Cela doit nous suffire. (Applaudissements.)

D'autre part, à cette tribune j'ai entendu à peu près tous les orateurs répéter qu'ils étaient et que nous étions partisans des deux systèmes, des deux régimes. Cette affirmation serait vide de sens si les hommes qui vivent sous les deux régimes et qui n'ont pas à en rougir n'étaient pas capables de confronter ici leurs opinions.

C'est dans la confrontation de ces opinions et par cette confrontation seulement, que nous pourrons arriver à dégager les bases du grand appel à la négociation et au compromis qui doivent servir de fondement à la Paix. Il est bien évident que dans un monde aussi divisé que le nôtre, la Paix doit au moins commencer par des négociations et par des compromis et, pour bien préciser ma pensée, pour mettre peut-être tout à fait à l'aise certains membres de cette audience, je voudrais montrer à nos amis de l'Union Soviétique et des Démocraties Populaires comment, sur certains problèmes particuliers, une grande partie de l'opinion publique dans les pays occidentaux a pu trouver un point de rencontre avec eux sans pour cela faire adopter forcément, d'une manière en quelque sorte mécanique, tous leurs points de vue et tous leurs jugements.

Mes observations porteront sur quatre problèmes :

— l'affaire de Corée;
— la question de la neutralité;
— le problème allemand;
— la question délicate de la définition nécessaire de l'agression.

Prenons tout d'abord l'affaire de Corée. J'ai écouté hier avec beaucoup d'attention et d'intérêt ce qu'en a dit notre ami Fadeev d'Union Soviétique. A nos amis soviétiques et à nos amis des démocraties populaires, cette affaire est apparue dès son origine comme tout à fait claire. Ils ont vu là une agression des Etats-Unis contre un petit peuple héroïque qui ne demandait rien que sa liberté, et notre ami Fadeev semblait indiquer que, sauf peut-être aux Etats-Unis, tous les honnêtes gens souscrivaient à ce jugement.

Je me permets d'indiquer que je ne suis pas tout à fait d'accord avec notre ami Fadeev. Personnellement je souscris sans aucune réserve à son opinion et à son analyse, mais je voudrais que vous vous rendiez compte que beaucoup de nos compatriotes ont éprouvé d'abord quelques hésitations avant de se prononcer, et que ces hésitations ne prouvaient pas forcément qu'ils étaient des agents de l'impérialisme américain, pour employer pendant une minute seulement le langage qui fut parfois tenu avant moi à cette tribune.

Sur quoi pouvaient-ils en effet asseoir leur jugement sinon sur les informations qui nous étaient données ? Mais ces informations, rendez-vous-en compte, étaient de nature telle que ces hommes et ces femmes, n'ayant pas autre chose pour asseoir leur conviction, pouvaient penser légitimement que le gouvernement de la Corée du Nord avait déclenché les hostilités contre la Corée du Sud ; et les premiers succès des armées coréennes en démontrant un grand état de préparation militaire, dont pour ma part je me suis réjoui, rendaient au moins vraisemblable cette opinion première. Et puis, peu à peu, leurs yeux se sont dessillés et ils ont vu clair. C'est le président Truman qui, le premier, les a conduits à réfléchir. Je ne vous propose pas d'envoyer au nom du Congrès un message de félicitations au président Truman, mais il est bien certain qu'il a rendu un grand service à la cause de la Paix et de la vérité lorsqu'il a fait savoir que pour défendre la Corée, il fallait que les Etats-Unis s'intéressent aussi à Formose et à l'Indochine.

Les braves gens dont je vous parle ont été ensuite choqués quand ils ont vu que le Conseil de Sécurité condamnait les Coréens du Nord sans leur donner l'occasion de s'expliquer et, le cas échéant, de se défendre contre les accusations portées contre eux ; car c'est, vous le savez, une règle élémentaire de droit et, ce qui est beaucoup plus important que le droit, c'est un principe élémentaire de bon sens qu'on n'a pas le droit de condamner quelqu'un sans l'avoir entendu, et c'est pourtant ce que les Nations Unies n'ont pas hésité à faire.

Ensuite, quand ces compatriotes, ces braves gens dont je vous parle et dont beaucoup sont dans la salle, ont vu que non seulement les forces des Nations Unies sous le commandement du général Mac Arthur — un autre homme qui a beaucoup contribué à la vérité — se conduisaient en Corée comme les bandits hitlériens l'avaient fait chez nous, mais qu'après avoir reconquis la Corée du Sud pour le compte de M. Syngman Rhee, ses troupes franchissaient le 38e parallèle, ils ont tout à fait compris. Ils ont compris que les défenseurs du droit et de la démocratie, selon les conceptions de Wall Street, se conduisaient à ce moment-là comme de véritables agresseurs. Leurs jugements préalables sur l'affaire de Corée se sont modifiés. Maintenant ils sont d'accord avec nous.

J'ai voulu par cet exemple vous montrer ce qui s'était passé dans l'esprit de ces hommes qui n'avaient pas les mêmes lumières et les mêmes informations que celles que vous pouviez avoir dans les démocraties populaires et les autres pays.

Je vais aborder maintenant un problème délicat et qui est celui de la neutralité. Il existe en Europe occidentale un fort courant en faveur de la neutralité. Je suis bien à mon aise pour vous parler de la neutralité de l'Europe occidentale parce que, par mon tempérament et par conviction, je n'aime ni le mot ni la chose. Mais je dois vous rendre, vous, attentifs à ceci. Si vous voulez que nous puissions en Europe occidentale et peut-être aussi dans d'autres parties du monde élargir notre mouvement, il faut prendre très sérieusement en considération cette question de la neutralité. Nous avons intérêt à la bien connaître. Je pense qu'après avoir touché du doigt son importance, vous me permettrez de conclure que nous avons peut-être intérêt à favoriser son développement.

Pourquoi beaucoup de gens d'Europe occidentale sont-ils partisans de la neutralité ? Est-ce par lâcheté ? Est-ce par refus de prendre parti ou est-ce seulement parce qu'ils refusent de servir d'outil à ceux qui, dans d'autres continents, voudraient bien faire la guerre, mais à condition que leur pays ne soit pas ravagé et que leurs soldats se fassent moins tuer que ceux que la France, l'Allemagne occidentale, l'Angleterre ou la Belgique leur fourniraient ? Le courant en faveur de la neutralité est alors un courant susceptible de rallier dans nos pays beaucoup d'hommes et de femmes qui jusqu'à présent étaient décidés à ne pas joindre les rangs des Partisans de la Paix. Ces hommes et ces femmes sont disposés à se battre pour la neutralité. Ils préfèrent lutter pour la neutralité plutôt que d'être utilisés par les fauteurs de guerre dans une guerre d'agression.

Certains pensent surtout à leur pays. D'autres, tout en étant partisans du régime capitaliste ou tout en ayant même de la sympathie pour le gouvernement des Etats-Unis, sont inquiets du manque d'expérience, de la maladresse qui caractérise sa conduite dans les affaires internationales, et ils craignent que les Etats-Unis les entraînent en quelque sorte malgré eux, jusqu'à un point où ils ne voudraient pas aller. D'autres enfin sont partisans de cette neutralité parce que, à tort ou à raison, ils estiment que pour réussir non pas seulement une coexistence hargneuse en quelque sorte des deux régimes, mais une coexistence harmonieuse des deux régimes, l'Europe occidentale peut jouer un rôle important. Ils sont fiers de la civilisation de leur pays et ils pensent qu'en adoptant cette position de neutralité ils faciliteront la recherche des compromis dont je parlais tout à l'heure.

La position de ces hommes et de ces femmes est extrêmement importante. Supposez, Mesdames et Messieurs, que l'Europe occidentale puisse se rallier dans son comportement à la thèse de la neutralité. Les conséquences de ce ralliement seraient immédiatement : d'abord la dénonciation du Pacte Atlantique, ensuite l'obligation pour ceux qui préparent la guerre de refaire leur plan, de ne plus songer à utiliser, tout au moins dès le début de leurs opérations, la plate-forme occidentale. Cela leur créerait des difficultés supplémentaires, cela demanderait du temps, et gagner du temps c'est souvent gagner du temps pour la Paix. (Applaudissements.)

Voilà la raison pour laquelle, dans l'état politique actuel de l'Europe, la thèse de la neutralité est une contribution extrêmement importante à la cause de la paix. Je me souviens, qu'il me soit permis de le dire, qu'à Stockholm, notre grand ami Pietro Nenni avait fait une observation à laquelle j'ai beaucoup réfléchi : « Si demain nous prenions le pouvoir en Italie — et la question se pose dans les mêmes termes en France, étant donnée la composition politique et sociale de l'Italie ou de la France — la seule position progressiste que nous pourrions adopter au début serait sans doute la position de la neutralité. »

C'est à cette conclusion que nous conduit l'observation de la réalité politique. Voilà la raison pour laquelle, pour ma part et pour tous nos amis de la délégation française, en accord avec eux nous ne refusons pas le concours des partisans de la neutralité, nous appelons à nous les partisans de la neutralité pour défendre la Paix et pour lutter contre la guerre.

Ma troisième observation se rapporte au problème allemand. Je vous dirai que j'ai entendu hier avec beaucoup d'émotion les très nobles paroles qui ont été prononcées par le représentant de la délégation d'Allemagne qui venait, je crois bien, de l'Allemagne orientale.

Parlant en tant que Français et en homme qui a fait toute la guerre, tout au moins de 1914, contre des soldats allemands, je dois dire que je considère qu'il fallait beaucoup de courage à ce délégué pour venir à cette tribune reconnaître, comme il l'a fait avec beaucoup de noblesse, la responsabilité du peuple allemand dans la guerre et dans certains crimes de guerre, et d'autre part pour affirmer au nom de sa délégation qu'il considérait que la frontière entre son pays et la Pologne était une frontière définitive. Nous avons tous salué cet acte de courage et cette contribution des Allemands de l'Allemagne orientale à la grande cause de la Paix. (Applaudissements.)

Mais je voudrais aussi vous dire que si dans mon pays et dans tous les pays d'Europe occidentale nous suivons avec un intérêt passionné les progrès de la démocratie véritable en Allemagne orientale, nous n'en prêtons pas moins un très grand intérêt, et je dirai le même intérêt, aux nouvelles qui nous parviennent de l'Allemagne occidentale.

Excusez-moi de citer encore à titre d'exemple mon propre pays et la presse de mon pays. Dans deux grands journaux français dont l'un est un journal conservateur, pour ne pas dire plus, et l'autre est un journal franchement réactionnaire, — le premier c'est le Monde, le second c'est le Figaro — nous avons vu il y a quelques semaines publier des relations de voyages de journalistes qui s'étaient rendus en Allemagne occidentale, et ces informations, ces enquêtes ont produit en France une très grande impression en raison de ce que nous avons vu à travers ces témoignages d'hommes qui ne sont pas suspects d'être des Partisans de la Paix.

Nous avons vu que dans la jeunesse allemande se manifestaient surtout à l'heure actuelle l'horreur de la guerre et le refus de s'engager dans une armée nouvelle. C'est là un phénomène extrêmement important pour le développement de l'Allemagne de demain et pour la compréhension entre l'Allemagne et ses voisins de l'Occident.

C'est là une nouvelle qui intéresse tous ceux qui, dans le passé, ont eu quelques raisons légitimes, vous le pensez bien, d'avoir quelque inquiétude quand ils voyaient certains frémissements dans le passé de la jeunesse allemande.

De même, nous avons suivi avec beaucoup d'intérêt la position prise par M. Heiman et surtout peut-être encore plus par la position du pasteur Niemöller, et je veux dire à nos amis de l'Europe orientale que nous désirons travailler non seulement avec eux, mais avec ces jeunes Allemands qui ne veulent pas se battre pour l'Amérique, et avec le pasteur Niemöller. (Applaudissements.)

Dans ce courant en faveur de la neutralité qui existe en France (peut-être moins en Belgique ou en Angleterre) et dans cette orientation nouvelle de l'Allemagne, même à l'ouest, je vois pour ma part les bases d'une politique que nous devons développer et qui, par son caractère négatif au début, ensuite par un caractère positif, peut être un facteur très important de paix et d'organisation européenne. Je voudrais alors vous indiquer la position que le petit parti auquel j'appartiens, le parti progressiste, a prise récemment en France sur le problème allemand. Nous avons résumé notre pensée dans les quatre points suivants que je livre à vos méditations.

D'abord, nous pensons que l'Allemagne doit être unie, car nous ne voulons pas aller contre l'histoire. Nous pensons ensuite que l'Allemagne doit être neutralisée. Nous pensons que cette neutralité doit être garantie par les grandes puissances. Nous pensons enfin qu'elle doit être internationalement contrôlée de manière à donner à la fois aux Allemands les garanties qu'ils demandent et la base qui leur est nécessaire pour se réunir et pour devenir un grand peuple pacifique, contrôlée de manière à donner également à toute l'Europe les garanties qu'elle a le droit d'obtenir pour se prémunir contre de nouveaux malheurs qui atteindraient aussi bien les Français que les autres Occidentaux.

Et j'en arrive alors au quatrième point de mon intervention. Je voudrais vous faire des propositions pratiques que je soumettrai par déférence pour les instructions qu'on nous a données au bureau de notre Congrès en demandant que l'on veuille bien les transmettre à la commission compétente.

Il s'agit de l'agression et de la définition de l'agression. Notre président Joliot-Curie, dans son rapport, a dit sur ce point l'essentiel. Je n'ai pas l'intention de revenir sur les arguments qu'il a présentés, mais je voudrais, si vous me le permettez, compléter par quelques observations de caractère un peu technique, un peu juridique, l'exposé d'ensemble qu'il vous a fait.

D'abord, simple observation de fait, l'affaire de Corée, vous le savez, a jeté sur la question de l'agression un coup de projecteur, si vous me permettez cette expression familière. La question de l'agression est désormais posée et posée dans le monde entier. Pour les uns, ceux qui d'après moi sont mal informés, il s'agit d'une agression communiste par la Corée du Nord ; pour les autres, et je me rallie à ce point de vue, il s'agit d'une agression américaine. Mais enfin l'affaire de Corée gravite autour de cette notion d'agression et nous nous apercevons alors combien il est nécessaire, quand nous employons le terme d'agression, que nous parlions de la même chose, d'où la nécessité de définir l'agression.

Il faut arriver à une définition de l'agression. Ce n'est pas chose commode. Il y a dans cette salle des juristes et ils savent combien une telle définition est difficile et peut même être dangereuse. Mais comme vous le savez, la politique est, dit-on, l'art de choisir entre les inconvénients. Je pense quant à moi qu'il y aurait beaucoup plus d'inconvénients à ne pas définir l'agression qu'à la définir imparfaitement.

Comment pouvons-nous définir l'agression ? Je voudrais rappeler un travail extrêmement important qui a été fait il y a environ dix-sept ans, en 1933, à la conférence du désarmement, sur une proposition présentée à cette conférence du désarmement par le délégué de l'Union Soviétique, M. Litvinov. Après des études extrêmement sérieuses auxquelles avaient participé à peu près tous les pays occidentaux, on était arrivé à un projet de convention. Ce projet de convention n'est sans doute pas parfait ; peut-être également convient-il de le modifier pour tenir compte de l'évolution de la situation politique. Mais j'attire l'attention du Congrès sur le grand avantage que nous aurions à le prendre pour point de départ de nos travaux. D'abord parce que, étant paresseux de nature, j'aime beaucoup quand les autres ont déjà fait le travail : cela m'évite d'avoir à le refaire d'une façon complète, mais aussi pour une autre raison plus importante et qui est une raison politique, c'est qu'il serait très difficile à certaines puissances occidentales qui avaient pris en 1933 des positions qui, à ce moment, étaient favorables à la lutte la plus saine contre l'agression, de revenir en arrière aujourd'hui. Et si par conséquent nous pouvons greffer la résolution de notre Congrès sur le projet de convention de 1933, vous voyez quel intérêt nous aurions à le faire.

Après avoir ainsi indiqué l'intérêt politique que nous aurions à nous référer au projet de convention de 1933, je voudrais vous résumer ce projet. Il comportait essentiellement trois points :

Le premier point c'était une définition des différentes occasions des actes d'agression. Je ne veux pas énumérer ces actes. Il y en avait cinq catégories; elles se rattachent toutes à l'idée fort importante que l'agression est une intervention armée d'un Etat dans les affaires d'un autre, mais c'est tout; c'est assez, mais c'est bien plus. L'agression en matière internationale est une affaire entre les Etats. Ce qui est prohibé par le droit international, c'est l'agression d'un Etat contre un autre Etat. C'est la force qui vient de l'extérieur pour imposer une volonté à un Etat déterminé, pour lui voler ses biens, son territoire ou sa liberté.

Mais il est bien évident que lorsqu'à l'intérieur de l'Etat nous avons des phénomènes éruptifs de violence, dans ce cas-là, on ne peut ni ne doit parler d'agression, car les peuples ont le droit chez eux de faire ce qu'ils veulent. (Applaudissements.)

Ils ont le droit légal de renverser leur gouvernement par les procédures légales et ils ont le droit révolutionnaire de renverser ce gouvernement par des moyens révolutionnaires s'ils le veulent. (Applaudissements.)

Je ne supporterais pas que vous applaudissiez la dernière phrase, parce qu'elle n'est pas de moi; elle est à peu près textuellement extraite d'un discours d'un homme qui vivait jadis en Amérique, et qui était le grand républicain Abraham Lincoln. (Applaudissements.)

Et lorsque le président Truman nous paraît appliquer aujourd'hui une autre doctrine, nous avons très envie de lui conseiller, lorsqu'il aura quelque loisir sur son yacht le Potomac, de relire le discours de Lincoln ; de songer également que, si à une certaine période de l'histoire, des hommes, qui étaient des colons sur la terre d'Amérique, n'avaient pas pris le droit de se dresser contre l'Angleterre, il n'y aurait pas aujourd'hui de République des Etats-Unis d'Amérique pour vouloir empêcher d'autres peuples de conquérir leur liberté. Je demande respectueusement aux délégués des Etats-Unis de nous pardonner et de pardonner aux malheureux Coréens ou à tous les hommes de la terre, s'ils ont pris cette leçon des pères de la révolution américaine, mais ils sont bien décidés à l'appliquer envers et contre tous. (Applaudissements.)

Et dans la seconde partie à laquelle j'arrive maintenant, la Convention de 1933 précisait d'ailleurs ces points en déclarant de la manière la plus exacte que la situation existant à l'intérieur d'un Etat, désordres ou troubles, ne pouvait permettre à un autre

Etat de lancer ses forces contre lui. Cela a été dit de la manière la plus nette par la Convention de 1933. Là encore nous avons intérêt à nous référer à ce précédent.

En effet, si vous regardez l'Histoire — et je pense notamment à certaines pages que je ne trouve pas très belles de l'histoire de mon pays ou de la Grande-Bretagne — vous verrez que toujours, lorsque les Etats colonisateurs ont conquis leurs colonies, ils ont donné comme prétexte à leur intervention et à leur agression armée le désordre qui existait dans les pays qu'ils pensaient conquérir. (Applaudissements.) C'est toujours pour « rétablir l'ordre », même chez vous, chers amis algériens, qu'on sacrifie la liberté, et il est bon que nous rappelions sur ce point les principes du droit et que, non seulement nous les rappelions et que nous les appliquions chez nous, mais aussi qu'on les applique partout dans le monde.

Le troisième point de ma proposition est qu'il faut une procédure qui permette de constater les agressions. Là encore la Convention de 1933 nous offre un précédent important, et dans la proposition qui sera déposée au Bureau vous trouverez cette affirmation dont je parlais tout à l'heure, à savoir que, lorsqu'on accuse quelqu'un d'une agression il faut le prouver avant de prendre des sanctions contre lui, et que l'on n'a pas le droit d'affirmer, mais qu'il faut prouver.

Par métier je suis juriste, j'aime beaucoup les preuves; je dirai très humblement que j'attends encore que les Américains, et notamment le président Truman, nous apportent les preuves qu'ils auraient dû produire devant la conscience internationale avant de lancer sur la Corée les bombardiers et les lance-flammes du général Mac Arthur. (Applaudissements.)

Voilà, mes chers amis, les trois points précis : définition de l'agression comme l'usage de la force dans les relations internationales, c'est-à-dire entre les Etats et non pas à l'intérieur les Etats ; précaution prise pour que, si l'on se dresse contre l'agression, on n'empêche pas les peuples de disposer d'eux-mêmes, par tous les moyens qui sont en leur pouvoir, moyens légaux s'ils le peuvent, moyens révolutionnaires si c'est nécessaire; et enfin procédure de constatation donnant à tous les peuples, et notamment aux petits peuples, les garanties dont ils ont besoin, avant de voir déclencher contre eux un mécanisme de sanctions qui, dans le cas présent, permettez-moi de le dire, apparaissent non pas comme des sanctions destinées à rétablir le droit, mais comme un prétexte permettant à certains pays de conquérir les bases pour des opérations ultérieures qui peuvent satisfaire la vanité des généraux et que les peuples ont le droit et le devoir de dénoncer.

En terminant, permettez-moi de vous dire quelque chose de très simple et presque de très banal. J'ai voulu discuter à cette tribune des problèmes afin que nous sortions — ce n'est pas une critique à ceux qui ont parlé avant moi — des discours académiques, pour entrer dans les discussions qui sont nécessaires.

J'ai rempli le rôle souvent un peu ingrat de l'avocat du diable, mais je crois qu'il est bon que nous discutions, que nous confrontions nos idées, que nous arrivions à être d'accord, mais après discussion, comme il convient à des hommes libres. On parle beaucoup, vous le savez, du rideau de fer, et je pense que ceux qui pour la première fois sont venus en Europe orientale se sont aperçu que matériellement le rideau de fer n'existe pas.

Mais ne nous faisons pas d'illusions, il existe, et non pas seulement entre les deux parties du monde, mais dans tous les pays, un rideau de calomnies, de préjugés que nous devons également déchirer et supprimer. Nous devons inviter les hommes et les femmes de bonne volonté qui ne pensent pas comme nous à venir discuter avec nous. Nous devons tenir compte de leurs positions, même quand elles sont fausses, de leurs impressions ou de leurs préjugés. Nous ferons le monde avec des hommes et des femmes tels qu'ils sont, et non pas tels que nous voudrions qu'ils soient (Applaudissements), et si nous arrivons à faire cette large concentration nous trouverons un terrain d'entente.

Alors je souhaite qu'un jour vienne où ce ne seront pas seulement les exclus de Sheffield ou les gens qui, par miracle, ont pu obtenir des passeports qui viendront à Varsovie, mais tous les hommes et toutes les femmes du monde, qui verront tout à la fois ses ruines qui proclament l'horreur de la guerre, et tous ces nouveaux bâtiments qui sont l'espoir de l'avenir.

Le jour où tous les hommes et toutes les femmes, même d'Amérique, pourront venir, même avec le président Truman, à Varsovie, croyez-moi, tous ces hommes et toutes ces femmes diront : « Nous nous étions trompés. » Et, voyant l'effort admirable du peuple polonais, ils commenceront par l'aimer et permettez à un homme qui n'est plus jeune de vous le dire : aimer les hommes c'est la meilleure façon de les comprendre. (Le Congrès, debout, applaudit Pierre Cot.)

DEUXIÈME

CONGRÈS MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX

VARSOVIE 16-22 NOVEMBRE 1950

Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE

DISCOURS D'OUVERTURE ET RAPPORT

PREMIERE SEANCE, JEUDI 16 NOVEMBRE 1950 (19 H. 30)

Le Président : FRÉDÉRIC JOLIOT-CURIE :

« JE DECLARE OUVERT LE 2e CONGRES MONDIAL DES PARTISANS DE LA PAIX »

Excellence, Mesdames, Messieurs, Chers amis,

Je voudrais tout d'abord vous apporter le salut du Comité du Premier Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix et vous souhaiter en son nom la bienvenue.

En voyant cette salle magnifique, si rapidement organisée, et après tous les témoignages d'affection que nous avons déjà reçus, j'exprime, sans aucun doute, votre pensée à tous, en remerciant chaleureusement le Gouvernement Polonais et la Présidence de la ville de Varsovie, le Comité des Partisans de la Paix Polonais.

Je suis convaincu, chers délégués et invités, d'être l'interprète des millions et des millions d'hommes et de femmes épris de paix, de la foule immense des Partisans de la Paix en vous exprimant notre reconnaissance d'avoir consenti avec tant de compréhension et d'énergie à faire les efforts nécessaires aux divers et grands déplacements qui nous furent imposés ; cela prouve que nous avons tous ici le sens précis de nos responsabilités et que rien ne peut nous arrêter pour le manifester.

Mais il me faut dire, tout de suite, combien ces efforts ont été rendus plus aisés grâce aux initiatives extraordinairement efficaces de nos amis Tchécoslovaques et Polonais. Si le transfert de 2.000 délégués et invités s'est effectué sans heurts, sans erreurs, si des solutions furent rapidement trouvées pour surmonter les nombreuses difficultés, si nos amis Polonais ont réussi l'étonnant exploit d'installer ce Congrès en trois jours, c'est parce que tous les citoyens de ces pays et leurs gouvernements en tête, sont profondément attachés à la grande cause de la Paix que nous défendons. Je tiens, en votre nom à tous, au nom de tous les Partisans de la Paix, à leur adresser le témoignage de notre admiration et de notre vive reconnaissance. Ce sont les mêmes sentiments que nous adressons à notre Secrétaire général, Jean LAFFITTE, au secrétariat, pour le succès avec lequel ils ont assuré une tâche particulièrement difficile.

Mais je voudrais maintenant saluer ici les membres du Comité préparatoire britannique. Je veux leur dire combien nous avons apprécié leur dévouement, la ténacité avec laquelle ils ont tenté de surmonter les difficultés que dressait sur leur chemin un gouvernement sans doute déjà décidé à falsifier ou à rendre impossible notre Congrès. Nous imaginons l'indignation, la douleur qui s'est emparée de nos amis britanniques lorsqu'ils constatèrent que le gouvernement de leur pays, démasquant brutalement ses intentions, interdisait en fait la tenue en Grande-Bretagne du 2e Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix.

Chers amis Britanniques, nous vous apportons le témoignage de notre reconnaissance. Soyez bien convaincus que vos efforts n'auront pas été vains. Votre indignation, notre indignation, est celle de tous les honnêtes gens qui considèrent la Paix comme un bien suprême.

L'éclatant succès du meeting de protestation que vous avez tenu à Sheffield est une preuve que le peuple anglais ne s'associe pas aux mesures prises par son gouvernement.

En fait, ces mesures, en suscitant dans le monde l'étonnement et l'indignation, auront un effet contraire à celui qu'escomptaient ceux qui les provoquèrent et ceux qui les ont prises. En voulant étouffer la voix de la Paix, ils ont exalté l'énergie de ceux qui luttent pour imposer la Paix et éclairer quantité d'hommes et de femmes qui, hier encore, hésitaient, et qui, aujourd'hui, viendront rallier la foule des Partisans de la Paix.

Certes, nous regrettons sincèrement qu'il nous ait été interdit de pouvoir parler librement de la Paix dans une ville anglaise, mais si le lieu d'un Congrès a une importance, nous savons que ce qui est fondamental est ce qu'on y débat et ce qu'on y décide. Rien ne peut empêcher les idées fécondes de vérité, de justice et de paix, de franchir les frontières et de se répandre dans le monde.

Et c'est le même Congrès qui devait se tenir à Sheffield qui se tient ces jours-ci à Varsovie.

Il ne tenait qu'au gouvernement anglais que ce fût à Sheffield qu'échut l'honneur d'être le siège d'un tel Congrès.

C'est l'honneur du gouvernement Polonais d'avoir permis qu'il se déroule dans sa capitale.

Il ne fait aucun doute que le succès éclatant du transfert de notre Congrès à Varsovie constitue en lui-même un acte d'une grande portée internationale.

Il est un exemple concret de la force que nous représentons. Celle qui concentre et rend agissantes les aspirations des peuples épris de Paix.

Notre Congrès suscite en ce moment dans le monde un intérêt majeur. Vos travaux auront pour objet de rendre plus efficace encore la force que nous représentons en vue d'en faire l'instance internationale la plus haute capable d'imposer la volonté des peuples chaque fois que les organismes chargés de son maintien failliront à leur tâche.

Telles devraient être nos ambitions en ouvrant ce Congrès.

DEUXIEME SEANCE, VENDREDI 17 NOVEMBRE 1950

La Présidente, MADAME COTTON :

La parole est à :

M. Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE

C'EST, il y a un peu plus de dix-huit mois, le 20 avril 1949, que se réunissait à Paris le premier Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix.

Je ne veux pas ici entrer dans le détail de ce qui a été réalisé depuis ce moment, mais en traçant les grandes lignes je tenterai de discerner les leçons qui orienteront nos délibérations ici et nos actions dans nos pays respectifs quand nous nous serons séparés.

Mais je voudrais tout d'abord dire, au nom du Comité, avec quel enthousiasme, quelle persévérance et quelle valeur notre Secrétaire général, le Secrétariat et le personnel attaché à notre siège central ont assumé leurs responsabilités et combien nous devons les féliciter et leur témoigner notre reconnaissance.

Il me faut aussi souligner les grands efforts faits pour publier et améliorer sans cesse notre Revue des Partisans de la Paix et féliciter les divers rédacteurs à qui incombe cette tâche difficile, et notamment notre ami Claude Morgan.

Devant un danger de conflit mondial qui se manifestait si paradoxalement quelques années à peine après la cessation des hostilités, il était urgent de rassembler les forces qui, dans le monde, étaient susceptibles de s'opposer à la catastrophe.

Nous devions, sans nous laisser le moins du monde décourager par les échecs d'efforts qui ont précédé la deuxième guerre mondiale, tenir compte de l'expérience acquise, appeler à lutter pour la paix les hommes et les femmes innombrables qui ne veulent pas revoir les désastres de la guerre; et au premier rang de ceux-ci, ceux qui avaient lutté, ceux qui avaient souffert.

Des millions d'hommes, ceux qui sont entraînés dans les guerres, qui font effectivement les guerres, qui souffrent de la guerre et sans le consentement desquels la guerre ne serait pas possible, se sentaient, devant cette menace, isolés et impuissants — en leur donnant la possibilité de se rassembler, en provoquant leur réflexion, leur action, nous voulions rompre cet isolement et leur donner conscience de leur force.

Nous n'avons pas encore réussi à écarter le spectre de la guerre, mais je ne crois pas exagéré de dire qu'un très important mouvement a été déclenché et que, si nous le voulons, avec suffisamment de clairvoyance, de courage et de persévérance, il s'amplifiera de telle sorte que l'angoisse d'une mort collective sera éliminée de nos consciences.

En analysant les événements qui se sont succédés depuis ce premier Congrès, il est impossible de ne pas voir que les idées développées dans le Manifeste étaient bien celles qu'il convenait de mettre en œuvre, et nous aurons intérêt, dans les débats qui vont s'ouvrir tout à l'heure, à nous y reporter.

Ne devons-nous pas, comme en avril 1949, nous affirmer « contre le fardeau écrasant des charges militaires responsables de la misère des peuples » ?

Ne devons-nous pas « nous dresser contre toutes les entreprises qui, pour ouvrir les voies à la guerre, s'acharnent à restreindre, puis à supprimer les libertés démocratiques » ?

Ne devons-nous pas « réduire à l'impuissance les propagandes qui disposent l'esprit public à la guerre » et « condamner le bellicisme hystérique, la prédication de la haine des races » ?

L'appel des initiateurs du premier Congrès avait été entendu, et des représentants venant de soixante-douze nations se réunirent salle Pleyel à Paris.

L'action définie par le Manifeste, dont je viens de citer quelques extraits, a été menée partout dans le monde, et nous avons vu se rassembler tous ceux qui comprennent la gravité du danger de guerre et qui acceptent pour conjurer celui-ci de baser leur action sur ces principes généraux.

Ce Manifeste devait nous permettre, et nous a, en fait, permis de nous adresser à tous ceux qui désirent sincèrement la paix.

Ce Manifeste était et reste le témoignage de notre sincère désir de paix et que c'est uniquement pour la paix que nous agissons, sans vouloir en aucune manière nous faire les champions d'un régime politique ou économique particulier.

On pouvait déjà, en avril 1949, nous juger sur ce Manifeste.

On peut aujourd'hui nous juger beaucoup mieux sur nos actes.

Le Premier Congrès Mondial avait confié à un Comité élu, composé de 140 personnalités, la charge de mettre en œuvre ses décisions, et j'eus le très grand honneur d'en être élu président.

A Rome, fin octobre 1949, le Comité dressait un premier bilan. Depuis le Congrès, la République Démocratique allemande avait été proclamée, la Chine s'était libérée et, dans le monde entier, le 2 octobre 1949 avait été une grande journée de la paix.

Après avoir pris acte à Rome de l'action entreprise et de ses résultats, le Comité que le Congrès avait élu à Paris constatait qu'il était maintenant suffisamment soutenu par l'opinion publique pour pouvoir s'adresser directement aux Assemblées et aux Gouvernements qui ont la responsabilité politique dans les divers pays. Des « propositions pour la paix » furent élaborées et publiées et, dans un grand nombre de pays, des délégations importantes par leur nombre et par leur composition les transmirent aux autorités responsables. Toutes ces délégations ne furent pas reçues. Des délégations furent reçues et leurs propositions écartées. Dans d'autres cas enfin ces propositions de paix furent approuvées et acceptées.

Ce premier sondage, ce premier appel aux dirigeants a eu une grande valeur pour l'information des citoyens de tous les pays et nous a également fourni des indications souvent précieuses sur l'attitude des gouvernements.

Cependant, tandis que le rassemblement et l'organisation des forces de paix se poursuit dans le monde, la « guerre froide » se durcit.

Dans cette atmosphère d'inquiétude générale se produisent, en novembre 1949, des « indiscrétions » sur la bombe à hydrogène. En février 1950 le Président des États-Unis d'Amérique rend publique sa décision relative à la mise en fabrication de cet engin. Je ne voudrais, sur ce sujet, que vous demander de méditer à nouveau les avertissements lancés au monde le 13 février 1950 par le plus grand savant de notre temps, Albert Einstein. J'en extrais les phrases suivantes :

> » Si ce but est atteint, l'empoisonnement de l'atmosphère par la radio-activité et, par suite, la destruction de toute vie sur terre, est entrée dans le domaine des possibilités techniques. Tout semble s'enchaîner dans ce sinistre déroulement des événements. Chaque pas apparaît comme la conséquence inévitable de celui qui l'a précédé. Au bout du chemin se profile de plus en plus distinctement le spectre de l'anéantissement général. »

Il était plus que jamais devenu nécessaire d'agir. Notre Comité, réuni à Stockholm, constata que les problèmes posés par la défense de la paix sont multiples et complexes.

C'est parce qu'elles voulaient embrasser les principaux aspects de ce problème que les « propositions de Rome », dont il n'est pas question de mettre en cause l'exactitude ni la portée, n'avaient pas eu dans le monde tout le retentissement souhaitable.

La marche vers une paix stable doit se faire par étapes, et les objectifs à atteindre successivement doivent être simples. C'est progressivement que le problème de la paix sera compris et senti par tous, et c'est progressivement que s'établira la confiance internationale sans laquelle la paix n'est pas possible.

C'est l'avènement progressif de cette confiance mutuelle qui rendra plus aisée la solution des problèmes.

Il fallait donc poser le problème le plus clair et le plus urgent.

Il existait, — et, nous devons le reconnaître, il existe encore, en dépit de notre action, un danger majeur pour l'humanité : les armes atomiques et autres armes de destruction en masse.

Ces armes atomiques ce sont précisément celles qui sont considérées dans la résolution prise le 27 décembre 1945 à Moscou par les trois Ministres des Affaires Etrangères, MM. Bevin, Byrnes et Molotov. Cette résolution demandait notamment à la Commission qui devait être créée à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de formuler des propositions spécifiques pour l'élimination des armements nationaux des armes atomiques et de toutes les autres armes majeures susceptibles de provoquer des destructions en masse.

Il fallait en demander l'interdiction en même temps qu'il convenait d'exiger que fussent mises en œuvre les mesures indispensables de contrôle à la fois international et rigoureux qui s'assureraient du respect des engagements souscrits. Il fallait enfin, se basant sur la jurisprudence internationale que constituent les jugements de Nuremberg, caractériser le crime du gouvernement qui violerait ces engagements.

C'est ainsi que, le 19 mars 1950, le Comité lançait l'Appel de Stockholm qui, en plus des trois idées fondamentales que je viens de rappeler, faisait « appel à tous les hommes de bonne volonté dans le monde ».

Cet appel a été entendu, les centaines de millions de signatures qui ont été recueillies et auxquelles d'autres millions de signatures s'ajouteront, devront absolument s'ajouter demain, en sont le témoignage.

Dans de nombreux pays les gouvernements et la presse ont d'abord fait le silence complet sur cet appel. Mais cette attitude n'a pu être que temporaire, car la pression de l'opinion publique s'est manifestée. Au mépris, à l'ignorance, a succédé la colère.

Des chefs d'Etat, des présidents du Conseil et des ministres se sont cru finalement obligés de prendre la parole publiquement dans leur pays et même à la tribune de l'Organisation des Nations

Unies pour combattre ces idées simples. Examinez objectivement les arguments mis en avant et vous pourrez vous convaincre une fois de plus que nous avions vu juste.

C'est également ce que prouvent des résolutions prises indépendamment de nous, mais dans le même sens, par des groupements d'hommes ou par des organisations telles que la Croix Rouge Internationale, les Quakers et de nombreuses autorités religieuses ou ecclésiastiques.

Sur les propositions simples et claires formulées à Stockholm, une consultation populaire sans précédent s'est instituée.

Je voudrais dire ici qu'on ne rendra jamais suffisamment hommage aux femmes et aux hommes de bonne volonté qui, dans tous les pays, sont allés trouver individuellement leurs concitoyens pour leur parler de ces problèmes, entendre leurs objections, répondre à leurs questions, réfuter leurs erreurs et prendre note de leurs suggestions.

Grâce à eux, partout, dans les villes et dans les campagnes, dans les logements privés, dans les lieux de réunion publics, dans les usines, aux champs, dans les trains, les navires et les avions, la question a été posée et débattue : Doit-on interdire l'usage des armes atomiques ?

Le seul fait que des milliers d'hommes se soient posé la question ne permet plus d'éluder le problème et oblige à tenir compte des opinions formulées. Maintenant ceux qui se posent ou se poseront la question de savoir s'ils vont ou non faire usage de la bombe atomique ne devront plus seulement analyser des rapports d'experts militaires et se préoccuper de considérations tactiques ou stratégiques. Ils ne peuvent plus ignorer que leur décision sera examinée par des millions d'hommes et de femmes qui pourraient bien un jour devenir des juges.

J'ai la ferme conviction que nous parviendrons, au prix encore d'un effort immense et soutenu, à sauver la paix. J'ai aussi la conviction que de cette immense œuvre collective, nos messagers de la paix ont accompli la tâche la plus rude et la plus efficace.

Je suis certain d'être votre interprète à tous en les assurant de notre profonde reconnaissance.

Cette large consultation populaire internationale a amené ceux qui y ont pris part à examiner des problèmes qu'ils ne soupçonnaient parfois pas, à réfléchir sur l'efficacité des mesures proposées, à se demander si, bien que nécessaires, ces mesures étaient suffisantes.

Et, par un retour naturel des choses, grâce aux divers mouvements nationaux, les préoccupations qui s'étaient manifestées sont parvenues à votre Bureau, et ce dernier a cru les traduire correctement en formulant à Prague, le 18 août 1950, les propositions pour la convocation du second Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix.

Dès que l'Appel de Stockholm eut été proclamé nous avons vu nos messagers de la paix aller de foyer en foyer, appeler l'attention et demander à tous les citoyens de prendre leurs responsabilités.

Les consciences se sont émues. Beaucoup ont commencé à réaliser simultanément qu'un grand danger les menaçait et qu'il leur était possible d'agir pour éloigner puis supprimer ce danger. Et ces citoyens sont venus dans des assemblées de discussion rejoindre des concitoyens avec lesquels, il y a seulement quelques mois, l'idée ne leur serait pas venue d'amorcer le dialogue. Dans ces assemblées populaires, les questions posées et les solutions suggérées à Prague ont été soigneusement examinées et débattues. C'est en conclusion de ces assemblées, puis des Assises, que vous avez été désignés pour venir ici discuter des moyens propres à faire reculer la guerre. Dans les résolutions dont vous êtes porteurs figurent certainement des idées analogues à celles que le Comité avait mises en avant à Rome, puis à Prague. Il en est d'autres sans doute, et nous devrons faire la synthèse de tout cela.

Mais cette brève histoire de notre mouvement en montre le caractère et le fonctionnement démocratique, et je pense que cet exemple aurait intérêt à être suivi dans d'autres instances internationales.

Ce deuxième Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix rassemble des délégués représentant des hommes et des femmes en nombre beaucoup plus grand que notre premier Congrès, dont les confessions, les opinions, les activités sont les plus diverses. Notre mouvement, déjà très large dès son origine, s'est considérablement accru et étendu.

Nous ne sommes sans doute pas ici d'accord sur tous les problèmes, et nos conceptions politiques, éthiques ou philosophiques peuvent être différentes. Nous sommes cependant persuadés de la nécessité qu'il y a à nous réunir pour discuter ensemble et pour trouver ensemble les moyens d'empêcher un nouveau conflit armé.

De très nombreux problèmes ont été abordés dans les Assemblées de discussion que je rappelais à l'instant, et sans vouloir les aborder tous ni les traiter de manière exhaustive, je voudrais simplement en mentionner quelques-uns.

Il existe, depuis que l'opinion publique dans tous les pays du monde a sanctionné l'Appel de Stockholm, une pression importante en faveur de l'interdiction des armes atomiques.

Vous connaissez certainement tous les arguments qui militent en faveur de cette mesure internationale qui retirerait des inquiétudes qui pèsent sur les relations entre les peuples, la hantise de l'agression atomique avec ses horribles conséquences.

Il ne suffit pas de dire que cet appel est « frauduleux » ou qu'il a été « approuvé derrière le rideau de fer » pour enlever leur valeur aux raisons qui ont imposé la logique de l'Appel de Stockholm. Et d'ailleurs nombreux sont les signataires de cet appel qui n'avaient et qui n'ont toujours pas de sympathie particulière pour les régimes de démocratie populaire. Mais ces citoyens ont simplement examiné les données intrinsèques du problème, et ils ont répondu en leur âme et conscience. C'est ce que nous devons tous faire, pour toutes les questions, et nous nous apercevrons que, d'avoir abandonné les exclusives, d'avoir rejeté les refus à priori, nous permettra d'obtenir des solutions constructives et unanimes dans un grand nombre de cas.

Comme je le disais il y a un instant, nous continuerons à réclamer l'interdiction des armes atomiques.

Lorsque l'honorable Premier Ministre du Royaume Uni veut assimiler cette requête aux plaintes ridicules et inefficaces de ceux qui, au Moyen Age, auraient voulu conserver la licence de piller et de voler, il omet de mentionner que tous les gouvernements, celui de son pays en particulier, ont signé des conventions internationales interdisant l'utilisation des gaz de combat et des armes bactériologiques. Pas plus que ces dernières armes, les bombes à plutonium, à uranium 235 ou à hydrogène ne peuvent être considérées et tolérées comme constituant des armes défensives.

Le physicien américain J.-R. Oppenheimer, le principal constructeur de la bombe atomique, n'a-t-il pas déclaré dès 1947 que :

> « le schéma général pour l'utilisation des armes atomiques a été établi à Hiroshima. Ce sont des armes d'agression, de surprise et de terreur ».

Il est exact que dans la série des opérations industrielles qui se déroulent entre l'exploitation des mines d'uranium et la mise en marche des grands réacteurs nucléaires, rien ne permet à priori de discerner des intentions pacifiques ou agressives. Il en est de même dans la grande industrie chimique où le chlore et le phosgène continuent à être produits — et c'est heureux — en dépit de l'interdiction qui les frappe — comme gaz de combat. D'où la nécessité d'un contrôle international rigoureux, exercé partout par un personnel spécialisé, d'allégeance internationale. Et il est simplement contraire à la vérité de dire comme l'a fait M. le Premier Ministre Attlee, après beaucoup d'autres, que nous réclamions un contrôle qui « opérerait seulement dans les pays libres, mais n'apporterait aucune restriction dans les Etats totalitaires ». Je me refuse ici à commenter l'emploi des expressions « pays totalitaires » et « états libres ».

Et lorsque ces notions sont admises il est parfaitement normal — et indispensable — de qualifier comme nous l'avons fait le gouvernement qui, le premier, utiliserait les armes atomiques.

Les répercussions de la libération de l'énergie nucléaire sur les relations entre les Nations étaient prévisibles, et elles ont été senties et formulées par de nombreux scientifiques bien avant que la décision n'ait été prise d'utiliser deux bombes atomiques en août 1945. Cette décision, que certains ont sûrement recommandée de bonne foi, a été pour le moins une tragique erreur, et nous souffrons encore du choc qui a été produit.

Le président Romulo avait proposé, pour sortir de l'impasse diplomatique, un armistice atomique de courte durée; d'autres ont repris une idée formulée par un grand expert atomiste, Szilard, en juin 1945, et qui tendait, devant l'impossibilité probable d'arriver à un accord sur le contrôle, d'organiser en quelque sorte un moratoire de l'utilisation de l'énergie atomique. J'ai mentionné, à titre indicatif, ces deux idées, bien que la seconde, celle du plan dit zéro-zéro, représente une inadmissible abdication du citoyen devant le problème de l'utilisation pacifique de progrès scientifiques. Adopter une telle attitude serait l'aveu du manque de confiance dans l'entendement humain et créerait un précédent dangereux. Ce serait un recul de la civilisation. On mesure mieux ce que serait cet abandon, même provisoire, lorsqu'on connaît les immenses possibilités et le potentiel de bien-être que peut donner l'énergie atomique.

Au contraire, si nous supposons l'accord réalisé sur l'interdiction et sur les voies du contrôle international, toutes les nations se verraient informées des activités des autres dans le développement des applications de l'énergie atomique et également des progrès de la science nucléaire. Le secret, si néfaste en matière scientifique et cause des suspicions conduisant à la course aux armements, serait enfin banni pour le plus grand profit de tous.

Il est absolument fondamental que les négociations internationales reprennent sur ce problème-clef de l'énergie atomique, et notre Congrès devra rechercher toutes les suggestions qui pourraient permettre d'arriver à un accord.

Ce problème était évidemment le plus urgent, il s'attaquait à la menace la plus directe et la plus grave, puisqu'elle peut mettre en cause les possibilités de vie sur notre planète. Il n'en faudra pas moins qu'en adoptant une position aussi forte et qu'il faudra encore renforcer, nous ne pouvons ni ne devons ne pas nous préoccuper des immenses dangers que présentent les autres armes et que les destructions de la dernière guerre ont laissé présents à tous les esprits.

Vous aurez donc également à examiner dans quelles conditions pourrait être obtenue la réduction générale et contrôlée des armements de toute nature.

Il est clair, ainsi que nous l'avons proclamé à Prague, que l'accroissement des armements aggrave le danger de guerre et impose aux peuples les plus lourds sacrifices. Nous savons fort bien que l'euphorie économique qui accompagne parfois le début d'une course aux armements n'est que factice et temporaire et que si des profits importants sont distribués à une petite minorité, l'immense majorité des citoyens éprouve bientôt une diminution appréciable de son niveau d'existence. Il est impossible de consacrer des centaines de millions d'heures de travail à des tâches improductives sans que les biens de consommation ne se raréfient.

La thèse qui semble prévaloir depuis quelques mois et que de nombreux discours officiels précisent outre-Atlantique est que des conversations sur le désarmement ou sur toute autre question ne seront possibles que lorsque l'équilibre des forces armées sera rétabli. Et au nom de cette nécessité, sans qu'ait été défini le critérium de cet équilibre, le monde s'engage dès maintenant dans une politique de production d'armements dont nous connaissons tous les dangers.

Il me paraît que la discussion, au contraire, serait infiniment plus facile, plus fructueuse si elle s'engageait avant qu'une longue course aux armements n'ait avivé les craintes, développé les suspicions et aggravé la peur réciproque.

Décider tout d'abord une réduction des armements constitue la première étape vers un désarmement général : une telle décision étant acceptée, sa mise en vigueur ne devient possible qu'après un recensement des armes existantes, y compris les armes atomiques, et un contrôle international permanent de l'exécution des décisions prises. Ce processus aura pour effet, en donnant à chacun des informations contrôlées de la situation chez l'autre, d'éviter les hypothèses alarmantes et les appréhensions. Il est dans le sens du rétablissement de la confiance, de la détente internationale et se traduirait immédiatement par un grand allégement des charges budgétaires de tous les pays.

Tout ceci suppose naturellement que soit prohibée l'arme d'agression type, l'arme atomique, qui posséderait autrement pendant cette période intermédiaire une valeur potentielle terriblement accrue.

Là encore nous retrouvons intimement mêlés les problèmes de réduction des armements et de mise hors la loi des armes atomiques.

Attendre d'être assez armé avant d'envisager de discuter, c'est d'abord rendre un hommage, involontaire sans doute, au partenaire qui, disposant d'une grande marge de supériorité, n'en a pas profité pour imposer sa loi au monde. C'est aussi courir plus tard le risque de se croire, pour un intervalle de temps très court, dans un état de supériorité tel qu'il vous permette de poser, sous forme d'ultimatum, des conditions inacceptables et ainsi provoquer la guerre qu'on se flattait de vouloir éviter et que l'atmosphère de suspicion, que la psychose de guerre entraînées par la course aux armements auront rendu presque inévitable.

Cette atmosphère de suspicion n'est d'ailleurs pas créée sans arrière-pensée.

Le prétexte de la menace d'une agression permet de trouver les armes de la répression sociale. Il permet d'éliminer, en les traitant de criminels, d'incendiaires ou de traîtres, ceux qui ne commettent d'autre crime que de s'élever contre l'injustice sociale et de dénoncer les dangers — et les profits particuliers — de la course aux armements.

Cette attitude odieuse et pleine de périls pour la paix devrait révolter toutes les consciences honnêtes. Nous l'avons dénoncée, nous continuerons de le faire, et c'est ce qui explique en partie les attaques et les injures dont nous avons été l'objet.

L'accumulation des stocks de bombes atomiques, des chars, des avions, des canons mènerait, si l'on en croit M. Winston Churchill, à une paix d'un genre particulier : « la paix par la terreur mutuelle ».

Une expérience millénaire a cependant démenti ce pronostic, et le délégué de la Belgique à l'Organisation des Nations Unies rappelait fort opportunément, le 4 novembre 1949, quelques lignes du livre écrit au soir de sa vie par un ministre des Affaires étrangères du Royaume Uni, Sir Edward Grey, qui avait en particulier la responsabilité de la politique étrangère de l'Angleterre en août 1914 :

Chaque mesure prise par une nation est notée et conduit à des contre-mesures chez les autres.

» L'accroissement des armements, qui est destiné dans chaque nation à produire un sentiment de puissance, de sécurité, ne produit pas ces effets; il développe la conscience de la puissance des autres Etats et un sentiment de peur. La peur engendre la suspicion, la défiance, et des imaginations mauvaises de toutes sortes, jusqu'à ce que chaque gouvernement sente qu'il serait criminel, que ce serait une trahison pour son propre pays de ne pas prendre toutes les précautions. Cependant chaque gouvernement considère chaque précaution de tout autre gouvernement comme une preuve d'intentions hostiles. »

Et Sir Edward Grey termine par ce verdict :

« L'énorme accroissement des armements en Europe, le sentiment d'insécurité et de peur causé par eux, c'est cela qui a rendu la guerre inévitable.

» Telle est, à mon avis, la véridique interprétation de l'histoire et la leçon que le présent doit apprendre du passé dans l'intérêt de la paix future, l'avertissement que nous devons transmettre à ceux qui viendront après nous. »

Comment ne pas mettre en parallèle avec les dangers de cet énorme accroissement des armements tout ce que la science et la technique permettraient de donner à l'humanité si on les appliquait pour la paix. L'effort de guerre poursuivi pendant un seul mois, comme l'a mentionné récemment Arnold Zweig, permettrait par exemple d'irriguer le Sahara et d'accroître ainsi considérablement la production agricole du globe.

Notre humanité est encore décimée par de grands fléaux comme la tuberculose et le cancer.

Pourquoi ne pas organiser la lutte contre ces fléaux à l'échelle, par exemple, de ce qui a été fait pour produire les bombes atomiques ou les autres armes de destruction. Les recherches dans ces domaines sont assez avancées pour que la victoire soit certaine au bout d'un tel effort.

Cette victoire-là ne vaut-elle pas de provoquer les enthousiasmes ? Ne mériterait-elle pas, pour être acquise, de mobiliser les richesses et les hommes ? Alors, pourquoi ne le fait-on pas ? Parce que la pression de l'opinion n'est pas assez grande. Ceci sans doute parce que beaucoup s'imaginent que cette lutte est déjà entreprise sur une grande échelle. Là réside l'erreur, il faudrait développer l'effort à une échelle totalement différente, aussi différente qu'un petit atelier. de mécanique l'est d'une grande usine de production d'automobiles. Même ce qu'on est accoutumé d'appeler les « grands travaux » pour l'accroissement du bien-être sont peu de chose comparés à l'effort que les Nations savent organiser pendant les guerres. Trop de citoyens ne l'ont pas encore compris ou ont trop négligé d'agir dans ce sens.

Comme si les événements voulaient encore marquer davantage les périls tragiques de la course aux armements, voici que l'Allemagne va se voir incluse dans le programme.

Nous sommes nombreux ici cependant qui avons cru que le danger du militarisme allemand était définitivement écarté, et les souvenirs que nous avons sont trop vifs dans les pays qui subirent l'invasion notamment, pour que nous ne mesurions pas l'importance de la tentative qui est en cours d'exécution.

Rappelons-nous les luttes terribles menées en commun. Rappelons-nous les engagements pris.

Les principes furent posés à Yalta, confirmés et précisés à Potsdam :

1° Destruction de la force militaire et de l'industrie de guerre de l'Allemagne;

2° Châtiment des criminels de guerre;

3° Réparations;

4° Dénazification et démilitarisation de la vie allemande.

> « Notre but, disait la déclaration finale, n'est pas de détruire le peuple allemand; mais ce n'est que lorsque le nazisme et le militarisme auront été annihilés que les Allemands pourront avoir l'espérance d'une vie décente et d'une place dans le concert des nations. »

Ces principes, déjà en 1946, n'ont pas été suivis.

Les responsables nazis qui avaient soutenu, financé et armé Hitler ont été ré-investis dans leurs fonctions dans la Ruhr.

L'abandon des réparations, le retour à l'état antérieur dans le bassin rhéno-westphalien étaient si nets et si rapides qu'après un discours caractéristique du secrétaire d'Etat. James Byrnes, dès le 26 septembre 1946, le conseiller du président Roosevelt, M. Morgenthau, s'écriait :

> « Si M. Byrnes a vraiment l'intention de rejeter le plan de Potsdam et de laisser une Allemagne industriellement puissante, je prévois alors la répétition des er-

reurs fatales de Versailles, qui conduiront inévitablement à une troisième guerre mondiale. »

Ne devons-nous pas nous demander les raisons qui poussent à reconstruire avec tant de hâte la « Wehrmacht » ? Et ne devons-nous pas redouter — car déjà des propos bien révélateurs ont été tenus en Allemagne — que ces nouvelles légions vont se proposer de libérer Prague de la tutelle tchèque et l'Alsace de l'oppression des Français ?

La solution qui m'apparaît comme préférable et dont vous étudierez les moyens de réalisation est de réaffirmer et de maintenir la démilitarisation de l'Allemagne. Des contrôles, des enquêtes seront nécessaires, de manière à lever là également toutes les suspicions. Il faut pour cela reprendre les entretiens entre ceux qui ont combattu le fascisme hitlérien. Il vaut mieux négocier pour maintenir l'Allemagne désarmée que d'être bientôt obligé de se battre à nouveau pour lui retirer les armes qui lui auraient été données.

Sans examiner sous tous leurs aspects les propoitions de Prague concernant la dénonciation de l'agression où qu'elle se produise et la condamnation de l'intervention armée étrangère dans les affaires intérieures des peuples, ainsi que le règlement pacifique de la guerre de Corée, je crois utile de me reporter fidèlement aux commentaires que nous avons déjà publiés en vue d'éclairer les débats publics auxquels la convocation de notre deuxième Congrès Mondial donna lieu.

Les tâches essentielles de ces commentaires sur ces questions sont résumées ainsi :

Les conditions dans lesquelles naissent les guerres sont toujours entourées de mystère, voire de mensonges. Et c'est la volonté même de ceux qui les provoquent d'échapper ainsi à la responsabilité qu'ils encourent. Il nous appartient de percer ces mystères et de dénoncer l'agresseur. Il n'est pas possible de laisser impunis et camouflés ceux qui engagent le monde dans un désastre.

Oui, l'agresseur est un criminel qu'il faut dénoncer et condamner. Sur ce point tout le monde est d'accord. Les avis sont divergents lorsqu'il s'agit de définir l'agresseur.

Quand par exemple de grandes nations comme les Etats-Unis, la Grande-Bretagne ou la France, envoient en Grèce, en Malaisie, au Viet-Nam ou en Corée des bateaux et avions de guerre, de véritables armadas pour y débarquer tanks, avions et troupes et poursuivre les hostilités, il est évident pour quiconque que ce ne sont point ces petits peuples qui ont menacé ou agressé ces grandes nations, mais ces dernières qui viennent les frapper à des milliers de kilomètres de leurs frontières, avec l'intention de leur imposer directement ou indirectement leur domination.

Mais pour ceux que ne satisfait pas ce simple jugement il est une juridiction établie et signée par les représentants des grandes nations : c'est la Charte des Nations Unies. Elle permet de définir et de sanctionner l'agresseur.

Si ses principes avaient été respectés par tous, les conflits sanglants qui se sont produits depuis cinq ans auraient été évités. Généralement ces foyers de guerre sont allumés par telle ou telle nation qui, pour justifier son agression armée, s'arroge le droit d'intervenir au nom de la « démocratie », de la « justice » ou du « droit » dans les affaires intérieures de petites nations.

C'était aussi au nom de formules de ce genre, pour les délivrer du judaïsme... du bolchévisme... des influences négroïdes... voire même de l'impérialisme anglais ou américain et pour leur apporter un prétendu socialisme et une « Europe nouvelle » qu'Hitler et ses acolytes envahirent les nations pour les coloniser.

C'est pour reconquérir leur indépendance nationale et être maîtres chez eux que les patriotes de tous les pays ont livré contre l'envahisseur la bataille de la résistance. Non, la liberté, la démocratie, la justice, la civilisation ne sauraient être apportées aux peuples à la pointe des baïonnettes étrangères.

Les interventions armées dans les affaires intérieures d'un peuple doivent cesser, car elles ne peuvent apporter de solution durable et elles sont grosses de dangers immenses pour le monde entier.

Un exemple tragique de conflit à propos duquel, sur la désignation de l'agresseur, de nombreuses controverses se sont établies, est constitué par la guerre de Corée.

S'il existe parmi nous des opinions différentes sur les origines et les conditions de déclenchement de cette guerre, nous devrions cependant nous préoccuper d'abord d'appuyer toutes les initiatives qui ont pu ou qui pourraient être prises pour faire cesser le conflit.

En particulier nous considérerons comme un acte en faveur de la paix la proposition du Pandit Nehru « de localiser le conflit et de coopérer à un règlement pacifique et rapide », proposition immédiatement acceptée par le généralissime Staline et repoussée, après trois messages, par le secrétaire d'Etat Dean Acheson.

Depuis cette époque, l'intervention étrangère décidée par le

Conseil de Sécurité, sans entendre les parties en cause et sans que les deux grandes puissances voisines de la Corée soient présentes, a développé ses ravages et avait d'ailleurs débuté avant même que ne fut prise cette décision juridiquement sans valeur.

Pour l'instant cette campagne militaire, accompagnée d'effroyables bombardements des populations civiles, d'extermination des vies et de destruction des richesses, a aussi eu pour effet de confier l'administration de ce malheureux pays qui désirait l'honnêteté et l'unification, à un gouvernement corrompu qui, dans sa propre zone, avait été largement battu aux élections et ne s'était maintenu que par un régime de terreur, condamné par le rapport même de la Commission de l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'année 1949. Pourquoi des Nations qui se réclament de la Liberté, de la Démocratie et de la Paix, ont-elles choisi la voie de la paix par la force et par les ruines, alors que d'autres solutions étaient certainement possibles dans le cadre de la Charte des Nations Unies ?

La véritable raison de cette action concertée n'est-elle pas rendue plus claire par le lien intime qui existerait entre la Corée, l'Indochine, Formose et les Philippines, selon les termes même de la déclaration solennelle faite à Washington le 27 juin 1950 par le président Truman ?

Ne serions-nous pas conduits, si nous suivions cette conception, à qualifier d'agresseurs les Coréens en Corée, les Indochinois au Viet-Nam, les Chinois à Formose et peut-être les Philippins à Manille ?

Je me permettrai de constater en toute objectivité qu'un lien existe entre les régimes que l'intervention étrangère veut imposer par la force à ces peuples.

Un lien existe entre Syngman Rhee, Bao-Daï et Tchang-Kaï-Tchek, c'est celui de la corruption, de même qu'un lien existe entre ces divers peuples : le désir d'indépendance, de justice et de liberté.

Nous devrons développer de toute urgence un grand mouvement d'opinion pour imposer le retour à une procédure qui respecterait la lettre et l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies. Il est grand temps d'agir, car la guerre de Corée constitue un foyer très dangereux de conflit généralisé.

Il est une décision de l'Assemblée Générale des Nations Unies, adoptée dans sa seconde session, à laquelle tous les Partisans de la Paix attachent une très grande importance : c'est celle qui condamne la propagande en faveur de la guerre.

Le Bureau a donc décidé à Prague de vous demander de délibérer sur l'interdiction de toutes les formes de propagande favorisant la guerre, en quelque pays que ce soit.

Il suffit de parcourir les journaux et publications, d'écouter les émissions radiophoniques et les discours de personnalités, parfois considérables, pour se rendre compte à quel point cette résolution des Nations Unies n'est pas respectée.

Cette propagande systématique tend à la fois à créer un climat de guerre, à persuader que la guerre est inévitable et à fournir de prétendues « justifications morales » à une politique de force qui ne peut que conduire à une nouvelle guerre mondiale.

Je ne vise pas spécialement, en dénonçant ces propagandes, la violence des mots, les qualificatifs injurieux et en général les excès de langage, sans nier toutefois qu'ils contribuent à créer un climat peu propice à la discussion sur les problèmes mondiaux.

Je pourrais viser les propagandistes des mensonges et des calomnies destinés à abuser la bonne foi et à armer psychologiquement puis matériellement des millions d'hommes dont on voudrait faire les chevaliers d'une nouvelle croisade. Certes je n'ignore pas que ce sont là précisément les termes qu'emploient ces propagandistes pour caractériser notre action. Ces attaques ne réussiront pas à nous ébranler, car nous ne redoutons pas la confrontation entre nos paroles, la réalité et nos actes.

Les Partisans de la Paix ne se font pas les champions d'un régime particulier et ne prétendent pas se transformer en policiers ou en chiens de berger pour empêcher les peuples de vivre en se donnant le régime et le gouvernement de leur choix. Nous avons trop confiance dans le jugement des peuples pour nous permettre de les comparer à des moutons que l'on envisage tantôt de tondre et tantôt de mener à l'abattoir. Notre seul souci est d'éveiller la conscience universelle à temps pour éviter au monde la catastrophe.

Mais je voudrais dénoncer ceux qui, possédant de grandes responsabilités sociales ou politiques, comme les journalistes, les écrivains, les hommes politiques, excitent directement à la guerre, recommandent la guerre comme seul moyen de régler les différends entre les Nations.

La liste serait malheureusement longue des exemples que l'on pourrait citer.

Par exemple M. Nance, Recteur de l'Université de Floride, déclarait récemment :

> « Je considère que nous devons faire une préparation en nous inspirant de la loi de la jungle. Chacun doit apprendre l'art de tuer. Je ne pense pas que la guerre doive se limiter à l'action d'armées, de flottes de guerre et de forces de l'air. Il ne doit pas exister de limitations quelconques dans le choix des méthodes ou des armes de destruction. J'approuverai la guerre bactériologique, l'emploi des gaz, les bombes atomiques ou à hydrogène et des raquettes interplanétaires. Je n'interviendrai pas en faveur des précautions à prendre envers les hôpitaux, les églises, les établissements scolaires ou quelques groupes de populations civiles. »

C'est le général Anderson qui s'écrie :

« Que l'on m'ordonne de le faire et je fais saute d'ici une semaine les cinq nids atomiques des Russes... Et quand je paraîtrai devant le Christ je pense pouvoir lui expliquer que j'ai sauvé la civilisation. »

C'est le secrétaire d'Etat à la Marine des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, M. Matthews, qui déclare :

« Les Etats-Unis devraient accepter de payer cher pour donner la paix du monde, même en faisant naître une guerre qui contraindrait à la coopération pour la paix...

Ce qui doit nous apparaître à tous d'une extrême gravité c'est qu'après avoir vu ces propos criminels démentis par ses supérieurs, ce ministre, qui sans doute éprouve une délectation morbide en comptant dans son esprit des centaines de millions de morts, ait été maintenu en fonction.

Si le désaccord sur un point aussi fondamental de la politique d'une nation avait été total, on imagine difficilement de voir un ministre aussi désavoué conserver sa fonction, son autorité et ses responsabilités. Le démenti donné par le Secrétaire d'Etat risque fort d'être interprété comme une attitude provisoire dictée par l'opportunisme.

Nous devons dénoncer ceux qui excitent à la guerre et demander qu'ils soient punis par un tribunal international appliquant la résolution de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de même que dans les nations civilisées est réprimé par le code pénal le fait de proférer des menaces de mort.

A côté de ces provocations qui devraient aussitôt conduire leurs auteurs devant une cour de justice, il y a les poisons insidieux, aussi dangereux, que l'on distille particulièrement à la jeunesse sous forme de jouets, de journaux, de films et de radio. Vous aurez à examiner les formes les meilleures pour lutter contre cet empoisonnement psychologique de la jeunesse, par exemple par le boycott massif et par une action commune avec d'autres organisations qui se seraient éventuellement émues de ce problème.

Parallèlement nous devrons continuer à favoriser et à appuyer toutes les expressions de pensée qui concourent à fortifier l'idée de la Paix. Les prix de la paix, créés par le premier Congrès Mondial et qui vont être décernés ici, sont un premier exemple de ce que nous pouvons entreprendre à cet effet.

Si notre devoir est de combattre sans merci les propagandes criminelles qui excitent à la guerre, nous devons parallèlement nous attacher à promouvoir et à favoriser toutes les activités qui peuvent établir une collaboration profitable et pacifique entre les peuples.

La Charte de l'Organisation des Nations Unies prévoit explicitement à cet effet le développement des échanges économiques et culturels entre les Nations.

C'est le Conseil Economique et Social qui a reçu la mission de traiter de ces problèmes. Nous pensons que ces échanges sont possibles et souhaitables entre tous les pays quels que soient leurs régimes, car le monde constitue un « tout » économique.

En se reportant à l'histoire nous observons que les migrations humaines au dix-neuvième et au début du vingtième siècle, la constitution des empires coloniaux, les mesures protectionnistes prises par les Etats ont conduit à la formation de ces impérialismes économiques, ceux-ci prennent des formes différentes suivant les Etats.

L'Angleterre constitue l'empire britannique avec ses colonies et ses dominions. En Europe les Etats industrialisés exportent marchandises et capitaux tout en se concurrençant âprement, tandis que les Etats-Unis, déjà depuis plus d'un demi-siècle, ont imaginé une nouvelle formule que l'on appela alors l'impérialisme du dollar. Celui-ci exerce rapidement un protectorat financier sur d'autres pays sans annexion véritable ou avouée.

A cette époque où n'existait qu'une seule forme de régime

— le régime capitaliste — des obstacles furent dressés contre la libre circulation des richesses, en raison de la concurrence pour l'obtention des débouchés. C'est ainsi que les impérialismes économiques se heurtaient et provoquaient les conflits armés soit pour conquérir des marchés, soit pour éviter l'asphyxie économique.

Actuellement il existe un autre mode de production et de distribution des richesses : c'est celui des Etats à économie socialiste. Nous n'avons pas ici à nous prononcer sur les mérites comparés de ces régimes. Nous réaffirmons une fois de plus que c'est le droit de chaque peuple de choisir le système qui lui plaît.

Mais des causes de guerre se retrouvent aujourd'hui comme hier si des obstacles toujours plus grands sont dressés devant les échanges économiques. Aux mobiles anciens se superposent d'autres mobiles, mais le résultat risque d'être le même : la guerre.

Nous pensons et nous nous efforcerons de convaincre l'opinion mondiale que des échanges économiques conçus sur des bases profitables à chacune des parties, ne portant aucune atteinte à leur indépendance, sont des gages de paix.

Il nous faut dénoncer les coalitions économiques, les mesures de sujétion exercées contre l'indépendance des peuples — quels qu'en soient les prétextes, plan Marshall ou autres — qui, contrairement à la Charte des Nations Unies, établissent des blocus économiques.

Il est alarmant de lire dans le Bulletin de l'Ambassade des Etats-Unis à Paris, en date du 31 octobre 1950, l'explication suivante de la position du Département d'Etat sur ces problèmes :

> « La position des Etats-Unis au sujet de ce problème, comme l'a expliqué le porte-parole du Département d'Etat, repose sur les grands principes suivants :
> » 1° Les Nations de l'Europe occidentale devraient éliminer de leurs expéditions en direction des Nations de l'Est européen des articles représentant environ 25 % de leurs exportations actuelles;
> » 2° Une grande partie des pertes résultant de cette élimination pourraient être compensées par une augmentation des exportations d'articles d'une nature moins stratégique;

» 4° Les pays d'Europe occidentale devraient en général adopter la définition américaine de ce qui constitue des produits stratégiques. En plus de l'interdiction d'exporter des munitions, la définition américaine prévoit l'interdiction d'exporter des produits découlant des grands progrès techniques et scientifiques. »

Ainsi donc si demain une découverte analogue à celle de la pénicilline était faite, par exemple pour lutter contre la tuberculose ou le cancer, les nations de l'Europe occidentale se verraient interdire, au nom de la stratégie atlantique, de la défense de la liberté et du progrès, d'exporter dans tout le monde ce « produit découlant des grands progrès techniques et scientifiques ».

Il est impensable que les citoyens des Etats-Unis, de ce grand pays qui a tant fait pour le progrès scientifique, pour les développements techniques, soient d'accord avec de telles positions. Je demande à tous les scientifiques et à tous les techniciens, et je le demande en particulier à mes collègues des Etats-Unis, s'ils ne pensent pas que leur devoir est de s'élever contre de tels reniements de la tradition scientifique et de la conception même de notre civilisation.

C'est dans le même esprit, toujours en nous inspirant de la Charte des Nations Unies, que nous devons agir pour développer les échanges culturels et la circulation des idées entre tous les peuples. Des accords culturels peuvent et doivent être conclus sur des bases profitables à chacune des parties.

Il est évident que ces échanges culturels contribueraient rapidement à une meilleure connaissance des uns et des autres et feraient s'effondrer beaucoup de préventions, de jugements a priori, tout cela concourant sérieusement à établir la confiance. Dans le domaine scientifique, les résultats devraient être loyalement diffusés, ce qui accélérerait le progrès et contribuerait à créer des conditions favorables à la Paix.

Je profiterai de cette occasion pour m'adresser aux Partisans de ce « monde ouvert » que réclamait récemment le grand savant Niel Bohr, un monde où serait assurée la libre diffusion des informations scientifiques.

Ne pensent-ils pas qu'il leur faut se préoccuper comme nous le faisons tout d'abord, de lutter contre les menaces immédiates de guerre pour faire reculer celle-ci pas à pas et pour arriver par étapes successives à la réalisation de leurs si louables désirs ?

Nous venons d'examiner différents aspects des actions nécessaires à entreprendre pour éloigner la menace de guerre qui plane aujourd'hui sur nous. Aucune de ces actions n'a de sens si nous ne posons pas comme principe fondamental que nous considérons qu'il est possible de faire coexister des systèmes économiques et politiques différents dans le monde.

Admettre ce principe n'a de valeur que si cela résulte d'une étude réfléchie de la situation et avec la claire conscience des concessions réciproques que cela suppose. Ces concessions peuvent d'ailleurs être parfaitement guidées par l'intérêt général.

Il est possible également de concevoir et d'affirmer que, dans notre monde du vingtième siècle, ne peuvent pas coexister le système capitaliste et le système socialiste. Admettre cela — qui est faux — c'est en même temps se rallier à la thèse de la fatalité de la guerre.

Ceux qui soutiennent cette thèse sont des fauteurs de guerre et nous devons les dénoncer quels que soient leur rang ou leur fonction.

Admettre au contraire — et c'est notre cas — que des régimes différents puissent coexister, cela suppose que l'on est décidé d'agir pour permettre cette coexistence. Cela signifie que l'on est décidé à rétablir par des actes la confiance mutuelle.

Cela signifie surtout que l'on n'a pas comme arrière-pensée de vouloir imposer à l'un par la force la dictature de l'autre. Cela signifie aussi que l'on accepte de laisser les peuples décider du régime qu'ils désirent se donner, et que l'on n'assimile pas à une « agression intérieure » qui doit mettre en branle la machinerie des pactes de guerre le fait, pour ces citoyens, de changer de gouvernement ou de régime.

La Charte des Nations Unies est l'expression même du principe de la coexistence des régimes différents. C'est pourquoi nous considérons comme une grave contradiction à l'esprit de cette Charte le fait pour l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'avoir accepté, il y a quelques jours, un plan contre la prétendue agression, présenté par M. Dean Acheson.

L'objet essentiel de cette réforme est de supprimer le fameux droit de veto.

Ce droit, ou plus exactement la règle d'unanimité des cinq grands, avait été introduit dans la Charte à la demande du président Roosevelt précisément pour sauvegarder les droits d'une minorité éventuelle contre les abus d'une majorité.

Acquérir l'unanimité pour les décisions qui intéressent le maintien de la paix, c'est reconnaître que l'on désire la coopération, la collaboration entre des régimes différents, et non pas que l'on désire voir s'établir une course vers les pressions directes et indirectes pour la création d'une docile majorité.

Comment ne pas voir que cette règle d'unanimité est indispensable, en particulier tant que les votes au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne tiennent pas compte des données démographiques, que la Belgique dispose d'une voix comme les Etats-Unis, et la Tchécoslovaquie d'une voix comme les Indes. Ceci sans mentionner que Formose dispose d'une voix et que les quatre cents millions de citoyens de la République Populaire chinoise ne disposent d'aucune.

Ces votes pondérés ne sont plus nécessaires si l'on admet — comme le faisait la Charte — que sur les questions essentielles au maintien de la paix rien ne serait ni ne pourrait être négligé pour arriver à une solution d'unanimité.

A partir du moment où cette règle fondamentale est abandonnée, on passe de la recherche des moyens de collaboration à la recherche des moyens de pression, puis à la recherche des moyens de légitimer la guerre préventive réclamée par M. Matthews.

L'Organisation des Nations Unies, ainsi détournée de son but, tend à se transformer purement et simplement en une nouvelle Sainte-Alliance.

C'est ce qu'exprimait le Pandit Nehru le 16 octobre 1950 à New Delhi :

> » Nous ne sommes pas d'accord avec les propositions tendant à créer dans chaque pays des forces armées séparées, en vue de leur utilisation par l'Organisation des Nations Unies. CELA REVIENDRAIT POUR AINSI DIRE A FAIRE DE L'ORGANISATION DES NATIONS UNIES UNE ANNEXE DU PACTE ATLANTIQUE ET UNE ORGANISATION ORIENTEE VERS LA GUERRE PLUS QU'UNE ORGANISATION CONSACREE A LA PAIX INTERNATIONALE. »

C'est également la raison que donnait le délégué de l'Inde, M. A.-C.-N. Nambar, à la Commission politique de l'Organisation des Nations Unies :

> « Le plan contre l'agression donne l'impression que les Nations Unies sont occupées à perfectionner leur dispositif pour la guerre. »

Nous avions déjà dénoncé lors de notre premier Congrès le fait que le Pacte Atlantique était contraire à la lettre et à l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies, sur laquelle les peuples avaient fondé et sur laquelle nous fondons encore nos espoirs.

Il est d'autant plus grave de constater que, comme le disait le Pandit Nehru, c'est la Charte que l'on aligne sur le Pacte Atlantique.

Je parlais à l'instant de Sainte-Alliance. C'est la pensée qui vient immédiatement à l'esprit lorsqu'on étudie les justifications données à ces propositions de détournement de la Charte par leur auteur M. Dean Acheson, par son représentant M. Warren Austin et même par M. René Pleven, premier ministre français.

M. Warren Austin déclarait le 26 octobre 1950 à la Commission politique de l'Organisation des Nations Unies :

> « La résolution qui nous est soumise par le représentant soviétique indique en résumé une obsession suivie de la bombe atomique d'une part et, de l'autre, une indifférence marquée envers les autres armes d'agression. Mais le crime réel est la conduite d'une guerre d'agression, que ce soit avec des bombes atomiques, des divisions blindées ou la subversion. »

M. René Pleven, prenant la parole à l'Assemblée Nationale le 24 octobre 1950, parlant des contacts directs entre la Grande-Bretagne, les Etats-Unis, l'Union Soviétique et la France, disait :

> « Pour que de tels contacts soient fructueux, il faut que personne ne puisse avoir aucun doute sur l'inébranlable détermination des démocraties occidentales de défendre leur territoire contre toute agression et « le régime des peuples libres contre toute subversion ».

On précipite les peuples dans la course aux armements, on contracte des alliances militaires, on abandonne la Charte des Nations Unies... A quelles fins ?

Tout d'abord pour interdire, en la qualifiant de crime de subversion, toute modification aux régimes économiques et politiques établis. Les peuples ne sont plus libres de disposer d'eux-mêmes puisqu'ils doivent savoir que le fait de désirer ou de décider un changement vers plus de justice signifiera le déclenchement de la guerre.

La vogue volontaire du terme de subversion qui revient sans cesse dans les adjurations des chefs responsables de la nouvelle Sainte-Alliance, signifie clairement que cette dernière est bien décidée, comme premier objectif, à fixer le monde dans son état actuel, à stopper tout progrès social.

De tous les événements qui se sont produits depuis notre premier Congrès, je considère que cette profonde atteinte portée à la Charte est une des plus graves et des plus menaçantes. Une de nos préoccupations dominantes devra être d'obtenir un retour à la véritable Charte des Nations Unies, celle qui fut inspirée par les peuples et reflétait bien leurs aspirations.

En conclusion nous pouvons affirmer aujourd'hui que l'action des Partisans de la Paix entrave et souvent même bouscule le développement des plans des bellicistes. Il est maintenant impossible à ceux-ci de cacher le succès de notre action et leur inquiétude de voir ruiner leur entreprise de mort. Leur inquiétude est si vive qu'ils prennent et font prendre des mesures qui révoltent les consciences honnêtes et par cela même contribuent à éclairer ceux qui n'avaient pas encore confiance dans la valeur et la sincérité de notre action. A ces excitations, capables des pires effets, la foule des Partisans de la Paix oppose toujours plus résolument sa volonté de paix. Elle ne cède pas à la facilité en se laissant aller sur le chemin de la violence. Ce n'est pas par des chemins de ruines et de morts qu'elle veut imposer la paix. La calme résolution qui caractérise notre action est la preuve de notre confiance dans la valeur de l'entendement humain; elle ne traduit aucune faiblesse devant les menaces. Cette caractéristique de nos actes est due à la conviction qu'a profondément en lui chaque Partisan de la Paix que la guerre n'est pas fatale, que les forces de paix déjà rassemblées et en potentiel, sont immenses, qu'il existe une solution pacifique à tous les différends, que la coexistence pacifique de systèmes politiques et économiques dans le monde est possible, et enfin que ce n'est qu'une minorité d'affairistes qui, pour leur propre domination, source d'immenses profits personnels, trompent une foule encore très nombreuse d'honnêtes gens et les entraînent vers la guerre.

Votre Congrès devrait s'inspirer de ces principes.

Dans ces débats que nous souhaitons très larges et très ouverts, il s'agira d'examiner les problèmes qui se posent objectivement avec l'esprit scientifique, en vue de rechercher les points d'accord et sans se perdre en stériles polémiques.

Dans une Assemblée comme la nôtre, qui reflète les opinions mondiales, il est bien clair que nous devrons procéder par étapes dans la recherche de ces points d'accord. Il s'agit de problèmes multiples et complexes, et nous devrons les prendre dans l'ordre d'urgence en nous attachant à résoudre d'abord les plus menaçants.

Nous devrons envisager de soutenir d'autres organisations internationales lorsqu'elles prendront des initiatives justes et efficaces en faveur de la paix. Je mentionnerai par exemple les initiatives prises par la Croix-Rouge Internationale, la Société Religieuse des Amis (Quakers), des groupements de personnalités dans divers pays, le Conseil pour la Paix animé par Lord Boyd Orr et les Partisans du Gouvernement Mondial, et je suis convaincu que toutes ces organisations, qui éprouvent un désir sincère de la paix, pourront trouver des points d'accord avec notre Mouvement. Ces points d'accord se multiplieront au fur et à mesure que ces groupements se préoccuperont plus en détail des processus successifs d'établissement d'une paix durable.

Par exemple, il y a ceux qui pensent que la paix ne peut être établie que par l'instauration d'un gouvernement mondial, et parmi eux se trouve le grand Einstein. Mais encore faut-il se préoccuper de ce que serait ce gouvernement mondial et par quels chemins on parviendrait à l'installer. Est-ce par le chemin de la guerre ou par les voies de la paix ?

Il est un protagoniste du gouvernement mondial avec lequel nous sommes en désaccord — et Einstein aussi je pense — c'est l'un des conseillers de la Maison Blanche, M. James Burnham, qui envisage « un ordre mondial démocratique, dirigé à ses débuts par les Etats-Unis, premier stade de l'établissement d'un véritable gouvernement mondial et d'une société mondiale ».

Les conclusions de ce Congrès pourraient donner lieu à la rédaction d'un appel aux peuples du monde. Celui-ci, ainsi que les résolutions, seraient ensuite examinés en vue de ratification par des assemblées populaires. De larges délégations pourraient être envoyées auprès des assemblées élues, auprès des gouvernements, auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et je suis convaincu que le Congrès et le Comité que vous élirez sauront trouver encore d'autres formes d'action.

Ceux d'entre vous qui assistaient déjà à notre premier Congrès sont revenus ici enrichis d'une expérience précieuse et animés du même désir d'action. Ceux qui se sont joints depuis à notre Mouvement représentent souvent des hommes et des femmes qui n'auraient pas envisagé, il y a quelque temps encore, d'être obligés d'agir pour défendre la Paix. Tous ensemble nous allons travailler avec une ardeur nouvelle pour accomplir cette œuvre qui mérite qu'on s'y dévoue : faire de la force que nous représentons l'instance internationale la plus haute, capable d'imposer la volonté des peuples chaque fois que les organismes chargés du maintien de la paix failliront à leur tâche.

Nous allons travailler en gardant dans nos esprits et dans nos cœurs le souvenir des horreurs de la guerre et de l'oppression fasciste, des préoccupations et des angoisses de tous nos concitoyens, avec lesquels nous avons débattu avant de venir ici de la meilleure manière d'aboutir. S'il était encore besoin d'un stimulant nous le trouverions sans doute dans les mesquines embûches qui ont été jetées sur notre chemin. Nous le trouverions sûrement dans le fait que plusieurs délégués n'ont pas pu remplir leur mandat, car ils sont actuellement détenus pour avoir lutté pour la Paix.

Il n'est pas possible que les souffrances éprouvées l'aient été en vain.

Il n'est pas possible que les hommes dirigent vers leur propre anéantissement les forces naturelles qu'ils ont su découvrir et asservir.

C'est parce que nous sentons profondément tout ceci, c'est parce que nous sommes décidés à nous dévouer pour la défense de cette belle cause que nous sommes ici aujourd'hui et que nous repartirons demain dans nos patries pour poursuivre l'œuvre entreprise, c'est parce que nous avons confiance dans le jugement des êtres humains lorsqu'ils sont suffisamment éclairés et aussi parce que nous savons que le nombre des honnêtes gens dans le monde est incomparablement plus grand que celui des gens malhonnêtes.

C'est parce que nous sommes conscients d'agir en toute sincérité et en toute objectivité pour la Paix que nous serons les plus forts, que nous parviendrons à éveiller à temps la conscience universelle qui s'opposera victorieusement à la guerre.

MANIFESTE AUX PEUPLES

La guerre menace l'humanité, les enfants, les femmes et les hommes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies ne justifie pas l'espoir mis en elle par les peuples de conserver la Paix et la tranquillité. La vie des hommes et les acquisitions de la culture humaine sont en péril.

Les peuples veulent conserver l'espoir que l'Organisation des Nations Unies reviendra résolument aux principes qui étaient à la base de sa constitution après la deuxième guerre mondiale et qui consistaient à assurer la liberté, la Paix et l'estime mutuelle entre les peuples.

De plus en plus les peuples du monde mettent leur espoir en eux-mêmes, dans leur fermeté et dans leur bonne volonté. Tout homme conscient sait que celui qui ose dire : « La guerre est inévitable » calomnie l'humanité.

En lisant ce message lancé au nom des peuples de quatre-vingts pays représentés au IIe Congrès de la Paix de Varsovie, n'oubliez jamais que le combat pour la Paix c'est votre combat. Sachez que des centaines de millions de Partisans de la Paix en s'unissant vous tendent la main. Ils vous invitent à participer au plus beau des combats livrés par l'humanité, qui croit en son avenir.

La Paix ne s'attend pas, elle se gagne.

Joignons nos volontés pour demander que cesse la guerre qui ravage aujourd'hui la Corée et qui peut mettre le feu au monde.

Dressons-nous contre la tentative de rallumer des foyers de guerre en Allemagne et au Japon.

Avec les cinq cents millions d'êtres conscients qui ont signé l'Appel de Stockholm nous exigeons l'interdiction des armes atomiques, le désarmement général et le contrôle de ces mesures.

Le contrôle rigoureux du désarmement général et de la destruction des armes atomiques est techniquement possible. Il s'agit de le vouloir.

Imposons une législation qui réprime les propagandes de guerre.

Saisissons les parlements, les gouvernants et l'Assemblée des Nations Unies des propositions pour la Paix élaborées par le IIe Congrès Mondial. La puissance des forces pacifiques dans le monde est assez grande, la voix des hommes libres assez forte pour qu'ensemble nous puissions obtenir la rencontre des représentants des cinq grandes puissances.

Le IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix a fait la preuve, avec une force sans précédent, que les hommes accourus des cinq parties du monde peuvent, malgré les grandes divergences d'opinion, s'entendre pour conjurer le fléau de la guerre et conserver la Paix. Que les gouvernants suivent leur exemple et la Paix sera sauvée.

II

ADRESSE A L'O.N.U.

Lorsqu'ils ont créé l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les peuples du monde ont mis en elle de grands espoirs. Et le plus grand est celui de la Paix.

Cependant la guerre bouleverse aujourd'hui la vie paisible de certains peuples et demain elle risque de bouleverser celle de toute l'humanité. Si l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne justifie pas la grande espérance qu'avaient mis en elle les peuples du monde — tant ceux qui y sont représentés par leurs gouvernements que ceux qui n'y sont pas encore représentés — si l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'assure pas à l'humanité la tranquillité et la paix, c'est parce qu'elle est influencée par les forces qui se sont écartées du seul chemin possible de la Paix universelle : la recherche de l'entente générale.

Si l'Organisation des Nations Unies veut justifier les espoirs que l'humanité met toujours en elle, elle doit revenir dans la voie qui, depuis le jour de sa fondation, lui a été tracée par les peuples, et comme premier pas dans cette voie elle doit assurer dans le plus bref délai la réunion des cinq grandes puissances : Etats-Unis, France, Union Soviétique, Grande-Bretagne et République Populaire de Chine, pour l'examen et le règlement pacifique des différends en cours.

Le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, composé de délégués de quatre-vingts pays et représentant la voix authentique de l'humanité pacifique, insiste pour que l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les organismes législatifs devant lesquels les gouvernements de différents pays sont responsables, examine de toute urgence les propositions suivantes appelées à rétablir la confiance entre tous les pays, indépendamment de leurs systèmes sociaux, et à maintenir ou rétablir la Paix.

1. — Devant le fait que la guerre menée actuellement en Corée n'apporte pas seulement des détresses innombrables au Peuple Coréen mais menace de se généraliser, nous insistons pour que cesse cette guerre, pour que soit effectué le retrait de Corée des armées étrangères et pour que soit trouvée une solution pacifique au conflit intérieur qui oppose les deux parties de la Corée, et cela avec la participation des représentants du peuple coréen.

Nous insistons pour que le problème soit résolu par le Conseil de Sécurité au complet, c'est-à-dire avec les représentants de la République Populaire de Chine. Nous demandons la cessation de l'intervention des troupes américaines contre l'île chinoise de Taiwan (Formose) et la cessation des hostilités contre la République du Viet-Nam, actions militaires qui, elles aussi, portent une menace de guerre mondiale.

2. — Nous condamnons d'une manière catégorique toute tentative faite ou mesure prise en violation des accords internationaux qui interdisent le réarmement de l'Allemagne et du Japon. Ces tentatives et mesures représentent une grave menace pour la Paix. Avec insistance nous demandons la conclusion d'un traité de paix avec une Allemagne unifiée et démilitarisée, ainsi qu'avec le Japon, et le retrait des troupes d'occupation de ces deux pays.

3. — Nous considérons les violences employées pour le maintien des peuples dans un état de dépendance et d'oppression coloniales comme une menace pour la cause de la Paix et nous proclamons le droit de ces peuples à la Liberté et à l'Indépendance.

De même nous nous élevons contre toutes formes de discrimination raciale, car elles engendrent la haine entre les Nations et compromettent la Paix.

4. — Nous estimons nécessaire de dénoncer les tentatives des agresseurs pour jeter la confusion sur la notion même de l'agression et pour donner ainsi prétexte à l'intervention étrangère dans les affaires intérieures des autres pays.

Aucune considération d'ordre politique, stratégique ou économique, aucune raison tirée de la situation intérieure ou de conflits internes dans tel ou tel Etat ne peuvent justifier l'intervention armée d'un autre Etat quel qu'il soit. L'agression est le fait criminel d'un Etat qui, le premier, emploie la force armée contre un Etat sous un prétexte quelconque.

5. — Nous considérons que la propagande en vue d'une nouvelle guerre crée la plus grande menace pour la collaboration pacifique des peuples. Nous la considérons comme l'un des crimes les plus graves contre l'Humanité. Nous en appelons aux parlements de tous les pays pour qu'ils édictent une loi de protection de la Paix, établissent la responsabilité pénale en ce qui concerne la propagande pour une nouvelle guerre, sous quelque forme que ce soit.

6. — Tous les hommes honnêtes, indépendamment de leur tendance politique, considérant l'extermination massive et impitoyable des populations civiles de Corée comme un crime contre l'Humanité, nous demandons qu'une commission internationale compétente soit appelée à examiner les crimes commis dans cette guerre de Corée et en particulier la question de la responsabilité du général Mac Arthur.

7. — Interprètes des peuples qui ploient sous les lourdes charges des budgets de guerre, fermement résolus à garantir à l'Humanité une paix solide et continue, nous saisissons l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les parlements et les peuples des propositions suivantes :

— Interdiction absolue de toutes espèces d'armes atomiques, des armes bactériologiques, chimiques, toxiques, radioactives et de tous autres moyens de destruction massive ;

— Dénonciation comme criminel de guerre du gouvernement qui emploierait ces armes le premier.

Le IIe Congrès Mondial, conscient de sa responsabilité devant les peuples, s'adresse avec la même solennité aux grandes puissances et leur propose de procéder au cours des années 1951 et 1952 à une réduction progressive, simultanée et dans la même proportion, de toutes les forces armées de terre, de l'air et de mer, cette réduction allant du tiers à la moitié.

Une telle mesure, en mettant un terme décisif à la course aux armements, diminuera les risques d'agression.

Elle permettra d'alléger les charges qui grèvent le budget des Etats et pèsent lourdement sur toutes les couches du peuple.

Elle permettra également d'aboutir au rétablissement de la confiance internationale et de l'indispensable coopération entre toutes les nations, quel que soit leur régime social.

Le Congrès déclare que le contrôle concernant l'interdiction des armes atomiques et de destruction massive, ainsi que celui des armes dites conventionnelles, sont techniquement possibles.

Un organisme de contrôle international, disposant d'inspecteurs qualifiés, doit être constitué auprès du Conseil de Sécurité : il sera chargé de contrôler aussi bien la réduction des armes conventionnelles que l'interdiction des armes atomiques, bactériologiques, chimiques et autres.

Le contrôle, pour être efficace, doit porter non seulement sur les forces militaires, l'armement existant et la production d'armes tels qu'ils seront déclarés par chaque pays, mais encore sur réclamation de la Commission de Contrôle International, il doit s'étendre à l'inspection des forces militaires, de l'armement et de la production d'armes, qui seraient simplement supposées en plus de celles qui auraient été déclarées.

Ces propositions de réduction des forces armées constituent une première étape dans la voie du désarmement général et total qui reste l'objectif final des Partisans de la Paix.

Le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, convaincu que la Paix ne peut être garantie par la recherche d'un équilibre de forces entraînant la course aux armements, affirme que ces propositions ne donnent aucun avantage de puissance militaire à quelque nation que ce soit, mais qu'elles auront pour effet certain de faire échec à la guerre et d'accroître le bien-être et la sécurité de tous les peuples du monde.

8. — Nous soulignons que, dans certains pays, le passage de l'économie de paix à l'économie de guerre trouble toujours davantage les relations économiques et les échanges internationaux de matières premières et de produits manufacturés. Nous considérons qu'il a une répercussion néfaste sur le niveau de vie de nombreux peuples, qu'il entrave le progrès économique et les courants commerciaux et que cette situation est la raison de conflits qui menacent la Paix du monde.

Défenseurs des intérêts vitaux des populations et désireux d'assainir la situation internationale, nous demandons que l'on revienne à des règles normales d'échange et de commerce entre les divers pays sur la base de la réciprocité. Ainsi seraient satisfaits les besoins des peuples, ainsi seraient écartées toutes formes de discrimination économique, ainsi serait assuré le développement économique des grands et des petits Etats.

9. — Nous considérons que les entraves apportées aux échanges culturels entre les peuples engendrent la discorde, l'incompréhension, créent un climat de méfiance et favorisent les propagandes de guerre. Nous considérons que le resserrement des liens culturels entre les peuples crée les conditions les plus favorables pour leur entente mutuelle et raffermit leur confiance dans la lutte commune pour la Paix.

Aussi nous appelons tous les gouvernements à contribuer à l'amélioration des relations culturelles entre les peuples pour leur permettre de mieux connaître leurs patrimoines respectifs dans le domaine de la culture. Nous leur demandons de faciliter l'organisation de conférences internationales, d'intellectuels, les visites de pays à pays, l'édition et la diffusion la plus large des œuvres littéraires et la connaissance des œuvres artistiques.

En invitant l'Organisation des Nations Unies à justifier les espoirs que les peuples avaient placés en elle, nous portons à sa connaissance la création par nos soins d'un Conseil Mondial de la Paix.

Le Conseil Mondial de la Paix sera un organisme représentatif des représentants de tous les peuples du monde, qu'il s'agisse des pays affiliés à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de ceux qui n'y sont pas encore représentés, ou de ceux qui sont dépendants ou colonisés.

Il appelle l'Organisation des Nations Unies à accomplir effectivement les devoirs dont elle est chargée pour affermir et développer une collaboration pacifique entre tous les pays. Il assumera la tâche élevée d'assurer une paix solide et continue qui corresponde aux intérêts vitaux de toutes les nations.

Le Conseil Mondial de la Paix donnera enfin à l'humanité tout entière la certitude qu'en dépit de toutes les difficultés existantes qui ne doivent d'ailleurs pas être minimisées, il accomplira sa mission.

III

RESOLUTION

POUR LES VICTIMES DE LA REPRESSION

adoptée par acclamations unanimes du congrès.

DANS de nombreux pays, les défenseurs de la Paix sont aujourd'hui soumis aux persécutions policières.

En Amérique latine, aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique, en France, en Italie, dans les pays dépendants d'Afrique et du Proche-Orient, des milliers d'entre eux ont été emprisonnés.

Ils sont nombreux ceux qui, délégués à ce Congrès, n'ont pu y assister.

Les Assemblées en faveur de la Paix sont interdites. Les défenseurs de la Paix essuient le feu de la police, ils sont massacrés.

La persécution n'épargne pas les savants.

Le IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix salue les victimes de la terreur policière. Il élève une protestation solennelle contre les persécutions dont les défenseurs de la Paix sont l'objet.

Le Congrès réclame la libération immédiate de toutes les victimes de la répression policière. Il invite les peuples du monde entier à exprimer leur solidarité envers ces nobles défenseurs de la Paix, à les faire libérer, à les défendre et à protéger tous ceux qui luttent dans le monde pour la Paix.

TEXTES ELABORES PAR LES COMMISSIONS DU IIe CONGRES MONDIAL DE LA PAIX

Les textes suivants ont servi de base à l'établissement des deux documents : « Manifeste aux Peuples » et « Adresse à l'O.N.U. ». Leur adoption par le Congrès était impliquée dans le vote de ces deux textes essentiels.

IV

RESOLUTION SUR LA DEFINITION DE L'AGRESSION

1° L'agresseur est l'Etat qui, le premier, emploie la force armée contre un autre Etat, sous n'importe quel prétexte.

2° Aucune considération politique, économique ou stratégique, aucune raison basée sur la situation intérieure d'un Etat ne peut justifier une intervention armée.

V

RESOLUTION POUR L'INTERDICTION DES ARMES ATOMIQUES ET POUR LE DESARMEMENT

Le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, après avoir constaté avec une vive satisfaction que plus de cinq cents millions d'êtres humains à travers le monde ont déjà exprimé leur volonté d'assurer la Paix en signant l'Appel de Stockholm pour l'interdiction de l'arme atomique;

Interprète de cette exigence profonde de tous les peuples;

Interprète des angoisses que ressentent face aux périls de guerre les peuples écrasés par des dépenses militaires toujours accrues;

Désireux de contribuer à l'édification d'une Paix stable et durable;

S'adresse solennellement à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, aux parlements et aux peuples, et leur soumet les propositions suivantes :

— Interdiction absolue de toutes les espèces d'armes atomiques, bactériologiques, chimiques, toxiques, radioactives et de tous autres moyens de destruction massive;

— Dénonciation comme criminel de guerre du Gouvernement qui, le premier, emploierait ces armes.

Le IIe Congrès Mondial, conscient de sa responsabilité devant les peuples, s'adresse avec la même solennité aux grandes puissances et leur propose de procéder au cours des années 1951 et 1952 à une réduction progressive, simultanée et dans la même proportion, de toutes les forces armées de terre, de l'air et de mer. Cette réduction allant du tiers à la moitié.

Une telle mesure, en mettant un terme décisif à la course aux armements, diminuera les risques d'agression.

Elle permettra d'alléger les charges qui grèvent le budget des Etats et pèsent lourdement sur toutes les couches du peuple.

Elle permettra également d'aboutir au rétablissement de la confiance internationale et de l'indispensable coopération entre toutes les nations, quel que soit leur régime social.

Le Congrès déclare que le contrôle concernant l'interdiction des armes atomiques et de destruction massive, ainsi que celui des armes dites conventionnelles, sont techniquement possibles.

Le Congrès propose qu'un organisme de contrôle international comprenant un service d'inspection qualifié soit constitué auprès du Conseil de Sécurité et chargé de contrôler aussi bien la réduction des armements conventionnels que l'interdiction des armes atomiques, bactériologiques, chimiques et autres armes de destruction massive.

Le Contrôle, pour être efficace, doit porter non seulement sur les forces militaires, l'armement existant et la production d'armes tels qu'ils seront déclarés par chaque pays, mais encore, sur réclamation de la commission de contrôle internationale : il doit s'étendre à l'inspection des forces militaires, de l'armement existant et de la production d'armes qui seraient simplement supposés en plus de ceux qui auraient été déclarés. Ces propositions de réduction des forces armées constituent une première étape dans la voie du désarmement général et total qui reste l'objectif final des Partisans de la Paix. Le IIe Congrès Mondial, convaincu que la Paix ne peut être garantie par la recherche d'un équilibre de forces entraînant la course aux armements, affirme que ces propositions ne donnent aucun avantage de puissance militaire à quelque nation que ce soit, mais qu'elles auront pour effet certain de faire échec à la guerre et d'accroître le bien-être et la sécurité de tous les peuples du monde.

VI

RESOLUTION

CONTRE LA PROPAGANDE DE GUERRE

Le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, considérant :

— que la propagande en vue d'une nouvelle guerre crée la plus grande menace pour la collaboration pacifique des peuples ;

— que cette progande constitue un des crimes les plus graves contre l'humanité;

— s'adresse aux parlements de tous les pays en leur demandant d'édicter une loi de protection de la paix, qui établisse le responsabilité pénale pour la propagande d'une nouvelle guerre, sous quelque forme que ce soit.

Le Congrès s'adresse aux Parlements de tous les pays en leur demandant d'assurer, dans l'intérêt du renforcement de la Paix, l'éducation des jeunes générations dans un esprit de collaboration avec les autres peuples et de respect pour les autres races et nations.

Le Congrès demande à tous les Partisans de la Paix, à tous les hommes et à toutes les femmes honnêtes dans tous les pays du monde de boycotter résolument les maisons d'édition et de production cinématographique, les organes de presse, les stations de radiodiffusion, les individus ou les organisations qui propagent directement ou indirectement la propagande de guerre; il leur demande également de protester énergiquement contre toutes les formes d'art et de littérature qui soutiennent une telle propagande.

Le Congrès s'adresse à tous les travailleurs de la presse, de la littérature, des arts, du cinéma, de l'éducation et de l'enseignement pour qu'ils se refusent à servir d'instruments à la propagande de guerre, propagande de meurtre et de haine entre les nations, et il leur demande de prendre une part active à la diffusion des idées de paix et à la compréhension entre les peuples.

VII

RESOLUTION SUR LA CONSOLIDATION ET LE DEVELOPPEMENT DES RELATIONS ECONOMIQUES ENTRE LES PAYS

Le passage d'une série de pays à l'économie de guerre porte un préjudice de plus en plus grand aux relations économiques et à l'échange entre les pays tant des matières premières que des produits industriels; il a des répercussions désastreuses sur le niveau de vie de nombreux peuples et fait également obstacle au progrès et à la coopération économique entre tous les pays. En même temps, la violation des relations économiques normales entre les pays est une source de conflits constituant une menace pour la Paix.

Partant des intérêts vitaux de la population de tous les pays désireux d'assainir la situation internationale, le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix estime indispensable :

— d'établir des relations commerciales normales entre les différents pays sur la base de conditions mutuellement avantageuses, satisfaisant les besoins des peuples, excluant la discrimination économique dans n'importe laquelle de ses expressions, assurant le développement de l'économie nationale et l'indépendance économique des Etats, grands et petits.

Prenant en considération le fait que le passage accéléré d'une série de pays à l'économie de guerre favorise les forces intéressées à la guerre et accentue par conséquent la menace de conflits militaires, le IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix propose aux Assemblées législatives de tous les pays d'adopter une loi abolissant les super-profits sur les commandes liées à la préparation à la guerre.

VIII

RESOLUTION SUR LA CONSOLIDATION ET LE DEVELOPPEMENT DES RELATIONS CULTURELLES ENTRE LES PAYS

En vue d'assurer une collaboration pacifique entre les peuples et leur compréhension mutuelle, le IIe Congrès des Partisans de la Paix estime nécessaire de prendre des mesures pour consolider et développer les relations culturelles entre les différents pays. Le Congrès recommande :

Dans le domaine de la Science :

— Contribuer à la création d'associations scientifiques internationales comprenant des savants de tous les pays;

— Organiser des congrès scientifiques dans les capitales des différents Etats à tour de rôle. Organiser des voyages de savants dans d'autres pays pour consolider des relations mutuelles et l'échange d'expériences scientifiques;

— Organiser l'échange des travaux scientifiques entre universités et grandes bibliothèques. Editer des bulletins périodiques avec des notices sur les travaux édités dans les différents pays;

— Organiser pendant les vacances des voyages de jeunes et d'étudiants, dans les autres pays.

Dans le domaine de l'Art :

— Organiser des tournées de troupes théâtrales, d'orchestres, d'ensembles d'artistes, ainsi que la diffusion de films;

— Organiser des festivals de musique familiarisant les auditeurs avec la musique des autres pays;

— Organiser des expositions artistiques; organiser des expositions d'art populaire;

— Inviter largement les représentants des autres pays à prendre part aux solennités nationales consacrées à des dates mémorables de l'Histoire, de la Science, de la Littérature et des Arts;

— Organiser la célébration de ces dates dans les autres pays;

— Contribuer à la traduction d'œuvres littéraires, à l'édition et à l'exécution d'œuvres musicales; échanger ces œuvres ainsi que des notices et des articles ou critiques de ces œuvres;

— Editer largement les classiques de la littérature, de la musique mondiale, du cinéma et reproduire les tableaux, sculptures et morceaux d'architecture de renommée mondiale;

— Contribuer au développement, dans chaque pays, de la technique de la traduction d'œuvres étrangères.

Pour l'élargissement du Mouvement de la Paix

IX

RESOLUTION RELATIVE A L'ORGANISATION

L'ACTION engagée par les Partisans de la Paix depuis le Congrès de Paris a trouvé par l'Appel de Stockholm une résonance universelle et l'appui de centaines de millions d'hommes et de femmes; elle s'est développée dans l'élan puissant des peuples qui ont participé activement au débat instauré autour du IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix.

L'importance et l'ampleur des perspectives de Paix que les propositions issues du Congrès ouvrent devant les peuples répondent à l'élargissement du mouvement pour la Paix, à la variété de la représentation nationale, politique, sociale et religieuse réalisée dans ces Assises Mondiales, à l'ampleur et à la liberté des débats qui se sont ouverts.

La discussion, l'approbation et le soutien actif de ces propositions par les peuples auxquels elles sont présentées peuvent imposer la réalisation des espoirs que l'Humanité a placés dans l'idée des Nations Unies.

Des volontés de Paix nouvelles et puissantes s'unissent aux nôtres.

Nous constatons avec satisfaction que les conditions sont réunies pour une collaboration avec de nombreuses associations, collectivités culturelles ou religieuses, organisations pacifistes ou courants d'opinion tels que les quakers, les mondialistes, les courants en faveur de la neutralité et autres, orientés vers l'effort pour le maintien de la paix.

Grâce à ces efforts communs, nous pourrons assurer de façon permanente une possibilité de rencontre et d'action pacifique des peuples tout en insistant auprès de l'O.N.U. sur sa mission, qui est d'être, non l'instrument d'une quelconque hégémonie, mais le terrain d'entente entre les gouvernements. Ce qui implique pour elle des devoirs impérieux vis-à-vis des peuples.

De telles tâches, que la responsabilité du mouvement nous commande, le rôle que la gravité de la situation internationale impose aux Partisans de la Paix, nous ont inspiré la proposition de créer le Conseil Mondial de la Paix. Tout peuple, tout groupement, tout courant d'opinion pacifique qui veut travailler pour la réalisation de telle ou telle proposition de Paix élaborée par le Congrès Mondial à sa place dans le Conseil Mondial de la Paix et pourra y envoyer ses représentants.

En conséquence, le Conseil Mondial de la Paix reçoit du Congrès Mondial le mandat d'accueillir dans son sein les représentants de toutes les forces qui s'engagent dans une action pratique en faveur de la Paix.

X

RESOLUTION FINANCIERE

Devant le développement sans cesse accru de notre mouvement et l'ampleur de ses tâches nouvelles qui exigent des ressources permettant d'assurer le fonctionnement régulier de ses organismes et l'établissement d'un appareil administratif et technique correspondant à son importance, le IIe Congrès Mondial décide ce qui suit :

1° Chaque Comité National ou Organisation Internationale adhérente versera une cotisation sur une base et dans des conditions qui seront déterminées par les organismes élus par le Congrès;

2° La campagne du Fonds Mondial de la Paix continue. Toutes les initiatives devront être recherchées et appliquées par les comités nationaux et locaux afin d'assurer son plein succès.

Il importe que chaque adhérent à notre mouvement participe à l'effort de collectage des fonds. La contribution personnelle de millions d'hommes et de femmes pacifiques doit être comprise par tous comme indispensable à la réalisation des objectifs de notre Congrès.

I

MANIFESTO TO THE PEOPLES OF THE WORLD

WAR threatens mankind : every child, every woman, every man.

The United Nations is not fulfilling the hopes placed in it by the people to ensure peace and security.

All human life and mankind's cultural heritage are in peril.

The people would cling to the hope that the United Nations will return resolutely to the principles upon which it was founded after the Second World War, and which consisted of securing freedom, peace and mutual respect between all peoples.

More and more the peoples of the world are putting their hope in themselves—in their determination and in their good will.

Every thinking person knows that he who says " War is inevitable " slanders mankind.

You, who read this message proclaimed in the name of the peoples of eighty nations, represented at the Second World Peace Congress in Warsaw, must never forget that the fight for peace is your own fight. You should know that hundreds of millions of defenders of peace join in stretching out their hands to you. They invite you to take part in the noblest battle ever engaged in by a humanity confident of its future.

We cannot wait for peace. We must win it.

Join your will to ours in demanding the cessation of the war which rages in Korea and which may set the world ablaze. Stand up with us in opposing the attempt to resow the seeds of war in Germany and Japan.

Together with 500 million human beings who signed the Stockholm Appeal, we demand the abolition of atomic weapons, general disarmament, and controls to accomplish this. The strict control of general disarmament and of the destruction of atomic weapons is technically possible. What is needed is the will to do it.

We demand the outlawing of war propaganda.

Let us press before all parliaments, all governments and the General Assembly of the United Nations for the peace proposals put forward by this Second World Peace Congress.

The power of the forces of peace throughout the world is great enough, the voice of free men is strong enough, for us together to secure a meeting of the representatives of the five Great Powers.

The Second World Peace Congress provides, with unprecedented force, the proof that men and women gathered from the five continents of the world can agree, despite great differences of opinion, in order to dispel the scourge of war and to maintain peace.

Let the governments follow this example and peace will be saved !

II

APPEAL TO THE UNITED NATIONS

When the peoples of the world created the United Nations, they endowed it with their hopes. The greatest of these was the hope for peace.

Today, however, war upsets the peaceful life of many peoples and threatens tomorrow to upset the peace of all mankind.

If the United Nations is not fulfilling that great hope reposed in it by all the peoples of the world, both those whose governments are represented in it and those not yet represented therein—if the United Nations is not guaranteeing mankind security and peace, this is because it is being influenced by forces which have disregarded the only path to universal peace : the search for general agreement.

If the United Nations is to realise the hopes that the peoples have always reposed in it, it must return to the path marked out for it by the peoples since the days of its foundation, and, as a first step in this direction, must secure as soon as possible the calling together of a meeting of the five great powers : the Chinese People's Republic, France, Great Britain, the United States of America and the Soviet Union, for the examination and peaceful settlement of current differences.

The Second World Congress of the Defenders of Peace, comprising delegates of eighty countries and expressing the true voice of a humanity longing for peace, demands that immediate consideration be given by the United Nations, and by the parliaments to which the governments of the various countries are responsible, to the following proposals designed to restore confidence among all countries, regardless of their respective systems, and to maintain and re-establish peace :

1.—In view of the fact that the war now raging in Korea is not only bringing incalculable disaster upon the people of Korea, but also threatens to become a general war, we demand the cessation of hostilities, the withdrawal from Korea of foreign armies, and the peaceful settlement of the internal conflict between the two parts of Korea, with the participation of the representatives of the Korean people. We demand that the problem be dealt with by the Security Council in its full composition—that is, including the lawful representatives of the Chinese People's Republic.

We call for the termination of the intervention by American armed forces on the Chinese island of Formosa (Taiwan) and the cessation of hostilities against the Republic of Viet Nam, military operations which also carry the threat of world war.

2.—We categorically condemn every move made and measure taken, violating the international agreements which forbid the rearmament of Germany and Japan. These moves and measures constitute a grave threat to peace. We urgently demand the conclusion of a peace treaty with a united and demilitarized Germany, as well as with Japan, and the withdrawal from both these countries of the forces of occupation.

3.—We consider the violence employed to hold peoples in a state of dependence and colonial subjection as a powerful menace to the cause of peace and we proclaim the right of those people to freedom and independence. At the same time we raise our voices against every form of racial discrimination, for it promotes hatred between peoples and endangers the peace.

4.—We consider it necessary to expose the attempts made by the supporters of aggression to confuse the very meaning of what constitutes aggression and to intervene, under one pretext or another, in the internal affairs of other nations.

We declare that no political, strategic or economic considerations, no ground deriving from the internal situation or any internal conflict in one or another state, can justify armed intervention by any other state. That state commits the crime of aggression which first employs armed force under any pretext whatever, against another state.

5.—We hold that propaganda for a new war constitutes a grave threat to the peaceful co-operation of the peoples, and we therefore hold it to be a crime of the deepest gravity against humanity.

We appeal to the parliaments of all countries to enact a "Law for the Protection of Peace," which shall render all propaganda for a new war, in any form whatsoever, liable to criminal prosecution.

6.—In view of the fact that all decent persons, regardless of their political views, regard the ruthless mass destruction of civilian populations in Korea as a crime against humanity, we demand that a competent International Court be appointed to examine the crimes committed during the war in Korea, and in particular the question of the responsibility of General MacArthur.

7.—Voicing the demands of peoples who bear upon their shoulders the heavy burdens of military budgets, and firmly resolved to guarantee humanity a firm and stable peace, we present for the consideration of the United Nations, of all parliaments and of all peoples the following proposals :

— Unconditional prohibition of all manner of atomic weapons, and of bacteriological, chemical, poisonous, radioactive and all other devices of mass destruction ;

— Denunciation as a war criminal of that government which henceforth is the first to use these weapons.

The Second World Peace Congress, mindful of its responsibility to the people, appeals, with equal earnestness, to the great powers and calls upon them to launch, during the years 1951 and 1952, a gradual, simultaneous and similarly proportioned reduction of all their land, sea and air armed forces of from one third to one half of their present size. Such a step, by putting a definite end to the armaments race, will diminish the risks of aggression. It will allow the lightening of the costs which burden the budgets of States and weigh heavily on all sections of the people. It will allow also the re-establishment of international confidence and the necessary co-operation between all nations, regardless of their social system.

The Congress declares that the controls for prohibiting atomic weapons and all weapons of mass destruction, as well as all conventional arms, are technically possible. An international body, staffed by qualified inspectors, should be set up within the framework of the Security Council and should be made responsible for the control of the reduction of conventional arms as well as the prohibition of atomic, bacteriological, chemical and other weapons. These controls, to be effective, must apply not only to military forces, existing armaments and arms production as declared by each nation, but also, on the demand of the international control commission, must be extended to include the inspection of military forces, existing armaments and arms production which is suspected beyond what has been declared. These proposals for the reduction of armed forces constitute a first step on the road to general and complete disarmament, the final goal of all defenders of peace.

The Second World Congress, convinced that peace cannot be secured through an armaments race seeking a balance of forces, holds that these proposals give no military advantage to any country, but that they would result in halting the drive to war and in advancing the well-being and security of all the peoples of the world.

8.—We emphasise that, in certain countries, the passage from a peace economy to a war economy is increasingly disturbing normal economic relations and the interchange between countries both of raw materials and industrial goods. It is our view that this exerts a harmful influence on the standards of living of many peoples, that it raises obstacles to economic progress and business relations, and that this situation is a source of conflicts endangering the peace of the world.

Taking into consideration the vital interests of the populations of all countries, and with the desire to improve conditions throughout the world, we urge the restoration of normal trading relations between the countries on the basis of mutual advantage, satisfying the requirements of the peoples concerned, excluding economic discrimination in any form and safeguarding the development of each national economy and the economic independence of states, both large and small.

9.—We hold that obstructions of cultural relations among the peoples tends to quarrelling and loss of mutual understanding and creates a climate of distrust, favourable to propaganda for war.

We consider that on the other hand, the strengthening of cultural relations between the peoples creates conditions favourable to mutual understanding and strengthens their trust in the general struggle for peace.

Accordingly, we appeal to all governments, urging them to contribute towards bettering cultural relations among the peoples, in order to enable them to become better acquainted with each other's treasures in the field of culture. We appeal to them to facilitate the organisation of international conferences of persons active in the field of culture, the mutual exchange of visits and the publication and wide diffusion of the literature and art of other countries.

We draw the attention of the United Nations to the fact that, while calling upon it to justify the hopes reposed in it by the peoples of the world, we are at the same time undertaking the establishment of a World Council of Peace.

The World Council of Peace shall be a body embracing representatives of all the peoples of the world, those within the United Nations and those not yet represented therein, and also countries still dependent and colonial,

It shall call upon the United Nations to fulfil its duty to strengthen and develop peaceful co-operation between all countries.

It shall assume the lofty task of securing a firm and lasting peace that shall respond to the vital interests of all nations.

The World Council of Peace will, in short, prove before mankind that, despite all present difficulties, which must in no wise be minimised, we shall accomplish the great mission of peace upon which we have embarked.

TEXTS ELABORATED BY THE COMMISSIONS OF THE WORLD PEACE CONGRESS

These texts which follow served as the basis for preparation of the two documents "Manifesto to the Peoples of the World" and the "Address to the United Nations." The adoption by the Congress of these two major texts therefore carries with it the approval of the following material.

III

RESOLUTION ON THE VICTIMS OF REPRESSION

In a number of countries today peace defenders are being subjected to police persecution.

In Latin America, in the United States, in France, in Italy and in the dependent countries of Asia and Africa thousands of them have been imprisoned.

There are many who, although elected delegates, have been unable to come to our Congress.

Meetings in favour of Peace are forbidden. Defenders of Peace are fired on by the police and massacred.

Even scientists are not free from persecution.

The Second World Peace Congress salutes the victims of police terror. It voices its strong protest against the persecution of peace defenders.

The Congress demands the immediate release of all victims of police terror. It calls upon the peoples of the whole world to express their solidarity with these noble defenders of peace, to help in the demand for their release, to defend and protect all those in the whole world who are fighting for peace.

IV

RESOLUTION DEFINING AGGRESSION

(1) The aggressor is that state which first uses armed force, under any pretext, against another state.

(2) No political, economic or strategic consideration, no pretext based on the internal situation of a state, can justify armed intervention.

V

RESOLUTION FOR THE PROHIBITION OF ATOMIC WEAPONS AND FOR GENERAL DISARMAMENT

THE Second World Peace Congress, having announced with deep satisfaction that more than 500 million human beings throughout the world have already expressed their desire for peace by signing the Stockholm Appeal for the banning of atomic weapons;

Voicing this urgent demand of all peoples,

Voicing the anxieties which are mounting, in the face of the perils of war, among peoples crushed with ever-increasing military expenditure,

Desiring to contribute to the building of a stable and enduring peace,

APPEALS solemnly to the United Nations, to the parliaments and to all peoples, and submits to them the following proposals :

— Unconditional prohibition of all types of atomic, bacteriological, chemical, poisonous, radioactive weapons and all other means of mass destruction ;

— Denunciation as a war criminal of that government which henceforth is the first to use these weapons.

The Second World Congress, mindful of its responsibility to the people, appeals, with equal earnestness, to the great powers and calls upon them to launch, during the years of 1951 and 1952, a gradual, simultaneous and similarly proportioned reduction of all their land, sea and air forces of from one third to one half of their present size. Such a step, by putting a definite end to the armaments race, will diminish the risks of aggression. It will allow the lightening of the costs which burden the budgets of States and weigh heavily on all sections of the people. It will allow also the re-establishment of international confidence and the necessary co-operation between all nations, regardless of their social systems.

The Congress declares that the controls for prohibiting atomic weapons and all weapons of mass destruction, as well as all conventional arms, are technically possible.

An international body, staffed by qualified inspectors, should be set up within the framework of the Security Council, and should be made responsible for the control of the reduction of conventional arms as well as the prohibition of atomic, bacteriological, chemical and other weapons.

These controls, to be effective, must apply not only to military forces, existing armaments and arms production as declared by each nation, but also, on the demand of the international control commission, must be extended to include the inspection of military forces, existing armaments and arms production which is suspected beyond what has been declared. These proposals for the reduction of armed forces constitute a first step on the road to general and complete disarmament, the final goal of all defenders of peace.

The Second World Congress, convinced that peace cannot be secured through an armaments race seeking a balance of forces, holds that these proposals give no military advantage to any country, but that they would result in halting the drive to war and in advancing the well-being and security of all the peoples of the world.

VI

RESOLUTION AGAINST WAR PROPAGANDA

THE Second World Congress of the Defenders of Peace, considering :

— That the propaganda favouring war carried on in some countries creates the greatest threat to the peaceful co-operation of peoples ;

— That the propaganda favouring war is therefore one of the gravest crimes against humanity ;

— APPEALS to the parliaments of all countries to enact a " Law for the Protection of Peace," rendering all propaganda for a new war, in any form whatsoever, liable to criminal prosecution.

The Congress appeals to the parliaments of all countries, in the interest of strengthening peace, to provide for the education of the younger generation in a spirit of co-operation with other peoples and of respect for other races and nations.

The Congress appeals to all defenders of peace, to all honest men and women in all countries of the world, to boycott firmly publishing houses, film-producers, press organs, broadcasting stations, individuals and organisations which spread, directly or indirectly, propaganda favouring war. We ask them also to protest vehemently against all forms of art and litterature which support such propaganda.

The Congress appeals to all workers of the press, in literature, in the arts, in the cinema, in education, to refuse to allow themselves or their professional media to be used as instruments of propaganda of hatred and war among the nations, and to take an active part in spreading the principles of peace and mutual understanding amongst the peoples.

VII

RESOLUTION ON THE STRENGTHENING AND DEVELOPMENT OF ECONOMIC RELATIONS BETWEEN COUNTRIES

With a series of countries passing over to a war economy, more and more harm is done to economic relations between the different countries and to the exchange of raw materials as well as of finished industrial products. This leads to disastrous repercussions on the standard of living of numerous peoples. At the same time a barrier is put in the way of progress and economic co-operation.

The rupture of normal economic relations is a source of conflict and constitutes a menace to peace.

The Second World Peace Congress, considering the vital interests of the peoples of every country and wishing to create a healthier international situation, regards as indispensable the following points :

— The establishment of normal commercial relations between the different countries, based on mutually advantageous conditions that satisfy the needs of the peoples ;

— The ending of economic discrimination in whatever form, and the development of each national economy and the economic independence of states, great and small.

Considering that the rapid building up of a war economy in a series of countries strengthens those forces that are interested in war, and consequently increases the danger of armed conflict, this Second World Congress of the Defenders of Peace proposes that the legislative assemblies of all countries promulgate a law abolishing super-profits on contracts in any way connected with war preparations.

VIII

RESOLUTION ON THE STRENGTHENING AND DEVELOPMENT OF CULTURAL RELATIONS BETWEEN COUNTRIES

With a view to ensuring peaceful collaboration and mutual understanding between peoples, the Second World Congress of the Defenders of Peace considers it necessary to take measures for the strenthening and development of cultural relations between the different countries. The Congress recommends:

In the Field of Science:

— The creation of international scientific associations to include scientists from every country;

— The organisation of scientific congresses in the capitals of each state in turn. Organisation of visits of scientists to other countries for closer mutual relations and for the exchange of scientific experience;

— Exchange of literature between universities and big libraries. Publication of regular bulletins with notes on material published in the different countries;

— The organisation of visits to other countries for young people, students, etc., during holidays.

In the Field of the Arts :

— The organisation of tours for theatrical companies, orchestras, ballet companies and outstanding representatives of the arts, as well as the distribution of films;

— The organisation of music festivals, to familiarise listeners with the music of other countries;

— The organisation of exhibitions of art and of folk art ;

— Invitations to representatives of other countries to take part in the celebrations of national commemorations of important dates in history, science, literature and the arts. Commemoration of these dates in other countries;

— The translation of literary works, the publication and performance of musical works. Exchange of these as well as notes and articles or critical statements about them;

— Widespread publication of world classics in literature and in music and reproduction of paintings, sculptures and world-famous examples of architecture;

— The development, in each country, of the art of translation of literary works from other languages.

IX

RESOLUTION ON ORGANISATION

THE action undertaken by the Defenders of Peace since the Paris Congress has found through the Stockholm Appeal a response throughout the world in the support of hundreds of millions of men and women. It has developed into the powerful movement of the peoples who have taken an active part in the discussions around the Second World Peace Congress.

The importance of the real prospects for peace and the vistas opened up before the peoples by the proposals issuing from this Congress, correspond to the widening of the peace movement, to the varied nature of the national, political, social and religious representation which has been achieved in this World Assembly and to the breadth and freedom of the debates which have taken place.

Discussion, approval and active support of these proposals by the peoples to whom they are presented can impose the fulfilment of the hopes which humanity has placed in the ideal of the United Nations. New and more powerful forces for peace are awakening and joining ours.

We note with satisfaction that conditions have arisen for co-operation between numerous organisations: cultural and religious bodies, pacifist groups like the Quakers, World Government groups, adherents of neutrality and others seeking to maintain peace.

Thanks to these combined efforts, we will be able to assure permanently a possibility for all peoples to meet and act for peace, while insisting that the United Nations fulfill its mission, which is to be not the instrument for one or any group of powers, but the place for reaching agreement between governments—a mission that imposes on the United Nations urgent duties on behalf of the people.

These tasks, imposed upon us by the responsibility of the peace movement and by the role which the Defenders of Peace must play in the present serious international situation, have led us to propose the creation of the World Peace Council.

Any people, any group, any current of peace-loving opinion willing to work for the realisation of one or other of the proposals for peace drawn up by the World Congress has a place in the World Peace Council, and can send its representatives to the Council.

Consequently, the World Peace Council is given by the World Congress the mandate to gather the representatives of all forces which are undertaking effective action on behalf of peace.

X

RESOLUTION ON FINANCES

In the face of the ever-growing development of our movement and of the magnitude of its new tasks which demand funds providing for the regular functioning of its bodies and the establishment of an administrative and technical staff adequate to its importance, the Second World Congress decides the following:

I.—Each national committee or affiliated international organisation shall pay dues on a basis and under conditions which will be determined by the bodies elected by the Congress;

II.—The World Peace Fund drive goes on. Every new activity must be re-examined and carried out by the local and national committees, in order to assure its full success.

It is important that every adherent to our movement take part in the collection of funds. The personal contributions of millions of men and women who want peace must be understood by all as indispensable for the realisation of the goals of our Congress.

A LAW TO PUNISH WAR PROPAGANDA IS ENACTED BY THE PARLIAMENT OF THE GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

On Wednesday the 14th December a bill relating to the protection of peace was laid on the table of the People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic at the request of the German Committee of the Defenders of Peace. It prescribes sever penalties for those who are guilty of propaganda favouring war within the territories of the Republic, and it draws its inspiration from the recommendations of the Second World Peace Congress.

This bill was passed unanimously on the 15th December by the People's Chamber. The law declares :

« WAR PROPAGANDA UNDER WHATEVER FORM IT MAY APPEAR CONSTITUTES ONE OF THE GRAVEST CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY ». Severe penalties are then prescribed for tose who prepare or attempt to prepare a new war.

RUMANIA

On the 16th December we received the following telegram : « Friday December 15, National Assembly of Rumanian Democratic Republic unanimously passed law for defence of peace. Bill was introduced by Prime Minister Dr Petre Groza. Debate was opened by Academician Mihail Sadoveanu, President of Permanent Committee for Defence of Peace of Rumanian People's Republic and Member World Peace Council.

Text of the Law

SECTION 1. — War Propaganda and any act likely to threaten peace constitute a grave crime against the country and against Humanity, because they involve a danger to the lives of men, to human progress, and to the cultural and material wealth of humanity, and bring into peril the peaceful collaboration between the nations.

SECTION 2. — Propaganda for the instigation of war, the dissemination of tendentious or false news likely to be of service to the cause of war, or any other demonstration in favour of the unleashing of a new war read or spoken by means of the press, radio, cinema or other means of propaganda, shall constitute a crime menacing the people's peace.

SECTION 3. — The crime of war propaganda against the people's peace is punishable by hard labour from five to twenty-five years and by total or partial confiscation of wealth.

Signed : Permanent Committee for Defence of Peace of Rumanian People's Republic.

THE MOVEMENT DEVELOPS ON THE BASIS OF THE WORK OF CONGRESS

In Poland

The deep effect upon the people caused by the holding of the Second World Peace Congress in Warsaw has by no means died away yet. The whole population is carrying on the echo of the Congress and continues to participate as a body in the meetings organised everywhere on the basis of districts and localities for the reporting back of delegates. For its part, the press continues to devote a considerable amount of space to the movement of the Defenders of Peace throughout the world.

Some foreign delegates to the Congress, who have stayed on in Poland, are paying visits to the principal centres of cultural, historical and industrial interest, where they are being warmly received and entertained by the public.

Convocation of the Czechoslovak Congress of the Defenders of Peace

DECEMBER 12. — The Bureau of the Czechoslovak Committee of the Defenders of Peace held a meeting last Friday. Mme Anezka Hodinova-Spurna, Chairman of the Committee, emphasised the future work called for by the Second World Congress.

The first National Congress of the Czechoslovak Defenders of Peace, which will be held on the 20th and 21st January in Prague, will aim to examine the work for peace already accomplished in Czechoslovakia and to elaborate a plan of action for the following period.

The bureau carried a resolution approving the points contained in the Warsaw resolution, and greeted the establishment of the World Peace Council which it undertakes to give its full support. Finally, the bureau addressed an appeal to all the organisations in the country to publicise the decisions and resolutions of the Warsaw Peace Congress.

Reporting back in Hungary

In the towns and villages of Hungary countless meetings took place in the week following the Warsaw Congress. For a short break, the workers left their tools, the engineers their instruments, and the working peasants held meetings at their parish Houses of Culture to hear from the delegates who had represented them at Warsaw their reports on the Second World Congress of the Defenders of Peace.

The Hungarian delegates were everywhere received with marks of enthusiasm and warm applause when they announced the decisions of the Congress.

In France

Immediately following the return from Warsaw, a press conference of the Fighters for Peace and Liberty, held at Paris on the 29th November, distributed to the press and to the leaders of the French Peace Committee a report on the work and the decisions of the Congress.

On the 30th November, a most impressive public meeting took place in the Velodrome d'Hiver in Paris. A large assembly of the defenders of peace heard addresses from Pastor Bosc, General Jara, Messrs Angeletti, d'Astier de la Vigerie, Farge, etc., and they enthusiastically gave their approval for the resolutions of the Congress.

Statement by the Permanent Commission of the Fighters for Peace

On the 8th December, the National Permanent Commission of the Fighters for Peace and Liberty published a statement in which it expressed its satisfaction at the enthusiastic reception with which the decisions of the Second World Congress had met in France.

The statement recommended that these decisions, and especially the Address to the United Nations, should be submitted to the widest possible public discussion, so that the approval of all Frenchmen could be obtained for them.

The statement went on, « Statements of approval for the Address to the United Nations will need to be committed to writing signed by men and women who are well known and respected, and indicating the number of supporters in each case and the observations that they have made ».

Our elected representatives, the Government of France, and the international authorities should know the wishes of a nation which is united in its desire for peace.

The discussion, the approval and the support of the Address to the United Nations will find their legitimate extension in such an immediate activity on the part of all the Defenders of Peace as the gravity of the present international situation demands.

Resolution of the National Permanent Commission on German Rearmament

At this time when the danger of a generalised war has been aggravated by the inertia of the French Government in the face of the menaces of an extension of the Korean War and the use of the atomic bomb, France now learns that the rearmament of the Germany of Bonn has been accepted by this same Government which, exceeding the terms of its own promises, the decisions of Parliament, and the people's will, has just disclosed that it is accepting the sacrifice of our country.

The Ruhr is again becoming an arsenal. Nazi generals are about to be given their troops again.

War material destined for Germany is being allowed to cross our territory.

In the name of the people of France, twice betrayed as they have been in the course of ten years, the Permanent Commission of the Fighters for Peace and Liberty voices the protests of a nation which will not die.

From the Korea of Syngman Rhee to the Germany of Adenauer, the plot against the peace is spreading to menace the whole world. France is in danger of becoming another bridgehead in a war which, in order to succeed, has need of the nazis.

We call upon all Frenchmen to take greater heed of this danger which their resolve, based as it is upon knowledge and experience, has till today managed to hold off.

We call upon them solemnly to repudiate the undertaking given by the Paris Government. We ask them to raise their voices against this utter disregard of the treaties which guarantee the security of our country.

We call upon them to demand with all the urgency at their command a meeting of the Big Five so that an attempt can be made to seek out the conditions for such a lowering of present international tensions as would bring existing wars to an end and put a stop to the mad armaments race.

All defenders of peace, all patriotic Frenchmen, will demonstrate their opposition, and will draw themselves up to protest against an act which is putting in peril the cause of France and the cause of peace.

Return of the Italian Delegation from Warsaw

The first Italian delegates to return arrived in Italy on the 24th November. On the same day, the Mayor of Bologna, M. Dozza, held a press conference at the Farnese Palace.

The Florence delegates were welcomed back by a large crowd and were immediately overwelmed with questions. Among this group was Professor Porzio, dean of the Italian delegates. At the Imperial Theatre on the morning of the 26th November, the delegates spoke to an impressive crowd. Professor Saconi, Dean of the Chemistry Faculty of the University of Florence spoke on the political effect of the Congress and gave a short report of the various proposals and speeches.

At Ancona the Mayor, M. Barchiesi, who is an engineer and a republican, addressed an audience which overflowed the Goldono Theatre. He gave a detailed description of the visits he had made to the factories, workers' dwellings, monuments and restaurants of Warsaw.

The delegates from Genoa, returned to the city in the evening of the 25th and were welcomed by the Mayor, M. Adamoli and a great crowd of the townspeople who showed the delegates in no uncertain manner their sympathy and support for the defenders of peace. On the 28th, a great popular demonstration took place at the palace of the Dukes to greet the delegates of Genoa. This was followed on the same day by a press conference where the delegates faced a countless barrage of questions from the journalists.

Only a few days earlier at Genoa, the Mayor, M. Amadoli, had already held an important press conference on similar questions.

M. Francesco Scotti, a Vice-President of the Milan Peace Committee, who had also been elected at Warsaw to the World Peace Council, emphasised on his return the important effects of the Congress and the ever more impressive broadening of the front of the defenders of peace which now included among its members independents, monarchists, intellectuals of all backgrounds, small and middle businessmen, tradesmen, clerks, workers and teachers, and many other categories. They had been in a position to notice that every voice had an opportunity to be heard, and every opinion to be expressed, whether favourable or not.

A meeting was also held at Naples where Messrs Cerabona, Palermo, and Dr Valenzi as well as the Monarchist Councillor Parise, were warmly greeted. Mr Arturo Labriola gave an address in which he described the impressive assembly at Warsaw.

On the 29th, at Catanzaro, Gianni Di Stefano, on his return from Warsaw, spoke at a press conference organised by the Regional Peace Committee. On the following days, throughout the Province of Catanzaro, at Crotone, Nicastro, Vibo end elsewhere, similar demonstrations and meetings took place to bring the results and successes of the Congress to the knowledge of the people.

In Trieste

The following letter has come to hand from the Trieste Peace Committee :

« Dear Friends,

« We are glad to advise you that the delegates back from the Warsaw Congress are in process of bringing the Warsaw decisions to the public through a series of dozens of meetings throughout the Anglo-American zone of the Free Territory of Trieste. In the Yugoslav zone our movement is prohibited. Down to the present time we have held altogether fifteen meetings since the Congress.

« On the 10th December we held a general meeting of representatives of all the peace committees and worked out a program of activities for two months covering a broadening of the movement and a very extensive publicity for the Warsaw decisions, particularly those sections dealing with prohibition of atomic weapons and disarmament. »

In China

From Peking we have received a telegram concluding : « We sincerely and unreservedly support the Congress. We shall engage to the full in practical activities to realise these aims. »

Signed : Third Session of Second Plenary Assembly of the Union for the Progress of Democracy in China.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN DECLARES...

The recent declarations of President Truman, such as that of the 30th November where he agreed that the use of the atomic bomb « had always been under active consideration », his announcement of further increases in the U.S. armed forces, and his declaration of emergency have caused a number of violent reactions in many countries. There has been a wave of protests, and many addresses, messages, demonstrations, stop-work meetings and public gatherings of protest.

These, however, have not stopped the series of hysterical and warlike declarations so fashionable in the United States, and we have seen such statements from Governor Dewey, Senator Brewster and even the Reverend Henry Knox Sherrill, President of the National Council of the Churches of Christ for whom « the use of the atomic bomb is not necessarily immoral ».

The voices of the people in opposition to such irresponsible statements are becoming increasingly heard throughout the world, however, and we are finding a greater number of protests being reported in the international press, such as the following.

Petition to the House of Commons Against the Atomic Bomb

According to the London Daily Herald, a petition with 1,300,000 signatures, calling for the banning of all atomic weapons was presented to the House of Commons by Mr Sidney Silverman, Labour Member for Nelson and Colne. Before doing so he said, « It is my duty to draw attention to the fact that doubts have been expressed as to the genuineness or good faith of certain sponsors, organisers or promoters of this petition. I have no concern with that, because I have no reason to doubt, and every reason to believe, that the signatures on this petition were validly attached ».

Statement of Dr Ralph Bunche 1950 Nobel Prize Winner

According to the New York Herald Tribune of the 14th December, Dr Ralph Bunche, Nobel Peace Prize winner for 1950, said at a press conference at Copenhagen, « I think all weapons should be banned as an important first step — not only the atom bomb. First and foremost, he added, it is necessary that all nations give their fullest support to the U.N. ». He added that even more important than the banning of weapons was the need for easing of East West tensions.

FOR A PEACEFUL SOLUTION OF THE KOREAN CONFLICT

Lord Boyd-Orr, Professor Julian Huxley, Mr J.-B. Priestley and other eminent personalities write to « The Times »

« To the Editor of the Times,

« Sir - The gravity of the crisis in the Far East has been underlined both by the latest military events and by the urgent mission that the Prime Minister has undertaken. In this mission, Mr Attlee enjoys the support of all parties in the House of Commons, as Mr Churchill and Mr Clement Davies made clear. It seems to us that others should also make known their support of the Premier's initiative and define what they believe to be the immediate essentials of policy. In our view the United Nations forces have advanced beyond the positions which the repelling of North Korean aggression demanded. Exactly what directives were issued to the U.N. commander, and what form assurances to the Peking Government took are not publicly known. We now urge that the United Nations should issue a statement of its intentions, in the most public and unambiguous form, and that this should include a declaration that if the Chinese forces halt their offensive no further U.N. advance will be attempted. No bombing operations, atomic or otherwise, should be launched by the United Nations in North Korea or Manchuria. The immediate objective must be a cease-fire, followed by the creation of a neutral zone between the contending forces. Once this is achieved, the chance exists of reaching a political agreement between the United Nations and Peking about the future of Korea.

« We further hold that, unfortunate though the refusal of the Chinese delegates to discuss the Korean crisis at Lake Success has been, it is at least intelligible in view of the continued unwillingness of the Security Council to recognise the fact that the Peking Government is now in control of continental China. We believe that the best hope for the future is to refuse any longer to recognise the representative of Chiang Kai-Shek and to invite Peking to accept a seat on the Security Council. We should also secure the cooperation of United Nations Powers, including, especially those of Asia, in setting up a U.N. commission to administer the whole of Korea in preparation for that « united and independent » régime which has been the avowed aim of U.N. policy. We believe that the friendship between the people of Britain and the United States will be strengthened by outspoken expressions of British opinion. The danger lies in equivocation, which may lead at a later stage to recrimination and misunderstanding. »

Yours faithfully,

(Lord) Michael Balcon Boyd-Orr of Brechin,
(Lord) Mearns, Frank Byers, Ritchie Calder,
(Lord) Chorley of Kendal, G. D. H. Cole,
Julian Huxley, David Low, Kingsley Martin,
Tom O'Brien, J. B. Priestley, V. S. Pritchett,

RESPONSE FROM FRENCH DEPUTIES AND OTHERS

The Editor of « The Times »,
Printing House Square,
LONDON E. C. 4

Sir - We read with the greatest interest the letter in your issue of the 6th December signed by Lord Boyd-Orr and other eminent British personalities concerning a peaceful solution of the conflict in the Far East.

We approve of the steps proposed by these persons with a view to the cessation of hostilities in Korea and the admission to the U.N.O. of the People's Government of China.

We have all taken up a position in our country in favour of an independent policy which would assure to France her liberty of action in the service of peace.

We consider that the existence, in each country, of a broad movement of public opinion in favour of negociation and the release of current international tensions constitutes one of the best guarantees against a third world war.

We also consider that contacts should be developed for the encouragement of free, broad and constructive discussions throughout the world between those who desire through negociation to reach a solution to current differences including the peaceful coexistence of opposing ideologies.

Yours faithfully,

Colonel Lecrivain-Servoz, Deputy; Jacques Bounin, former Commissaire de la République; Pierre Cot, Deputy, former Cabinet-Minister, General Van Gehuchten, General Tubert, Senator; Admiral Moullec, Councillor of the French Union; Master Stibbe, Advocate of the Paris Bar; Gilbert de Chambrun, Deputy; André Blumel, Advocate of the Paris Bar; Gilles Martinet, Editor of « l'Observateur »; Doctor René Tzank; M. de Barral, President of the Union of former Servicemen; Marius Apostolo, Member of Executive Committee of the Movement for Liberation of the People.

Certifying the signatures : Emmanuel d'Astier, Deputy, former Cabinet-Minister.

President Truman's Bomb Declaration Reaction of German Consumer Co-ops

The Board of Directors of the Consumers Co-operatives of the German Democratic Republic, representing its 2,500,000 members, addressed the following protest to Mr Trygve Lie, General Taylor and Mr Adenauer :

« It is with the greatest indignation and horror that we have learned of the threat of President Truman of the United States to employ the atomic bomb against the Korean people who are struggling for their liberty, and their faithful allies, the volunteers of the People's Republic of China. At this time, when the Foreign Affairs Ministers of eight peaceful states, meeting at Prague, have made a positive contribution to the maintenance of world peace by demanding a disarmament which covers all kinds of weapons and a complete prohibition against the use of the atomic bomb and other means of mass destruction, this latest threat of Truman's comes as a monstrous blow in the face for the peaceful peoples.

« In the face of such criminal designs, we join with all those men throughout the whole earth who now understand the extent of the menace to peace, in the resolve to carry on the fight for peace with renewed vigour. We join with all those who work for peace throughout the world in the conviction that in fighting for peace we are fighting for our lives.

« We understand that in the present situation we should reach a clear-cut decision wherever possible. For this reason we are energetically joining, in the name of our 2,500,000 members, in the demands of all progressive and peaceful men and women throughout the world, and we give our assurance that we shall do everything possible for the maintenance of peace. »

CHRISTMAS MESSAGE FROM PASTOR R. OTHMAR MULLNER

Pastor R. Othmar Mullner, of the German Evangelical Church at Frankfurt has addressed a Christmas message to all Ministers of the Evangelical Church in Germany, and has sent them also a plan for three Christmas sermons « on the struggle for world peace ».

Document drawn up by Pastor R. Othmar Mullner, of the Committee for the Struggle for Peace of Western Germany, Frankfurt-on-Main.

Dear Colleagues,

When some months ago I called upon all Evangelical Ministers to sign the Stockholm Appeal and to devote all their strength to an active struggle for peace on earth, the world had not yet obtained a clear idea of the great size to which this world movement for peace was destined to grow. Like a powerful river overflowing its banks, the struggle for peace on earth has found a place in all the domains of human thought and activity. What is more important for us is the fact that the Christian Churches have been called upon to resolve the question of « War or Peace ». The problem of remilitarisation has, moreover, overflowed the limits of pure politics and has become a question of faith and Christian conscience. Our pointers on this road of the developing struggle for peace are the resolution of the Synod at Essen, the now justly celebrated letter of Pastor Niemoeller to Chancellor Adenauer, and the statements of the Confessional Church Council which were quite remarkable in their content and their spirit.

Now, my dear colleagues, we must go further and put all our spiritual power and all the authority of the Church at the service of supporting peace on earth. There is no place more worthy or more appropriate for the proclamation of peace than the pulpits of our Churches. From this place above all, the words should ring out, « Peace on Earth and goodwill to all men » and « I cannot serve both God and man ».

Advent and Christmas Eve are approaching. I send you today, dear friends, the outlines for three sermons which might be useful at this time, both to you and your parishioners, in the struggle for world peace. How often the Church has had to suffer reproaches for giving her blessing to arms. That must not happen again. It is to our own German protestant Church which, in the resolution of the Essen Synod, the Niemoeller letter and the statements of the Confessional Church Council, has undertaken its greatest work since the Reform, that belongs the right and the duty to show the world that its Churchmen are the true servants of the Gospel.

Wishing you and your parishioners a Christmas within the spirit of a veritable peace on earth, and with my most cordial greetings for peace,

I remain,

Your colleague,

O. MULLNER.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRESSIVE UNION IN FRANCE

A Progressive Union, with a policy in external affairs of « active neutrality » was formed recently in Paris during a conference on a national basis which was attended by six hundred persons from various political groups, including some with no special affiliations. Groups represented included the Socialist Unity Party, Progressive Christians and left wing Radicals. Individual personalities included Messrs E. d'Astier de la Vigerie and Pierre Cot, both Progressive Republican Deputies, and Professor Weill-Hallé who with the two last-named are members of the World Peace Council. Others were Messrs Charles Serre (independent Deputy), Ambroise and Val (Young Republicans), Dr Tzank (Citizen of the World), d'Aragon (a left independent Deputy) and a group from the French Socialist Party.

The Paris newspaper « Libération » of the 1st December, discussing the general resolution resulting from this conference, says, « Concerning foreign policy, the national conference considers that France « should recover her independence and her liberty of action, to do which she must retire from the Atlantic coalition ». Taking into account the « necessary coexistence of the two economic systems and the diversity of French opinion on the subject », the conference went on to declare itself in favour of a policy of active neutrality for France. « This », it said, « would enable France to play a significant role in the settlement of international differences. It would make possible an effective opposition to any rearmament of Germany and would enable the United Nations Organisation to be brought back to its true purpose, which is not to provide the machinery for a theoretical majority to impose its will on what is, after all, the majority of humanity.

« The putting into effect of such a policy », went on the declaration, « should lead the government into taking certain steps with a view to obtaining the cessation of hostilities in Korea and the admission of People's China to the U.N.O., a meeting of the five permanent members of the Security Council and India with a view to the settlement of the Far East conflict and the prohibition of weapons of mass-destruction, with general, graduated and controlled disarmament ».

The resolution goes on to declare that « In order to obtain the necessary authority and respect in the introduction of such a policy, France should herself put into practice a policy of peace involving an immediate cessation of the war in Viet Nam... »

Declaration of the National Conference of French Progressives

« France is in anguish. After five years of precarious peace, a further world war appears imminent, yet she refuses to regard this as inevitable.

« Whatever the outcome of such a war, she knows that she could only be one of the principal victimes and would lose all hope of recovery.

« This anguish is aggravated by the war in Viet Nam which is turning into a national disaster and which and indeed represents a danger of bringing down the whole of the French Union.

« Public opinion recognises that France is now caught in the toils of an economic and military coalition whose dangerous character becomes daily more evident. The public is daily more aware that France is becoming less and less mistress of her own destiny.

« The military burdens of this coalition are prohibitive to reconstruction of the country, and equipment of our industries, and are imposing unbearable sacrifices on the working classes. The demands of this coalition have led the present government, in spite of its most solemn undertakings, to resign itself to the rearmament of Germany. These demands are leading it, finally, to place more restraints daily upon republican liberties by the development of a police régime, by changing from a peace to a war economy, and by creating conditions of national disorder conducive to civil war itself.

« But every day an increasing number of French men and women, before these imminent dangers, demonstrate their opposition to the government and seek out the means of reversing the present policy. Such a reversal could return to France her liberty of action in the service of her own national interest and her liberty to take the necessary steps in favour of peace.

« The French progressives, conscious of the source of France's present policy, is proposing to the broad favourable section of public opinion a regrouping of republican political forces around a limited programme likely to favour such a regrouping and to call forth a wide union without restrictions as to membership, with the object of acting in concert with those political groups which are claiming peace and social progress. »

M. CHAMBEIRON, PROGRESSIVE DEPUTY AT THE TRIBUNE OF THE FRENCH NATIONAL ASSEMBLY :

« The insults to Professor Joliot-Curie are a blow to the Prestige of France »

We believe that the press of the whole world, and all men with an interest in and respect for right and justice will be interested to know of the address made by M. Robert Chambeiron, French progressive Deputy, in the National Assembly concerning the rough-handling to which the great French scientist Frederic Joliot-Curie was subjected by the American occupation authorities in Germany.

Although holding a regular transit visa, M. Joliot-Curie was, as is already known, held for five hours at the German frontier before being turned back, and in the course of this five hours he had to undergo a rude interrogation.

Following this disgraceful insult, many protests were made, including that of M. Chambeiron, a portion of which follows :

Ladies and Gentlemen,

M. Gilbert de Chambrun made a brief allusion this morning to certain difficulties recently encountered by M. Frederic Joliot-Curie at the hands of the American authorities : I should like this evening to address myself to this incident at greater length, and I express the hope that the Minister of Foreign Affairs will in the name of the Government make some statement on this subject.

Last Tuesday, when replying to our colleague, M. Malleret-Joinville, the Prime Minister told us « that the Government was naturally interested in everything that happened to Frenchmen absent from their country ».

That is, we all agree, a very honourable purpose, but again we ask that the Government should see that there is harmony between its statements and its actions.

Just what is this affair of M. Joliot-Curie's ?

No doubt the Government is already quite familiar with it, but I am sure this assembly would like to have some details.

M. Frederic Joliot-Curie had to go by rail from Paris to Warsaw to take part in the work of the Second World Peace Congress, of whose permanent Committee he has been Chairman for eighteen months.

Why Warsaw ? I apologise for introducing this side-issue. I imagine that everyone knows that the World Congress of the Defenders of Peace was to be held in England, but that in spite of the solemn promise of the British Prime Minister the congress could not be held at Sheffield as planned because a large number of eminent persons were refused admission to Britain.

M. Joliot-Curie had asked for and obtained a visa from the appropriate authorities, that is to say from the office of the allied high commission in Germany — the bureau for travel-permits in Paris. He obtained a transit visa which enabled him to cross the American occupation zone in Germany... good for one return trip up till the 30th November. The outward journey — I give full credit to the French authorities for it — was completed without untoward incident.

He took part in the work of the Second World Congress of the Defenders of Peace, then he left the Polish capital on November 23.

But at Schirnding on the German frontier, the German authorities took his passport and refused to let him continue his journey, while his secretary, with an identical visa to his own was authorised to continue his journey across Germany.

M. Joliot-Curie was held for five hours in a railway station waiting-room and kept under constant watch by German uniformed police who interrogated him without the slightest respect whatever.

One of them gave him to understand that this discriminatory and, if I may say so, cheap action towards him had emanated from the American command : the American order had been received by the German frontier authorities even before M. Joliot-Curie's arrival.

I think that this Assembly will learn, not without some indignation, that M. Joliot-Curie was not even permitted to telephone the French authorities to inform them of his situation, that he was given no food, and was refused even a glass of water on the childish pretext that he was not in possession of dollars and so not able to pay for a meal.

Among the questions put to him was one that I cannot refrain from repeating to you. The German authorities asked him : « But what are you going to do in France ? » As if it was a matter for surprise that a Frenchman who had attended a congress abroad should return to his country, and as if it were not, indeed, more normal for M. Joliot-Curie to return to France than, for instance, that France should be invaded by the two thousand Germans who came in at Strasbourg without visas to attend an anti-French demonstration.

Finally M. Joliot-Curie was constrained to go back by rail to Prague. I should add that the Czechoslovak Government gave him such a welcome there as even the French Government seldom accords him.

The attitude of the press in connection with this matter has been most extraordinary. A number of journals, particularly those of the American press, have given to understand that M. Joliot-Curie could not continue his trip across Germany because of an irregularity in his visa. That is a falsehood. He possessed, as I have explained, a perfectly regular visa, given him by the authority which I mentioned a few moments ago, an authority which includes among its members, moreover, a representative of the French Government, as the Minister for Foreign Affairs has been good enough to agree. Moreover, the regularity of the visa was confirmed by our representative at Prague, who agreed that the visa of M. Joliot-Curie was in perfect order and that in principle it was perfectly in order for him to cross the American occupation zone to travel from Warsaw to Paris via Prague.

I have no hesitation in saying that the American authorities have no great admiration or consideration for the defenders of peace, but I add, in passing, that I do not believe that the hostility of the American authorities towards them will prevent the development of the peace forces throughout the world.

Returning to M. Joliot-Curie, however, I would put a very clear question to the Minister for Foreign Affairs : I am going to ask him what is he going to do, not only to protest against what may rightly be considered as an affront to a great Frenchman, but also to prevent the recurrence of such incidents ?

M. Joliot-Curie was not only unable to return to France by train as he wished, but a few days ago he also found himself unable to go in company with Mme Irene Joliot-Curie to attend the General Assembly of the Nobel Prizes, and still for the reason that the American authorities refused, or let it be understood that they would refuse, to allow him to cross German territory.

These insults to M. Joliot-Curie go far beyond being an affront to him personally. I consider them as insults to France herself. For these reasons I should like the Minister to tell us what he intends to do. For if it is a question af an insult to French prestige. I can assure him that that prestige is a great one in other conutries. I do not know whether the services he administers are always sufficiently conscious of the fact. Indeed I am not always sure that the Government itself is aware of the immense prestige that France has retained abroad. In this connection I should like to mention an incident. At Warsaw, in company with some of my parliamentary colleagues and with the thousands of delegates from every country in the world, we were present at a great demonstration during which 100,000 Polish people marched past the delegates to the congress. Well, what do you think pleased us most ? It was when these men and women passed in front of the French delegation and many of them cried « Vive la France ! ».

I would say to M. Daniel Mayer that when the Poles applaud France, it is the France of 1789, the France of the great traditions, the France of Liberty... and not the France which assassinates the people of Madagascar and which imprisons the fighters for liberty.

And what pleased us even more in Warsaw was that among those Poles who were crying « Vive la France » were many of the men and women that this government had chased from our country less than three months ago.

That, M. Minister, is the prestige of France, and the affronts to which M. Frederic Joliot-Curie was subjected were a blow to that prestige.

I appeal to you then, Mr Minister, to make a statement today and tell us that the Government will no longer tolerate such incidents. In spite of the blunders that the government has made, I ask you no longer to forget that great prestige that France enjoys, and to keep it in the forefront of your considerations, before every political consideration.

DEUXIÈME
CONGRÈS MONDIAL
DES PARTISANS
BULLETIN DE LA PAIX

DECEMBRE 1950.

Autour du IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix

REVUE DE PRESSE

Présentation :

Nous avons rassemblé, ci-dessous, à l'usage des Partisans de la Paix, de tous les pays, quelques notes sur ce que la presse a publié entre le début de Novembre et le début de décembre, à propos de la préparation du IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix, de l'empêchement mis par le gouvernement britannique à sa tenue à Sheffield, de ses travaux à Varsovie.

Il ne s'agit pas ici d'une revue complète de la presse mondiale. Nous n'avons pas encore en notre possession tous les éléments, venus des cinq continents, qui permettraient un tel travail, et d'ailleurs, celui-ci ne présenterait pas un intérêt historique. Il pourra être exécuté ultérieurement, et la présente esquisse d'une revue de presse aura une suite.

Q'uon ne s'étonne pas, au surplus, que la plus large place ait été faite ici aux journaux d'Europe Occidentale, les Français et les Britanniques, notamment. C'est d'abord qu'il eût été impossible de dépouiller rapidement l'énorme quantité de matériaux publiés sur le Congrès de la Paix par les innombrables journaux, périodiques et revues d'Union Soviétique et des pays de démocratie nouvelle, dont l'attachement aux forces pacifiques s'est si largement exprimé en cette occasion. C'est ensuite que la presse française et britannique, qui ont, en ce qui concerne le reste du monde, le plus fait écho aux informations concernant le Congrès, n'ont guère exprimé d'autres opinions que celles des journaux d'Amérique du Nord, d'Amérique Latine, d'Australie, desservis qu'ils sont par les mêmes agences de presse internationale.

Pour rapide et forcément sommaire qu'elle soit, la revue de presse que nous donnons ci-dessous, permet cependant de constater : — d'une part — et c'est l'observation essentielle — que la consigne de silence qu'ont accoutumé de recevoir, et d'observer, la plupart des « grands journaux d'information », a été rompue de la façon la plus éclatante, tant le mouvement d'opinion s'est trouvé puissant et passioné autour de ceux que la presse britannique a appelée: « peacemen », « les hommes de la paix ».

La présence à Varsovie de 130 journalistes de tous pays, parmi lesquels les envoyés spéciaux de toutes les grandes agences internationales, des plus grandes agences nationales, des plus grands journaux d'audience mondiale ou continentale, témoigne de cette rupture avec l'habitude d'un silence concerté.

D'autre part, c'est la deuxième constatation, que la présence à Varsovie de leurs envoyés spéciaux n'a pas empêché certains journaux et certaines agences de publier ou de transmettre des informations absolument dépourvues d'objectivité, voire des contre-vérités évidentes, ausi bien sur le Congrès lui-même que sur son cadre : Varsovie, et sur le peuple polonais.

Il faut en conclure seulement que le point 5 de l'Adresse à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, adoptée par le IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix, prend une particulière importance pour les journalistes honnêtes. Ce point 5, on le sait, demande aux Parlements d'établir la responsabilité pénale en ce qui concerne la propagande pour une nouvelle guerre, sous quelque forme que ce soit.

COMMENT LE GOUVERNEMENT BRITANNIQUE A EMPÊCHÉ LA TENUE A SHEFFIELD DU DEUXIÈME CONGRÈS MONDIAL DE LA PAIX

Le 17 août 1950, le Bureau élargi du Comité Mondial des Partisans de la Paix adoptait une résolution fixant les bases de discussions à de larges débats populaires en vue de la préparation du deuxième Congrès Mondial de la Paix. Il fixait le lieu du Congrès à Londres, en Grande-Bretagne.

Le Comité Britannique des Partisans de la Paix, après des échanges de vues, une correspondance avec M. Attlee, ministre des Affaires étrangères, et des démarches pour la recherche d'une salle, pouvait affirmer que le Congrès pourrait se tenir à Sheffield, à la date prévue, du 13 au 19 novembre 1950.

Le premier ministre du Royaume-Uni avait en effet déclaré qu'il n'existait dans son pays aucun pouvoir qui puisse interdire le Congrès. Cependant lorsque le 14 septembre, M. Jean Laffitte, écrivain français, secrétaire général du Comité Mondial des Partisans de la Paix, arriva à l'aérodrome de Londres, pour participer aux travaux du Comité de Préparation au Congrès, il se vit interdire l'entrée en Angleterre.

Le 28 septembre, M. Attlee, s'exprimant au sujet du Congrès, écrivait notamment ce qui suit :

« Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté n'est nullement « disposé à permettre à des étrangers d'entrer en Gran- « de-Bretagne dans le but d'organiser ce Congrès. »

Le 3 octobre, le Bureau de Préparation du Congrès se réunissait à Prague. Il décidait de poursuivre ses efforts et appelait les masses populaires « à poursuivre leurs efforts afin de surmonter les difficultés et d'arriver à tenir à la date prévue, le IIe Congrès en Grande-Bretagne ».

A 13 jours du Congrès, le Bureau de Préparation faisait savoir que 65 pays avaient annoncé des délégations, et qu'on envisageait la participation de 73 pays avec 1.900 délégués, au Congrès de Sheffield.

Le 1er novembre, le chef du Gouvernement britannique prononçait un discours au cours d'un dîner organisé par la presse étrangère. Voici comment il définissait la position du Gouvernement sur la question de la tenue de ce Congrès :

« Quelqu'un demandera peut-être : Pourquoi ce Congrès se tiendrait-il en Angleterre, et à Sheffield entre toutes les villes ? »

« C'est peut-être qu'ils ont voulu suggérer, en important ainsi ces délégués de l'étranger, que le mouvement communiste en Grande-Bretagne était de quelque importance. C'est peut-être qu'ils ont pensé qu'ils pourraient impressionner les ouvriers du Yorkshire à la tête dure. »

« Mais la deuxième question que vous désirez peut-être poser, c'est : Pourquoi autorisez-vous le Congrès en Grande-Bretagne ? La réponse est que nous n'avons pas le pouvoir d'empêcher tel Congrès de se tenir. Nous sommes dans une société libre. Et pourvu que la loi ne soit pas enfreinte toutes les personnes ont le droit de se réunir librement et de parler librement, aussi trompées qu'elles puissent être. »

« Cela est la mesure non de notre faiblesse, mais de notre force. Les gouvernements totalitaires n'osent pas permettre aux opinions hérétiques de se faire jour. Nous avons une telle foi dans notre système (façon de vivre) que nous pouvons laisser tout le monde s'exprimer à volonté. »

« Nous devons, comme le doit tout maître de maison, nous réserver le droit de refuser l'entrée à tous ceux que nous n'avons pas le désir de recevoir. Assurément, il est habituel de refuser l'entrée à ceux dont nous connaissons l'intention de brûler la maison. »

Le Comité du Congrès Mondial répondit par un communiqué à « M. Attlee, premier ministre de Grande-Bretagne qui a mis en cause, en termes injustes et discourtois, le Mouvement des Partisans de la Paix ».

Ce communiqué rappelle les bases sur lesquelles est convoqué le Congrès et indique que les buts du Congrès de Sheffield et des assises qui l'ont préparé est précisément de démontrer que des opinions diverses peuvent s'exprimer et se faire jour au sein d'une assemblée internationale pourvu que les participants aient sincèrement le désir de paix et la volonté d'aboutir à l'entente entre les peuples.

D'autre part, le Comité britannique adressa à M. Attlee une lettre dont voici le dernier paragraphe :

« ...L'un des buts visés en choisissant la Grande-Bretagne comme lieu du Congrès était de donner au peuple de ce pays l'occasion d'exprimer pleinement ses vues. Les organisateurs du Congrès n'ont ni l'intention ni le désir de limiter en quelque façon que ce soit les vues qui y seront avancées. Nous accueillerions avec plaisir la participation même de ceux qui jusqu'à présent se sont fermement opposés à la politique de notre mouvement, pourvu qu'ils désirent sincèrement la paix.

« Le Comité britannique de la Paix vous adresse par conséquent une très sincère invitation à assister au IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix, à participer à ses discussions et à s'adresser aux délégués des soixante-dix nations qui y seront représentées. Nous avons le sentiment que par une telle action vous pourriez avancer de façon puissante notre but commun d'assurer une paix juste et durable. »

A cette invitation, M. Attlee répond et fait diffuser sa réponse par la presse (Daily Telegraph du 4-11-1950) :

« ...M. Attlee n'acceptera pas l'invitation. Il enverra probablement un accusé de réception et dira qu'il n'a pas la possibilité d'y assister. L'invitation est faite dans une des deux lettres que le Comité anglais de la Paix à envoyées hier à Mr. Attlee. L'une d'elles qui a été publiée cherche à répondre aux paroles flétrissantes du Premier; l'autre, une lettre privée, s'occupe des « questions de faits et d'organisation du Congrès », qu'a soulevées M. Attlee.

« Des questions furent posées au sujet de ces deux lettres, hier, à une conférence de Presse tenue par le Comité anglais de la Paix. Etaient présents : M. J.G. Crowther, président du Comité, Mr. D.N. Pritt, K.C., vice-président du Comité, Prof. J.D. Bernal, vice-président du Comité Mondial de la Paix, et M. Ivor Montagu, président du Comité d'Organisation du Congrès.

« M. Montagu a déclaré que le Gouvernement se conduirait d'une façon étrange s'il rendait impossible la tenue du Congrès, soit en déclarant que beaucoup de personnes étaient « non grata » soit en refusant les visas. »

Le Secrétariat du Comité Mondial des Partisans de la Paix avait publié le 8 novembre un communiqué dont voici quelques extraits essentiels :

Le Secrétariat du Comité Mondial signale par contre que le Gouvernement de M. Attlee a refusé les visas nénécessaires à de nombreuses personnalités de tous pays, de toutes tendances politiques et de toutes croyances religieuses.

Ces procédés contraires aux grandes traditions de liberté du peuple anglais et à la cause de la paix font qu'aucune délégation élue dans les pays dont les citoyens sont soumis aux formalités de visas ne sera complète. D'autre part, de nombreux membres du Comité Mondial se trouveront empêchés de rendre compte du mandat qui leur fut confié à Paris par le premier Congrès de la Paix.

En conséquence, le Secrétariat du Comité Mondial et le Comité de Préparation du IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix ont étudié les moyens propres à permettre, malgré ces restrictions arbitraires, la tenue du Congrès de Sheffield dans les conditions qui assurent la plus large confrontation d'idées.

Seuls des hommes qui voudraient la guerre peuvent avoir intérêt à empêcher la participation à ce Congrès d'hommes réunis pour discuter librement dans le seul but de trouver les moyens d'assurer la paix si gravement menacée. »

On apprenait alors que le State Department refusait son passeport au grand écrivain Howard Fast et le lui avait signifié par le télégramme suivant :

« Le Département considère qu'il serait contraire à « nos meilleurs intérêts de vous accorder facilités de « passeport en ce moment. » Signé R.B. Shipley, Section des Passeports.

Le 9 novembre dans l'après-midi, la question du Congrès de Sheffield était posée par un député conservateur, M. Wastkinson, qui demanda ce que le Gouvernement « comptait faire au sujet des délégués communistes ». M. Attlee répond : « Le soi-disant Comité britannique de la Paix a été informé il y a quelques semaines, que les demandes de visas faites par les étrangers seraient considérées sur leurs mérites et que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté se réservait le droit de refuser l'entrée à quiconque et de les considérer comme indésirables. Ceci a rapport aussi bien aux communistes qu'aux non communistes. »

M. Wastkinson demanda si ceux qui recevaient la permission de venir seraient rigoureusement contrôlés, afin de s'assurer qu'ils repartiraient aussitôt que possible après la fin du Congrès.

« Oh, certainement », répond M. Attlee.

On demanda ensuite à M. Ede, ministre de l'Intérieur, comment il pouvait juger du mérite respectif des divers délégués soviétiques, ne sachant rien sur leur compte avant leur arrivée ? M. Ede répondit : « La Chambre serait surprise de savoir combien je sais, et combien je sais sur d'autres personnes d'origine étrangère. »

Quelques jours avant le Congrès on avait senti percer dans certaine presse l'intention du Gouvernement « d'empêcher par tous les moyens les hommes de paix de se rencontrer en territoire britannique ».

Le New York Herald Tribune lança le maximum de rumeurs destinées à désorganiser les diverses Assises de la Paix qui se tenaient dans tous les pays. C'est ainsi que le 11 novembre il passait l'article suivant :

« Londres 10 nov. — La politique de la Grande-Bretagne s'avère de plus en plus dure envers le Second Congrès Mondial de la Paix « sympathisant », de façon à menacer de diminuer la grandeur et le prestige de cette assemblée.

« Le Congrès s'ouvre lundi à Sheffield. On avait prévu l'arrivée de 2.500 délégués et invités de 74 pays. Mais le refus de visas ou de permis d'entrée par le Gouvernement britannique fait croire que la moitié de ce chiffre sera exclue. »

La presse conservatrice française abonda dans le même sens.

Le Parisien Libéré, qui se pique d'obectivité, publiait le 11 novembre, l'article dont nous extrayons les passages suivants :

« La semaine dernière, au cours d'un dîner offert à M. Attlee par l'association de la presse étrangère à Londres, le premier ministre avait prononcé un discours consacré exclusivement à ce « Congrès de la Paix », M. Attlee avait en substance souligné deux points principaux :

1. Que le congrès était d'inspiration communiste;
2. Que la liberté de parole étant de rigueur en Angleterre, ce congrès pourrait avoir lieu en toute liberté.

Toutefois, avait déclaré M. Attlee, le gouvernement britannique se réservait le droit de refuser l'entrée en Angleterre de « personnes n'étant pas persona grata ».

Cependant, au dernier moment, le 11 novembre, à la veille même du Congrès, le gouvernement britannique interdisait l'entrée en Grande-Bretagne à la plupart des délégués, à la quasi totalité des membres du Comité Mondial et à son président Joliot-Curie.

Rappelons que l'Agence TELEPRESS de Prague a diffusé le 16 novembre 1950 le texte d'une circulaire secrète adressée au mois d'août dernier par M. Attlee, Premier Ministre de Grande-Bretagne, à des représentants britanniques en divers pays.

Signalant que le Comité britannique de la Paix s'est adressé au premier Minisrte Britannique pour lui demander l'assurance qu'aucune difficulté ne serait faite en ce qui concerne la préparation du IIe Congrès Mondial. La circulaire faisait état d'un projet de réunion de Congrès à Gênes, projet mis en échec par le refus du comte Sforza d'accorder des visas aux délégués.

La circulaire précisait :

« Prenant en considération le danger que ce Congrès présenterait pour les pays du Pacte Atlantique, le gouvernement anglais a examiné soigneusement tous les moyens disponibles pour ne pas permettre la tenue de ce Congrès ou pour prendre des mesures contre les organisateurs du Congrès, qui les contraindraient à l'organiser ailleurs, ou bien des mesures telles que le Congrès en perdrait sa signirication si, malgré tout, il devait se tenir à Londres. Or, le ministère britannique de l'Intérieur ne dispose, malheureusement, d'aucune base légale pour proclamer l'interdiction du Congrès.

« En conséquence, le ministère n'est pas en état de prendre à l'avance des mesures nécessaires. Le gouvernement anglais doit donc agir en admettant que le Congrès se tiendra et qu'il s'appellera : II° Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix. »

... « Le gouvernement britannique se rend parfaitement compte du fait — étant donné les possibilités ouvertes par le Congrès — qu'il a, d'après le Pacte Atlantique, comme devoir de faire tout ce qui est possible pour empêcher la tenue du Congrès. »

La suite de la circulaire était consacrée aux consignes pratiques destinées à entraîner l'échec du Congrès en Grande-Bretagne avec certaines formes à prendre au cas où la loi anglaise serait impuissante à faciliter le refus des visas !

Il est recommandé de ne pas informer les organisateurs des mesures qui pourront être prises contre les « indésirables ».

Après avoir affirmé : « le Congrès constitue une tentative de grouper l'opinion publique internationale autour de la politique pacifiste soviétique basée sur l'interdiction de l'arme atomique et sur la renonciation à l'usage de cette arme », la circulaire concluait en demandant aux représentants britanniques de veiller soigneusement à l'application de ces consignes susceptibles de provoquer l'échec du Congrès.

Après ces mesures d'interdiction, le Comité de la Paix britannique publiait la protestation suivante :

Le Professeur Joliot-Curie, Président du Mouvement Mondial de la Paix, Jean Laffitte, Secrétaire Général, et les deux tiers d'un groupe de délégués de France, comprenant beaucoup de personnalités éminentes, ont été refoulés lorsqu'ils sont arrivés à Douvres ce matin.

Ce fait, ainsi que d'autres mesures restrictives prises par les autorités, y compris le refus d'admettre tous les membres du bureau à l'exception d'un seul et tous les membres du Comité Mondial, ont rendu tout à fait impossible la tenue en Grande-Bretagne d'un Congrès qui soit entièrement représentatif et qui fasse autorité. Dans ces conditions, le Bureau du Comité Mondial des Partisans de la Paix a accepté l'invitation du Comité Polonais des Partisans de la Paix qui a offert au Congrès de siéger à Varsovie, le 16 novembre 1950.

Dans l'après-midi du 13 novembre, les délégués qui se trouvent déjà en Grande-Bretagne se réuniront au City-Hall de Sheffield, avec la délégation britannique, pour une discussion impromptue ; le soir aura lieu un meeting public. Après, ils se rendront à Varsovie.

Tous les représentants de la presse accrédités auprès du Congrès sont invités à Varsovie.

Le Comité britannique de la Paix attire l'attention sur les points suivants :

Il y a déjà plusieurs semaines le Comité a écrit au Premier Ministre, exprimant l'espoir qu'on n'abuserait pas des pouvoirs administratifs pour empêcher un Congrès qu'aucune loi ne peut empêcher, comme l'avait déclaré lui-même le Premier Ministre.

Le Premier Ministre avait déclaré que tous les délégués, à l'exception des « persona non grata » seraient admis, mais ceux qui ont été refoulés comptent parmi eux des personnalités de renommée mondiale, universellement respectées et sans rapport direct avec les partis politiques.

Lorsqu'il leur fut demandé s'ils avaient quelque objection à faire quant au nombre des délégués invités pour chaque pays, les autorités avaient déclaré qu'elles n'avaient aucune intention de juger sur le nombre ; mais de nombreux refus par exemple ceux qui concernent la délégation chinoise ne semblent pas avoir d'autre base.

Lorsqu'il leur fut demandé si le rejet de membres du Comité de Préparation signifiait qu'ils seraient aussi « persona non grata » comme délégués, les autorités avaient déclaré qu'il n'en serait pas nécessairement ainsi. Mais à l'exception d'un seul, tous ont été refoulés.

Au nom du Comité Britannique, Mrs S.O. Davies, Membre du Parlement, a remis au Ministre de l'Intérieur la liste des 140 membres du Comité Permanent, ainsi qu'une requête demandant s'ils seraient autorisés ou non à venir. Cette demande a été formellement rejetée. Vendredi 3 novembre, il y a exactement 8 jours, le Ministère de l'Intérieur était intervenu spécialement pour réclamer la liste des membres non astreints aux formalités de visa, et offrir, en même temps, de fournir les précisions demandées. Cette liste lui a été de nouveau et immédiatement remise, mais le refus d'entrée de tous, sauf 4, n'a été connu qu'hier.

Jusqu'à maintenant, deux membres seulement sur les 140 du Comité Permanent ont été admis et plus de 100 ont été définitivement refusés.

Le Comité de la Paix Britannique regrette profondément que ces changements qui interviennent en ce qui concerne le Congrès empêchent beaucoup de gens de Grande-Bretagne et des autres pays de mieux apprendre à se connaître, comme cela était projeté. Ces contacts auraient contribué puissamment à de meilleurs sentiments internationaux. Le Comité remercie tous ceux qui ont donné et qui donnent leur appui au Congrès de la Paix et il demande avec confiance à tous les délégués britanniques élus, aux observateurs et à tous ceux qui soutiennent la paix, de contribuer au succès du Congrès là où désormais il se tiendra.

LES REACTIONS DE LA PRESSE BRITANNIQUE

L'ensemble de la presse démocratique britannique et même de la presse conservatrice se faisait l'écho des protestations nombreuses contre ces mesures d'interdiction. Voici un article du DAILY TELEGRAPH du 6 novembre :

« Le Révérend Pendrill Bentall, pasteur de l'Eglise « Queens-Street Congregational Church » de Sheffield a déclaré hier :

« La récente attaque de M. Attlee contre le Congrès « Mondial de la Paix est contraire aux traditions de « liberté britanniques. J'ai informé les organisateurs du « Congrès, que tout membre de l'Eglise Protestante Ré« formée sera le bienvenu dans mon église et pourra « l'utiliser quand bon lui semblera. »

« Le Révérend Pendrill Bentall n'est membre d'aucun parti, il est président du « Yorkshire Congregational Union ».

« THE TIMES » du 14 novembre, reproduit le compte rendu de la discussion à la Chambre des Communes, sur l'action entreprise par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté, sur les questions de l'admission des étrangers au Congrès Mondial de la Paix.

En voici des extraits :

M. EDE, secrétaire d'Etat à l'Intérieur...

Comme j'en ai informé la Chambre le 19 novembre la politique consistait à considérer les demandes de visas suivant les mérites individuels mais de se réserver le droit d'exclure tout étranger qui était « persona non grata ». De plus le 1er novembre, le premier ministre dans son allocution à l'association de la Presse étrangère disait :

« Nous ne refuserons pas l'entrée à des gens qui en toute bonne foi, désireraient se rendre au Congrès mais il n'est pas dans nos intentions d'ouvrir larges nos portes à ceux qui cherchent à venir ici pour troubler nos institutions, pour séduire nos concitoyens et les détour-ner de leur fidélité naturelle envers le Royaume et de leurs devoirs quotidiens ainsi que pour faire de la propagande pour ceux qui nous appellent des « cannibales et des fauteurs de guerre »...

M. CHURCHILL (Woodford. Conservateur). — Quel était le but que se proposait M. le Ministre en nous soumettant cette déclaration dans cette conjoncture? N'agirait-il pas sagement en tentant de perdre ses illusions en ce qui concerne la possibilité de voir ce pays lui transmettre ses compliments et ses congratulations pour cet événement et la manière dont il a été traité ? Cela n'a-t-il pas donné la plus grande publicité à ceux qu'il nous a décrit avec une si juste sévérité et cela ne nous a-t-il pas exposé à un très grand nombre d'inconvénients et à beaucoup d'abus ?

M. PHILIPS PRICE (Gloucestershire, travailliste) est d'accord avec ce que le secrétaire d'Etat a fait, mais il demande pourquoi il est nécessaire d'exclure un musicien éminent comme Chostakovitch et le Métropolite Nicolai de Moscou.

M. EDE. — Sur l'intervention des évêques de l'Eglise Anglicane de ce pays j'ai décidé à la fin d'accorder un visa à l'ecclésiastique sus-mentionné. En ce qui concerne les autres (ecclésiastiques) l'information que j'avais à leur sujet était qu'ils étaient si étroitement liés au Kominform que j'ai pensé qu'il était indésirable de les voir entrer.

M. CHURCHILL. — Puis-je assurer Monsieur le Ministre que nous sommes en plein accord, à la Chambre, avec les buts et les intentions qu'il avait (rires sur le banc des ministres) mais nous sommes loin d'être convaincus que les méthodes les meilleures et les plus appropriées pour atteindre ce but ont été celles qui ont été choisies.

M. EDE. — La seule autre méthode qui se présentait à moi aurait été de demander à la Chambre de passer une loi déclarant ce Congrès illégal. J'ai un tel respect pour le droit de réunion et de discussion pour les citoyens de ce pays et une telle appréhension de créer un précédent quelconque qui porte atteinte à ce droit que j'ai renoncé à cette solution d'une manière sérieuse...

M. CHURCHILL. — En supposant que nous ayons un autre cas semblable venant dans les conditions actuelles qui sont particulièrement difficiles, ne serait-il pas juste de considérer, comme autre solution, qu'il faudrait demander une législation spéciale au Parlement et permettre à l'opinion publique de ce pays de s'exprimer sur cette question par la voix de ses représentants?

Le 23 novembre, le « TIMES » fait paraître un article sous le titre suivant :

« Rencontre de la « Paix » de Sheffield. — Les critiques d'un évêque contre une action qui n'est pas digne de la Grande-Bretagne. »

Ecrivant dans la Revue « Diocesan Review » sur la question du « Congrès saboté », l'évêque de Sheffield, le Dr. L.S. Hunter déclare que le transfert du Congrès de la « Paix » n'est pas une grande perte pour Sheffield, mais qu'il est difficile de ne pas ressentir quelque honte devant la façon non digne de Britanniques (un-British) dont le gouvernement l'a empêché au dernier moment de se tenir.

« Si le Gouvernement et les administrations en cause ont si peu de confiance dans le bon sens d'une communauté industrielle ou dans leur propre façon de gouverner qu'ils craignent de laisser quelques communistes, quelques fellow-travellers (sympathisants), quelques intellectuels instables ainsi que des dirigeants ecclésiastiques venir en Grande-Bretagne pour quelques jours, ils auraient dû interdire le Congrès depuis longtemps...

...Le caractère politique de la campagne anticommuniste de l'Eglise Romaine met les non-romains dans une position très difficile. L'hystérie qui règne dans le public aux Etats-Unis, hystérie dont certains éléments de cette Eglise en sont pas sans avoir quelque responsabilité, les propagandes en faveur de la guerre faites par ceux qui ne savent pas ce qu'est la guerre, la façon déplorable dont les Etats-Unis sont apparus comme voulant soutenir des gouvernements malades et corrompus en Asie, le fait pathétique et tragique suivant lequel nous n'avons pas réussi à donner une direction constructive à l'Europe de l'Ouest ont sans doute causé la méfiance et la crainte parmi les Soviets comme ces faits ont causé un profond désappointement dans les pays de l'Ouest. »

Appelant tous les chrétiens à se faire de véritables défenseurs de la Paix le Dr. Hunter poursuit : « Que l'Eglise soit un Congrès de la Paix dont la session ne s'arrête pas jusqu'à ce qu'il y ait plus d'esprit de responsabilité chez les hommes d'Etat et plus de bon sens et que le danger de guerre se soit éloigné. »

Le premier ministre avait déclaré que tous les délégués, à l'exception des « persona non grata » seraient admis; cependant, ceux qui ont été refoulés comptent parmi eux des personnalités de renommée mondiale, universellement respectées, et sans rapport direct avec les partis politiques.

LE CONGRÈS DE VARSOVIE

A TRAVERS LA PRESSE FRANÇAISE

Dans une information sur l'ouverture du Congrès à Varsovie, ce journal écrit que « la ville est pavoisée et décorée. D'immenses effigies de Joliot-Curie ornent les rues » et « en dépit de toutes les difficultés, 1.500 personnes seront transportées par air ».

Sur les travaux du Congrès, les commentaires concernent surtout le délégué soviétique Fadeev, qui «a dénoncé les U.S.A. comme pays belliciste et agresseur, tandis que se déroulait à Moscou une fête de l'artillerie », le délégué américain, John Rogge, « candide égaré » et l'Anglais, Harvey Moore, qui déclara : « Si vous ne croyez pas à la violence, prouvez-le en ne l'appliquant pas vous-mêmes ».

Pour « l'Aube », le Congrès, « malgré deux ou trois trouble-fête, vite remis en place, a pris fin dans un parfait beni oui-ouisme oriental ».

« LE MONDE » (quotidien gouvernemental), annonce, au contraire (18 novembre) que « Le Congrès de Varsovie s'est ouvert dans une atmosphère de libéralisme bourgeois » et, répondant en fait au journal plus haut cité, titre le 16 novembre sur : « La liberté de discussion garantie aux délégués du Congrès de Varsovie... »

« Il était nécessaire, écrit André Fontaine, dans cet article, pour que les pacifistes sans arrière-pensée puissent envisager une action commune avec les partisans de la paix, que toute liberté de discussion leur fût garantie. C'est ce qu'ont admis les organisateurs du Congrès de Sheffield-Varsovie. Et c'est ainsi que pour la première fois depuis longtemps, vont s'exprimer, à partir de jeudi, derrière le rideau de fer, des idées nettement divergentes.

« C'est un fait que parmi les deux cent cinquante délégués français l'accord est loin d'être unanime sur le point de savoir « qui a commencé » en Corée, comme sur les moyens de défendre la paix. Des « mondialistes », des « neutralistes », des objecteurs de conscience, ont été élus à côté des communistes orthodoxes et des chrétiens plus ou moins progressistes. Certains ont l'intention de poser les questions qui les embarrassent. Il est probable, par exemple, que celle des camps de travail en U.R.S.S. sera évoquée au cours des débats. Reste à savoir ce qu'il en passera dans la presse polonaise...

« De leur côté, les délégations venues d'outre-Atlantique comptent dans leurs rangs, à côté de « fellow-travellers » notoires, quelques personnalités indépendantes dont le prototype est M. Rogge, ancien attorney général des Etats-Unis, dont on s'est parfois demandé, tellement ses positions heurtaient celles des communistes, si le département d'Etat ne jugeait pas profitable sa présence dans cette galère. Tant il est vrai qu'à l'heure actuelle les occasions de contacts entre l'Ouest et l'Est, en dehors des assemblées générales de l'O.N.U. sont plutôt rares.

« Le Monde » a d'ailleurs consacré son éditorial du 24 novembre (« Bulletin de l'étranger ») à « La leçon de Varsovie ».

« C'est un fait que la liberté de discussion promise aux délégués a été entièrement respectée. M. Rogge a pu poursuivre, jusqu'au bout, une intervention dans laquelle il ne craignait pas de demander à la Chine de s'aligner sur la Yougoslavie titiste. Le texte des motions adoptées diffère souvent de ce qu'avaient proposé les éléments les plus avancés. C'est ainsi que l'appréciation portée sur l'O.N.U. s'exprime en termes beaucoup plus réservés que ceux que l'on pouvait trouver dans le projet initial, et que le Congrès, sollicité de déclarer le général Mac Arthur criminel de guerre, a seulement demandé qu'une commission internationale compétente examine ses responsabilités.

« ...Rien de tout cela n'est bien nouveau. Ce qui l'est davantage c'est la création d'un « Conseil Mondial de la Paix » qui va bientôt se poser en censeur et en rival de l'O.N.U. Il lui sera facile de se prétendre plus représentatif que l'Assemblée de Lake-Success, où les petites républiques de l'Amérique centrale ont chacune leur mot à dire, alors que des centaines de millions de Chinois, de Japonais, d'Allemands, d'Italiens, d'Africains, etc., n'y ont pas de délégué.

« A cette campagne on pourra évidemment opposer les conditions dans lesquelles ont été désignés les membres de ce Comité Mondial de la Paix; elles font que la Chine y est mieux représentée qu'aux Nations-Unies; les Etats-Unis et la Grande-Bretagne ne le sont en revanche pratiquement pas. L'augmentation des Partisans de la Paix n'en rencontrera pas moins, en France surtout, certaines aspirations populaires où la crainte de la guerre est renforcée par les désastreuses répercussions sociales du réarmement.

« Si le Congrès de Varsovie comporte une leçon pour l'Occident, c'est bien qu'il lui reste à donner à son idéal de Paix un contenu positif que chacun puisse percevoir. Le ton belliqueux de certains journaux américains ne facilite certes pas cette tâche indispensable. Il est vrai que si la propagande de l'Est ne nous parle que de Paix c'est que le contrôle total de l'information lui permet de passer sous silence tout ce qu'une presse libre a pour habitude d'étaler en plein jour. »

« L'AURORE (quotidien, radicalo-gaulliste) appelle à la répression gouvernementale contre M. Frédéric Joliot-Curie et affirme que le Congrès de Varsovie est ce-

lui de la « paix communiste » qui se dispose à « reprendre en chœur contre la France et ses alliés les pires calomnies préfabriquées de la propagande soviétique ».

Sur le déroulement du Congrès, un seul article dans ce journal, concernant l'intervention de M. Rogge: « Un délégué américain se permet de n'être pas d'accord... Que faisait donc la police à la porte ? »

« LIBERATION » (quotidien, progressiste) qui avait un envoyé spécial à Varsovie, rétablit la vérité objective :

« Précisons, écrit ce journal, que le discours de M. Rogge a été écouté avec attention et que la présidente de séance, Mme Hodinova Spurna, vice-présidente de l'Assemblée Nationale Tchécoslovaque, eut à peine à intervenir pour calmer les remous provoqués par certains passages. »

D'ailleurs, M. Rogge fut plusieurs fois applaudi lorsqu'il affirma la volonté de paix du peuple américain.

« Libération » a donné, chaque jour, une place importante aux compte-rendus du Congrès de son envoyé spécial, Jean Bedel, et aux commentaires de Marcel Fourrier, qui écrit notamment :

« Dans cette recherche des moyens pour sauvegarder la paix, chacun à Varsovie rivalise d'ardeur ; Ehrenbourg voudrait que tous les parlements du monde édictent une loi spéciale : la loi sur la défense de la paix. Pierre Cot se prononce pour une Allemagne unifiée et neutralisée. Alexandre Fadeev propose une réduction progressive des forces armées contrôlées par une commission internationale et dont l'activité s'étendrait non seulement aux armes connues ou déclarées, mais aussi aux armements supposés. John Rogge affirme que des rapports pacifiques peuvent être établis entre les Etats-Unis et la Russie grâce au libre échange d'idées et d'informations, et il se prononce pour un contrôle illimité en quelque pays que ce soit, de l'usage de la force atomique.

« Cette unanimité qui s'affirme à Varsovie pour la paix, c'est peut-être l'acte le plus positif qui ait jamais été enregistré dans la lutte de l'humanité contre la guerre. »

« Le FIGARO » (quotidien, gouvernemental) qui a donné sur le déroulement des travaux du Congrès quelques informations en général dépourvues d'objectivité, a expliqué comme suit l'empêchement de la tenue du Congrès à Sheffield :

« L'événement a pleinement donné raison à M. Attlee dont la décision, parfois critiquée comme contraire aux traditions de l'hospitalité britannique, et dont l'application put paraître maladroite, se justifiait par plusieurs bonnes raisons. D'une part, le souci légitime de mettre le mouvement ouvrier britannique solennellement en garde contre ses faux amis ; le désir aussi de prévenir, de la part de l'opposition conservatrice, toute suggestion électorale d'une collusion du travaillisme avec le communisme ; sur le plan international, enfin, le devoir de ne pas donner aux Etats-Unis un nouvel argument aux adversaires du Président Truman et de M. Dean Acheson. »

Sur le déplacement des délégués, le même journal écrivait le 17 novembre :

« Amenant de Grande-Bretagne les différents délégués étrangers, parmi lesquels le « doyen rouge » de Canterbury, 27 appareils tchèques ont survolé l'Allemagne Occidentale, annonce-t-on de Francfort. Les services américains compétents examineraient dans quelle mesure ces raids « pour lesquels aucune autorisation préalable n'avait été demandée, constituent ou non une violation des accords internationaux sur la navigation aérienne. »

Et le 22 novembre, « Le Figaro » conclut son information sur les décisions du Congrès, qu'il rapporte de façon très concise :

« Le Congrès a enfin décidé de former un Conseil Mondial de la Paix qui sera, en quelque sorte, une organisation rivale des Nations Unies. »

« COMBAT » (quotidien) qui s'adresse généralement à certaines couches d'intellectuels, a donné, le 13 novembre, l'orientation politique qui fut celle de la presse gouvernementale et gaulliste, à savoir « que l'action des partisans de la paix coïncide avec la politique de l'U.R.S.S. »

« Quel était, en effet, y écrit ce jour là René Dary, le propos des « colombophiles » ? Proclamer au nez et à la barbe des travaillistes anglais que ces derniers sont des fomentateurs de guerre, des agents de Wall-Street et des quakers hypocrites ; porter au sein même du « camp impérialiste » la bonne parole du Kremlin ; faire approuver dans une manifestation monstre une politique en coïncidence parfaite avec celle de l'U.R.S.S. et des pays de démocratie populaire... » Et il conclut :

« Il reste qu'on aurait préféré de la part du gouvernement travailliste une prise de position plus nette que cette manifestation d'humour très particulière qui lui faisait accepter ou refuser les visas sans raison apparente ».

Par la suite, « Combat » a donné des informations sur le Congrès, et notamment sur les facilités accordées aux délégués pour l'entrée en Pologne, sur le discours de M. l'Abbé Boulier, et enfin, avec un souci d'objectivité assez marqué, sur les décisions suivantes : création du Conseil Mondial de la Paix, chargé, dit-il, de « contrôler l'O.N.U. », définition de l'agression, résolution sur la normalisation des échanges économiques, sur les victimes de la répression, demande de réunion des « cinq grands ».

Dans « Le Populaire », le thème : Congrès de Varsovie, Congrès de Moscou, est largement développé.

Selon Jean Texcier, les organisateurs qui se doutaient bien des difficultés qu'ils allaient rencontrer en Grande-Bretagne tenaient à cet argument : les occidentaux ont peur de la paix : ils veulent la guerre.

Il estime, d'autre part, que le gouvernement anglais a eu tort de rendre ce Congrès impossible, car il eut été plus habile de démontrer « par des manifestations appropriées, comment la démocratique et libre Angleterre comprend la juste paix.

Fernand Caussy, dans un article sur la clôture des travaux intitulé : « Le bluff de Varsovie » présente les résolutions adoptées en prétendant qu'elles ont été rédigées selon « la ligne la plus pure de Moscou ».

Une fausse information dans ce journal : « Le discours de Rogge a été passé au crible par le Présidium du Congrès avant d'être prononcé ».

« L'HUMANITE », (quotidien, organe du Parti Communiste Français), a publié, très largement, des compte-rendus et impressions du Congrès, de ses envoyés spéciaux Marcel Valtat et Jean-Pierre Chabrol. Pendant le Congrès, ce journal a consacré au Congrès, environ deux de ses pages, et des commentaires soulignant l'ampleur et la diversité de la représentation au Congrès, la liberté d'expression qui y régna et l'importance des décisions prises.

Nous reproduisons, in-extenso, comme caractéristique de la position de ce journal, un article du 13 novembre, sous le titre :

« La question primordiale » :

« L'Aube de samedi a publié la réponse qu'a faite M. Georges Marec, Secrétaire général de la Fédération M.R.P. de la Seine, à Yves Farge qui avait convié son organisation à participer à la Conférence Nationale des Combattants de la Paix et de la Liberté.

« Tout en déclarant : « Nous ne nous refuserons jamais à des conversations loyales et sincères et nous pensons que, sur le plan privé, il est, même actuellement, possible d'en avoir avec ceux de nos concitoyens qui ne partagent pas nos convictions politiques car nous ne désespérons pas de la compréhension entre gens de bonne volonté », M. Marec décline l'invitation.

Sans préjuger de la réponse que feront, à leur tour, les Combattants de la Paix et de la Liberté, nous présenterons nous-mêmes quelques observations.

A l'appui de son refus, M. Marec invoque le fait que, selon lui, « le comportement de la Russie Soviétique fait courir les plus grands risques à la paix » et que « les Combattants de la Paix et de la Liberté sont devenus des promoteurs de la propagande russe ». Il ajoute qu'il est impossible, dans les réunions des Combattants de la Paix, de « faire des réserves sur l'attitude russe ».

« Nous, Communistes, nous pensons qu'en raison même de son système socialiste, l'U.R.S.S. ne peut avoir qu'une politique : Sa structure économique qui n'est pas fondée comme celle des pays capitalistes sur la recherche du profit, fait qu'elle ignore les crises, et qu'elle n'a pas, comme les pays capitalistes, à choisir entre la crise et la guerre : l'U.R.S.S. n'a pas de capitaux à exporter ; elle n'a pas de débouchés à rechercher sous peine d'être menacée d'asphyxie économique. Enfin, la consolidation du socialisme, la marche vers le communisme exigent le maintien de la Paix.

Voilà ce que pensent les communistes, et cette réalité s'impose de plus en plus à des gens qui sont très loin d'être communistes. C'est un ami politique de M. Georges Marec, M. Etienne Gilson, ancien conseiller de la République M.R.P. qui écrivait dans « Le Monde » les lignes suivantes, à propos de la politique de l'U.R.S.S.:

« Quoi qu'on pense soi-même des principes, de l'esprit et des méthodes dont s'inspire cette expérience, on ne saurait prédire, à coup sûr, qu'elle échouera. Le pain gratuit pour tous n'est pas encore un fait, mais la baisse générale de 30 % sur tous les prix, décrétée et effectivement réalisée en quelques jours, en est un. Des témoins parfaitement objectifs l'affirment, et il serait déraisonnable d'en douter. La révolution soviétique n'est pas achevée, mais elle se poursuit, et le maître souci du gouvernement de Moscou est de la mener à bonne fin. Cette préoccupation s'accorde trop mal avec les intentions guerrières qu'on lui prête pour qu'on puisse sans absurdité se demander s'il en a. »

« Cela dit, les communistes ont déjà répété maintes fois — et plus spécialement par la voix de leur Secrétaire Général, Maurice Thorez — qu'ils étaient prêts à s'entendre « sans vaines considérations de personnes ou de partis, de prestige ou d'amour-propre » avec tous ceux qui veulent la paix ».

« Nous croyons utile de redire, déclarait Maurice Thorez au Congrès de Gennevilliers, que nous, communistes, tout en demandant le droit d'exprimer notre point de vue en toutes circonstances, nous admettons parfaitement que d'autres pensent d'une façon différente sur certains problèmes, y compris sur la question si importante des causes profondes de la nouvelle menace de guerre et sur les moyens propres à sauver la paix. De ces questions, nous pouvons discuter amicalement entre partisans sincères de la paix. Une seule chose compte pour nous : la sincérité et l'urgence impérieuse de l'union pour la paix ».

« Les hommes qui participent aux réunions des Combattants de la Paix seraient expulsés « s'ils manifestent une opinion non conformiste ? » M. Georges Marec dit qu'il éprouve cette « crainte ». Crainte injustifiée : aux Assises de la Paix de la Seine, un délégué a exprimé, à la tribune, sur le régime intérieur de l'Union Soviétique, des réserves et des critiques semblables à celles de M. Marec. Il n'a pas été expulsé ; la parole ne lui a pas été retirée, mais d'autres partisans de la paix ont répondu.

« Au surplus, quelle que soit l'importance des questions sur lesquelles portent les désaccords, ce qui nous paraît primordial, c'est la recherche de points communs en vue de la lutte pour la Paix : si la guerre venait, malgré nos efforts, à éclater, ses bombes ne choisiraient pas les victimes. »

Ce journal n'a publié qu'un seul article sur le Congrès. Nous en détachons ci-dessous quelques extraits :

« Au premier rang, M. Pierre Cot offre à ses auditeurs la perle qu'il vient de découvrir : « Je cherche en vain quelles preuves a apportées M. Truman d'une agression coréenne, avant de lancer contre le peuple coréen les bombardiers et les lance-flammes du Général Mac Arthur ».

« Le malheureux ! à peine s'était-il rassis qu'un Russe de stricte observance, M. Ilya Ehrenbourg, venait déclarer : « Je suis pour la paix ; non seulement avec l'Amérique de Howard Fast ou de Paul Robeson, mais pour la Paix avec l'Amérique de M. Truman et de M. Acheson ».

Ce journal, coutumier d'une certaine démagogie « pacifiste », a publié, du 11 au 23 novembre, quelques informations concises et sans souci d'objectivité sur le Congrès.

Nous notons, parmi ses nombreuses approximations ou nouvelles tendancieuses :

11 novembre : « M. Attlee, au cours d'un dîner pour l'installation du nouveau lord-maire de Londre, a souligné que la tolérance et la reconnaissance de la liberté d'expression permettent encore, en Angleterre, d'entendre des opinions contradictoires.

« Tolérance limitée, comme le montre ce qui précède, mais tolérance quand même ».

20 novembre : « Le discours du romancier russe Fadeev a provoqué, par sa violence, des réserves au sein des délégations occidentales... » et « le délégué américain est hué au Congrès de Varsovie » (titre).

22 novembre : « Au moment de la séance de clôture, un délégué français a fait entendre (pour la première fois dans le calme) des critiques contre l'U.R.S.S. Une précédente séance a été ouverte sur la bénédiction solennelle du Congrès par le Métropolite Sebastien, de Roumanie ».

« CE SOIR » (quotidien, progressiste) a consacré une très large place aux compte-rendus, impressions de Congrès, interviews, de son envoyé spécial Wladimir Pozner, dont il est impossible de citer ici des extraits tant le choix serait difficile.

Ce journal a apporté à la diffusion des travaux du Congrès en France, une contribution exceptionnelle.

« ACTION » (hebdomadaire, organe des « Combattants de la Paix et de la Liberté » a consacré au Congrès une place considérable, avec les compte-rendus, commentaires, impressions, des délégués Français, Yves Farge, André Blumel, Pierre Debray, et de ses collaborateurs Pierre Hervé et Dominique Desanti.

M. Yves Farge y écrit notamment :

« On ne peut plus parler de maladresse. Les exigences de la préparation à la guerre imposent des actes publics. On est soumis ou on est libre. Les hommes libres du monde ont librement discuté en France comme sur tous les continents et de ce débat et de sa conclusion, ils sont sortis grandis.

« Je sais qu'en isolant la malfaisance, nous nous sommes imposé des tâches redoutables. Dès que le mensonge est paralysé par la clarté éblouissante de la vérité, le crime peut tenter le gouvernant qui ne peut plus ruser.

« La réunion des Cinq grands ? N'est-ce pas une proposition de bon sens que de vouloir que se rencontrent pour discuter ceux qui sont responsables du destin de l'humanité ? Les peuples se sont bien réunis à Varsovie, ils ont bien discuté, ils se sont entendus... Pourquoi ne pas considérer qu'ils ont donné l'exemple?

« On nous dira qu'une conférence de cette sorte se prépare. Mais elle est préparée. Dans neuf chapitres, les peuples ont posé les fondements d'un Statut de la paix: l'Adresse du Congrès Mondial à l'O.N.U. apporte des solutions et, en tout état de cause, des bases de discussion.

« Le mérite de ce document vient de ce qu'il propose des règles et des définitions qui s'inspirent de données admises par les peuples libres et les gouvernements qui n'étaient pas encore imprégnés d'hitlérisme lorsqu'elles furent définies en 1899 par Léon Bourgeois à la première Conférence de la paix, lorsqu'elles furent traduites en termes clairs (plus particulièrement en ce qui concerne la définition de l'agression), dans un texte historique élaboré en 1933 par la Conférence du désarmement.

« Quel est l'Hitler et le Mussolini de 1950 qui viendront contrecarrer, pour le malheur des peuples, cette raisonnable détermination ? »

Quelques exemples pris dans ce « reportage » :

A l'aérodrome de Varsovie, « un monsieur s'approche et, au nom du Congrès de la Paix, veut nous offrir cinq cents zlotys, soit un peu moins de 50.000 francs...»

« Dès qu'il a vingt zlotys devant lui, le polonais les dépense ou les boit... »

Et, sous une photographie, cette légende qui est une fausse information : « La déléguée nord-coréenne vient de confirmer l'intervention militaire de la Chine. A cette annonce, les partisans de la paix la portent en triomphe ».

Sans compter un véritable roman feuilleton sur les fouilles de bagages des journalistes par la police polonaise.

Ce témoignage est absolument contredit par notamment :

Celui-ci, qui revient de Varsovie, écrit dans ce journal du 7 décembre :

« Une semaine plus tôt, je me trouvais à Paris, engagé dans mes travaux, mes affaires, mes plaisirs, ma routine. Déjà, le Congrès de la Paix, banni de Sheffield, s'était transporté à Varsovie. Mais, pareil aux gens qui m'entouraient, attardé aux journaux que je lisais, je n'y prêtais guère attention. Ou bien, quand un entretien rapide, une brève dépêche perçaient cette indifférence, je pensais : « Création artificielle, manœuvre, ballon vide gonflé à éclater ». Et si je songeais à Varsovie, c'était pour imaginer une cité morose, sinistre, un peuple aux ordres...

« Oh ! je m'en souvenais bien : les conditions dans lesquelles j'avais été reçu en Pologne n'étaient pas les conditions ordinaires. Du moment que je venais pour le Congrès de la Paix, j'étais un hôte privilégié et, en quelque sorte sacré. Mes bagages n'étaient même pas ouverts. J'aurais pu introduire des tracts, de l'argent, des armes (et chacun des trois mille délégués ou invités avait joui de la même licence). Ma chambre était une des meilleures dans le meilleur hôtel de Varsovie. Je disposais d'une voiture et d'un chauffeur. Et quand l'envie m'en prenait, je pouvais monter dans un tramway ou circuler à pied. Aucune surveillance. Aucun frein à ma liberté, à ma curiosité...

« Ce n'était point parce que j'avais été si bien accueilli que les foules, les groupes et les couples dans Varsovie montraient une gaîté spontanée qui convenait mal à des gens affamés ou traqués, ou soumis à une discipline odieuse. Que les enfants étaient pleins de santé. Que les vêtements étaient chauds et décents. Que dans une ville rasée à la dynamite par les Allemands, des quartiers entiers avaient surgi, conçus avec soin, avec art et donnant aux ouvriers des logements qui pour la plupart des habitants de Paris seraient un rêve. Que les livres, au lieu de se vendre à quelques milliers d'exemplaires seulement — comme avant la guerre — s'achetaient aujourd'hui par dizaines et centaines de milliers. Que des ballets éclatants de santé, de sève, de joie étaient le fait de danseurs et de danseuses que l'on avait été chercher au fond des campagnes et qui — trois ou quatre ans plus tôt — n'étaient encore que des paysans et des paysannes doués pour les fêtes de village.

« Ce n'était point parce que j'avais été reçu dans des circonstances exceptionnelles que les circonstances exceptionnelles perdaient leur valeur. Que, en quelques jours, dans une ville ravagée à l'extrême, on avait assuré le logement, la nourriture, le transport de 3.000 personnes. Que l'on avait transformé, avec un sens du confort et un goût admirables, une imprimerie en salle de congrès et que l'on avait accompli, à l'improviste, un chef-d'œuvre d'organisation. Et que tout cela avait été mené dans l'ardeur la plus vivante, dans l'enthousiasme de la paix.

« A quoi donc était due l'immense tendresse d'un peuple offerte à des étrangers inconnus, sinon à un désir total, frénétique de paix dont ces yeux naïfs et confiants croyaient voir le reflet, la promesse à travers nos visages ? Et il était difficile de concevoir qu'un gouvernement eût une arrière-pensée de guerre quand il laissait tous ces gens s'abandonner à une espérance aussi enivrante.

« Paix communiste, allaient me dire les gens prudents à mon retour. Calcul, manœuvre, ruse diaboliques. Mais comment se faisait-il alors que la délégation française comportât une majorité énorme non communiste ? Que l'un des orateurs anglais, député conservateur, eût soutenu, signé les résolutions du Congrès ? Dupes, allait-on dire encore. Mais alors, pour percer le jeu de ceux qui les trompaient, pour mettre à nu leurs machinations, quoi de plus simple, de plus élémentaire que d'aller à une conférence acceptée par des délégations qui, elles, à l'encontre des délégations occidentales, engageaient leurs gouvernements ? Valait-il mieux se boucher les oreilles, fermer les yeux et nier, nier stérilement sans essayer de répondre, autrement que par un tumulte d'armes, à la préoccupation essentielle de notre temps, de notre univers, à leur suprême angoisse ?

« Cela, j'en suis convaincu, un invité, un spectateur devait le dire. »

« L'OBSERVATEUR » (hebdomadaire politique) a publié, le 9 novembre, un article consacré au Congrès, dont nous détachons des extraits :

« Tous les délégués ont pu constater à ce propos la volonté de conciliation des représentants russes. L'un d'entre eux a déclaré qu'il souhaitait voir des milliers d'étudiants américains, asiatiques et européens affluer en U.R.S.S. et des milliers d'étudiants soviétiques se rendre à l'étranger.

« De leur côté, MM. Fadeev et Ilya Ehrenbourg ont tenu à s'entretenir longuement avec un certain nombre de délégués français. Si la fameuse question des camps de travail a pu être évoquée au cours de ces conversations, il faut toutefois noter qu'elle n'a pas été posée ouvertement devant le Congrès, comme certains s'y attendaient.

L'intervention de M. John Rogge :

« La presse internationale a accordé une importance exagérée à l'intervention « non conformiste » de M. John Rogge.

« En dehors du fait que M. Rogge avait déjà développé des positions semblables au congrès de Pleyel, il est, en effet évident que son discours ne pouvait ouvrir un débat mais seulement provoquer une polémique.

« L'intervention de M. Rogge n'a cependant pas été complètement inutile. Elle a, en effet, permis de démontrer qu'il ne suffit nullement d'établir que les communistes exercent une influence décisive sur le Mouvement des Partisans de la Paix pour ruiner ce mouvement.

« Nul ne peut se refuser à l'examen de propositions constructives lorsque ces propositions émanent d'hommes ayant derrière eux des forces sociales réelles. L'idée que ces propositions recouvrent une opération de propagande ou une « manœuvre » ne change rien à leur signification profonde. Quel courant politique, quel gouvernement, quel parti refuseraient donc de se servir de la propagande et de mettre ses adversaires dans une position embarrassante, donc de « manœuvrer ? »

« C'est de ce point de vue qu'il va falloir maintenant mesurer les répercussions du Congrès de Varsovie. »

« MONDE OUVRIER » (hebdomadaire, organe du « Mouvement de Libération du Peuple », catholique) conclut un important article sur le Congrès, de la façon suivante :

« En conclusion, nous croyons que les textes votés sont une contribution importante à l'œuvre de la Paix et que l'O.N.U. devrait s'en saisir pour les examiner et en décider l'application.

« Ce IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix représente une grande espérance par l'ouverture du dialogue Est-Ouest et la recherche de solutions pacifiques entre les représentants des peuples.

« C'est la première fois dans l'Histoire que ces graves problèmes de la paix sont pris en charge, à l'échelon mondial par les peuples eux-mêmes, face aux gouvernements qui auront maintenant à compter avec la force morale de la conscience populaire universelle. Ceci est une chose admirable et susceptible de garder la paix au monde, à condition que, plus largement encore, se retrouvent au sein des partisans de la paix des mouvements et des hommes d'idéologies et de conceptions politiques différentes, unis dans une recherche loyale de la défense de la paix et de la liberté. »

« Transporté d'urgence de Sheffield à Varsovie, le Congrès des Partisans de la Paix se déroule sous le signe de la diversité. Les délégués soviétiques — par exemple l'écrivain Fadeev — défendent sans nuances la politique de Moscou. M. Pierre Cot, par contre, fait l'éloge de la neutralité. Mais, le fait saillant fut constitué par le discours de l'Américain Rogge, qui dénonçait, d'un bout à l'autre de son exposé, l'impérialisme et le fanatisme russes.

« Certains observateurs pensent que cette intervention pourrait provoquer une scission. »

« LA TRIBUNE DES NATIONS » (hebdomadaire, indépendant) a consacré au Congrès, le 24 novembre, l'article suivant : IMPRESSIONS D'UN CONGRES

« Il est trop tôt, au moment où nous écrivons (mardi soir) pour tirer les conclusions d'un Congrès qui s'achève fièvreusement et dont les résolutions ne seront lues et votées que dans quelques heures.

« Mais il est temps déjà de noter quelques impressions, non comme un participant, mais comme un observateur, qui eut de la peine à n'être pas entraîné par les mouvements d'une foule de 2.000 délégués, dont on ne saurait nier qu'ils représentaient des masses immenses d'hommes et de femmes du monde entier.

« On peut regretter, comme l'a fait M. Churchill lui-même, que le gouvernement britannique, en l'empêchant de se tenir à Sheffield, ait tenté de faire de ce Congrès des Partisans de la Paix une occasion de polémique politique. A le suivre ici, à Varsovie, on s'aperçoit rapidement qu'il s'agissait de tout autre chose : c'est-à-dire d'exprimer avec le plus d'éclat possible, pour être entendu des peuples et des gouvernements, des sentiments très profonds que partagent sans doute la majorité des hommes dans le monde, si peu « formés politiquement » qu'ils puissent être. Ces sentiments sont ceux que peuvent éprouver des hommes qui ont envie et besoin de vivre en paix, qui souhaitent que la voix du canon ne couvre pas celle des négociations qu'ils se refusent à croire impossibles, et qui veulent trouver des solutions, des moyens pratiques pour n'arriver jamais à la guerre.

« En dehors de grandes propositions, que traduiront sans doute les résolutions (pour une conférence des quatre, un conseil permanent de la paix, etc...) il était frappant de voir ceux que réunissait par exemple une même profession, ou une même vocation se regrouper pour chercher, dans leur langage particulier, comment participer plus efficacement à l'œuvre commune.

« Les observateurs étrangers au mouvement des partisans de la paix ne pouvaient manquer d'être frappés de ces caractères du Congrès et l'un d'eux résumait ainsi ses impressions :

« C'est un événement dont on ne peut pas ne pas tenir compte, et largement, si l'on veut juger sans erreur la conjoncture politique internationale. Ne pas le faire, n'y voir qu'une « opération » politique par exemple, serait, pour peu qu'on ne se croie pas « de ce camps-là », s'abandonner aux plus stupides illusions. »

« LA VIE OUVRIERE » (hebdomadaire syndical) écrit le 30 novembre, sous la signature de son envoyé spécial à Varsovie, Fernand Leriche :

« DANS VARSOVIE MARTYRE, MAIS RESSUSCITEE J'AI ACCLAME LA FORCE IMMENSE DE LA PAIX »:

— Arrêtez-vous un instant : regardez !

« Deux mille délégués venus de 80 pays différents. de Belgique, comme de Corée, d'Angleterre comme de Chine, d'U.R.S.S. comme d'Amérique.

«C'est la première leçon de Varsovie ! »

« Chose caractéristique, enfin, à ce Congrès, il n'y fut guère prononcé de discours inutiles. De Pierre Cot à Ilya Ehrenbourg, de d'Astier de la Vigerie à Fadeev et à Pietro Nenni, ce sont des propositions concrètes qui ont été faites.

« Elles exigent que l'Organisation des Nations Unies revienne dans la voie que les peuples lui avaient tracée après la deuxième guerre mondiale.

« Elles réclament notamment le règlement pacifique du conflit en Corée, le traité de paix avec une Allemagne unifiée et démilitarisée, l'interdiction de la propagande de guerre, l'interdiction des armes de destruction massive, la réduction d'un tiers à la moitié des armements vers le désarmement général et (entendez-vous, les anticommunistes de la presse aux ordres ?) sur proposition de Fadeev, le soviétique, le contrôle

Sécurité, de tous les armements. Y COMPRIS LES ARMEMENTS SUPPOSES !

« Je vous demande qui de vous, les écrabouillés d'impôts et les préposés à l'atomisation, ne pourrait y souscrire ? »

EN GRANDE-BRETAGNE

Le « Daily Express » a informé principalement, du 11 au 14 novembre, sur l'empêchement du Congrès de Sheffield et les difficultés du transfert à Varsovie.

Un envoyé spécial du journal, M. Sefton Delmer, était à Varsovie. Il a écrit deux articles, l'un pour tourner le Congrès en ridicule, l'autre pour déformer la réalité polonaise.

Il écrit notamment :

« J'ai écouté le propagandiste n° 1 des Soviets, Ehrenbourg... son thème est qu'il y a assez de place dans le monde pour le mode de vie soviétique et l'occidental, que les différences idéologiques ne peuvent être réglées par la guerre. Il en vint à sa proposition personnelle : que toute propagande de guerre devrait être mise hors la loi, proposition qui donnerait aux Soviets, à l'esprit agressif, un avantage énorme sur ses voisins. Cependant, ce serait folie diplomatique et politique que de ne pas relever le défi de la paix des Soviets, que de renvoyer les offres de désarmement de Vychinski avec un froid « ce n'est pas une base de négociations », nous devrions mettre en avant nos propositions de paix et de désarmement, nous devrions inviter les Russes et leurs satellites à discuter et négocier où ils veulent, même à Sheffield... par-dessus tout, nous devrions faire progresser notre réarmement, car les Soviets ne respectent rien plus que le pouvoir. Ce sont les armements qui leur font parler de la paix. »

Mais malgré sa malveillance évidente, Sefton Delner est obligé de reconnaître :

« Ce qui m'a le plus frappé à mon retour à Varsovie, c'est la reconstruction vraiment gigantesque. Des districts entiers ont apparus. J'ai vu la reconstruction à travers le monde, à Madrid, en Allemagne, au Japon, je n'ai jamais rien vu d'équivalent à cela.

« DAILY TELEGRAPH »

Comme la majorité de la presse britannique, ce journal a surtout parlé de difficultés que M. Attlee voulait créer au Congrès. Bien qu'il ait eu un envoyé spécial à Varsovie, il a peu publié sur le Congrès, sauf quelques informations sans bienveillance comme :

« Une orgie de discours sur le thème des « fauteurs de guerre » anglais et américains. Le discours de M. Ehrenbourg est de l'hypnotisme de masse, » etc.

DANS LA PRESSE POLONAISE

Comme il est naturel, toute la presse polonaise s'est passionnée pour le Congrès, et a publié au jour le jour des compte-rendus très complets des débats, des articles, des interventions de personnalités, etc. Il serait imposible de reproduire ici même de brefs extraits de ces journaux qui ont tant fait pour exprimer l'enthousiasme du peuple polonais envers le Congrès.

Nous citerons seulement quelques passages d'un article de Kazimierz Brandys, un des écrivains polonais les plus marquants d'aujourd'hui, auteur d'un cycle de romans, dont « Varsovie, ville insoumise ».

Cet article, publié par l'hebdomadaire « NOWA KUETURA » le 3 décembre, est intitulé : « La Paix, cela sonne fier ».

K. Brandys, écrit :

« Lorsqu'au son de la Polonaise de Chopin, s'est ouvert le Congrès de Varsovie et que le Présidium a commencé de prendre place à la tribune, deux mille personnes, réunies dans l'immense salle de la Maison de la Parole Polonaise, ont éprouvé un seul et même sentiment : la certitude inébranlable que les hommes et les femmes venus ici des points les plus éloignés du globe afin de défendre la paix sont moralement les législateurs du monde contemporain. A la tribune, aux tables des délégations, étaient assis, côte à côte, le savant, l'ouvrier et l'artiste, la mère et le mutilé, la jeune fille et le vieillard, le laïc et l'homme d'Eglise. De culture et de formation différentes, ceux que la « tradition britannique de liberté » avait repoussés des rives d'Albion de la lourde main du policeman, se sont assemblés dans la capitale d'une démocratie populaire pour faire obstacle, par l'idée et le verbe, la volonté et la raison, au plus grand crime dont l'humanité puisse être victime.

« C'est un phénomène neuf dans les annales de la conscience universelle, une date cruciale dans l'histoire mondiale des actes collectifs. Jamais encore l'homme n'a lutté contre la guerre avec une science aussi pleine, une foi aussi indéfectible. Depuis des milliers d'années on lui a inculqué la conviction que les agressions et les conquêtes servent des buts sacrés — la Patrie ou le Salut, le Roi ou les frontières. On traînait les peuples dans les guerres de l'Empire romain, aux croisades de la papauté, aux tueries de Cent ou de Trente ans, à l'abattoir impérial ou impérialiste. Les peuples y allaient et tombaient. On leur présentait la guerre comme un phénomène fatal, lié à la physiologie même de la société, comme la loi de la vie collective que chacun doit subir comme il subit la loi de la naissance et de la mort. Pendant des centaines d'années, des millions d'hommes ont cru à cette loi. N'en connaissons-nous pas aujourd'hui qui y croient encore ?

« La pensée révolutionnaire de notre temps a mis à nu plus d'un mensonge et a appris aux hommes à les clouer au pilori. Elle a démasqué maints crimes et a aidé les peuples à s'en défendre. Le mensonge le plus criminel qu'elle a dévoilé aux yeux de l'humanité est le mythe impérialiste de l'inéluctabilité des guerres. La vérité la plus criminelle qu'elle ait révélée, ce sont les véritables buts des guerres impérialistes. Et uniquement grâce à elle, à cette idée progressiste et révolutionnaire de notre temps, à cette avant-garde indomptable issue de la pensée des cent dernières années, qui a donné aux peuples la connaissance des lois régissant leur sort et les moyens de le transformer — grâce à elle et à elle seule — Pietro Nenni a pu, du haut de la tribune du Congrès de Varsovie, lancer au monde cette parole : « La guerre serait peut-être inévitable si ce n'était notre mouvement, si nous n'étions là, nous, les Partisans de la Paix. »

DANS LA PRESSE SOVIETIQUE

La presse soviétique a réservé une très large place au Congrès. Dès le début des préparatifs faits pour la tenue du Congrès à Sheffield, elle n'a cessé d'informer sur les élections des délégués dans tous les pays du monde, sur la composition des délégations nationales, sur les réactions de l'opinion publique et de la presse des pays étrangers à cette occasion, etc. Elle se fit particulièrement l'écho de l'indignation provoquée par le refus du gouvernement anglais d'accorder les visas à la plupart des congressistes, en publiant, à cet effet, dans presque tous les journaux du 11 novembre, les protestations des membres les plus en vue du Comité Soviétique pour la Défense de la Paix, tels que le Métropolite Nicolas Kroutitzki, l'académicien Oparine, le compositeur Chostakovitch et autres.

Les jours suivants, les journaux soviétiques donnaient de multiples informations et publiaient une série d'articles condamnant l'attitude du gouvernement Attlee. Ce sont, parmi beaucoup d'autres, « les travaillistes au pilori » de D. Zaslavski (Pravda du 14 novembre). « Echecs des fauteurs de guerre travaillistes » de Terentiev (Pravda du 15 novembre), « La cause de la Paix est invincible » (Editorial de la « Litteratournaia Gazeta » du 11 novembre), «Rien ne peut arrêter le mouvement des peuples pour la paix » de B. Polévoi (Pravda du 16 novembre), etc.

Une large publicité fut donnée par les journaux soviétiques du 16 novembre à la lettre-circvulaire confidentielle d'Attlee, divulguée par l'Agence Telepress, adressée à la mi-septembre à toute une série de représentants de l'Angleterre aux pays étrangers, leur donnant des instructions pour des mesures à prendre en vue d'entraver et d'empêcher la réunion du Congrès à Sheffield.

A partir du 16 novembre, jour de l'ouverture du Congrès à Varsovie, la presse soviétique lui consacre des pages entières dans tous les journaux. La « Litteratournaia Gazeta » du 18 novembre lui réserve, par exemple, la totalité de ses pages. Tout le long du Congrès, le « Troud », l' « Agriculture soviétique », la « Flotte Rouge » et les autres grands quotidiens soviétiques lui consacrent la plus grande partie de leurs colonnes. La « Pravda » paraît avec une feuille supplémentaire.

Toute la presse reproduit en entier les discours de Joliot-Curie, de Kuo-Mo-Jo, de Piétro Nenni, de Fadeev, du doyen de Canterbury Hewlett Johnson, de d'Astier de la Vigerie, du délégué américain Willard Uphaus, d'Yves Farge, etc, ainsi que de larges extraits des discours prononcés par l'abbé Boulier, par le métropolite Nicolas, par les délégués anglais Bernal et Crowther, par le délégué canadien James Endicott et d'autres.

Les revues et les grands hebdomadaires soviétiques consacrent eux aussi de longs articles sur le IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix. Le grand organe politique « Temps Nouveaux », par exemple, en dehors de nombreuses pages réservées aux articles et aux commentaires sur le Congrès dans ses numéros 46 et 47, lui consacre de plus, une édition spéciale en supplément au n° 47.

Quant à la revue « Littérature soviétique », éditée en français, elle publie une grande rubrique « Pour la défense de la Paix » depuis plusieurs mois. Parmi beaucoup d'autres articles dus à la plume des plus grands écrivains et publicistes soviétiques parus dans cette revue, citons ceux d'I. Ehrenbourg — « Lettre ouverte aux écrivains de l'Occident » (n° 7), de I. Anissimov — « La littérature et la défense de la paix » (n° 8), de P. Pavlenko — «Salut à vous, combattants de la paix » (n° 8, de V. Polévoï — « Pour la grande cause de la paix » (n° 9), de A. Sourkov — « Les forces de la paix » (n° 9).

DANS LA PRESSE HONGROISE

La presse hongroise a donné des compte-rendus tres détaillés aussi bien sur les préparatifs du Congrès Mondial de la Paix, que sur son déroulement. La Radiodiffusion hongroise a consacré de nombreuses émissions spéciales à la diffusion de compte-rendus, de reportages et de déclarations. La délégation hongroise au Congrès de Varsovie comprenait plusieurs journalistes dont M. Barcs, directeur général de l'Assemblée Télégraphique Hongroise, et M. Kende, rédacteur à Szabad Nep, organe central du Parti des Travailleurs. En dehors des compte-rendus, les journaux ont inséré des éditoriaux qui ont examiné les résultats et ont dressé le bilan du Congrès. La presse hongroise a également rendu compte d'une façon très détaillée des innombrables compte-rendus faits par les délégués, après leur retour de Varsovie.

Mme Elisabeth Andics, Présidente du Conseil National de la Paix Hongrois, Présidente de la Délégation Hongroise à Varsovie, professeur à l'Université de Budapest, a publié un éditorial intitulé « le IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix », qui a paru le 28 Novembre dans Szabad Nep. Elle y dit :

« Celui qui affirme que la guerre est inévitable, calomnie l'humanité. » Ces paroles de la résolution adoptée par le Congrès de la Paix de Varsovie exprime la pensée fondamentale du Mouvement International de la Paix : la confiance dans l'humanité, dans le bon sens des simples honnêtes gens et dans leur attachement à la vie, confiance dans ce que la justice et la vie vaincront de toute façon le mensonge et la dévastation.

Madame Andics écrit plus loin : « Le Congrès de Varsovie a témoigné de l'extension extraordinaire du mouvement international de la paix. Parmi les 2.000 délégués, il y avait les représentants des Partis politiques les plus divers, des prêtres de toutes les Eglises, des représentants des philosophies, des tendances scientifiques et artistiques les plus variées. Le Congrès a reflété d'une façon fidèle ce fait d'importance historique: de plus en plus nombreux sont les peuples, les personnalités éminentes qui comprennent que le mouvement international de la paix défend les intérêts les plus universels de l'humanité, que la tâche d'empêcher une nouvelle guerre doit vaincre tous les malentendus existant au sujet des autres questions.

L'organe bi-mensuel du Conseil National de la Paix, intitulé « PAIX ET LIBERTE, » écrit dans son numéro du 15 novembre :

« Le Deuxième Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix est un événement d'importance historique. C'est la Conscience des peuples, sa volonté de paix résolue, courageuse et inébranlable qui s'exprime dans la salle où les délégués de la paix racontent le désir, la volonté de leur peuple, où les combattants de la paix accourus du monde entier, dévoilent et stigmatisent les assassins américains. Le Congrès de Varsovie est la puissante manifestation de la force de centaines de millions d'êtres. Cette force doit faire réfléchir les scélérats qui préparent une nouvelle guerre. Varsovie porte toujours les traces du vandalisme le plus infâme de la deuxième guerre mondiale qui s'étalent toujours sur les places et dans les rues. Cependant, d'entre les ruines, surgit d'une façon plus en plus triomphale la nouvelle Varso-vie reconstruite par le peuple. Cette capitale parle aux délégués d'une façon plus éloquente que n'importe quoi: ceci renforce leur volonté résolue d'arrêter le bras des assassins qui voudraient ruiner les villes et qui voudraient empêcher l'épanouissement heureux, pacifique des hommes libres. »

DANS LA PRESSE ROUMAINE

La presse roumaine a réservé la première place aux travaux du IIe Congrès Mondial des Partisans de la Paix. Dans ses colonnes, les débats et les décisions historiques du Congrès ont été entièrement reproduits.

Ainsi le grand quotidien « SCANTEIA » du 22 novembre 1950 écrivait dans un article de fond intitulé :

« Le programme de Paix et la Grande Assemblée des Peuples. »

« Les journées du Congrès de Varsovie ont dispensé la confiance, la force et ont donné un nouvel élan à la lutte pour la Paix ! En dépit des obstacles et des manœuvres éhontées des impérialistes américains et de leurs valets du genre Attlee, le Congrès a eu lieu. Il a eu lieu sur la terre libre de la Pologne démocrate et populaire. Et son ampleur et son rayonnement constituent une brillante démonstration de l'immense force que le mouvement mondial de la défense de la paix possède désormais. Les fomentateurs et provocateurs à la guerre tremblent toujours plus effrayés ; les débats du Congrès, les décisions adoptées dénoncent une fois de plus, avec force, leurs plans criminels et ouvrent des voies sûres à la noble cause de la Paix. »

Et plus loin :

Les Partisans de la Paix de notre pays sont fiers que leurs délégués aient participé à la grande Assemblée des Peuples, contribuant à l'élaboration du grandiose programme de la lutte pour la Paix ! »

Sous le titre : « Grande manifestation de la Paix », le quotidien bucarestois UNIVERSUL écrit le 25 novembre 1950 : « Le Congrès de Varsovie ouvre une seconde étape dans la lutte pour la paix, lutte dont le point le plus haut atteint jusqu'à ce jour a été le succès de la campagne pour la signature de l'Appel de Stockholm. Cette nouvelle étape fixe des objectifs à atteindre en vue de rendre plus serrés encore les rangs des partisans de la paix et d'intensifier plus encore la lutte pour la défense de la paix ».

Du « ROMANIA LIBERA » : « Le Congrès de Varsovie a prouvé qu'il était la forme de l'unité des peuples la plus large de l'histoire. »

Se référant à la création du Conseil Mondial de la Paix, le journal poursuit : « Il est composé d'hommes de culture et de science les plus célèbres, de représentants des travailleurs manuels et intellectuels de tous les pays et de toutes les opinions politiques, de tous les cultes religieux. Notre pays y est représenté par l'écrivain Mihail Sadoveanu, le professeur Florica Mezincesco et le rédacteur de « Scanteia », Sorin Toma. La création de cet organisme suprême signifie l'élévation à un niveau supérieur du combat livré en vue d'écarter les dangers de guerre ».

« Rappelant que le IIe Congrès Mondial de la paix a décerné des Prix de la Paix à un certain nombre d'hommes qui se sont distingués dans le combat pour la paix ROMANA LIBERA comme tous les autres journaux, traduit la joie du peuple roumain, de voir parmi ces hommes le célèbre écrivain roumain Mihail Sadoveanu qui a reçu une « Médaille d'Or. »

« Le peuple roumain, concluait le journal, salue ce document de grandiose ralliement des peuples, publié à l'issue du Congrès, le considérant comme l'expression de sa propre volonté. Ce salut signifie en même temps l'engagement de travailler avec plus d'enthousiasme encore pour le triomphe de la paix ».

Le journal de la jeunesse roumaine, « SCANTEIA TINERETULUI, écrit : « Les peuples matérialiseront le grandiose programme de paix adopté au Congrès de Varsovie et contraindront à la retraite les forces de guerre ».

Le grand hebdomadaire roumain, « CONTEMPORANUL » considérant que « le Conseil Mondial de la Paix représente le front immense de la conscience et de la volonté de tous les peuples résolus à agir en vue d'intensifier au maximum la lutte pour la vie et l'avenir heureux de l'humanité », écrit :

« Les travailleurs de notre pays seront parmi les plus actifs combattants pour la réalisation des décisions du IIe Congrès Mondial de la Paix. »

AUX ETATS-UNIS

Le « New York Times » a consacré, du 12 au 26 novembre, un article quotidien sur le Congrès de la Paix. Il a insisté sur le Congrès de Sheffield, donnant de nombreux compte-rendus sur le déroulement des événements, soulignant des mesures prises par le gouvernement britannique contre le mouvement de la paix. Le ton général de ces articles est celui de l'ironie.

Mais lorsque le Congrès s'ouvrit à Varsovie, grâce à la collaboration des gouvernements polonais et tchèque, les articles changèrent d'esprit. La publicité mondiale accordée au transfert du Congrès obligea ce journal à déléguer auprès du Congrès un envoyé spécial qui écrivit des articles d'information assez objectifs, sauf, toutefois, en ce qui concerne le cas de M. Rogge.

Parmi les informations de ce journal, citons notamment :

«Un nouveau poste américain de radar, assisté par des patrouilles d'avions à réaction destinés à protéger l'Europe Occidentale d'une attaque par surprise, a fait ses premiers essais. Ce test a été effectué sur les appareils transportant de Grande-Bretagne en Pologne des délégués au Congrès à dominance communiste de Varsovie. Le survol de ces avions a été surveillé et des patrouilles sont venues les identifier. »

Au sujet du discours de M. Fadeev, le « New York Times » écrit ce commentaire, qui étonnera tous les témoins objectifs :

« Quoique son discours ait reçu un accueil enthousiaste, il a causé quelques inquiétudes pourtant parmi certaines délégations, notamment la délégation scandinave qui estimait que le Congrès subissait une trop grande influence communiste. »

« John Rogge, ancien procureur général adjoint aux U.S.A. et membre du présidium sortant du Congrès de la Paix, a traité ce discours « d'incendiaire ». (18 novembre).

Le journal se contredit d'ailleurs lui-même, en écrivant le 22 novembre :

VARSOVIE ESSAYE DE DEFINIR L'AGRESSION

« Au cours d'un débat que Jean Laffitte, Secrétaire Général du Congrès a décrit comme étant extrêmement animé, les délégués ont essayé cette nuit de trouver une définition de l'agression qui n'empêcherait pas les partisans de la paix de soutenir « les luttes libératrices des peuples. »

« Quelques délégués de tendance modérée ont déclare que la Commission cherchait plutôt à établir une distinction entre la guerre et la révolution. On démontra que la définition telle qu'elle fut établie permettait aux partisans de la paix d'approuver l'activité communiste au Tibet et en Corée et de dénoncer l'intervention de l'O.N.U. où qu'elle se produise. »

« 36 représentants de diverses églises protestantes ont déclaré que l'Evangile était utilisé en ce moment pour justifier les divisions séparant le monde. »

Et le 23 novembre, nouvelle contradiction, après cette évocation de vives discussions :

« Avec une unanimité qui fait penser aux récentes élections dans les Démocraties Populaires, 1655 délégués et invités auxquels on avait accordé le privilège de voter, ont voté l'adoption du programme. Il n'y a eu que trois bulletins contre et deux abstentions. »

« Le Congrès a approuvé la création d'un Conseil Mondial de la Paix qui veillerait comme un chien de garde sur les Nations-Unies et veillerait à ce que cete organisation remplisse ses devoirs envers l'humanité. Les délégués ont aussi élu 208 soi-disant partisans de la paix au Présidium de ce nouveau conseil qui a été décrit comme une organisation plus large que celle des nations Unies du fait que les représentants de pays coloniaux ou pays dépendants qui ne sont pas membres des Nations, y sont admis. »

CHINE

Le journal « JEGNMINGIBAO » indique que le manifeste aux peuples du monde et l'Appel à l'O.N.U., adoptés par le Congrès de Varsovie « uniront encore plus étroitement tous les peuples pacifiques et les mobiliseront pour une lutte plus résolue et active contre les plans de guerre, contre les actes agressifs du bloc anglo-américain en Asie, qui violent la paix. Le peuple chinois, qui aime la paix et qui lutte à côté du peuple coréen pour la paix soutient entièrement et le Manifeste et le Message à l'O.N.U., adoptés par le Congrès et s'engage à lutter résolument pour atteindre les buts, exposés dans ces documents. »

Le journal déclare, que le peuple chinois ne supportera en aucun cas les criminelles intrigues de l'impérialisme américain. Son expérience de nombreuse années lui a prouvé, que seule la lutte résolue contre les agresseurs peut lui assurer la paix.

Le journal « GOUANMINHJIBAO » dans son leader intitulé « l'Enorme succès du Deuxième Congrès Mondial des partisans de la paix » écrit : « Le Deuxième Congrès Mondial des partisans a condamné les actes criminels d'agression des impérialistes, il a démasqué leur politique. Il a manifesté la puissance jamais connue du camp international de la paix et de la démocratie. Le Congrès a exprimé la volonté des peuples du monde entier, qui aspirent à la paix et l'exigent et a élaboré des mesures concrètes dans le but du renforcement de la paix dans le monde, pour la collaboration entre les peuples. Le peuple chinois sait très bien, que la paix ne s'attend pas, que la paix se gagne. Pour sauvegarder la paix, il faut lutter contre l'agression, Afin de défendre la paix en Extrême-Orient, et dans le monde entier, le peuple chinois développe un large mouvement de lutte contre l'agression américaine. »

BULGARIE

SUEDE

Le journal « ARBEITARTIDNINGUEN » dans son éditorial écrit : « Le IIe Congrès Mondial, qui vient de terminer ses travaux, constitue un événement d'une signification politique mondiale. Ce n'est pas une exagération. Jamais encore des hommes, de divers pays et de divergeantes opinions dans les problèmes de politique ou de religion n'ont manifesté une telle unanimité dans leur désir de sauvegarder la paix du monde. Par ses décisions le Congrès a non seulement élargi le programme du mouvement mondial des partisans de la paix, mais encore il a élargi la base pour son organisation et la direction du mouvement. Un Conseil Mondial de la Paix est créé, composé des représentants des organisations de défense de la paix de pays différents. Notre pays y est représenté également. Quand le Conseil commencera son travail, conformément au programme indiqué par le Congrès de Varsovie, il trouvera le soutien de tous les pays du monde et de tous les peuples. »

CANADA

Les journaux « CANADIAN TRIBUNE » et « VESTNIK » ont largement publié les extraits et le compte-rendu des interventions au Congrès, en soulignant la condamnation unanime de toute politique d'agression, et l'ardente aspiration à la Paix des représentants de couches les plus diverses de l'opinion publique mondiale « Canadian Tribune » communique que le Congrès des femmes Canadiennes dans une lettre adressée au Ministre des Affaires Etrangères du Canada, Pearson, exige l'interdiction de l'arme atomique et de toute arme d'extermination massive, ainsi que l'admission de la République Populaire Chinoise à l'O.N.U., comme un premier pas vers l'établissement de la paix en Asie.

IN FRANCE THE FIGHTERS FOR PEACE INITIATE A NATIONAL CONSULTATION AGAINST GERMAN REARMAMENT

On Friday the 22nd December, the permanent national commission of the Fighters for Peace published an important statement calling upon all municipal councils and all peace committees to commence the next day a great national consultation on the question of German rearmament. This was to be commenced during patriotic demonstrations with the distribution and putting into circulation of 2 million ballot papers in the forme given below.

The Statement of the National Permanent Committee

After emphasising that German rearmament would bring about a war in which France could only be a victim, come what may, the statement proceeded :

« The government which is submitting itself to the demands of the ex-Nazis must listen to the voice of a country which wishes to live. This voice will make it think again, will make it reconsider its policy, will compel it to abandon this monstrous plan of rearming Germany. The voice of the people will cross our frontiers and join with the voices of other nations who are also opposed to German rearmament and whose delegates came to the Second World Peace Congress and joined us in saying so.

NATIONAL CONSULTATION

German rearmament, to which the French Government is consenting, is considerably aggravating the danger of war and menacing the security of France.

All Frenchmen have the right and the duty to speak their minds on this subject.

« PEOPLE OF FRANCE,

« We are asking you to express your opposition clearly and unmistakably.

« We are asking you to go from door to door presenting this National Consultation for signature, to instal ballot-boxes in your districts, factories, offices and in the municipal chambers, to enable the citizens of France to declare themselves.

« We call upon you to establish committees in you towns and villages, including all your eminent figures among their members, such committees to centralise and proclaim the results and to communicate them to your elected representatives.

« PEOPLE OF FRANCE,

« We call upon you to take part with all your hearts and with all your strength in this peaceful mobilisation of public opinion which will ensure that the voice of our sovereign people is heard. »

From its very commencement, this consultation has gaday's demonstrations at the monuments to the dead. Rallies, thered some tens of thousands of signatures during Saturprocessions, and stop work meetings in the factories and mines have already taken place...

THE SECRETARIAT OF THE ITALIAN DEFENDERS OF PEACE ANNOUNCES A WEEK OF MOBILISATION AGAINST WAR

The Secretariat of the Italian movement of the Defenders of Peace has just met at the office of the National Committee and considered the grave developments in the international situation which have occurred lately.

At this conference it was particularly emphasised how grave and unconstitutional in the case of Italy are the international undertakings taken by Messrs Sforza and Pacciardi on such problems as German rearmament, the subordination of the Italian armed forces and economy to foreign direction, and the question of the further burdens contemplated for the Italian people as a result of the armaments race.

Calling upon all Italians to unite on a broad basis for the defence of peace, the National Committee reaffirmed the necessity for broad discussion among the people on the vital problems of peace and war. No single political grouping, no single current of opinion, can claim a monopoly of truth, and no such body or group can ensure peace for Italy by its strength alone. For this reason we must obtain a meeting together and an effort at mutual understanding on the part of all Italians.

To this end, the National Committee has proposed to all provincial and local committees of the Defenders of Peace, to all political organisations, former servicemen, trade-unions, co-operatives, young people's, women's and cultural organisations, to friendly societies and sports clubs, and to all citizens without distinction of party or belief, that they should open a great national campaign during which the concrete peace proposals that the Second World Congress has submitted to the United Nations could provide a basis for the widest possible exchange of views, for the most fruitful discussions and the initiation of useful activity. These activities will take place on communal, parliamentary and popular levels and also on the widest possible cultural basis. They will find additional stimulus in the Week of National Mobilisation for Peace to take place in the middle of January. The many new activities and the redoubled efforts that the provincial and local committees will see developing during the coming Christmas festivals will be able to ensure for this national week all the extent and authority necessary for an effective campaign.

The Conference addressed the following appeal to the Italian priests

The National Committee has proposed that all our people meeting together for the Christmas festivals and in their families should express a solemn and intimate vow for peace. Let all our citizens propose to all their friends, acquaintances, political adversaries and in the letters of Christmas greeting the same prayer for peace that was expressed by the Second World Congress in the name of hundreds of millions of men and women in all countries. And in these days of family reunion, let this promise of peace reach all men of good will, through a line, a phrase, or the whole text of the Appeal to the Peoples of the World which has already been so broadly distributed throughout the country by the Peace Committees.

The National Committee further urges the provincial and local committees of the Defenders of Peace, from now on, during these days of religious festival, to pay particular attention to the responsibility of that part of the clergy which, having a direct duty to care for the souls of the people, is in a position to influence the consciences of a congregation of millions. Such priests are intimately acquainted with the anguish of a people upon the road to war that Italy is now treading. Everywhere they should be asked by the peace committees, by delegations from their congregations, in open letters and personal discussions, to make public declarations on the concrete proposals for peace of the Second World Congress, and in particular on those proposals of more immediate urgency, that is to say, the cessation of the Korean conflict and the withdrawal of all foreign troops, the question of German rearmament, the limitation of armaments and the suppression of war propaganda. The Italian priests, while openly assuming responsibility for supporting these concrete peace proposals, might well do as their brothers in other lands have done, by making an important contribution to the discussion, and so help to build up Italian unity in favour of peace.

« The Iron Curtain was made of Flowers »

The Curate of the Church of the Ascension at Balsham, the Rev. L. J. Bliss, who attended the Second World Congress, reported back to members of the Wandsworth Peace Council and the public the week-end of December 16-17. He found, he said, that the Iron Curtain was made of flowers.

Talking of recent attacks on the world peace movement, he said « Let us hear no more talk about this movement conspiring to disarm the West so that the Russians can have a free hand. It is a gross slander. « He went on to demand that all foreign troops should be withdrawn from Korea. « It is a hard fight, this fight for peace, « he said, but it is my belief that the peoples of the world will not be led so easily like lambs to the slaughter as they were before ».

Public Meeting held by Tunisian Committee for Liberty and Peace

On Wednesday the 13th December, the delegates of the Tunisian Committee for Liberty and Peace reported back from the World Congress at Warsaw in the presence of a large gathering at the Palace of French Societies. Amid the applause of the crowded meeting, a place was taken at the tribune by the World Congress delegates, Dr Sliman Ben Sliman, Mohamed Djerad, Mme M'Basaa, Mr André Roux and M'hamed Sehabou, with the presidential committee consisting of Messrs Mahmoud El Horcheni, Abdelkader Assoufi and Ben Abba.

During the meeting, the crowd welcomed with prolonged applause the arrival at the tribune of Sheikh Mohamed Salah Ennifer.

Following the addresses of Mme Basaa, and Messrs Roux and Djerad, Dr Sliman spoke of the extent to which the struggle for peace cannot be considered apart from the problem of national independence. He went on to raise an indignant protest against the attitude of General Juin in Morocco in expelling from the Moroccan Council the nominces of the Istiquwal, the Morrocan nationalist party.

Unity for independence and peace is today an absolute necessity, added Dr Sliman, and the committees for liberty and peace are capable of rallying to their cause all patriots, whether Destourians (i.e. members of the Tunisian national party) or communists or members of no political party. Moreover, these committees should be able to rally all democrats, regardless of their nationality.

Mexico

From Mexico, we received on the 27th December the following telegram : « At a great mass meeting Messrs Giral and Roces presented their report on the Warsaw Congress. The meeting greets the World Council and promises to work indefatigably for the application of the Warsaw Resolutions. Signed, for the presiding committee, Marquez, Rebollo, W. Roces. »

The United States

The Rev. Mr McGowan presents Peace Prize to Robeson

At a welcome home meeting on the 20th December at the Hunts Point Palace on the return of the Rev. Mr Edward D. McGowan from the Second World Peace Congress at Warsaw, Mr McGowan presented Paul Robeson with the prize which had been awarded to him by the Congress, a distinction granted by the representatives of eighty nations...

The ceremony was to have taken place in the Concourse Plaza Hotel, but the management suddenly barred the meeting which was sponsored by the American Labor Party. Earlier in the day before Judge Samuel Dickstein of the Bronx Supreme Court, an attorney for the American Legion and William Walzer, the commander of the Catholic War Veterans had threatened violence if Mr Robeson or the Rev. McGowan appeared. The Judge had then upheld the hotel's ban on the meeting. Opportunity was taken during the meeting to warn the American Legion that threats of violence would not prevent the continued pursuit of efforts for peace in the name of the American people and the people of the world.

Ecquador

Latest news from Ecquador was that the Executive Committee of the Defenders of Peace advised us that a big public meeting was to be held on Thursday the 21st December at the Central University of Ecquador to discuss ratification of the resolutions of the Second World Peace Congress. Among the speakers anticipated were Dr Angel Modesto Paredes, Dr Maria Antonieta Silva, and Mme Raquel de Romo Danila.

It was felt that this meeting would be considerably strengthened by the fact that the Extraordinary Indian Congress and the 17th Congress of the Ecquador Socialist Party had both just adopted resolutions in favour of the Stockholm Appeal.

DEBATES IN THE ITALIAN CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES

Christian-Democrat Deputy calls for Policy of Peace

On the 21st December the debate commenced in the Italian Chamber on the Giavi motion which was presented last summer and signed by the members of the P.S.U. (Socialists), the Liberals, the Republicans and the Saragatians.

This motion emphasises the danger of continuing the Korean war, asserts that all governments should apply themselves to circumscribing this conflict and preventing its spreading to include the whole world. It goes on to demand that the Italian government favour world peace on the basis of the respect of international law, and that the government should seize every opportunity to contribute to the preservation of peace.

The speech of a well-known catholic deputy, Igino Giordani, created a lively interest in the Chamber, and brought forth unanimous applause from the deputies. In his speech, Giordani appealed for co-operation between the nations, for renunciation of the current hysterical war-propaganda, and, addressing the Italian government, implored it to base its policies upon such an outlook. He went on to judge and condemn the atmosphere of division and hatred which is nourished by the government. « A third world war », he said, « would not make sense. No one would know why he was fighting. It would be a useless tragedy. It would not provide a liberation from communism, but would cause the disappearance of life, wealth and all the good things of mankind. For Europe and Italy, it would be the end !... But war is not inevitable if we can bring ourselves to admit that this rearmament is the consequence of the dialectic of things and of reciprocal mistrust. This does not mean that rearmament would not be fatal for us and would indeed drag us into ruin. That is why it is necessary to seek out a kind of activity which will bring about a peaceful co-operation among the peoples of the world. In Asia, thirteen pagan nations have made such a move. What is to prevent Christian Italy from working for the same end in Europe. We must work for the co-existence of all men, to banish this manicheism which throws all the blame on one side ». Giordani then urged upon the Chamber the necessity of taking up the discussion in Italy. « Enough of these polemical savages », he said, « who are leading us into a civil war that nobody wants and which would be absurd... Enough of these machiavelian tactics and of these lying outlooks which, to ensure peace, are preparing for war. Enough of this war-minded hysteria. »

THE CHURCHES AND PEACE

Interview with Monsignor CHEVROT

It will be remembered that the Priest of Saint-François Xavier in Paris, Monsignor Chevrot, was one of the signatories of the statement « Christians against the Atomic Bomb », which appeared in May, 1950, and caused a considerable stir. The following interview is taken from the Catholic fortnightly review « Quinzaine » of the 15th December.

We asked him what were, in his view, the reactions of the Church to recent events. His reply :

« The most notable intervention has certainly been that of the Head of the Church in his recent encyclical « Mirabile Illud ». In the carefully measured language which he habitually uses, Pope Pius XII calls in this document for prayers in favour of peace. He does not refrain from condemning, not only the threatening conflicts, but « the horrible massacres which are actually going on ». The atomic bomb is not explicitly mentioned, but it is clear that it is among « the murderous devices whose power brings horror to the mind of every honest person ».

— And in Catholic circles, Monsignor, have you observed a similar desire to oppose war ?

— In can only speak of those with whom I am in contact, and I shall speak frankly. Many of our brothers in the Church respond to personal motives which are quite outside their religious faith. Their opinions fan out over a large area, from the « non possumus » of the conscientious objectors right through to the tranquil assertion of the « bold ones » that the idea of a preventive war does not in the least scare them. At least that is what they say. They have no doubt failed to weigh the consequences.

On the other hand, for those who argue as Christians — and I note that their numbers are increasing — no hesitation is possible. The position of Catholics was quite clearly stated in the exhortation which Pope Benedict XV had the courage to address to the warring nations on the Ist August, 1917. He said : « For the material power of arms should be substituted the moral force of law. Simultaneous and reciprocal suppression of their armies should open the way for compulsory arbitration ».

Mgr. Chevrot then read us the complete text of this appeal, whose forthright clarity is indeed singularly impressive. Then, closing the book, he added sadly :

— To think that if Catholics, throughout the world, had taken to heart the warning of their leader, if they had followed it and repeated it everywhere to inform and clarify public opinion, we might have been spared the second world war. Believe me, we must come back to this memorable text. « War is a useless crime ». Whoever claims to base his actions upon the Gospel should struggle till the last of his strength not only against the atomic weapon and the even more terrible bacteriological weapon, but against all armaments of any kind.

— That is indeed our opinion, Monsignor. Will you allow me, however, to ask you one more precise question on the special subject of the atomic bomb ? Do you think that a Christian ought, in all conscience, to condemn it ?

— Should he condemn it ? You should read again the letter published by the Cardinals and Archbishops of France on the 14th June, 1950, a month after a certain statement of « Christians against the atomic bomb » which caused quite a stir. Our religious leaders consider it « scandalous and revolting » that anyone should doubt their opinion to the extent of daring even to ask them whether they are against the atomic bomb. All modern weapons that scientific progress is rendering even more murderous, « for our part », they write, « we condemn with all our strength ». Even more recently, the Cardinal Archbishop of Lyons described the atomic bomb as an « abomination ».

— Do you think, « Monsieur le Curé », (for they say this is the title that you prefer above all), that the current of opinion against the atomic bomb that we have seen this year has had any influence on the conduct of hostilities in the Far East ?

— I have no certain information on this question, but I should be surprised if some account had not been taken of a « veto » supported by many thousands of human consciences. Moreover, in my view, the desired result could not be obtained by seeking to intimidate one of the belligerents. Intimidation is a « process of war ». We must get above that to a free international agreement. But, my friend, you are leading me into an area where I am not at home and where I may go astray.

— One thing that I have certainly noticed is that, despite the increasing efforts that are made in this somersault of conscience to issue denunciations of manœvres and politically inspired traps, many Christians — some of the better ones among them — have been able to keep their minds free of this confusion. These have not accepted that the world is divided into two blocs and that, by profession, Christians belong to one of these and not to the other. They are not disturbed by the ideological colour of men who wish to put an end to armed conflicts : In this desire for peace they have recognised a Christian demand which they too are honoured to proclaim ».

— One last question if you don't mind. Do I understand you to say that in your opinion the campaign for prohibition of the atomic bomb could effectively bring about a real disarmament ?

— That is incontestably the reason why I have given my support. Now listen to me. War is essentially inhuman. If one accepts that war is legitimate, one is bound to accept also that war should be as murderous and frightful as possible, so that one's adversary can be annihilated as surely and as rapidly as possible. The time when, in a spirit of what might have looked like Christianity, belligerent powers bound themselves by reciprocal conventions, is now quite out of date. That one should endeavour, in modern times, to allow some weapons and prohibit others is nothing short of idealism. Today, it is no longer a question of formulating laws of warfare, but of outlawing war altogether.

« We are sooner likely to abolish war than to humanise it. For this reason, every action taken to render war less inhuman tends towards its eventual abolition. Let's see. How can we expect that the belligerent who possesses the atomic or bacteriological weapon will renounce it without a reciprocal advantage. You take his weapon from him and tell him : « Now, let's fight with an equality in weapons ». He will reply : « If war is to be continued, I shall regain my superiority by using the weapon that you do not possess ».

— In fact then, you see no way out, except through a conference between representatives of the armed powers ?

— Precisely. That is what I see as the aim of the campaign against the atomic bomb. Let the heads of state meet together and, fully conscious of their responsibilities, let them speak face to face. From the moment when they reach an understanding to proscribe one weapon they will not be far from an understanding to have no further recourse to war. If they can bring themselves to renounce a weapon which would make them the strongest, then at the same stroke they are condemning « the force of arms » itself and are embarking upon that road along which Benedict XV has shown our salvation to lie.

— We took our leave of Mgr Chevrot, who, walking to the door with us, good-humouredly wagged his head a little in saying ?

— Perhaps you smile a little at my excessive confidence, and some would even see in it a rather pitiful simplicity. « Que voulez-vous ? » It's nearly half a century now that I have been the Minister of Him who launched into the world that « Utopia » which is the greatest of all, when he said : « Love one another ».

ATROCITIES IN KOREA CONDEMNED

By Archbishop of York

« The Times » of the 20th December publishes a letter expressing all the horror felt by the British public and, indeed, by the defenders of peace throughout the world at the further atrocities committee in Korea, this time by the « Korean Youth Defence League ». Written by the Archbishop of York, the letter reads :

« Sir - I hope that our Government will convey to the South Korean Government the horror and detestation with which the people of this country have read the accounts of the wholesale execution of suspected Communist sympathizers. Your Correspondent says it is reported that some of the murdered women « carried babies on their backs ». If these barbarous executions continue, all sympathy with South Korea will vanish, and instead there will be a general demand that the forces of the United Nations should no longer be used to protect a Government responsible for these atrocities. I am glad to see that British soldiers on the spot already have shown their anger at these killings. Yours faithfully, Cyril Ebor : Bishopsthorpe, York. »

« The Korean Boy Scouts »

An editorial of the Manchester Guardian of the 19th December, under the above title, says : « The Korean Home Ministry described the Korean Youth Defence League, which was responsible for the executions, as « a sort of Boy Scout movement »... The youth leader who ordered the executions said that he did so because « he was certain that all the adults were Communist agents ». Some of their children had been shot also, « because when they grew up they too would be Communists ». The Korean youth movements have been a pest ever since 1945. There is much material about them in the reports of the former United Nations Commissions in Korea. They were at first encouraged and even financially supported by the American Military Government, which imagined that they were welfare associations. But they soon got out of hand. Violent by nature, they were encouraged to further violence by the politicians... »

STUTTGART CONFERENCE OF 17TH DECEMBER

Fixes Day against Remilitarisation for 28th January

On the third Sunday of Advent, more than four hundred representatives of different parties and organisations, as well as a number of eminent figures from cultural, Church, scientific and economic circles, met at Stuttgart to discuss the means of warding off the dangers that are threatening peace.

After reports were heard from Dr Herbert Jentzen, leader of the Stuttgart Peace Circle, from Johannes Oberhof, Evangelical Pastor of a Parish in Bremen, and from Erwin Eckert, a member of the World Peace Council, thirty-two other speakers took the floor. Three Ministers of religion, two school-teachers, seven workers (including five works chairmen and active leaders of the German Socialist Party), six former career officers (including a former General of the Air Force), four lawyers, four writers and journalists, three students and three representatives of Christian peace organisations, took part in the discussion.

The conference then proposed a law for the protection peace, such law to punish every form of war propaganda which poisons the political atmosphere, raises the sentiments of Germans against each other and causes the greatest dangers to peace.

The joint chairmen of this meeting were Mme Hoereth-Menge, Municipal Councillor of Munich, Dr Von Hatzfeldt, and Mr Erwin Eckert, a member of the German Peace Committee and of the World Peace Council.

The following is the text of the appeal adopted by the conference, calling for a wide public grouping against German remilitarisation :

The German People wish
To decide their own fate.

A few days before Christmas, this group of men, women and young people from all parts of Western Germany, of all occupations, of all religious persuasions and of all political parties, has met to discuss the means of saving and concolidating peace.

As a result of our deliberations, we consider that the first and most important step to take for the consolidation of peace is for the German nation to prevent this country from becoming a base of military operations for a new war and to refuse to allow the spilling of German blood in the interest of foreign powers.

Not a man, not a penny for war !

Such should be the opinion of every sensible German who loves his country.

Every day the press and radio try to make the West German population believe that it is menaced from the East, that Europe and European culture are in danger. This is an intentional lie, to support which no proof can be found. Any danger to peace and any state of crisis would be instantly removed if a resolute decision was taken to condemn the interference by one state in the internal affairs of foreign nations.

The people of every nation should be able to settle their own affairs in freedom. No government should be permitted to hold other nations in its guardianship.

The German people too wish to have the free and final say in their own destinies. We wish to live in peace and friendship with all the nations. No one other than ourselves has the right to dispose of our lives and our future.

In many ways, the German people is demonstrating its disapproval of remilitarisation. Up till now, many millions of Germans have not spoken on this subject because they have not had a chance to be heard. That is why we must distribute in all the cities and villages, and in all the factories and all the houses, a large number of ballot-papers to vote against remilitarisation.

We hope that a great popular movement will develop to make it impossible to drag western Germany into the aggressive plans of those who are aiming at war.

For these reasons we ask you to come on the 28th January, 1951, to a great Conference against Remilitarisation.

All those forces that desire peace should be represented at this conference. The opinion of all those who wish to serve the cause of peace should be heard there.

This conference should be prepared to take effective measures against war propaganda, for this propaganda poisons the political atmosphere and divides the German nation against itself.

If we wish to defend the peace, we must first prohibit war propaganda. The campaign we want is not one of agitation, but of understanding. That is why we greet everything that is undertaken towards such understanding, which will enable us, the German people, to live peacefully.

That is why we call upon all sections of the population to send their representatives to the great peace conference on the 28th January. We are also counting upon the presence of eminent personalities from public life, from the Church, from the worlds of science, culture, economics, sport and especially from the young people of Germany.

We are convinced that in western Germany the forces of reason and discretion will be stronger than those trying to incite the people to mutual hatred, and stronger than all the war propaganda. We believe that all mankind has no greater desire than to see the realisation of that old promise :

PEACE UPON EARTH !

VI

GERMANY AGAINST REARMAMENT

Review of the German Press

The proposals for a meeting of the Big Four on the German question, and the repercussions that they have had on the German scene are thrown into relief by the western press which is trying to reconcile the divergent points of view which are increasingly preoccupying the German people as the threat of war preparations on their own territory increases.

THE « KOELNISHE RUNDSCHAU »

The editorial of the « Koelnische Rundschau » of the 16th December clearly shows the strong current of opinion which is developing in favour of a peaceful settlement of the « German problem » in accord with pevious agreements.

« We all know », says this journal, « that the Damocles' sword of a third world war is hanging over our heads and suspended by a slim thread. We know that conversations between the four great powers are likely to remove this fatal threat. We also know that hope for the success of these « Big Four » talks has been strengthened recently, but no-one can yet claim with confidence that they will reach a successful conclusion. If, however, this were the case, we know very well that within the framework of conversations about a better and more peaceful kind of East-West relationship, the German question will play an important role without the Germans themselves having had a chance of saying a single effective word on the subject. »

This journal does no more than take up one of the arguments most commonly used by the Bonn Government to relieve itself of the responsibility for rearmament. A women's delegation from Gelsenkirchen which recently approached Chancellor Adenauer to express their indignation over the remilitarisation plans for Germany, was received by the Chancellor's Councillor, Dr Betz. A portion of their discussion is reported to have been as follows : Question : « But should we not protest against the preparations for war in western Germany ? » Answer : « We lost the war, and it is not for us Germans to decide on policy ».

The Koelnische Rundschau editorial goes on to show, moreover, the difficulties that the Bonn Government is encountering in presenting the policy of German rearmament to the Germans themselves : « ...for the movement in favour of peace is making unusual gains. At Stuttgart a particularly important meeting took place on the 27th December. It included representatives of different political outlooks, among them members and leaders of the Socialist Party, representatives of the different German Churches, including Professor Luedtke, President of the Una-Sancta League as well as a number of former Wehrmacht officers. The outcome of this meeting was the arrangement of a great peace demonstration on the 28th January against remilitarisation and the issue of a statement saying : Not a man, not a penny for war ». (See the text of this appeal elsewhere in this bulletin.)

It is also to be noted that there is a growing desire for neutrality in different circles among the German People. Thus the correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, writing from Bonn on the 19th December, said : « In a few days' time a new German party will be formed under the name of the « Democratic Peace Party ». There are plenty of parties in Western Germany, but this latest addition to their growing band is significant. Its leading members represent very different coloured threads of political thought. First there is Professor Noack, who has for three years been the apostle of « neutralising » Germany on the lines recommended by the American columnist Walter Lippman. Then there is the Protestant Pastor Niemoeller, who seems destined to graduate from submarines, through the aisles of the Evangelical Church, to the political arena. An unexpected exponent of the movement is ex-General Halder, who was once Chief of the German General Staff ». Manchester Guardian of 20th December, 1950.

THE STUTTGARTER WIRTSCHAFTSZEITUNG

« We Germans », writes the Stuttgart economic journal, « Stuttgarter Wirtschaftszeitung », « wish to persuade no one to join the combat teams ; we have no desire to throw ourselves into military adventures where we should run the risk of losing our heads. We have a greater interest than any other peoples in peace ».

Again, the « Koelnischer Rundschau » of the 16th December reports that « The Union of German Catholic Youth, at a recent meeting at Altberg, violently criticised the Federal Youth Plan for « labour service » (as a preparation for subsequent military service) and claimed that « they should rather allocate the funds to an increased allowance for the youth clubs ».

REACTION TO PROPOSALS OF GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

The question of the Bonn Government's attitude to the proposals of the German Democratic Republic is drawing a considerable attention.

To give some idea of the extensive repercussions caused by this proposal throughout Germany, one need only recall that messages demanding an early reply from Chancellor Adenauer are piling up at Bonn and that eminent figures of all opinions are demonstrating their desire, if not their insistance, that the current differences on the German question should be peacefully settled. The leader of the Christian Democrat group (i.e. Adenauer's own party) in the Hamburg Parliament, for instance, stated : « I declare myself in favour of Otto Grotewohl's proposal because I welcome any initiative taken towards discussions on Germany as a whole ».

Pastor Oberhof of the Parish of St. Martin of Bremen said : « Otto Grotewohl's letter is, in my opinion, the most significant of all current political events... A refusal to this invitation on the part of Adenauer would be a crime against the German people ».

THE HAMBURGER HANDELSBLATT

The « Hamburger Handelsblatt » defined the responsibilities of the Bonn Government as follows : « Above all questions of protocol, there is the German people itself which forms a whole, and whose future is a common one. In view of this, all paltry scruples should be silenced ».

It is interesting, too, to notice that the resumption of closer relations between East and West is being increasingly regarded as a vital necessity for German economic life. This is at once emphasised by two different Hamburg sources. The Study Bureau for All-German Questions, for instance, states :

« The figures of the Bureau of Commercial Statistics of the Hanseatic city shows beyond any doubt that 80 per cent of Hamburg's 90,000 unemployed could receive work and bread if raw materials, orders and currency were available. But all that would be possible only if the German market was again united and if the gateway was reopened for trade with the East ».

The Society for Trade with the East, representing more than two hundred Hamburg commercial and industrial firms, recently stated : « We are hoping for an early suppression of the internal frontiers between the zones by the establishment of monetary conditions enabling an unlimited peaceful exchange of merchandise between the zones as, for example, in Austria, because the continued division of Germany's economic body into water-tight zones is compromising our very existence ».

THE WESTDEUTSCHE RUNDSCHAU

What will the Bonn Government do in face of this demand which dominates the present internal situation in Germany ? That is the question asked by the American United Press and taken up by the journal « Westdeutsche Rundschau » of Wuppertal. « Herr Grotewohl's letter to Bonn has caused some uneasiness in Washington », says this journal. « The United States might find itself compelled to take contrary measures if the reception in Bonn Government circles of the Eastern Zone proposals should become « too warm ». It was being said around Washington that the German statements showed that Chancellor Konrad Adenauer was giving the impression of having the intention of at least taking into consideration the remarks of the East Zone Prime Minister. It seems — and American official circles seem to be agreed on this point — that Adenauer would not accept, at least openly, the offers of Grotewohl. But on the other hand, the opinion is being heard that the Bonn Government would probably be obliged to modify its attitude of refusal. In this situation, it is throught possible that Dr Adenauer will forward Herr Grotewohl's letter to the High Commission. The result would undoubtedly be an attitude of opposition by the allies. Such opposition, however, would then give the Germans the chance of blaming the occupation powers for putting a check to « negotiations for unity ». This would, at least, discharge the Bonn Government from that responsibility ».

THE KOELNISCHER RUNDSCHAU

The « Koelnischer Rundschau » of the 16th December takes up this theme. It says : « The only comfort is the knowledge that all the nations state that they want peace... German democrats who are waiting in vain for a real Europe, are now awaiting the Big Four conversations with patience, but with a keen anxiety. For it will there be decided, in effect over their heads, whether and how they will be able to live in peace, not only with their neighbours of the West, but also with those of the East ».

THE FREIES VOLK

« Freies Volk » of the 18th December relates how, in the presence of more than 1,000 students of Bonn University, the former Home Minister of the Federal Republic, Dr Heinemann, expressed the hope that President Grotewohl's proposal of discussions would be accepted. Dr Heinemann asserted that the continued division of Germany in two would make of her a field of battle in the event of a new war. Such a war would be one beteween brothers. Western Germany should not allow herself to be incorporated in the Atlantic Pact. « We have always loked with too much partiality towards the West, and with insufficient towards the East », he said. « Europe can only be saved if peace is saved ».

The same journal reports the remarks of the well known publisher Ernst Rowohlt who described the proposals of Herr Grotewohl to Dr Adenauer as marking important progress along the road to German unification. « I should be very glad », he stated, « if Herr Grotewohl's approach led to a positive result, and if negotiations for the whole of Germany could indeed be brought to a successful conclusion within the framework of the proposals of the German Democratic Republic ».

THE FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

The « Frankfurter Allgemeine » reports a further important statement by Dr Niemoeller who has again made his position quite clear on the subject of German rearmament. Having asserted that « we should on no account allow ourselves to rearm against our own brothers », he emphasised that the Church should interest itself in politics, because it cannot shirk its responsibilities towards men. There could be no law governing or limiting the Church's responsibility. That man who, is at the head of the German nation, for the time being, and who, without consulting the people, is offering the people's resources in manpower to the wide world, should present himself as a volunteer. As for Otto Grotewohl's letter to Chancellor Adenauer, Dr Niemoeller stated that he would not be inclined to promise anything « ipso facto » from these conversations. He considered that the German problem could not be solved without the United Nations.

The « Frankfurter Allgemeine » also publishes an article dealing with a public opinion poll among students of the Stuttgart Technische Hochschule on the question of German rearmament. The results were 76.5 per cent against, and only 10 per cent for rearmament.

THE HAMBURGER FREIE PRESSE

Under the title « Adenauer must reply », the « Hamburger Freie Presse » publishes an article saying, in part, « The Grotewohl letter should not and must not remain unanswered... We are not alone in holding this view. The centre group, as well as the leadership, of the « Freie Demokratische Partei » (Free Democratic Party) have published resolutions urging the Chancellor to take this step. »

In conclusion, we mention a public-opinion poll recently carried out by the weekly journal « Der Spiegel » (Hanover, the 25th December), to which 35,000 readers replied. It appears from the replies received that the overwhelming majority of Germans are opposed to their own rearmament. Here are the results :

80 per cent of readers were against a new war ;

12 per cent only considered war necessary ;

82.6 per cent were against compulsory military service ;

15.8 per cent were in favour of compulsory military service ;

68.4 per cent of readers were against German participation in a European army, even if such participation were on a basis of equality with the other nations.

To the question of whether Germany should join in a Western military pact, 81.5 per cent of readers replied « NO ».

OBLIGED TO RESIGN

Helmut Hansmann, Editor of the Frankfurt « Abendpost »

Writes to his colleagues

Publicly announcing his reasons for doing so, Helmut Hansmann recently resigned his position as Editor of the Frankfurt journal Abendpost. This newspaper is directed by Udo Binz who, in the time of Nazi Germany, was attached to the central propaganda agency of the great I.G. Farben combine, which was later convicted of war crimes. Hansmann's step recalls that of John Peet, the British journalist who some months ago resigned his position as Reuters' Berlin Correspondent, after denouncing Western war propaganda. Hansmann's letter follows :

« Dear Colleagues,

« The public statement of the President of the U.S.A. to have the atomic bomb released in certain circumstances on the heads of innocent men and women, the significantly cold manner in which the western governments are replying to constructive peace proposals, have brought me to understand what a frightful menace is hovering over humanity. Even among the narcotic propaganda of the western press, which is pleading in a veiled or open manner for German participation in plans for war, one sometimes hears the voice of reason. The German population has waited till now in vain for a simple movement which would pull it out of its lethargy, its profound doubt and the obvious impasse in which it now finds itself, a movement which would lead it to the only practicable road, the conscientious and clear-sighted love of peace.

« As a delegate from Western Germany, I took part in the Second World Peace Congress in Warsaw. The boycott of the licensed and controlled press of Western Germany, which opposes every meeting of the friends of peace, and the polemic against every attempt to mobilise the forces of peace in Western Germany, compelled me to give a pretext for my journey. The only way out for me was to say I was ill. I was, of course, fully aware of the consequences and possible results of my attitude.

« At Warsaw, there were the representatives of every nation in the world, nearly three thousand persons. There was no need for big words. Together, they spoke of those things which are preoccupying continents and nations. Their words were in the language of this single theme — to maintain peace, to spare women and children from terror and frightful destruction, and to spare men from the painful role of « death on the field of Honour ». There I saw for the first time with deep emotion what hope the people of the world have reposed in the struggle of the people of western Germany against the psychology of war and remilitarisation. I clearly saw that peace can really be won and that this struggle calls for all the strength of peace-loving men.

« As responsible editor of the Abendpost at Frankfurt, I thought, after my return from Warsaw, that I might be able to express in my newspaper for my readers, in the form of an explanation, the real motives, the reasons and the driving force of that which is separating the East from the West. I thought I might be able to play my part in bringing it to pass that Germans could meet other Germans and that the danger of a national catastrophe without issue might be removed for Germany. Meanwhile, my presence in Warsaw was made known and denounced by certain despicable agencies. The Director of Abendpost told me to leave the editorial staff without any noise and as quickly as possible. To avoid any scandal, he used the approved method of asking me to take the initiative of resigning, as he was not anxious to take upon himself the responsibility of dismissing a defender of peace.

« As efforts have been made to minimise my point of view and my opinions concerning the maintenance of peace, or even to ignore them altogether, I am throwing myself on public opinion. I speak to all Germans of good will who wish to safeguard peace, and to all my colleagues of the editorial staffs of the press of western Germany.

« In view of the catastrophe which threatens to burst on Germany, and in view of the efforts being made to make of Germany a second Korea, I urge them seriously to consider the work they are doing in the service of an unspeakable war propaganda. I ask them to bear in mind every minute that five years after a terrible war every effort is again being made to transform « German territory » into a war arsenal and to inject millions of Germans with the same accursed poison of that unhappy time so recently passed. »

Helmut HANSMANN.

EXTRAORDINARY SESSION OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

BERLIN, JULY 1st — 6th, 1952

— CALL FOR A CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLES FOR PEACE.

— ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE FOUR GREAT POWERS AND TO ALL THE PEOPLES ON THE GERMAN PROBLEM.

— RESOLUTION ON THE STRUGGLE AGAINST JAPANESE RE-MILITARISATION AND FOR A DEMOCRATIC JAPAN.

— RESOLUTION ON THE CESSATION OF THE KOREAN WAR.

— RATIFICATION OF THE OSLO APPEAL AGAINST BACTERIOLOGICAL WARFARE.

— SUMMARY OF REPORTS AND DISCUSSION.

— GREETINGS AND PRESENTS TO THE SESSION.

A special session of the World Council of Peace was held in Berlin, July 1 to 6, 1952.

The session which opened with a report by the President of the World Council of Peace, Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, was greeted by Professor Walther Friedrich in the name of the German Peace Committee and Herr Friedrich Ebert in the name of the city of Berlin. There were 298 people who participated in the Session, representing 59 countries from all parts of the world and numerous international organisations.

Upon the proposal of the Bureau, the following agenda was adopted and discussed:

— Peaceful solution of the German and Japanese problem.
— An immediate end to the war in Korea.
— The race for armaments and the fight for a Peace Pact.

In the course of the 15 plenary sessions over which the President, the Vice-Presidents and the members of the Bureau presided in turn, 104 speakers from 59 different countries took the floor.

Three commissions worked during the session: one on the peaceful solution of the German and Japanese problem, chaired by Mrs. Isabelle Blume; another on an immediate stop to the war in Korea, chaired by M. Yves Farge; and the third, chaired by Signor Pietro Nenni, devoted itself to the drawing up of an Appeal For The Convocation Of a Congress Of The Peoples For Peace.

During the final general session, these commissions presented proposed resolutions, all of which were unanimously adopted.

In addition to the Call for a Congress of The Peoples for Peace, the session issued:

— an "Address To The Governments Of The Four Great Powers And To All The Peoples On The German Problem";
— a "Resolution On The Struggle Against Japanese Remilitarisation And For a Democratic Japan";
— a "Resolution On The Cessation Of The Korean War".

The Session ratified the text of the Appeal Against Bacteriological Warfare which was issued at the meeting of the Bureau at Oslo (April 1, 1952).

Finally, proposals for new members of the World Council of Peace were presented and accepted. Following are the names of the new members:

CHINA: Mr. LEE I-MAN (replacing Mr. WU LAN-FU), Mr. KUO FANG (replacing Mr. LIU CHING-SAN).
ITALY: Signor Saverio BRIGANTE, Prof. Mario MONTESI, Signor Giuliano PAJETTA.
ARGENTINE: Señora Maria Rosa OLIVER, Señor Alfredo VARELA.
COLOMBIA: Señor Regueros PERALTA.
LEBANON: M. Hussein SEJAM.
NEW ZEALAND: Mr. AIREY.

For the Bureau of the World Council:
FRANCE: M. d'ASTIER DE LA VIGERIE.
CHINA: Mr. LEE I-MAN (also proposed as secretary).

Appeal & Resolutions of the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace

APPEAL FOR THE CONVOCATION OF A CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLES FOR PEACE

The war still going on in Korea, the use of arms of extermination, the revival of German and Japanese militarism, the use of violence against the independence of nations, rouse the concern of every human being, even those who have not realised the danger of war until now.

The peoples of many countries are becoming aware of the danger that they may be drawn step by step into a new world war, regardless of their wishes.

Hundreds of millions of men and women have called for the banning of weapons of mass destruction, for strictly controlled reduction of all armaments, and for a Pact of Peace.

In parliaments, in trade unions, in political, social and religious bodies, new currents of opinion in favour of safeguarding Peace are rising. Collaboration between all these forces is possible. This is necessary so that the course of events may be changed and Peace saved.

On December 5th, 1952, the Congress of the Peoples for Peace will begin in Vienna. This Congress should be prepared for in every country by discussions on the widest possible scale.

Men and women of all views and faiths, come together, discuss, and seek out solutions! Choose your representatives for this great gathering!

Your will for Peace must be expressed.

The Congress of the Peoples for Peace will bring together, on the basis of aims arrived at it common, persons of every opinion and groups or organisations of every kind, who desire disarmament, security and national independence, free choice of their way of life, and the relaxation of international tension.

The Congress of the Peoples for Peace will bring together all those who wish to make the spirit of negotiation prevail over resort to force.

Peace can be saved!

Peace must be saved!

ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE FOUR GREAT POWERS AND TO ALL PEOPLES ON THE GERMAN PROBLEM

Seven years after the crushing of the Hitlerite regime the Peace Treaty with Germany has still not been concluded.

The World Council of Peace interpreting the aspirations of millions of men and women throughout the world, addresses itself to the Governments of the Four Great Powers, the U.S.A., France, Great Britain and the U.S.S.R., which, by the Potsdam Agreement, assumed a special responsibility for the peaceful solution of the German problem.

It says to them that the time has come to assume their responsibility fully and collectively.

In fundamental contradiction to such a duty the separate agreements concluded in Bonn and Paris on the 26th and 27th May aim at a one-sided settlement. The agreements carry within themselves the rebirth of militarism and of fascism, deepen the division of Germany and of Europe, and are an obstacle to all practical efforts to promote general disarmament.

The peoples know well that unless there is a negotiated solution based on a firm determination to succeed, there is the real danger of there being no other outcome but war.

The World Council considers the best solution to be the immediate convening of a Four-Power conference, the object of which will be to take all decisions with a view to the peaceful solution of the German problem.

It considers, as the best solution, that the German people themselves, through free elections, achieve their unity and give themselves the Government which will conclude a Peace Treaty with all the States against which Hitlerite Germany made war.

This Treaty will have to recognise the right to sovereignty of a unified, democratic, independent and peaceful Germany.

This Treaty, in which Germany will agree not to enter into any military coalition, will fix the methods and times of evacuation of the foreign armies of occupation. It will thus help restore to the Nations of Europe the choice of their destiny in security, co-operation and respect for their independence.

The World Council of Peace, at the same time as it calls upon the Governments of the Four Great Powers, also calls on the peoples of all countries.

It salutes the great movement of public opinion and the different actions which are developing, unhindered by frontiers and beyond divergencies of ideas or beliefs, against the danger which the ratification and carrying out of the Bonn and Paris agreements will involve.

It assures of its support those vigilant and courageous men and women who in all countries, and especially in Germany, are demonstrating their determination to join forces against this peril and who demand an explanation of the members of their Governments, leaders or Members of Parliament who bear the responsibility of supporting the realisation of these agreements.

The World Council of Peace solemnly declares that the co-operation of all men of goodwill is indispensable to the development of effective action without delay.

It calls upon the trade unions, political parties, organisations, and churches, particularly upon those of Germany, Great Britain, France, Italy, the Scandinavian countries and all the nations neighbouring on Germany. It appeals to the rising generation whose future would be ruined forever by war. It appeals to all those who are conscious of the threat which is hanging over the homes of the world, to all those who believe that disaster is not inevitable and that the gravity of the hour demands the greatest confidence in the capacity of the peoples to listen to one another and to find a common path of action.

With all their assembled strength the peoples can, in the months facing us, prevent the ratification of the separate agreements, impose the holding of a meeting of the Four Powers and make it reach a peaceful solution that corresponds to their own security as well as to the national interests of the German people.

RESOLUTION
ON THE STRUGGLE AGAINST JAPANESE REMILITARISATION AND FOR A DEMOCRATIC JAPAN

The San Francisco Treaty which was signed under pressure of the United States, and the Japanese-American Security Treaty have provoked, only two months after their being declared effective (April 28th, 1952), the strong opposition of the Japanese people who consider that these acts have been forced on them in violation of their vital interests and their desire for peaceful development.

Millions of people throughout the world support the Japanese people in their opposition to these Treaties and the Administrative Agreement following them, because they constitute a danger to the Peace, not only of the Japanese people and the people of Asia and of the Pacific, but also those in the rest of the world.

Events have confirmed the view expressed in the resolution of the World Council of Peace passed at its Vienna meeting, November 1st-6th, 1951. The rapid expansion of Japanese rearmament, the maintenance of U.S. occupation troops and of numerous war bases on Japanese territory, the signing of a so-called Peace treaty with the puppet regime of Chiang Kai Shek accompanied by the American support of aggressive groups in other parts of Asia, can only point to Japan as a base of aggression.

Faced with this threat of the extension of the war in Asia, the World Council of Peace is of the opinion that:

the San Francisco Treaty and the dependent agreements are not valid because of their disregard of international agreements; and must be replaced by a genuine treaty, signed by all interested States. That treaty should provide:

(a) for the withdrawal of all occupation troops and prohibit the establishment of foreign military bases in Japan;

(b) for the full sovereignty of the Japanese people and the necessity for their democratic and peaceful development.

The World Council of Peace salutes the heroic struggle of the Japanese people for Peace, independence and democracy against the forces of militarism and war, and appeals to all other peoples of Asia and the Pacific to give them the maximum support in this struggle thereby helping to ensure their own peaceful and democratic development. It further appeals to peace-loving peoples in all countries whose Governments signed the San Francisco Treaty to struggle for its replacement by a genuine Peace Treaty.

Towards this end, the World Council of Peace calls on the peoples of Asia and the Pacific to make the greatest effort to mobilise the forces of Peace and democracy at the Asia and Pacific Peace Conference to be held in Peking in the Autumn 1952, which will help to find a satisfactory solution to the Japanese problem and other problems concerning Peace in the regions of Asia and the Pacific.

RESOLUTION
ON THE CESSATION OF THE KOREAN WAR

For more than two years there has been conducted an atrocious war in Korea, characterised by massacres of the population, bad treatment and killing of prisoners-of-war, mass bombing of open towns, the use of napalm and poison gases.

The World Council, after having examined all the documents that have been submitted to it, is also convinced that bacteriological arms have been employed.

The American armed forces have repeatedly committed acts of aggresssion against China entailing the risk of a generalisation of the conflict: after the bombing of several Chinese towns, after the use of biological weapons on Chinese territory, after repeated threats of recourse to the atomic weapon, the recent aerial attacks on the electrical installations of the Yalu, which supply industry of North-east China, constitutes a deliberate provocation designed to render more difficult the conclusion of an armistice.

The methods of war used by the American military command in Korea and the obstacles constantly put in the way of the successful concluding of the armistice negotiations, involves not only the responsibility of the United States, but that of all the Governments who approved the illegal intervention of the United Nations into the internal conflict in Korea, and which have placed their armed forces under the authority of the U.S. High Command, whose action, conducted in the name of the United Nations Organisation, is incompatible with the peaceful aims proclaimed by its Charter.

In order to put an end to the martyrdom of the Korean people and to safeguard Peace, the World Council of Peace calls on all peoples to demand:

(1) The immediate cessation of hostilities by the conclusion of an armistice respecting international laws and customs, the signing of which no longer rests as it does today waiting for the American delegation to abandon its unjust demands concerning the repatriation of prisoners-of-war.

(2) The ratification, and the respecting by all States of the Geneva Protocol of 17th June, 1925, which prohibits the use of bacteriological warfare.

The realisation of these immediate objectives will permit the re-establishment of a lasting Peace in Korea, by a peaceful and fair solution respecting the freely expressed desires of the Korean people and by the evacuation of foreign troops from their territory.

The war in Korea, with the atrocities which are accompanying it, and the use of weapons of mass destruction, constitutes a grave warning to all the peoples of the world.

RATIFICATION OF THE OSLO APPEAL

The World Council of Peace, at its Extraordinary Session in Berlin, approves and ratifies the Appeal launched at Oslo on April 1st by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace against the use of bacterial weapons in Korea and China.

Appeal against bacteriological warfare

We have examined with the utmost care the documents relating to the bacteriological warfare now being waged in China and Korea. This study has profoundly shocked us and filled us with horror. Bacteriological warfare is not only an abominable crime which must be stopped; it is a menace to the whole of humanity.

We appeal to the conscience of all men and women everywhere to call for a halt to bacteriological warfare and to demand the outlawing of bacteriological weapons. Particularly do we address ourselves to the men and women of the United States, for before each one of them there rises a question of honour and human dignity.

The fact that the war in Korea is being waged in the name of the United Nations constitutes a particularly grave circumstance. We place squarely face to face with their responsibilities the Governments that have approved the intervention of the United Nations and which consequently bear moral and political responsibility for the methods of war employed.

For our part, we have a double duty. Firstly, to inform public opinion and make the truth appear clearly in the sight of everyone.

In order that every human being may judge the terrible facts of which we have been made aware, we have decided to publish the documents submitted to us. The utmost possible light must be cast upon these criminal deeds.

With this in view, the Chinese Committee for the Defence of Peace has proposed the setting up of an International Commission to gather all the facts and all the evidence. The competence and impartiality of this Commission must be beyond dispute. To create it, we shall invite the participation of men and women outstanding in the fields of science, of law and of religion. We are sure that world public opinion will give its support to the efforts of this Commission.

Our second duty is to safeguard all the peoples against bacteriological warfare.

We note that the United States of America is the only one among the Great Powers to have failed to ratify the International Convention of June 17th, 1925, forbidding the use of asphyxiating gases and bacteriological weapons. We call on all the peoples of the world to press their Governments, with the aim of securing that this Convention be signed, ratified and observed by every State without exception.

We call upon them likewise to act decisively to secure that those guilty of employing this most cowardly and monstrous of all weapons be brought as war criminals before a competent tribunal.

In demanding the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty, we are certain that we interpret the feelings of the immense majority of men and women. In their name, we proclaim the most noble of all causes: that of the right of every child to life, and respect for every human being.

If the peoples do not act immediately to stop bacteriological warfare, there will be no bounds to cruelty, nor to the unleashing of the forces of destruction of life.

We call upon humanity to defend itself.

Oslo, 1st April, 1952.

Summary of Reports and Discussion

FIRST SESSION

(Tuesday, July 1st, afternoon)

Presiding: Professor Frederic JOLIOT-CURIE, President of the World Council of Peace, Nobel Prize Winner.

Professor FRIEDRICH, rector of Berlin University, President of the German Peace Committee, member of the World Council of Peace, welcomed the members and guests of the World Council of Peace to Berlin.

Professor FRIEDRICH stressed the great significance and the dangers of recent international events which motivated the meeting here of this Extraordinary Session.

"We are aware," he said, "that since the signing of the general treaty in Bonn and that of the aggressive Military Pact in Paris, political events in Germany have become the focusing point of the danger of actual war much more so than at the time of the preceeding Session of the Council in Berlin."

Showing that the whole world sees on the one hand the rebirth of aggressive militarism in Western Germany with a great feeling of anxiety and, on the other hand, they see with growing hope the will for Peace which animates the German people, Professor Friedrich pointed out:

"Our contribution to world Peace lies in the struggle against the so-called German Treaty, which is justly named, in the West and in the East of our Fatherland, the general war treaty. We see our principle task in the unceasing struggle for a peaceful solution to the German problem and for restoring the unity of our people."

Giving a brief picture of the recent achievements of peaceful work in the German Democratic Republic, Dr. FRIEDRICH then concluded:

"We are convinced that a united and peaceful Germany can only be constructed if the international agreements in force are respected and if the German people be given the chance to express their opinion freely and openly and to pronounce themselves on their own future."

Monsieur Friedrich EBERT, Mayor of Berlin, gave expression to the welcome of the Berlin population and of the municipality of the city of Berlin.

M. EBERT welcomed, in particular, Frederic Joliot-Curie, the great scientist, and the distinguished personalities who, under his presidency, have come to the World Council of Peace, "the true deputies of the peoples—their authentic representatives."

He noted how much the choice of the city of Berlin for the second time, as the meeting place of the World Council of Peace, puts emphasis on the great confidence that the forces of Peace throughout the world attribute to the will and the peaceful work of the German people and the Berlin population in particular.

"We want to make Berlin," the speaker continued, "into a city of friendship between the peoples, a city of Peace, the symbol of the will to life of the German people, the city of German unity."

Emphasizing in particular how the reconstruction programme for Berlin for 1952 constitutes a real confession of faith in this respect, M. EBERT concluded by expressing the confidence with which the population of Berlin looked towards the work of the World Council. "We are certain," he said, "that its decisions will contribute vigorously to the peaceful solution of the German problem. The decisions of the World Council of Peace will be for us, as for all other peace-loving peoples a guide which will inspire us."

Report presented by Professor
Frederic JOLIOT-CURIE
President of the World Council of Peace

Dear Friends,

First of all I wish to thank the distinguished visitors who have accepted invitations to be present at this session of the Council, and I bid them welcome.

Their presence here is a great stimulus to us, and I am sure that the knowledge and experience they bring will be of great value to us and will contribute to the success of our efforts.

I give my greetings to all the members of the Council present at this session.

The German Peace Committee and the Secretariat of the World Council have made a magnificent effort in organising our meeting here under excellent conditions. I am sure I am speaking in your name when I thank them for their energy and their devotion.

I should also like to put on record how much we have appreciated the kindly speeches of Mr. Ebert and Professor Friedrich, and how deeply we have been touched by the welcome given us by our German friends.

If we meet in Berlin, it is not only, as it were, in memory of our first session when we launched the Five Power Peace Appeal. It is because primarily we wanted to face the difficult problems of the hour in a capital which has acquired considerable importance through recent diplomatic and military decisions, and through the successive visits of those responsible for Western policy.

The grave events of the last few months led the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, which met at Oslo on April 1st, to call an Extraordinary Session here in order to discuss peaceful solutions to the problems which to-day divide humanity, and to find the best ways of putting them into operation.

The recent decisions taken on Germany and Japan, the obstacles preventing the conclusion of a truce in Korea, the use of bacteriological warfare, all show clearly the turn for the worse in the international situation, and give this session an importance of which we are deeply aware.

In this introductory speech I would like to give a swift survey of the general situation, and consider the conditions which our campaign must follow. In the course of this Council Meeting our General Secretary will speak on the activity of the Peace Movement and the ways of extending it.

The Bureau propose that in the course of the agenda, general or specialised reports would then be given, providing the basis for discussion. We shall have to examine again, in the light of acquired experience, solutions which were dealt with in earlier conferences; and new proposals will certainly be formulated.

It is not enough in an Extraordinary Session like this to formulate resolutions, however excellent; we must at the same time discover the best ways of putting them into operation. Only on that condition can our resolutions be considered as solutions.

We know indeed that the best of ourselves will go into the task of finding effective solutions, but we know perfectly well that we cannot find all the answers alone. It is vital that we associate in this task all the thousands of men and women who gave us the mandate for our last Congress, all those who have since joined our Movement, all those who, however removed from us they still may be, earnestly desire Peace.

The best way of reaching this end is by way of preparations for a great World Congress. The conclusions we reach at this Council Meeting should become the basis of world-wide consultations. That is why, at the very beginning of this report, I am formally proposing to you, in the name of the Bureau, the calling of such a Congress for the end of the year.

I should like to clarify this proposal a little more. We should never forget in the work we are here undertaking that this is the way to arouse throughout the world yet once again that ferment of explanation, of discussion, of analysis of all these problems, which forces on all those people concerned in the maintenance of Peace the inescapable fact that Peace is their own personal business and that there is an opportunity for them to take effective action to prevent war.

The result of our work, our resolutions and our conclusions, will certainly have their repercussions, from the moment they begin to spread. But even beyond their immediate effects I want to emphasize that they form the basic themes of the vast discussions and argument which will take place in all countries and in all circles.

This is the way the World Council campaign takes form and practical substance. In this connection, would you allow me to remind you of what I said on the 23rd of December of last year, in opening the National Conference of the French Peace Movement:

> "Be well persuaded that all the members of the World Council are profoundly aware that even the mere possibility of success in their actions or their influence depends on the labour of men and women like you, in every land.
> "Without the continuous work of explanation and comparison, without the benefit of millions of individual experiences organised in the national movements, without your strength, the World Council would rapidly be reduced to a simple gathering of powerless personalities . . .
> "The influence for Peace that the World Council must have on public authorities, on international organisations, whether or not dependent on Governments, will gain in force as your actions gain in strength and energy.
> "The World Council will enjoy a wider hearing as and when you gain a larger hearing in your own countries. If we reaffirm that the maintenance of Peace is a matter directly concerning every citizen, we mean once again that it is your action, united with the actions of each and all of the peace-loving people in every other country of the world, that is in fact the final determining factor."

In the preparation of the Congress all those who already realise the dangers of war, and all those who want Peace, must study the solution which we offer, and discover others. In acquiring a just appreciation of the importance of the problems and of the action to be taken, they will at the same time acquire the power of persuasion which spreads the active will for Peace. This is how millions of men and women not yet associated with our movement will fight to save Peace and without whose help Peace cannot be saved.

It is by bringing the vast majority of citizens of all countries to adopt as their own the just and peaceful solutions proposed that they can efectively be put into practice. In fact, once a really conscious and active public opinion has been created, it will become impossible to make a pretence of ignoring these solutions, and to drag the peoples of the world into a recourse to violence, that is, to war.

It is not enough for the World Council to interpret the feelings of Peace-loving citizens. It must strengthen them in giving them concrete support. It must so act that these feelings and aspirations are translated into positive demands founded on the dictates of Reason.

The power of public opinion, stimulated by the Peace Movement, has already been demonstrated, thanks to the Stockholm Appeal, which prevented the use of the atom bomb in Korea.

A great many statements and declarations have already stressed the part public opinion plays. For instance, here are a few lines from an article published in February 1951 in the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists by J. R. Oppenheimer, the American atom bomb expert.

> "I am sure I am right when I say that public opinion is a factor of the highest importance in the employment of atomic weapons. I have been assured of this by many military experts."

On a different level, I may remind you that at Vienna we stressed disarmament problems which had already been dealt with in the Address to the United Nations adopted at Warsaw. During the last General Assembly of the United Nations in Paris, public opinion expressed itself in a number of ways, and the President of the General Assembly, Señor Padilla Nervo, emphasised to the delegation of the World Council how essential it was for public opinion to express itself energetically in order to guide the work of the Assembly into channels fruitful for Peace.

During that session of the General Assembly we were able to hand the text of our Vienna Resolutions to all the representatives of the United Nations. A large number of our delegations were received by representatives of the leading Powers, and it is no exaggeration to say that this pressure played a considerable part in the formation of the Disarmament Commission, charged with two main tasks, to eliminate the threat of weapons of mass destruction, and to reach an agreement on the general reduction and control of armaments.

On June 15th, the Disarmament Commission presented a most disappointing report to the Security Council. If that could happen, it was because public opinion was not sufficiently alert and active, and this in turn should indicate to us the way we have to go.

We have seen the effort that has been made in recent months to spread the idea that the only possible solution left was violence, and that the only outstanding issue left was how to create an armed force capable of either dictating its wishes or imposing them by war. No concessions, no appeasement! Only there is another idea which has been presented and which has been gaining ground slowly and surely in the minds of millions of men; the idea of negotiation as against the idea of resort to force.

The Five Power Pact Appeal, launched in this very city, has been accompanied by discussion and argument around the signature campaign which has given all those involved the opportunity of understanding the meaning and appreciating all the implications. They have demonstrated that resort to force is in no sense inevitable, and that all problems and differences can be resolved by negotiation.

We are convinced that in this way we have helped greatly in the creation of a spirit favourable to the idea of negotiation, and there are more and more signs that this is so in circles still far removed from the Peace Movement. To mention only one example among many: the resolution passed by the National Synod of the French Reformed Church, which met in Paris in June 1952:

> "The Synod, greatly concerned by the tension which is exacerbating mutual suspicions both within each country and among the nations themselves, and which is daily increasing the risk of war, has decided unremittingly to exercise all its authority in the service of Peace. They are convinced that it is always possible for Governments to reach agreement through justice, honesty and in full respect for pledges given. We adopt as our own the resolution of the recent General Assembly of the Methodist Church of the United States, insisting that all Governments should continue to negotiate, and should leave the door open to any proposal, no matter whence it comes, which contains a possibility of Peace."

Our Movement rejoices at the evidence of such actions which can only give still stronger support to the struggle for Peace.

I should now like to pass briefly in review some of the problems which will be treated more thoroughly in later reports. Two dangerous stages in the preparation for war are the signing of the Treaties with Japan and Western Germany.

The Peace Treaty with Japan, signed at San Francisco, to which neither the Soviet Union nor China were party, has a definitely aggressive character aimed against these two countries.

The reconstruction of the Japanese armed forces, under U.S. orders, the presence of U.S. troops, the setting up of naval and air bases, have made Japan a factor of aggression.

In a speech delivered at Paris on May 5th, 1952, before the Institute of Political Sciences, Mr. John Foster Dulles attempted to justify this Treaty—for which he was primarily responsible—by declaring that Japan was highly industrialised, and it was necessary for the security of the United States that it should be part of the so-called "free world". Otherwise, he declared, it might become a possible instrument of Soviet aggression, without apparently considering for a moment that the Russians and the Chinese might justifiably consider that the San Francisco Treaty might equally make Japan a possible instrument of American aggression.

Peaceful proposals had been made to settle the problem of Japan, proposals which guaranteed the security of each country while giving Japan the opportunity of existing, in assuring her of supplies of raw materials and outlets among neighbouring Asian countries. Japan, as was explained by Mr. Dulles, must pay for the coal she receives by long sea routes three times as much as she would pay if it came from her neighbours.

In present conditions how is one to solve the economic problems which face Japan? What contradictions! In order to safeguard "their security", the United States are creating a fantastic economic situation in a country which in fact they are colonising, a situation which, as it becomes intolerable, could sooner or later make Japan once more a danger to all.

Official American declarations, however, maintain that the situation in this country is good, and that the great majority of its citizens are in support of the present policy.

No one can be deceived by such assurances; the enormous demonstrations, like those of the last May day, as well as those which took place some days ago, are too revealing.

In his speech, Mr. Foster Dulles declared (1):

> "The Asiatics have not the same deeply ingrained civil and political traditions; moreover, terrified by the ghost of 'Old Colonialism', they are suspicious of the form of association and military position of the free world."

Mr. Foster Dulles was no doubt anxious to condemn "the old Colonialism", but certainly not this "form of association" which reproduces it in fact as demonstrated by the usurpation of sovereign powers to the profit of a controlling nation; by the building of military bases; by an interference in all national affairs, by juridical privileges; by priorities in raw materials, and so on, in fact, by what one can justly call "neo-colonialism". Are not the greater part of the countries of the so-called "free world", already its victims?

The substitution, however, under the pretext of defence of this U.S. "neo-colonialism" for "the old Colonialism" of the former Imperial powers, has given rise to serious difficulties in its turn.

I gave an example at our Vienna meeting when I referred to the bloody incidents in Egypt. Since then, a new and highly significant example of the contradictions which arise between these forms of colonialism—all none the less tending to the same end—has arisen in the case of Tunisia. The independence of Tunisia, justifiably demanded by the immense majority of Tunisians, an independence which would be in itself a guarantee for Peace, is certainly a problem with which the United Nations should deal. The Tunisians, supported by many other countries, presented a demand to the United Nations to put their claims and charges on the agenda. On this occasion the United States found herself in an embarrassing position. On the one hand she claims to condemn colonial powers as such (though she hopes to replace them), on the other hand, she depends on them for her military arrangements. Taking refuge in abstention, she prevented the Tunisian question from being put on the agenda.

This example not only demonstrates all the contradictions of interests inherent in the Atlantic arrangements. It also illustrates the serious fact that this policy deliberately falsifies the whole working of the United Nations, and is a threat to Peace. Which is exactly what Pandit Nehru showed in his speech before the Indian Parliament on June 12th:

> "The Arab and Asiatic nations would be obliged to take the tragic decision to withdraw from the United Nations if two or three powerful nations can prevent discussions there."
> "We do not take the decision of the United Nations not to discuss the Tunisian question lightly", he continued. "If the Asiatic and African nations cannot make their voice heard, it may be that they will decide to have an organisation of their own."

The Prime Minister recognised that the United Nations Charter is a good thing, but he added:

> "I am becoming more and more of the opinion that it is not being respected enough and that the United Nations has shifted from its original moorings and has become gradually a protector of colonialism. Many countries are beginning to believe that the United Nations, which was founded to preserve Peace, has become an organisation to prepare war" (1).

But under whose influence is the United Nations shifting its moorings and being transformed into an organisation for preparing war?

The Peace Movement sees in these events additional reasons for supporting the peoples who are struggling for their independence and for continuing to demand a return to the letter and spirit of the San Francisco Charter.

A moment ago, I pointed out the serious dangers to Peace contained in the unilateral measures adopted as far as Japan is concerned.

In Europe, we are witnessing an analogous situation and one which also presents grave dangers.

It is a revealing fact that even those who for years have been preparing the present organisation of Europe have not found it possible to admit to what were their intentions from the very first.

In the Parliament of my country, the Foreign Minister, on November 24th, 1949, exposed the dangers of the "active military participation of Germany in the system of European defence"; such participation, he said, would "lead to immediate international tension, to a danger of conflict for which France does not want to run the risk nor bear the responsibility".

It is not by hiding the facts under the deceptive cloak of the "European Defence Community" that the dangers, so solemnly proclaimed a short time ago, can be exorcised.

Under the pretext of unification and economic co-ordination, under the pretext of creating purely defensive military forces, what in fact has just been done is to proceed to the integration of a German militarism and imperialism revived as the core of a bloc constructed and animated with the aim of undertaking a new "Holy War".

We must expose the deception of this "European Community" and its dangers to Peace.

The unification of Germany by peaceful means is ruled out by the policy which is being pursued by those who wish to make the Parliaments of the signatory countries ratify the recent agreements.

In place of this unification, an attempt is being made to create all the conditions which will allow a militarist Government—which has in no way hidden its intentions—to bring about by military force the unity of Germany and to conquer Polish, Czechoslovakian and French territory. The very machinery by which the Third Reich launched the Second World War is being deliberately restored and if the peoples are not on their guard, the same catastrophe will come about.

These dangers are now being perceived by a very large number of German people and by people in all countries.

The hundreds of thousands of French and Italian people, of all walks of life who have publicly demonstrated their indignation against the coming to Europe of General Ridgway is striking proof of this.

If indignation is spreading every day to an ever increasing number of people in these countries, it is because they know that this General has come to constitute an aggressive European army in the heart of which is a supreme Wehrmacht thirsting for revenge; it is because they know that this General will do to their country what he has done to Korea.

Did not "The Times" declare, after the signing of the Bonn agreements:

"This is a dramatic reversal of alliances."

In a remarkable article in "Le Monde" (1), M. Hubert Beuve-Méry concluded:

"A broad section of 'high society' in the West is to-day voting for German re-armament with the same feelings, and with the same perspective, which yesterday brought them to Munich. It was better to handle Germany even if it was Hitlerite and whatever the price that had to be paid, since sooner or later she was to enter into battle with Moscow. To resist her, to weaken her, was to strengthen Bolshevism. To-day, the illusion remains that to re-arm Germany is the only means of holding back Moscow and, as then, whoever dares to doubt this is pilloried..."

In all the countries concerned, the fight has begun to oppose this race to war and here I would like particularly to salute the brave and encouraging efforts in this direction by a very great proportion of the German people.

The World Council of Peace has previously studied these problems and has suggested solutions.

Various offers for negotiations and practicable proposals for discussions have been made by the Soviet Government.

We believe, as the Soviet Note proposes, that Germany must not be part of any group of Powers directed against any peaceful State whatsoever.

It is clear that under the actual working conditions of the United Nations this neutralisation cannot be seriously assured by the admission of Germany to this organisation, as was suggested in the Big Three note of May 13th this year.

A proposal for another Four Power Conference is under consideration, despite the signing of the agreements in Lisbon and Bonn. We must see to it that these negotiations are undertaken. Each defender of Peace must grasp the importance of the declaration adopted by the recent international conference "For the Solution of the German Problem, against Militarism, for Peace and International Co-operation", held very recently at Odense in Denmark. After explaining "that a very serious step towards war has just been taken", this declaration maintains that possibilities exist for the peaceful solution of the German problem.

"The Great Powers can reach an agreement on Germany on condition that the rights which the conference summarises as follows, are recognised:

The right to national unity;
the right to a freely elected Government;
the right to a peace treaty;
the right to sovereignty and to security."

"We are convinced that sufficient guarantees can be found to ensure the security of neighbouring countries; without wishing to state them in detail, in the absence of German delegates, we nevertheless affirm that one of the most important is to be found in the measures taken to assure the free expression and the free development of all the Peace forces in Germany."

"In a similar way to all the delegates of the many nations participating in this conference, we must pledge ourselves 'to mobilise public opinion for a supreme effort to avoid the irreparable and to make the removal of this fearful threat the beginning of a lasting Peace'."

It is just a little more than two years since the war in Korea started. The constant concern of the Peace Movement has been to work for an end to the fighting, so that these unhappy people can rebuild their ruins and so that war does not spread over the rest of the world.

On this second anniversary it is impossible without shuddering to count the cost of this war—of which you will hear further terrible details later on.

The armed forces of the United States to which a few foreign contingents have been added, have been called up and public opinion in many countries has been mobilised for the so-called liberation of the Koreans.

Instead of liberation, all the towns have been razed to the ground, hundreds and thousands of men, women and children have been killed by bombs or burned alive by napalm; the discoveries of biology have been used not to heal the sick but to spread epidemic and all this to set up and maintain a dictator whom even his allies cannot help but criticise for his attitude and to stigmatize for the systematic corruption which he has introduced.

For a year now, the armistice hoped for by all the families of Korea, of China and the United States, has not been settled. The history of these perpetually held-up armistice negotiations will be laid before you. The intention not to reach a conclusion is flagrant. Why this obstinate deception of the universal desire for Peace? Is not Korea being considered as a testing ground by those who are preparing for war?

They want to keep military bases close to China which has never been forgiven by leading circles in the United States for having got rid of Marshall Chiang Kai-Shek who let himself—and still lets himself—be ordered around so willingly.

Further, the conclusion of an armistice would threaten to spoil the pretext made by President Truman for the virtual annexation of the island of

(1) "Le Monde" June 11th, 1952.

Formosa. Also the ending of this war would make it still more difficult to persist in the exclusion of the indisputable representatives of 450 million Chinese from the United Nations. Can one imagine, for example, a disarmament convention adopted by the United Nations and to which China would not be a party, solely so that the delegate from Formosa could be maintained as a permanent part of the mechanical majority?

All these reasons have inspired those who, month after month, have invented new reasons to prevent the successful conclusion of the talks.

The latest of the imaginary obstacles relates to the repatriation of prisoners-of-war. From the sensational and contradictory reports which have followed each other for some weeks, it is nevertheless possible to state that the international conventions on prisoners have been systematically violated. Is it not characteristic that General Colson—negotiating the release of his predecessor held by the prisoners he had the task of guarding—had been able to give the assurance "that in future prisoners-of-war would be able to count on humane treatment in the camp in accordance with the principles of international law." In particular, General Colson promised to put an end to the forcible screening of prisoners-of-war, admitting that many prisoners had been killed or wounded by the United Nations forces.

The "Washington Post" wrote in relation to these statements:

"For Heaven's sake, what have we done to Communist prisoners in the past if they are promised these things in the future?"

The events which have occurred in the prisoners' camp on the island of Koje, are extraordinarily revealing.

Veritable warfare has occurred therein and lives have been lost. Finally, how can we fail to judge with the utmost severity the intention of those who asked the agents of the corrupt regime in Formosa to examine Chinese prisoners?

To avoid at all costs a cease-fire agreement, planes have just launched an extremely powerful aerial offensive on the Chinese frontier. Some people are even asking whether the intended objective was not to provoke a Chinese re-action such as would start the third World War. Public opinion overwhelmingly disapproves of these actions.

It is only necessary to see the feeling aroused in the House of Commons in London, and the spirited declaration of Pandit Nehru in India to show that this action is meeting with serious opposition.

It is interesting to note the violent re-action of the American Press to the none the less very cautious words of Mr. Eden. The United States no longer tolerates the criticism of their allies and they have become so accustomed to resorting to force that no doubt they would not hesitate to threaten their own allies.

Our own position remains clear. By all the means in our power and with an ardour which must be reinforced by the knowledge of the atrocious sufferings which this war represents, we must work so that first the fighting ceases and so that the Korean people regain their liberty and independence.

I do not want to end these few remarks on the Korean tragedy without dealing with one of the most sinister chapters in the history of humanity—the use of bacterial weapons by the armed forces of the United States.

Tremendous feeling spread throughout the world on the announcement of the use of this new form of destruction which more perhaps than any other characterises the perversion of science.

The rejections and denials have multiplied, in spite of the accumulation of documentary evidence.

You all know the important resolution adopted by your Bureau at Oslo.

For my part, whatever be the appeals made to me and the pressure brought to bear upon me I remain faithful to the appeal which I launched on receipt of documents sent to me by Kuo Mo-Jo, and I re-affirm all the terms of the letter which I addressed on May 3rd to Mr. Warren Austin.

If the accusations of the use of bacterial weapons have still not had the desired repercussions everywhere, nevertheless they have provoked a lively concern in many circles, notably among scientists. In Mr. Warren Austin's own country, groups of scientific workers with at their head Professor Theodore Rosebury (who was until the end of the Second World War the director of the special laboratories of bacterial warfare) have solemnly asked the Government of the United States in an open letter addressed to Mr. Truman, to ratify the Geneva Protocol of June 17th, 1925. The same demand expresses itself equally in many other countries and in very different social groups.

The resolution made in Oslo on the proposal of the Chinese Committee for the Defence of Peace, provided for the setting up of an international Commission to go to Korea and China. A Commission of Lawyers, who were on the spot before this appeal, has already ascertained the facts and it has just published its report.

Furthermore, in answer to the Oslo Appeal, a commission composed of scientists from different countries is at present in China. Other experts will join them in the near future. We are all fully aware of the importance that will be attached to the work of this Commission.

In the course of contacting competent scientists, it appears that it will be necessary to consider the constitution of a Permanent Commission of experts: this Commission should be in a position to send teams without delay to the places where notice has been given that new attacks by bacterial weapons have been made.

I would at once like to make the following observation: while redoubling our efforts to bring bacterial warfare to an end, to prevent it from being used again, and to have the guilty brought to justice, we must not lose sight of the great danger which the piling up of atomic weapons constitutes for humanity. The horror which was aroused by the utilisation for lethal purposes of biological discoveries must not lead us into the serious fault of letting it be considered that atomic bombs are merely weapons of a classical kind. Atomic, just as bacterial weapons, are weapons of mass destruction and we must, more than ever, demand that they be outlawed.

This question of outlawing weapons of mass destruction leads me to return to the problem of disarmament which I raised at the beginning of my address.

We proposed, first in Warsaw and then in Vienna, solutions which became increasingly well defined.

At the General Assembly of the United Nations in Paris, a first important step was achieved—the problem of classical weapons and weapons of mass destruction were closely linked and confined to examination by a single Commission.

This Commission, which has just submitted a rather disappointing report, tackled, without being able to solve, the essential difficulty of defining the order in which the various operations and convenants would have to be carried out.

The World Council upholds the view that by the signing of a preliminary Convention, the nations will have to undertake, on the one hand, to outlaw weapons of mass destruction and to control the operation of this outlawing and, on the other hand, to reduce armament. Once these undertakings are signed, it will be obligatory to proceed to a census, and to the setting up of the control organisation. It is clear that the reverse procedure—general census before undertaking to prohibit and reduce—present great dangers, since it would be to the great advantage of a possible aggressor to know by means of the preliminary census the means of defence of the country which he would attack.

It is necessary to recognise that the importance of the order of the succession of operations has not yet been fully understood by many people. It will be indispensable, in our work to be quite precise on this point so as to remove all confusion.

I have had occasion to make a few remarks on disarmament, and particularly on the control of atomic energy, in an article which was published in March 1952 in an issue of the review "Défense de la Paix". I would simply like to recall that the United States is continuing to block practical proposals of control which have been put forward, with the Baruch plan or a similar one.

I would remind you that this provides for the ownership by an international body based on a majority vote, of uranium and thorium mines, raw materials and nuclear industrial installations. This means giving to the United States, by the mechanism of the automatic majority, an actual monopoly over all the atomic activities of the world, and over all the deposits of uranium ore.

The World Council of Peace must recognise, as the many specialists of atomic energy do, that the condition of control proposed by the delegates of the Soviet Union are effective. It is necessary to point out that the proposals imply the relinquishing of important sovereign rights, but this is acceptable since it will be agreed to for the benefit of all in the interests of Peace.

The Baruch plan also implies the surrendering of sovereign rights but to the benefit, in fact, of a single nation only, which is unjust and certainly not in the interests of Peace.

It is necessary to enlighten those who have allowed themselves to be misled and to show them how, once more, the leaders of the United States are disguising the most selfish operations under the guise of generosity.

They base this demand on the wide-spread feeling that the exaggerated concern of sovereign rights of nations has been the cause of many wars and that it is necessary to foresee its abandonment. But as I said at Pleyel three years ago, the normal evolution of the world is certainly towards the disappearance of sovereign rights, and all the more so since the appliances of science tend more and more to link together the interests of all nations. The surrender of sovereign rights can be consented to when it would be to the benefit of all the nations in the world, the well-being of all and for Peace.

But this cannot be agreed to in an unreasonable manner and to the sole profit of a dominating nation. This would then be to play the game of imperialism which would end in those who abandoned their sovereign rights being colonised. Many who before did not believe in these simple reasons are now feeling the harmful effects of this policy which they had hitherto supported, and are beginning to express their disapproval.

The fact that some of these people participated in the Moscow Economic Conference, and the significance of this Conference in such circles, is proof of an awakening, and of the existence of an increasing drift of opinion which is opposed to the policy of conquest of American businessmen.

But uranium is not the only raw material which is preoccupying the attention of the leaders of the United States. And it is important to know all these preoccupations in order the better to understand one of the motives—and not the least important—of the foreign policy of the United States.

The report of the Presidential Commission of the United States[1] on the probable evolution of raw materials from 1950 to 1975, contains a mass of information.

At the present rate of increase of U.S. production which is doubling every twenty-five years, and in a world remaining divided into blocks, without economic relations, the United States could only with great difficulty procure for herself the necessary raw materials without almost totally depriving all her allies of them.

For instance, for oil, rubber, iron ore, zinc and manganese ore, she has so far absorbed half of the world production while only possessing less than 10 % of the population of the industrial nations.

In so far as uranium is concerned, in which she has very few ores, her needs amount to nearly the total production of her Allies (coming mainly from the Belgian Congo), which she uses and stockpiles on her own territory.

How can one avoid seeing in this fear of a famine of raw materials one of the most profound reasons for her "Holy War" policy?

It must be emphasized, however, that this dilemma is an artificial one: either to slow down economic progress, or make war.

It may be very praiseworthy to try and double production every twenty-five years, but not at the cost of producing want in the other countries of the world, not at the cost of war.

The truth is that by relieving humanity of the crushing burden of armaments, by turning the discoveries of science to peaceful uses, by accepting the peaceful co-existence of different systems, it would be easy to double the production of useful wealth every twenty-five years, not only for the United States, but for all the nations of the world.

In this preliminary survey of the events which have exacerbated international tension, and which emphasize the danger of a world war, I have tried to throw into relief some of the tasks which it seems to me are of essential importance for the Peace Movement.

It is undeniable that our campaign to prevent war has already had great success. None the less, faced with the danger which becomes more definite every day, we must intensify the struggle in making the successive objectives to be attained quite simple and quite clear to everyone.

Our Movement is open to all Peace-loving people, and it must be firmly understood by everyone that our sole aim is to prevent the terrible world war that certain people are preparing, and to contribute towards the establishment of a just and durable Peace.

Influenced in various ways, above all by lying propaganda, many honest people still have doubts about the sincerity of our campaign and will not join us. But many of them are not so blind that they cannot see, in the light of events, the real causes of the danger of war. More and more, individually or in groups, they condemn the dangers of their Governments' policy, and take action in favour of Peace. We believe that in taking such action, they strengthen the Peace Camp, even if sometimes they misjudge our Movement.

It is most important that despite the contradictions which still trouble them, these people should have confidence in the value of the strength they represent for the maintenance of Peace, and that is within their reach. We wish them every success in all their activities. We are well aware that these contradictions will iron themselves out if they follow through the path they have chosen, and that it will lead them to the peaceful solutions of the grave problems of today.

The aim is to establish a durable Peace, of benefit to all, whatever way of life is preferred. After all, is this not the point where all these paths converge, the various paths taken at the beginning of the struggle by all the different people who want Peace?

To succeed in our task, we must at every moment as it were, stop to analyse events and their relationships both objectively and carefully. We must understand properly the process by which a very important section of humanity in many countries, desiring only to live in Peace, has been hitherto induced to support or acquiesce in a policy which we know must lead inevitably to war.

Without making any claim to being the only defenders of Peace, we can claim that the value of our basic principles, our experience, the broad composition of our Movement, which is a living example of "peaceful co-existence", allows us to accomplish these tasks successfully, to make our contribution to the easing of the international situation, and to bring to fruition the most effective peaceful solutions. If we, that is each one of us, each defender of Peace, are so strong a factor for Peace, there is no contradiction between personal, political and other convictions, and the means which are envisaged or employed for the maintenance of Peace.

There cannot be such contradictions when men have decided their aim is, without championing any particular regime, to avoid a new and terrible war.

We have already mobilised a force of public opinion with which the forces making for war must reckon, and the success we have achieved explains their fury and the campaign of lies they have unleashed against our Movement. But those who are preparing for war are trying to create psychological conditions favourable to their policy. They know perfectly well that if the great body of public opinion made a stand against them, they could no longer continue this policy with impunity.

Which is why at every step they try to disguise the worst and most sordid of their acts by invoking the ideals dear to every normal civilized man. It is in the name of liberty, social progress, human values, security and Peace that they are trying to induce the so-called "Free World" to accept the military and economic domination of one nation, to the profit of that one nation alone, and, in the end, to accept a war of extermination against those who do not agree with them. They attempt to place the responsibility for all the present difficulties on the shoulders of those whom they call potential aggressors, painting a terrifying picture of their way of life. Their apparent plans for Peace are no other than plans for war, meant to impose in the name of I-don't-know-what divine mission a way of life which in their eyes is the only one worthy of being lived.

What they are trying to create is a "Holy War" spirit; a spirit which has as its final end the extermination, in the name of liberty, of those who prefer another way of life than theirs. How else are we to interpret this speech of President Truman to a delegation of émigré Rumanians on May the 5th?[1]

> "Your country will yet survive as a free country. You shall have our complete collaboration in helping you to survive. And if I am able to continue the programme which I have launched, you shall see your country free again in your lifetime."

A clearer admission that this programme is a war programme could not have been made.

It is often not easy for those people whose social origin and philosophy gives them a preference for a particular way of life, to resist propaganda which leads them to believe that the only way to safeguard it is to support a policy which they know well could lead to war. These people must learn that it is their right to choose their particular way of life, and there is no question of having to support a policy which would impose on them a way a life they don't want. It is the right of every people to choose the regime they prefer. That is the principle of the peaceful co-existence of different regimes which is one of the fundamental bases of our struggle for Peace and which must be opposed to the policy of a "Holy War". The moment that principle is admitted, all differences between nations can be arranged by negotiation, which implies reciprocal concessions and which leads to the operation of peaceful solutions, to everyone's profit.

It is unnecessary to stress here the economic advantages which would accrue to all the nations from peaceful co-existence. Raw materials and markets would be accessible for all, throughout world.

I repeat, the great success of the Moscow Economic Conference testifies to this truth.

If this principle of co-existence is not admitted and "peace" is sought only on condition that one particular ideology or regime must triumph, then negotiation must be rejected, concessions can no longer be made and one's will must be imposed by force, that is to say, by war.

This policy which consists in employing violence and presenting the peoples with faits accomplis is increasingly arousing the concern of all those who, for the reasons which I have just mentioned, were induced to support it.

To substantiate this, I will quote an excellent article by Professor Maurice Duverger which was printed in the conservative newspaper, "Le Monde", April 12th, 1952, and entitled "Co-existence or a Holy War?" I quote the following extracts:

> "The first question is the military level which the West finally wishes to attain: Is it a question of equilibrium or one of superiority? Responsible persons here are discreet. Officially, one talks, above all, of equilibrium; in practice, many think in terms of a margin of superiority. The question in itself scarcely makes sense.
> "Furthermore, it will always be difficult to gauge whether the equilibrium has been achieved or surpassed. All defeated conquerors believed themselves the strongest at the beginning. The crux of the problem lies in the ultimate aim of rearmament: is it a question of maintaining Peace or destroying Bolshevism? Do we want co-existence or a Holy War?
> "Those who bluntly pose this question are generally considered as neutralist, 'cryptos', or traitors. Could it be that the West has a bad conscience?"

An ever increasing number of honest people, faced with the slander and the flagrant contradictions between the words and the deeds of the leaders of the Holy War policy, are beginning to perceive the dangers which they are running. They are discovering that the real objectives of this policy which they supported were in opposition to their deepest aspirations. This complete change of opinion in favour of a true road which leads to Peace is taking place at the present time in the minds of very considerable numbers of human beings.

It is understandable that this growing potential for Peace is not yet able to express itself strongly. When a man has supported in good faith a false "peace" policy for a number of years and begins to realise that he has been misled, he goes through a period of confusion and sees no way forward. A certain time must elapse before he can have confidence again and before he can find the way forward.

And this is an essential part of our task—to give back confidence to those—and they are very many—whose confusion leads to apathy and an acceptance of the inevitability of war.

But there are still others who do not yet realise the harm they are setting in store for themselves and for others by supporting the Holy War policy. In the forefront of these, it must unfortunately be said, are a very large number of American people.

It must be recognised that the American people, who have shown so many admirable qualities, and whose magnificent productive work can be so useful to the world, is suffering from the effects of unbridled propaganda and from a system called "internal security" which is isolating them more and more from the rest of the world.

They are made to believe that their security, the way of life which they love, are in danger, that such is the case for many peoples who are their friends, and in order to guarantee their essential mutual defence or to defend freedom, humanity, social progress, etc. . . . these people are being asked to make very heavy sacrifices in money and in work and even in the lives of many of their young men. Unthinkingly, trusting in the words of their statesmen and their generals, they are ready to throw themselves and the world into a terrible adventure.

How can the American people reconcile the principles they invoke of freedom, humanity and social progress with the fact that wherever, what they believe to be American aid is practised, Governments which are enemies of social progress and freedom, and are hostile to honest dealings, are put into power?

How can these principles be reconciled with the fact that Chiang Kai-Shek has been installed in Formosa, Syngman Rhee in Korea and Bao-Dai in Indo-China?

Does this mean that mutual defence can only be assured by what are the most corrupt and reactionary forces in the world?

This flagrant contradiction is already recognised by many Americans who are courageously struggling to enlighten their fellow citizens.

There are also statements by soldiers, workers, businessmen and tourists who return to the United States after having stayed for some time in other countries under United States influence. They tell their fellow citizens that the people of these countries feel no gratitude towards them. They learn that the reason why there are so many inscriptions on the walls and on the pavements, telling the Americans to go home, is because what they believe to be American aid to these countries has resulted in the worst social reaction, impoverishment, loss of national independence and the persecution of patriots, and that this is realised by people in all walks of life in these countries.

We must help the American people out of the isolation in which they are being kept. By acquainting them with the truth as to the consequences of the policy which they are supporting, we shall rid them of their dangerous illusions and we shall make them conscious of that part of the responsibility which they bear.

We can assure them that their true friends are not to be found in those whom they believe to be such. Would not the preparation of the World Congress present a good opportunity for the millions of men and women, young and old, who are following the true road which leads to prosperity and Peace, to write to the millions of men and women in the United States and enlighten them?

All this activity, in the fore-front of which stand the American Defenders of Peace, will combine to create a healthy and powerful current in the United States.

We must bear in mind that, faced with the dangers which are focussed in a third world conflict, anxiety, weariness and inhibiting confusion have taken hold of a very large number of honest people. In this situation, where it is continually a question of poverty and war, their lives become unbearable and many end by saying "We must put an end to it". This state of mind, once it becomes general, has already in the past led to making the people accept the unleashing of war. In contrast, it is our duty, by showing the solutions and the advantages of Peace, while there is still time, to transform this despair into a will to change the course of events, in favour of Peace.

We must put an end to it—by taking the road to Peace.

In the last part of this address, I would like to clarify some aspects of the attitude which must be stimulated throughout our movement if we desire to get broad public opinion invincibly set against war.

If the proposal which is put forward to you to prepare for a great World Congress for Peace for the end of this year meets with your agreement, we will have to envisage during this Council meeting, the general outline of its tasks.

These tasks must be inspired by the will to change the course of events and must lead to solutions for the relaxation of international tension.

We have never, since the beginning of our Movement, since Pleyel, had to confront such a formidable situation. There have never been so many nor such great threats of war.

But I am convinced that without the weight of the World Peace Movement, the situation could be very much more serious. Have we not already succeeded in creating cracks in the war structure?

We must intensify our activity more than ever. The thousands of meetings, discussions and conferences which will start the preparation of the great World Congress we are planning will provide us with powerful means.

We have reason to be optimistic because we perceive that on many sides the war structure is beginning to totter.

In this race between War and Peace, we shall be able to awaken the universal conscience in time and it is Peace which will win.

PEACEFUL SOLUTION OF THE GERMAN AND JAPANESE PROBLEMS

SECOND SESSION

(Tuesday, July 1st, Evening Session)

Presiding: Professor Walter FRIEDRICH (Germany), Rector of the University of Berlin, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Report by Mr. Gordon SCHAFFER (Great Britain)

President of the British Peace Committee

Member of the World Council of Peace

on the Peaceful Solution of the German and Japanese Problems

The introduction to the first two questions on the agenda of this Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin—those of Germany and Japan—was made by Mr. Gordon Schaffer, Chairman of the British Peace Committee and member of the World Council.

He referred to them as the "twin problems of Germany and Japan" and said that the one could not be discussed without the other since the two problems were intermingled. Peace had to be won both in Asia and Europe and freedom must be restored both in Japan and Germany.

"Both in Japan and West Germany, the agreement concluded at Potsdam between the war-time allies has been broken. The attempt is being made to force a solution in Asia without the Chinese People's Republic which speaks for a quarter of the human race, without the people of India and without the Soviet Union whose armies defeated the main Japanese land forces.

"In Europe the plan to remilitarise Western Germany is put forward against the united opposition of the people of the German Democratic Republic who have chosen a new path of Peace, friendship and social advance, against the nations in the East of Europe which suffered immeasurably at the hands of the Nazis and against the Soviet Union who bore the main brunt of the bloody struggle against the Nazi aggression."

But in both Japan and Germany the people are refusing to become cannon fodder for a new world war, said Mr. Schaffer and added:

"Later in this debate we shall hear from our friends and fellow fighters for Peace who are in the centre of these struggles. We have here representatives from People's China, from the brave people of Korea, from India, and I hope that the delegates from Japan have succeeded in reaching our Conference. We have here representatives from both sides of Germany, proving that on this platform for Peace the unity has already been achieved for which the whole German people are waiting."

The rest of Mr. Schaffer's speech was devoted to the German problem. He spoke of the "artificial slashing of an arbitrary frontier across the territory of a great nation" as being "an affront to the German people and a perpetual danger to world Peace" and recalled the warning made by the World Council when it had last met in Berlin in February 1951:

"In betrayal of the wishes of the people in whose name treaties were signed insisting on the disarmament of Germany, military and Nazi forces are being revived. This military and industrial re-armament of Germany constitutes the most serious danger of a new world war."

Today, talk of Western German units in a European army has given place to blatent demands for a West German army.

"Herr Blank, Security Commissioner of Western Germany, announces 12 armoured divisions and an air force as great as the one which conquered France.

"The former Hitler generals and their allies in America, make no secret of their desire to recreate West German armies to try once again to fight the war which Hitler lost. Hitler's former generals declare openly that their conception of the so-called defence of the West is to wage war against the German Democratic Republic and the Western territories of Poland. Walter Lippman, the American commentator, has warned that the former Hitler generals seek to drag America and her allies into a war against Poland's capital, Warsaw, and against Kaliningrad in the Soviet Union. Hugh Dalton, the British Labour leader, told in Britain of his horror when he found that certain leaders of the German Social Democratic Party were demanding not only Poland's Western territories, but Sudetenland in Czechoslovakia as well.

"I am glad," continued Mr. Schaffer, "that we can record that these leaders do not represent the majority of the membership of the German Social Democratic Party which is taking a great part in the struggle in Western Germany against the contract signed in Bonn."

Dealing with the fact that the industrialists who financed Hitler were back in power, Mr. Schaffer said:

"West German newspapers have printed exposures showing that 85 per cent of the senior officials in the Federal German Foreign Office were formerly Nazis. In West Germany today men and women who fought fascism are victimised: a Nazi Party card today is too often a passport to high positions . . .

"Hitler's generals are making their own terms. They will only prepare to fight Hitler's war over again if it is admitted that Hitler was right first time; that Hess was right when he flew to Britain in May 1941 to urge the British Government to end the war in the West and join the Nazis in an attack on the Soviet Union; that Himmler was right when he offered to open the gate to the British and Americans in return for assistance against the Russians."

It was in an effort to confuse the people who ardently desired the final destruction of nazi-ism and fascism that certain leaders in Britain preached hatred against the German people because they wanted a war against Germany and not against the Nazi aggressors.

"But," Mr. Schaffer continued, "the peoples learned many lessons during the war. They understood why Hitler Germany was allowed and even encouraged to prepare war. They learned of the role of the international trusts and cartels in preparing for Hitler's aggression. The anti-trust department in Washington published the evidence showing that Hitler's war was made possible by the agreements between the German cartels and the cartels of the United States, Japan and other countries. Hitler had no oil or rubber, but he had coal and so by agreement between Standard Oil and I.G.-Farben, Germany was given every facility to make oil from coal and rubber from oil. Nazi Germany needed tungsten and other rare materials. She got them by agreement between Krupps of Germany and General Electric of the United States.

"Even when war had begun, representatives of Standard Oil of the United States and I.G.-Farben of Germany met at the Hague. They concluded an agreement recording their determination to resume their happy relationship after the war . . .

"Mr. President, fellow fighters for Peace, surely the issue could not be clearer. The tragic years since 1945 can be understood only if one sees them against this background. The cartel kings who gave a pledge at the Hague to resume friendly relations when the war ended kept their promises, the Western powers who signed the agreement of Potsdam to break up the cartels have broken theirs."

"Our world Peace Movement has sought since its foundation to bring behind the banner of Peace men and women of the most varied viewpoints. When we say that we are a broad movement proudly claiming to speak for all sections of our common humanity, threatened by common disaster, we mean it sincerely and without qualification. We have gladly welcomed the support of some who believe that Western re-armament was genuinely planned for defence.

"But on this question of rebuilding a Nazi-dominated Western Germany, there can surely be no division of opinion.

"If the leaders of the Western Powers want the friendship of Hitler's generals, they cannot expect the support of their peoples. If the leaders of Britain, France, Holland, Belgium and Denmark wish to greet as allies those who ravaged and tortured their countries they must expect to meet the anger of their peoples."

Mr. Schaffer then drew attention to the movements against German re-armament parallel to that of the World Council of Peace.

"A group of prominent personalities from France and Belgium, Socialists, Liberals, Communists, retired officers, in fact men and women from almost all shades of opinion in both countries gave their pledge to join in opposing German re-armament and safeguarding the Peace they had won together.

"In March 1951 just under 900 delegates from 17 European countries met in Berlin to voice the opposition of the workers. They called on all workers to unite on this issue and the struggle for a peace treaty with a united demilitarised Germany . . .

"In December 1951 French and German leaders of opinion again from the most varied sections decided at Strasbourg to plan a conference representing Germany and her neighbours. Out of that initiative came finally the conference held just over a fortnight ago near Copenhagen—a conference which gave the most serious study to the many and varied aspects of the German problem and showed that although there are many differences in detail there is a very broad measure of agreement on principle."

After dealing with the opposition of the peoples to German re-armament in France, in Western Germany and in Britain, Mr. Schaffer said the Session should take note of the danger to Peace implicit in the open threats to use armed force in an attempt to revise the frontiers of Germany and Poland.

"The plain fact is that the demands in the West of Germany for the use of armed force against the Oder—Neisse frontier, backed as they are by shrill propaganda from America and Britain, is the blue print for world war three. These frontiers were agreed by all the war-time allies who also sanctioned the transfer of the German-speaking population. It seems to me that if this Council were to give a warning that potential aggressors are playing with fire by these threats, it would strengthen the cause of Peace.

Frau HOERETH-MENGE (Germany), member of the Munich City Council, member of the Committee of the League for Human Rights, Member of the World Council of Peace.

Recalling the resistance movement in West Germany against the anti-national policy of the Bonn Government, Frau Hoereth-Menge stressed that all honest Germans are fully aware of the value of the Soviet proposals regarding the German question which also correspond to the national interests of the German people as to those of neighbouring peoples. They are fully aware that the German people can assure their existence only if they succeed in putting an end to their division and in creating a united, democratic, sovereign and peaceful German State which will not threaten her neighbours.

Abbé Jean BOULIER (France), Member of the World Council of Peace, then analysed the legal aspects of various aggressive military pacts, particularly the recent Bonn and Paris Agreements.

Mrs. FORCHAMMER (Denmark), Vice-President of the National Council of Women (an invited visitor), explained that, having been frequently a victim of German militarism, Denmark is against any re-militarisation of Germany. The Western Powers have integrated West Germany into the Atlantic Pact. Specifically, she said:

"The neighbouring States clearly see the mortal danger which springs from the re-armament of a Germany which, in the heart of Europe, creates the situation of a new Korea. On the contrary those sections of the population who want a demilitarised Germany, see the creation of a demilitarised zone in the heart of Europe as a decisive factor in reducing tension, and the starting point of general disarmament."

Herr Stephan HERMLIN (Germany), the writer (an invited visitor), showed that the repeated refusals of the Adenauer Government in considering the peaceful proposals of the German Democratic Republic are a reflection of the United States' desire to see German militarism reborn.

He quoted the words of the West German statesmen, Kaiser and Hallstein, claiming Polish, French and Czech territories. The current plan aims at conquering the German Democratic Republic and its realisation would be in conflict with the Potsdam Agreement. Herr Hermlin gave a series of recent facts showing the war preparations of the Western Powers, specifically the organisation of groups of spies and saboteurs. Some of these admitted their acts in court. It was intended to bring back fascist terror and it was openly admitted that there was no question of re-unifying Germany, but rather of "liberating the Eastern provinces."

President Pieck had made it clear that if it was impossible to prevent the putting into effect of the war agreements, the German Democratic Republic would have to think of its defence. Herr Hermlin then spoke of the free and creative work carried on in the German Democratic Republic: "Our workers and our farmers no longer work for the war-lords. They love their new life. They are ready to defend their soil and their factories. They will also defend the confidence which other peoples are beginning to place in us."

THIRD SESSION

(Wednesday, July 2nd, morning)

Presiding: Signor Ricardo LOMBARDI (Italy), Deputy, former Minister, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Bruno FREI (Austria), journalist (an invited visitor), said that the Austrian people know that a peaceful solution of the German problem, such as the Soviet Government has proposed, would also mean a peaceful solution of the Austrian problem. The United States want to make Austria a fortress between Germany and the Balkans; the Austrian rulers favour these plans, in alliance with the Yugoslav Government. They plan to turn Austria into a "bulwark" between East and West when by nature she is a bridge between them. But the determination not to participate in any military alliance is growing daily; the will to remain neutral is being strengthened.

Mme Isabelle BLUME (Belgium), Deputy, Secretary of the World Council of Peace, drew attention to the danger which the extension of the European Union to the Scandinavian countries represented from the viewpoint of political power. Although it does not make sense, many people have been taken in by it. The detrimental action of the Strasbourg Council has been to create supra-national powers, such as the Schuman Plan and the European Defence Community. These supra-national powers present a serious danger since they are beyond parliamentary control and permit men who are not responsible to their people to create situations of conflict, without the people having a chance to intervene.

Mme BLUME then proceeded to define forms of activity against the authoritarian powers in the Defence Community; the Peace Movement in each country must win over its Members of Parliament and, if possible, its Government; it should try to reach the Catholic Church and the Socialist Party. Parliaments of certain countries could appeal to the Members of Parliament of the six countries involved. A document on the European Defence Community needs to be published. Our voices should be heard by the Council of Europe and the people must be won over through thorough-going work of enlightenment. But above all, we must carry on a vast campaign among the people of the United States to acquaint them with the truth about these problems.

Sig. Saverio BRIGANTE (Italy), First Honorary President of the Supreme Court of Rome (an invited visitor), made it clear that the United Nations had not been created to establish or maintain certain balances of power with the aid of military coalitions, but to achieve united world action for Peace. To assure the application of this new principle, there can be only one force, that of the United Nations. The military treaties concluded at present within the framework of the Agreement on the European Army and dealing with the establishment of bases, the passage and stationing of troops on foreign territories, are therefore in contradiction with the U.N. Charter; the Charter in fact provides that no such agreements could be arrived at and concluded except upon the initiative and with the participation of the Security Council. With such agreements, Sig. Brigante stated, we have therefore returned to a system of military coalitions which cannot safeguard Peace.

"Any preventive treaty, even to prepare for urgent military steps, belongs exclusively to the domain of the Security Council, assisted by the Military Staff Committee.

"The movement of armed forces from one country to another constitutes in itself a danger to Peace; only the Security Council has, therefore, the power to co-ordinate, control and direct.

"Obviously, we must recognise the right to resist an armed attack, even collectively, but to exercise this right of legitimate defence we cannot have preventive armament treaties not planned by the Sovereign World Power, that is by the United Nations and, for the latter, by the Security Council. Otherwise we shall fall into the old system of coalitions which, up to the present, has perpetuated war in the world, and not Peace."

As for the German problem, Sig. Brigante noted that because of her artificial division, Germany cannot but aim for re-unification through all available means. The re-unification of this country must be accomplished, but for this we must adhere to the principles of International Law.

Leon KRUCZKOWSKI (Poland), the writer, Member of the World Council of Peace, speaking in the name of the Polish people, communicated the emotion and indignation of that people, so cruelly hit by the last World War, at the signing of the treaties which will reconstitute an aggressive German army; this is a new step towards war, a threat to the security of the other nations and specifically those who are neighbours of Germany. It is also an act aimed against the national sovereignty and the fundamental interests of the German people themselves.

The speaker then emphasized the ardent desire for Peace of the great majority of the German people. Seven years after the victory which was won in a common struggle against Hitler imperialism and militarism, the great majority of the German people are rising up against the attempts being made to drag them into the new plans of U.S. imperialism.

The sincere relations of friendship, good neighbourliness and co-operation which unite the German Democratic Republic and Poland are also an essential token of Peace and happiness.

Mme Elin APPEL (Denmark), professor, Member of the World Council of Peace, then dealt with the creation of a unified, neutral, demilitarised Germany without any alliances which must become the concern of the Four Great Powers.

She was followed by Arnold ZWEIG (Germany), the writer, Deputy, President of the Academy of Fine Arts and Member of the World Council of Peace. He showed that German unity, if constituted democratically, will threaten neither the security of neighbouring countries, nor the Peace of the world.

Mr. Babo ZACHARESCU (Rumania), professor of political economy (an invited visitor), stressed the importance of the economic questions in the dilemma: Peace or war.

Trade relations between the countries of South-eastern Europe and Germany should be improved to the mutual advantage of these parties and in the interest of Peace. At one time these relations were very important. Ever since 1945, the economic life of the South-eastern European countries has been transformed and developed; this represents a more fertile field for trade than a backward economy. It was proved at the Moscow Conference that Rumania, for example, could buy much German merchandise and in return sell, among other things, large quantities of oil and agricultural products. On the whole, such exchange would make possible a constructive and peaceful development of the German economy. Mr. Zacharescu showed on the basis of statistics that the volume of trade is growing between the countries of South-eastern Europe and the German Democratic Republic.

Contrasted with this, and despite the mutual desire for trade, commercial exchange between these same countries and Western Germany have dropped because of the attitude of the Occupation Powers. The division of Germany therefore becomes a deterrent both to international commerce and to the development of Germany's economy which some consider a dangerous competitor. The rulers of the United States want to hold the German economy in a state of bondage. Leading economists and businessmen of West Germany protest against this situation and consider the development of German-East-European commerce preferable to the arms' race for the maintenance of Peace.

FOURTH SESSION

(Wednesday, July 2nd, afternoon)

Presiding: Alexander FADEYEV (U.S.S.R.), writer, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. Meir YAARI (Israel), Deputy, Member of the World Council of Peace, dealt with the struggle of the people of Israel against the re-militarisation of Germany, against the preparations for aggression in the Middle-East and specifically against the projected Middle-Eastern Pact.

M. Jacques DENIS (France), General Secretary of the World Federation of Democratic Youth, Member of the World Council of Peace, stated that, in order to set up new German and Japanese armies, many young people are needed, and to make them accept military service, it was necessary to deceive them. The principal theme used is that of a "United Europe", and within this framework, that of a "European Youth".

He made it clear that the promoters of this idea are agents of the U.S. Information Service and army and American businessmen. Their main task consists of preparing the youth for the European army with the aid of newspapers and other publications, in a spirit of revenge against the Soviet Union. But the young people are not ready to accept these lies and M. Denis gave many examples to prove this. He stressed, however, that we must not underestimate the continual effort made to poison the minds of the youth, particularly in the schools, while national traditions are being trampled upon; this is doubly important since continuously worsening living conditions may more easily drive the youngsters into the army.

Europe's youth must again find common interests in peaceful and constructive relations by being offered a noble, beautiful and inspiring goal.

This must become not only the concern of the young people, but of the entire Peace Movement.

Herr FRENKEL (Germany), an invited visitor, showed how legally invalid the treaties of Bonn and Paris are. The only legal basis for a German settlement is the Potsdam Agreement.

Frau FASSBINDER (Germany), professor at the University of Bonn (an invited visitor), said that her remarks would centre on the neutrality or the neutralisation of Germany. Being a member of the "Emergency Organisation for European Peace" and working in close collaboration with Pastor Niemöller and other personalities, her contribution would reflect their conceptions, generally identical with her own.

Frau Fassbinder dealt with the roots of the idea of neutrality: the example of Switzerland and Sweden; the fear that Germany might again become a battlefield; the knowledge that her military strength does not correspond to the demands of today's weapons, and so on. How did political figures like Pastor Niemöller, Dr. Heinemann and Frau Helene Wessel envisage this neutrality?

Not a unified Germany tied to Russia, but not a unified Germany tied to the Atlantic Pact, as envisaged in the Contractual Agreements, either.

What remains to be decided is whether this should be an armed, unarmed, or slightly armed neutrality.

She thought that it would be appropriate to safeguard the borders within the framework of a United Nations force to maintain order, since Germany would be a member of the United Nations.

She made it clear that what she had just said represented possibilities, and not present conditions. In such a neutral Germany, the much feared Nazi ideas would have little chance to develop.

In conclusion she affirmed that the road of fruitful neutrality for Germany can be found only in Peace.

Sig. Giuseppe NITTI (Italy), Deputy (an invited visitor), took the floor in the name of the delegation from the Odense Conference and was attending the Council meeting as an observer.

He gave a brief account of this Conference, emphasizing its independent character and the diversity of membership it had obtained, and then showed that the peaceful solution of the German problem could not prevail while the country remained divided; it could only regain its sovereignty through a genuine Peace Treaty. The Contractual Agreements which are an open violation of the Potsdam Agreement, aggravate the division between the two parts of the world. The Odense Conference showed that the chances of Peace depend on the recognition of the rights of the German people and on valid guarantees for the neighbouring countries. In the absence of the German delegates the Conference was unable to deal with all these problems. A Conference for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem will take place in the near future.

M. Abderrhaman BOUCHAMA (Algeria), architect, Member of the World Council of Peace, then described the danger which the rebirth of a militaristic and revanchist Germany would represent for the peoples of North Africa.

Dr. Jean-Pierre MAY (France), Member of the World Council of Peace, emphasized the aggressive nature of the Bonn and Paris treaties which carry with them dangers of which ever larger sections of the French population are becoming conscious.

FIFTH SESSION

(Wednesday, July 2nd, night session)

Presiding: KUO MO-JO (China), writer, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace.

Frau Charlotte FLEISCHMANN (Germany), District President of the Christian-Socialist Union (an invited visitor).

The speaker conveyed greetings and a message from Dr. Josef WIRTH, former Chancellor of the Reich, from Wilhelm ELFES and Frau von KARDORFF-OHEIMB, a member of the "Congress For Mutual German Understanding and an Equitable Peace Treaty", who were unable to obtain their interzonal passes to participate in the Session.

First she said that the "Work Circle for German Understanding" to which she belongs, has recently had very satisfactory contacts with all groups in Western Germany. She continued:

"We are wholeheartedly opposed to the General Treaty and to all agreements attached thereto. Not only do they run counter to the national interest of the German people, but they also create a threatening state of affairs which corresponds neither to the Hague Convention nor to the right of sovereignty, nor to any other right commonly accepted among nations.

"This general treaty would mean for Germany a permanent state of division and would be instrumental in keeping our people forever deprived of their legitimate rights."

In conclusion, Frau Fleischmann demanded the constitution of a united and strong Germany, a guarantee for a democratic regime, a guarantee for Peace in Europe.

Professor Felix IVERSEN (Finland), President of the Pacifist Council, Member of the World Council of Peace, exposed the dangers threatening Peace through the attempts of the Western Powers to bring about German unity by the use of military power on the part of Western Germany.

Herr TAFFERT (Germany), a farmer (an invited visitor), then told why the farmers of the German Democratic Republic want a united, peaceful Germany.

Wanda WASSILIEVSKA (U.S.S.R.), the writer, Member of the World Council of Peace, stated that the General Treaty is a war treaty, and no effort is being made to conceal it. The provisions of the treaty envisage the possibility of intervention—under various pretexts—of American-Anglo-French troops stationed in Germany. This, in fact, deprives the Bonn State of all sovereignty. These provisions bear a grave danger for Peace. Certain modifications in form do not change at all the fact that Western Germany will be kept under the control of the occupation troops.

Mme Wassilievska, quoting examples from history, declared that a restored German imperialism would not content itself in trying to reconquer the Eastern territories, but would also menace the West. She then spoke of how the former Nazi generals are put back into the saddle, how Western Germany is being oriented towards war production, including the manufacture of bacteriological weapons. This policy has for its purpose, according to Herr Adenauer, the setting up of "a new order in Eastern Europe". Furthermore, one article of the Bonn treaty provides that these provisions would eventually be extended to all of Germany. Moreover, it becomes clear that this treaty is to play the same role as the treaty with Japan.

The demands of hundreds of millions of men and women the world over are expressed in the following terms:

—Conclusion of a Peace Treaty with Germany;

—A chance for the German people to lead a normal life in a normal state;

—Germany to cease being a threat to Peace and to become a truly democratic State.

—Such a Germany to enjoy full sovereignty which, among other things, would imply her right to have an army for defence.

We have faith, the speaker went on, in the possibility of a peaceful solution of the German problem because we have faith in the struggle of the peoples, in whose front ranks stand the German people. She closed by supporting the proposal of President Joliot-Curie, and by asking that the World Council of Peace appeal to the Four Great Powers to meet with the aim of discussing free elections and the formation of a Government for all of Germany, the prompt conclusion of a Peace treaty and the withdrawal of all occupation troops from Germany.

Walter DIEHL (Germany), a student, Member of the World Council of Peace, then showed that the peaceful unification of Germany would be the starting point for a general peaceful solution in Europe.

Frau Anna SEGHERS (Germany), the writer, Member of the World Council of Peace.

Frau Seghers made several suggestions:

"'The White Book'—how are we to present such a book based on authentic material which we know so well here in Germany? I will give you just one passage which might well appear in such a book and which would open the eyes of a lot people who are still far from us.

"Before 2,000 Bonn students, the War Minister of the Federal Republic, declared recently:

'French public opinion believed that they were on the side of the victors and that France had won the war.' The report states that there was prolonged laughter. When this had subsided, Herr Blanc added:

'I think I must have made an unintentional joke.'"

"I consider that we, the German Defenders of Peace, must consider it an honour to be given the task of making this 'White Book' which should demonstrate not only the level of militarisation in Western Germany, but also the important changes which are coming about in the heart of the German people. The German people have learned how to distinguish between their old and their new friends. And at this point I come to what Herr Hermlin said yesterday:

'The different groups from Germany who are partially represented here, the different parties, philosophical conceptions:... must make contact, without hesitation, with the corresponding groups amongst other peoples.'

"We promise the greatest response from a meeting of the mothers of the entire world for the defence of their sons. There is no woman, be she black, white or yellow, be she a Soviet woman, an American, a French, English or German woman, who would want to give up what she holds most dear as cannon fodder. That is why the idea of this conference, which is as simple as it is powerful, must find an extensive and deep response."

Colonel MANHES (France), President of the International Resistance Federation (an invited visitor).

Col. Manhes spoke in the name of the International Resistance Federation. It was useless, he said, to try to make the resistance fighters believe that a divided Germany constitutes less of a danger than a unified Germany: the lesson of Korea has not been lost. The fight of the German people for unity is just. Since certain groups do not believe in the possibility of a peaceful solution of the German problem, it becomes necessary to carry on intensified activities to clarify public thinking on the development of the German people. In the face of a campaign of lies, we must bring about an understanding that the peaceful solution of the German problem is to be found in the signing of a just Peace Treaty with a unified, democratic and peaceful Germany and a refusal to become involved in any bloc or coalitions directed against a former Allied State.

Professor HROMADKA (Czechoslovakia), Member of the Central Committee of the Council of Churches, Member of the World Council of Peace, spoke of the bonds of friendship which unite the German people and those of her neighbours.

Vaino MELTTI (Finland), a civil administrator, Member of the World Council of Peace, then spoke of the opposition of the Finnish people to the reviving of the German military forces, as well as to any participation in the Atlantic Pact.

SIXTH SESSION

(Thursday, July 3rd, morning)

Presiding: Gabriel d'ARBOUSSIER (North Africa), Vice-President of the World Council of Peace.

The first speaker, Mr. Desmond BUCKLE (Union of South Africa), a Member of the World Council of Peace, spoke of the struggle of the South African peoples against racism and fascism, a struggle which is an integral part of the fight for World Peace.

Sr. José Luis MASSERA (Uruguay), a mathematician, Member of the World Council of Peace.

Sr. Massera stressed the close connection between the war preparations in Germany and Japan on the one hand, and in Latin-America on the other. They are the same kinds of military pacts, the same plans to utilize the economic potential, the same attacks against democratic freedoms and the Defenders of Peace. Consequently, it becomes impossible to separate the struggle of the German, Japanese, Korean, French and Italian peoples from the great struggle for national independence of the peoples of Latin America.

The Latin Americans understand that if war broke out in Europe, their countries would be immediately involved through the bilateral treaties. For this reason they have a deep interest in the German problem.

Mme Aneska HODINOVA-SPURNA (Czechoslovakia), Vice-President of the National Assembly, Member of the World Council of Peace.

Recalling the pact of Munich which opened the way to World War II, Mme Hodinova-Spurna commented that also today war treaties are being signed, while the talk is hypocritically of Peace. The Czechoslovak people are all the more opposed to these treaties since they see themselves directly threatened by war preparations which are setting up a German army on their borders with former nazi generals under Ridgway's command. The recent agreements signed by the Western Powers with Adenauer are intended to nullify the Potsdam Agreement, against the interests of Peace and against the wishes of the German people. The plans of the imperialists, Mme Hodinova-Spurna warned, are bound to fail. The peoples of the world fight for Peace. The Czechoslovak people are ready to lend all their aid to the German people for the building of a peaceful State.

With the speech of Mr. KAWAMURA (Japan) the discussion on the Japanese problem, which was included the first point on the agenda, commenced.

Mr. KAWAMURA (an invited visitor) demonstrated that Japan is today the biggest war base of the United States in Asia. But her rearmament is being hampered by the will for Peace of the Japanese people. The struggle of the Japanese workers was well demonstrated by the four general strikes in defence of their liberties and democratic rights. The events of May 1, 1952, were the high point of these manifestations. On that day, 4,000,000 workers were gathered in 400 organised meetings throughout the country. The workers know that the suppression of their freedoms opens the road to war. Because the struggle and the people's happiness are constantly blocked by the war policy, it will not be easy to make the latter succeed. Rearmament crushes the economic life, the young people fight against conscription and the peasants rise against the confiscation of their land for military purposes. Manufacturers and businessmen demand the re-opening of trade with China and the USSR. This shows the possibility of developing a very broad national movement, encompassing all sections of the population. This movement cannot be stopped by the intensification of the war policy of the Yoshida Government; on the contrary, this can only lead to an intensification of the struggle for national liberation.

Mr. Kawamura stated that the establishment of a People's China was considered a profound historical lesson by the Japanese people, themselves engaged in a national liberation struggle. He pointed out that the spirit of internationalism, demonstrated by the Chinese in coming to the aid of Korea in defence of Peace in Asia, showed the Japanese people that solidarity with all Asian peoples was the road to follow. Furthermore, the revelations about bacteriological warfare and the murder of prisoners-of-war have increased the hatred of the Japanese towards the American occupiers and have stirred them to intensify their fight against war, for the immediate withdrawal of the occupation forces and for national independence. The speaker added: "The national liberation movements of the South-Asiatic countries such as Viet-Nam, the Philippines, Malaya and Burma are bound to be more closely linked with the struggle of the Japanese people. The Yoshida Government, upon orders from the Americans, pursues a so-called plan of South Asian development with regard to these countries which, in reality, is nothing but a disguised method of robbing them of their strategic raw materials, and of building military bases on their territories. The Japanese and South Asian peoples must join hands in order to doom these policies to failure."

Mr. MEI JOU AO (China), a lawyer, Member of the World Council of Peace.

The signing of the San Francisco "Peace Treaty" with Japan, without the participation of India, Burma, the USSR and the People's Republic of China, the conclusion of a "Security Pact" between the United States and Japan, the signing of the "Administrative Agreements", the dissolving of the Far Eastern Commission and the Allied Council for Japan, the treaty signed between the Yoshida Government and Chiang Kai-Shek, all these are measures which violate international agreements with the aim of re-militarising Japan and of turning her into a centre for war in the Far East, a base and dependency of the United States.

United States troops will continue to be stationed in Japan and will continue to establish numerous air and naval bases there under different forms and names. Japanese military groups are being set up, comprising hundreds of thousands of men, with heavy equipment and a U.S. officer's corps. A Japanese air force is in the process of being formed, the production of weapons is being taken up on a large scale and the Japanese war criminals have been freed.

A heavy burden weighs on the Japanese economy; 70 per cent of the budget is designated for war, more than 10,000,000 workers are unemployed, the people are undernourished and there are no freedoms.

Such a situation menaces the Peace of Asia and the world. But the Japanese people, despite overwhelming difficulties, carry on an incessant, courageous struggle which is constantly growing. All Asian peoples consider the struggle of the Japanese people their own. The great success achieved by the preparatory Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Countries, recently held at Peking, is an example.

Mr. U. HLA (Burma), a writer, Member of the World Council of Peace, in the first part of his speech showed that for nearly five years there had been no

Peace will be assured if all peoples unite and join forces.

Mr. Arild HAALAND of Norway (an invited visitor) spoke of the opposition of the Scandinavian peoples to Germany's rearmament, and expressed himself for a unified and neutral Germany.

Peace in Burma. Profiting from the worsening of Burma's economic situation—which the imperialists themselves had provoked—they were extending their domination and turning Burma into an aggressive base within the framework of their general plan for war. But they clashed with the peaceful desires of the Burmese people who were struggling against the re-armament of Japan, against the war in Korea and the bacteriological bombardments. This struggle of the Burmese people linked up with the world struggle for Peace. In order that this struggle should be victorious and the general war plans of the imperialists be put in check, unity was an essential condition.

Señor Eduardo MORA VALVERDE (Costa-Rica), (an invited visitor), explained how the people of Central America fight against the San Francisco Treaty and against imperialism.

Señor Manuel CRUZ from the Philippines (an invited visitor), then painted a picture of the struggle of the Philippine national liberation movement against the transformation of its country into a base of aggression for the United States.

Mr. SURJONOGORO (Indonesia), an industrialist, (an invited visitor) observed that by her geographical position and natural wealth, Indonesia was in the front rank as a producer of strategic raw materials. She has also been called upon to furnish manpower for the next war. As a result of war preparations, misery and famine reign in the country. Fifty per cent of the population suffers from tuberculosis. In Indonesia, democracy has been destroyed, fascist laws have been created to break the resistance of the people. The Indonesian people demand:

—Withdrawal of foreign troops from Japan;
—Non-intervention in the internal affairs of Japan;
—Full freedom for the Japanese people to make their own unfettered choice;
—Sentencing of war criminals recently cleared;
—Prohibition of the use of bacteriological weapons and other weapons of mass destruction;
—A new Peace Treaty with Japan and annulment of the San Francisco Treaty;
—A peaceful solution of the Korean problem and the conflicts in Viet-Nam, Malaya, Laos and Cambodia;
—The conclusion of a Peace Pact between the Five Great Powers.

Sra. Mireya LAFUENTE (Chili), an artist, (an invited visitor), said that the revival of Japanese militarism and its alliance with the United States constitutes a threat to Peace, and to the security and sovereignty of the countries bordering the Pacific. The people of Latin America know that Peace in Asia means Peace for them as well as respect for their sovereignty.

The San Francisco Treaties and the continuation of the Korean war, together with the use of bacterial weapons, is a threat to the Chilean people.

Sra. Lafuente then referred to the military pact between Chile and the United States, which means in fact the total surrender of the country into the hands of the United States. With united forces the people are waging an energetic struggle against the Pact, in the interests of the country and for Peace in the Pacific.

Mrs. Jessie STREET (Australia), was a member of the Australian delegation to the Conference on International Organisation (San Francisco 1945) at which the United Nations was constituted; Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mrs. Street recalled the treaties signed last year between the United States and the different countries of the Pacific (the Philippines, Australia, New Zealand and Japan). All of them had features in common, and in common with the Atlantic Pact, and all referred back to the United Nations Charter. They were all, however, in contradiction to many clauses of the Charter, particularly those giving the Security Council the chief responsibility for the maintenance of Peace in the world.

The "threats of aggression", moreover, invoked to justify these Pacts were nothing but pretexts, since the word "aggression" was used for all the efforts made towards social and national liberation by the peoples of the world. Furthermore, the authors of these pacts did not hide the fact that these Pacts were designed to "liberate" those countries which had adopted a new social order.

These two aims were condemned by the United Nations Charter, which stipulated the rights to independence of all countries, and no interference in the affairs of other countries.

Mr. Mulk RAJ ANAND (India), the writer, Member of the World Council of Peace, recalling the history of Japanese imperialism, remarked that the current attitude of the United States towards Japan shows that the lesson of Pearl Harbour has been forgotten. The San Francisco Treaty seriously affects the peoples of South-east Asia. China who did so much to conquer Japanese imperialism, was not consulted, the USSR was ignored. The reason for this is that the treaty seems designed to prepare war against these countries. Concluded, as it was, without taking into consideration the treaties of Yalta and Potsdam, it cannot be considered valid.

The plans which now are to be realised in Europe have already been put in practice in Asia.

The peoples must wage a united struggle to obtain a just Peace Treaty with Japan, an end to the war in Korea, the representation of China in the United Nations and the return of Taiwan to China. The treaties with Japan and Germany are imperialist plots to subject the world. The peoples must transform the fight for Peace into a fight for truth. If those who know the truth remain silent, they act like criminals. The Indian people were well aware of the crimes committed in Korea and were also conscious of the responsibility they bore humanity.

Hon. Ivor MONTAGU (Great Britain), publicist, Secretary of the World Council of Peace, drew a parallel between the current situation in Germany and that of Japan and showed that both fit into the "global policy" of the United States.

AN IMMEDIATE END TO THE WAR IN KOREA

SEVENTH SESSION

(Thursday, July 3rd, afternoon)

Presiding: Leopold INFELD (Poland), scientist, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace.

Report by Mr. KUO MO-JO (China)

the writer, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace, on The Cessation Of The War In Korea

Mr. Kuo MO-JO proposed to limit himself to a few general remarks on the Korean problem.

He recalled that the war has been in process for two years, and the armistice talks for almost one year. The unreasonable demands and provocations of the Americans, he said, have hindered the success of the negotiations. Under the circumstances, the Chinese and Korean peoples have shown great patience and extreme firmness.

There remains only one problem to be settled; that of repatriation of prisoners-of-war, and discussions on this problem have lasted since last November. Mr. Kuo MO-JO went on:

"In reality there is no problem. According to historical precedents, and particularly on the basis of the Geneva Convention of 1949, the two parties must repatriate their war prisoners as soon as fighting has ceased. War prisoners cannot give up their privilege to return home to a life of Peace. However, the United States are not inclined to observe the Geneva Convention and instead demand the right to continue to hold more than 100,000 Korean and Chinese prisoners-of-war. This, ladies and gentlemen, is how the armistice talks have been stopped."

The U.S. representatives use different means and pretexts to suspend and delay the negotiations. Yet, the Chinese and Koreans, according to Mr. Kuo MO-JO, have made important concessions; in particular they have agreed not to send the repatriated prisoners back into combat.

The speaker then examined the general attitude of the Americans which shows their intention to undermine the negotiations.

First of all the large-scale use of bacteriological weapons while the negotiations were going on.

Furthermore, the huge massacre of Korean and Chinese war prisoners on the isle of Koje. What was the reason for this action? The refusal of the prisoners to submit to the pressure put on them by the Americans so that they would refuse to be repatriated. This has been admitted by the U.S. camp commandant.

Finally, on top of all this, the hydro-electric stations of the Yalu river have been bombed. These are the common property of the Chinese and Koreans.

We appeal to the peoples of the world to help realise the following objectives:

(1)—To put an immediate end to the use of bacteriological weapons and to ask the peoples of all countries to request their respective Governments to ratify and observe the Geneva Protocol of June 17, 1925 on the prohibition of the use of bacteriological weapons.

(2)—To put an immediate end to the murder of peaceful civilians and the blind destruction of quiet cities and peaceful construction work.

(3)—To put an immediate end to the ill-treatment and massacre of prisoners-of-war which is contrary to International Law.

(4)—To arrive at an immediate agreement in the armistice negotiations so that the two parties will be able to repatriate their war prisoners unconditionally, in accordance with the Geneva agreement of 1949 on prisoners of war.

(5)—To bring about immediately a settlement of the Korean problem on a reasonable basis of equality, after the conditions of the armistice have been agreed upon.

In conclusion, Mr. Kuo MO-JO maintained that the peoples who are masters of their destiny cannot be subdued, and he closed with this serious advice:

"Let the people of the world arise and put an end to the serious threat of this war crisis. The people of the United States of America have a special responsibility to save the world from this calamity which could cause tragedy beyond all imagination.

"Scientists, and particularly American scientists, have the moral responsibility of putting science in the service of humanity and of preventing its use as a weapon of massacre."

Mr. HAN SER YA (Korea), writer, Member of the World Council of Peace.

The speaker emphasized that if the negotiations in Korea fail it is because the U.S. Government does not want Peace, as was proved by the unleashing of the bacteriological war while the negotiations were in progress.

The Korean people have countered these barbarous methods very effectively. Furthermore, a great wave of protest has arisen in all countries of the world and has made it impossible for the Americans to hide their crime any longer. The desire for war on the part of the U.S. Government has equally been proved by the obstacles placed in the path of the armistice negotiations in regard to the prisoners-of-war issue, in violation of the Geneva Convention of 1949; by the indescribable cruelties inflicted upon the prisoners in connection with the so-called "voluntary choice" at Camp Koje. The speaker then related that the imperialists have intensified their barbaric attacks on non-military objectives and against the population. They have proceeded with heavy bombing of the hydroelectric stations on the Yalu river in trying to provoke a renewed total outbreak of the war in Korea and its transformation into a third world war.

Report by M. Yves FARGE (France)

President of the French Peace Movement, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, on "Bacteriological Warfare, the War in Korea and its International Consequences"

After explaining the circumstances in which he went to Korea with the writer Claude Roy as delegates of the French Peace Committee, M. Farge showed how all the evidence which had been placed before him concerning bacterial warfare had been diligently sifted and whenever there was the slightest doubt as to whether certain phenomena may or may not have been caused by natural circumstances, the Korean authorities themselves had asked him not to take them into consideration.

Because he did not claim any scientific training, M. Farge had surrounded himself with scientists and doctors, many of whom had received part of their training in Western Universities and institutes such as in the Universities of New York, Harvard, Paris, the Institute of Tropical Medicine in Liverpool, and so on.

As a result of his investigation, M. Farge had reached the following conclusions:

"There is in existence a concerted and studied plan controlling the development of the bacterial war, and this plan has become apparent during its course;

—The essential aspects of the unfolding of the attack coincide with the military and scientific data published in the United States in books, periodicals, newspapers and reports;

—The laboratory findings in Korea and China corroborate the admissions of prisoners, even though these admissions contain scientific heresies;

—Biological war as now being waged must be looked on as a stage in a sequence of atrocities, a stage which may lead to the use of atomic devices whose presence near the theatre of operations is known...

"A study of the whole of the files made it possible to show that the aggressor set out from the first to solve the problem of widest possible artificial dispersal of pathogenic agents, by wind or by man; hence, for the former method, the use of leaves, feathers and paper, for the latter, the scattering of insignificant objects that a passer-by might put in his pocket without thinking twice about it. But it was very soon understood that this was, if I may put it so, simply the professional craft aspect of bacteriological warfare, and that thorough collation and comparison of facts was necessary on a much deeper scale.

"From this moment, certain facts which had been obscure became plain. The question had arisen: what was the significance of the meat and dead animals dropped by aircraft but not carrying bacilli? From the cases examined and collated it became clear that the meat and carcasses had been disseminated. It was obvious, therefore, that the flesh was intended to create favourable conditions for the breeding and survival of the flies bearing pathological agents of intestinal infections."

"Another question had arisen: what was the significance of the tree-leaves dropped by aircraft. What was their target and what were they for? It was necessary to collate and compare the observations made in Korea and in China to notice that these leaves were generally scattered in regions where silkworms are reared or cotton grown. The solution of the problem did not belong any longer to the microbiologists, but to the Institute of Agricultural Research in Peking, whose job it became to isolate a parasite on the leaves dropped on silkworm-rearing areas, and a pathogenic fungus on the similar leaves dropped on cotton fields.

"The first example I have taken from the sphere of epidemiology, which affects man directly, the second from the sphere of agriculture, where the evidence discloses a plan to starve mankind of produce; the third I shall take from the industrial sphere and cite it as illustration of intent simultaneously to harm economic life and human life.

"It concerns attempts to poison sea water. These attempts have been made in the areas that restock the fisheries of the Gulf of Pechili and on the North coast of the Yellow Sea. Insects carrying typhoid bacilli—particularly a kind of cockchafer—were scattered broadcast off the seacoasts around the ports of Dairen and Tsingtao; these two ports are separated from one another by some 200 miles as the crow flies. This naval operation against the coasts of China constitutes a direct act of aggression against that country."

M. Farge was told by microbiologists that the cholera bacteria dispersed in or near reservoirs by U.S. aircraft are—like the plague bacilli—of exceptional virulence.

"In one of the laboratories I visited there was a map of Korea on which were marked 340 red dots. The dots were scattered over the whole area of North Korea, they were particularly dense round towns and villages, traffic junctions, sheets of water and springs.

These 340 spots each represented bacteriological warfare attacks carried out by one or more aircraft. Do not conclude from consideration of this map that there had been only 340 bacteriological attacks on Korea: I must make clear that the 340 were attacks which had been investigated and clarified, having been made the subject of check and cross-check.

A first survey of this map and of the files on which it was based disclosed the following three plain features:

(1) The intestinal epidemic diseases spread by insects and objects have been dropped on or near reservoirs, springs, streams and rivers;

(2) Diseases of the respiratory system, particularly plague, have been spread by insects or objects dropped on the ruins of towns and villages and on the places where troops or civilians have congregated in conditions of precarious shelter;

(3) At traffic junctions and on lines of communication there has been a special air drive utilising appropriate methods, among them spraying of aerosols by jet aircraft."

Summing up this section of his speech, M. Farge concluded:

"Whichever way you look at it, the Korean dossier is impressive: it shows that in its plan of bacteriological aggression the American General Staff took into consideration the geographical, climatic and demographical conditions of the country, and this study must have required long premeditation and minute preparation."

M. Farge then showed how the bacterial phase of the Korean war could be explained. In a country that is absolutely destroyed by "ordinary means" of warfare, but in which the people do not admit defeat, these "ordinary means" no longer paid. It is at this point that bacterial warfare appeared and it was intended to reach the people among the ruins.

Dealing with bacterial attacks against North China, M. Farge stated that, since the liberation, a great effort has been made to educate the population in sanitary precautions.

"... The protective steps adopted as soon as bacteriological warfare started have been thorough to the last detail. Thus in every village, town and city, watch towers have been erected; competent inhabitants ensure round-the-clock observation by taking watch in turn; with the aid of loud speakers or gongs, they give the alarm to the population, who scrutinise the sky as soon as the noise of an aeroplane engine is heard.

"In these conditions, the dropping of bacteriological containers can scarcely escape the vigilance of the population and anti-epidemic services are quickly on the move.

"So it was that in old Manchuria, organised in this way to meet the menace, the following was observed: on April 4th, 1952, a large number of voles, dead, half-dead, and in a small proportion still living, were dropped on the roofs, courtyards and ponds of 31 villages and townships of a district that had just been flown over by U.S. aircraft. Seven hundred of these voles were picked up: they carried plague. Plague had never been known in this district, either amongst men or animals.

"The Mukden zoologists, like those of Peking, say these voles do not correspond to any of the 15 known kinds of small rodent in Manchuria. I have one of these voles in my possession, together with other incriminating evidence brought back from my journey, including a variety of spider of which the country of origin should be determined. Similarly I have also brought back, so that our own scientists can associate themselves with the research, a very complete file of documents dealing with the cases of encephalitis which have appeared in the regions flown over by U.S. planes; for in certain regions of North-East China, in circumstances exactly established, an unknown infectious disease has made its appearance; its clinical symptoms coincide with those of acute encephalitis, but at post-mortem some cases show pathological changes characteristic of pneumonia. Its character as an induced disease is not open to doubt."

M. Farge then dealt with the allegation in the West that plague has been introduced into Korea by the Chinese volunteers. The futility of this suggestion is exposed by the fact that simultaneous operations on men, cattle and crops have taken place (using the same pathogenic agents) in areas often very far from each other. He said:

"... It is difficult to imagine how, naturally, on the same territory and at the same time of year, could spread:

(1) Microbes intended for man, which, consistent with the means of diffusion we have outlined, use all the agents and means of locomotion given by the geographical, demographical and climatic conditions of the country and season;

(2) Microbes affecting animals, dropped on the places and at the time most likely to result in the most serious epizootics, such as the bacillus Pasteurella multicida borne by wolf-spiders and the anthrax bacillus borne by feathers.

(3) Agents carrying pathogenes capable of destroying, or in any event spoiling, crops. We quote, for example, maize dropped on maize-fields in leaf (carrying bacilli of maize anthrax); ripe soya pods and stems dropped on fields where soya shoots are just beginning to come up (carrying the cercosporiosis virus of soya); dry leaves—such as we have already described—carrying agents of diseases capable of attacking mulberry trees, that is to say, centres of silkworm culture, and also agents capable of infecting cotton plantations.

"Can reason accept simultaneity as a natural circumstance when it takes this character: the same objects and the same insects carrying the same pathogenes appearing at the same time in Korea and in North-East China? The black springtail, the big house-fly and the chironomid midge carrying typhoid bacillus; spiders and small fish carrying dysentery bacillus, the stable fly and wisps of cotton carrying paratyphoid bacillus; spiders and feathers carrying anthrax bacillus?"

After describing his interview with the prisoners-of-war, Lieutenant John Quinn and Lieutenant Kenneth Enoch who had confessed to taking part in germ raids and given a good deal of other detailed information, M. Farge had this to say:

"Quinn and Enoch give the names of two civilians who came to instruct their groups and squadrons on bacteriological warfare; they give another 18 names of officers who received these instructions with them.

"A first and vital question must be put to Mr. Acheson: do these two civilians and 18 air officers exist? And if, as I believe to be the case, there are religious leaders in the United States whose moral authority is unchallenged, could they not be asked to come together, and call upon these 18 air officers to take an oath upon the Bible that Enoch and Quinn have either spoken, or violated, truth?"

M. Farge added that:

"John Quinn is a Catholic, he knows the value of example, and that is why he has launched the following appeal. 'I appeal not only to Christians, but to whomsoever is able to help outlaw bacteriological warfare, with such urgency, that it may never again be used. I have never heard of a religion that would not forbid employment of a weapon whose nature renders it particularly effective against women and children.'

"Because I asked him how he reconciled his obligations as an officer with his duty as a civilised man, he replied: 'My duty is to the people—and not only to the people of the United States—but to the peoples of all the world'."

Refering to those whose repugnance of the very idea of bacterial warfare prevents them from examining the evidence which goes to prove that it is in fact being waged against Korea and China, M. Farge warned:

"If the Korean war is a testing ground for the war that may be waged tomorrow, it is also a testing ground for every man who claims to think, judge and act. The razed towns, the massacred civil population, the burning napalm which turns human beings into torches and pulp, the poison gases of which too little has been said; today the viruses, the vibrios and the microbes, tomorrow the atomic weapons. Beware, the depth of horror felt may become the extent of horror realised!"

M. Farge also asked:

"But I ask all the defenders of Peace in the World, all those of courage and feeling, to keep clear before their eyes this other picture that I bring back from Korea.

"In the evening, when the guns are silent, talks take place from trench to trench, on the horrors of the slaughter, on the bloody trickery that is all this war amounts to for the Americans, on inhuman bacteriological warfare. Chinese volunteers and Korean soldiers start discussions with the soldiers opposite.

"Meetings have already taken place between the lines; soldiers have lost their lives coming out of the trenches to talk to their enemies.

"Is this not a great lesson for the Peace Movement?"

And added:

"The things I have so recently seen have made me realise that, while events are growing graver, duty demands that we should be ever more patient, more obstinate, more all-inclusive, in seeking ever broadening bases of agreement and action."

In conclusion he posed three questions "to all who are disturbed, uneasy or anxious". They were:

"—Biological warfare began in those same first six months of 1952 during which the Government in Washington has been giving back their arms to the Nazi and Japanese war criminals. Does not this bacteriological warfare amount to resumption—on the scale of an experiment on the entire human race—of the cruelties of Nazism and fascism?

—We have known wars that were undeclared. With biological warfare are we not entering an era when war need no longer be admitted?

—If it be so—and this is my third question—have we done all we should have done that, one day, we may not be forced to admit that the Third World War began in fact on the territory of Korea with experiments in methods and arms of mass destruction?"

And finally:

"All these evils, all these miseries, all these tragedies I have described, we must ceaselessly tell to those about us: Take care! Indifference and inaction are, even now, the faults that conscience will never forgive!"

Mr. H. C. A. LASSEN (Denmark), a professor (an invited visitor), then suggested that negotiations between leaders from East and West was the only means of settling the germ war.

M. Pierre BICQUARD (France), a physicist, (an invited visitor), then demonstrated how bacterial warfare was being waged and how it had been prepared in the United States over a period of years.

EIGHTH SESSION

(Thursday, July 3rd, night session)

Presiding: M. Louis SAILLANT (France), General Secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. Nazim HIKMET (Turkey), the poet, Member of the World Council of Peace.

The strikes of dockers in the port of Alexandretta, supported by merchants, workers and peasants, was an expression of the will of the Turkish people resolutely to oppose the sending of soldiers to Korea and the unloading of American weapons. Out of 18,000 Turkish soldiers who were sent to Korea, 12,000 are already dead or wounded or have been made prisoners. On returning to their country these soldiers speak about the atrocities of the Korean war, in the cities and villages. In this way, with the return of these soldiers from Korea (who in turn are being hunted arrested, and tortured by the police), there grows the condemnation of and action against the Government and its policies. Some of these ex-Servicemen are even hiding in the mountains and fighting the police, arms in hand. Mr. Hikmet then read a series of news items published in the Turkish Press which show the intensity of the struggle of the Turkish people against the war in Korea and for Peace. This struggle links soldiers, peasants and workers closely, and despite tortures, despite the arrest of 1,300 Defenders of Peace, the Peace Movement in Turkey is growing.

Professor Louis HIRSCHFELD (Poland), bacteriologist, (an invited visitor), then called upon all the scientists of the world, especially those of America, to take a stand against bacteriological warfare.

Mr. DUONG BACK IEN from Viet Nam, (an invited visitor), brought the Session and the German Defenders of Peace the warmest greetings of his people, engaged in struggle for their national independence and World Peace.

He branded as barbaric and inhuman the acts committeed in his country against old people, women and children, and showed the heroic resistance of the civilian population. The army of aggression also tries to starve the Vietnamese people by systematically destroying the crops and burning and massacring everywhere. The aggressors want to drag the young Vietnamese into a puppet army against their compatriots in the People's Army, but they are not willing to accept this shameful slavery. Mass desertions are spreading in the army of Bao Dai, units of which are joining the People's army, sometimes in whole companies.

This struggle is an integral part of the struggle in defence of World Peace. The people of Viet Nam are aware of their great responsibility before the entire world. While engaged in armed struggle with the French colonial aggressor, the Vietnamese fully realise that the peaceloving French people are their closest comrades in the struggle and enthusiastically follow the activities carried on in France against the "dirty war". They are equally closely bound to the peoples of North Africa who are fighting to win their national independence.

Mrs. Mary JENNISON (Canada), Secretary of the Canadian Peace Congress, (an invited visitor), brought greetings from the Rev. James ENDICOTT and then showed how a broad movement for an end to the war in Korea has developed in Canada.

Metropolitan NICOLAI (USSR), Member of the World Council of Peace.

After discussing the problem of germ warfare unleashed in Korea, as well as the crimes committed on the prisoners-of-war and the recent provocations perpetrated by the bombing of the Yalu river power stations, the speaker then appealed to the dignity and honour of the American people. American Christians, he stressed, among their own people, owe it to themselves to induce their Government to end the germ war and to ratify the Geneva Convention. Moreover, the American people would save their honour and their dignity in punishing the criminals of the bacteriological war.

This appeal to the American people, the majority of whom are Christian, would win the support of all honest men.

Metropolitan Nicolai then recalled the important Conference of churches and religious associations of the USSR, held recently, which showed that the basis for a general agreement finds its broadest expression in seeking and defending Peace. This Conference launched an appeal to believers everywhere in the world, calling upon them to support the decisions of the World Council of Peace. He concluded by calling for the unity of all who hate war.

NINTH SESSION

(Friday, July 4th, morning)

Presiding: Mr. MUKAROVSKY (Czechoslovakia), Rector of the Charles University, Prague, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mrs. Rose KOSKY of Great Britain, (an invited visitor), spoke of the struggle of British women against the Korean war; she also mentioned that the latter demand the immediate exchange and repatriation of war prisoners.

Mr. FANG CHIH CHAU (China), doctor of medicine, (invited visitor), acquainted the audience with the facts and evidence regarding germ warfare which he had personally witnessed as a member of the medical corps.

Mr. Felix IVERSEN (Finland), President of the Pacifist Council of Finland, Member of the World Council of Peace, then indicated that the duty of the United Nations was to arrive at a quick settlement of the Korean conflict, rather than continue it.

Mr. John Adams KINGSBURY (United States), former adviser on the Social Security programme in the Roosevelt administration, (an invited visitor).

Mr. Kingsbury expressed his confidence in the power of the Peace forces and remarked that the reason for his belief, among others, was that he had just returned from China where he had seen the extraordinary confidence in the ultimate victory of Peace on the part of the Chinese people. According to him, the Chinese people are not fighting against the American people but for their own basic interests.

He was convinced that, some day, the American people will understand how much they owe the Chinese and Korean martyrs. If the American people knew the truth, they would be horrified over the use of bacteriological weapons, just as are all other peoples. Mr. Kingsbury pledged to bring that truth to the American people, on the basis of his findings.

Professor Heinrich BRANDWEINER (Austria), professor of Canon law, Member of the World Council of Peace, dealt in a short speech with the violations of International Law committed by the U.N. troops in Korea.

Mr. H. C. CROWTHER (Great Britain), scientist, Member of the World Council of Peace, made it clear that in order to advance the fight for Peace among the peoples of Western Europe, the war-makers had to be denounced.

Sr. Diego MONTANA CUELLAR (Colombia), professor of law, (an invited visitor), described the struggle of the Colombian people against the sending of troops to Korea.

Report by M. Jean LAFFITTE (France)

General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, on the Armaments Race and the Fight for a Peace Pact

M. Laffitte proposed to deal with the campaign for a Peace Pact and the possibilities of broadening it.

The idea of a Peace Pact is not only our own, he said; it is supported by public opinion outside of the Peace Movement which at first hopes for and then demands the same solutions as we do. He developed the basic reasons why we are asking for a Peace Pact.

First of all, because there is no other way of avoiding war apart from an understanding between the Great Powers, and then, because the Pact is precisely the most important action for ensuring that the spirit of negotiation prevails over resort to force. In other words, because the Pact can become the symbol of peaceful co-existence which would be recognised and accepted first by the parties involved, and then by the entire world.

M. Laffitte reviewed the considerable progress made in the world by this idea of peaceful co-existence. He quoted in this respect certain stands taken by individuals, particularly in connection with the last session of U.N. and recently by the Methodist Church of the United States.

He remarked that if today statesmen, heads of Governments, organisations and the most diverse movements are forced to mention co-existence more and more frequently, it is because the desires of the peoples on that issue are a known fact.

Any assurance of a possible and desirable co-existence is first, and above all, the reflection of the peoples' wishes.

Nearly one-third of the world's population, had so far pronounced itself in favour of a Peace Pact, although no more than half has been reached. Never before in the world has there been a will expressed with such power.

M. Laffitte then posed the problem of broadening out as a permanent and fundamental necessity on which depends the success of all past and future activities of the World Council. Peace cannot be saved by one single country, nor by a single people, but only by the united efforts of all the peoples. For example, it would be just as nonsensical to pretend that Peace could be achieved without China, as it would be to think that it could be done without the United States.

The World Council of Peace has set itself the task of making representations to the United Nations and of reminding it of duties of its mission. During the last General Session of U.N., the repercussions of the peaceful aspirations of the people were already greater than they had ever been before. M. Laffitte then analysed the progress made through meetings with international organisations, such as the World Council of Churches, the International Red Cross, Quakers and others; through the constant broadening out of the World Council itself; through the holding of important regional conferences in the preparations for which the Council had helped and encouraged; through the great success of the International Economic Conference of Moscow; through the preparation of an International Conference of Doctors, supported by the World Council, and through international meetings of scientists, educationalists, film technicians, town-planners, and so on.

Without wanting to play a monopoly role in such undertakings, M. Laffitte stressed, the World Council encourages them and calls upon the Peace Movement to support any gesture or activity, from wherever it may emanate, which on a given issue contributes to an exchange of views and mutual understanding. In closing, M. Laffitte emphasized that: "If it is true today that international tension has increased, it is also true that the chances for unity to save Peace have never been greater. Never before has the Peace Movement had so many known and unknown defenders."

Mr. Leopold INFELD (Poland), scientist, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace, emphasized that the American people must be convinced that in fighting for Peace we are fighting also for their happiness. We cannot hold the American people responsible for the acts of their Government, and we must understand that "these men and women have been crushed by an avalanche of lies and deceits, poured out by the most ingenious advertising agents the world has ever known". They have been convinced that when we speak of Peace we mean to weaken America with a view to attacking the "Free World". Mr. Infeld thought that this had to be taken seriously and an answer given to it.

Speaking as a Polish citizen, Mr. Infeld declared:

"I would like to tell them more dramatically than I can do here that 6,000,000 Poles perished during the last war. I would tell them what it means to rebuild Warsaw, what it means to rebuild Poland, my country, that the war almost completely destroyed physically and economically . . .

". . . Neither my own Government, nor any Government of the countries we proudly call the Peace-loving nations has ever attacked anyone because he or she spoke or worked for Peace . . .

"If these Governments to which Poland is bound by ties of friendship did not yearn for Peace and if they believed that talk for Peace is a softening-up process then they too would fear talk of it . . ."

The most important job is to convince the American people that when we speak of Peace we really mean Peace. The rest will be easy, because from the moment that this conviction will have taken roots, the post-war political events will become easily comprehensible and appear in their true light.

Mme Eugénie COTTON (France), President of the International Federation of Democratic Women, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace, recalled that the recent Conference in Defence of Children in Vienna led people of very different opinions to undertake the fight for Peace. The sensitive feelings of women and all people who have a heart leads them to that consciousness of Peace. That is the spirit of Peace and tolerance.

In addition Mme Cotton noted that since the signing of the Bonn Treaty, the analogy between the war in Korea and that now being prepared in the heart of Europe becomes more and more evident.

She asked for a tremendous campaign of explanation allied with positive action against German re-armament. She demanded that an appeal be made to the American people directly and quoted an example of French women who sent a letter to American soldiers in France; she suggested a meeting with American women. Mme Cotton closed in expressing her conviction that in the fight for Peace, the women will be able to carry with them all those as yet undecided because they do not know that they can win Peace, as well as those who are hostile because they do not know the facts.

TENTH SESSION

(Friday, July 4th, afternoon)

Presiding: Professor J. D. BERNAL (Great Britain), Member of the Royal Society, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace.

Report of Professor J. D. BERNAL on Disarmament

Professor Bernal began by saying that current international problems were open manifestations of a deeper problem—re-armament and disarmament—and that it was the duty of the Peace Movement to show that the way out of the steadily worsening situation was through negotiation and disarmament.

Previously the World Council had re-affirmed its beliefs in a policy of comprehensive, fair, rapid and practicable disarmament, in the general proposals in Warsaw in 1950 and, more precisely, in the Vienna resolution in 1951.

"But we have done more than that," he declared.

"The activity of the Peace Movement has turned what were blind fears and vague aspirations of the peoples throughout the world (and not least in countries most active in waging the cold war) into a clear demand for disarmament. This popular demand proved its effectiveness in forcing the issue of disarmament in the United Nations. The Sixth Session of the General Assembly set up a Disarmament Commission which for the first time was charged with considering together as one single problem the reduction of armaments and the elimination of weapons of mass destruction. It thus had in its power the achievement of a genuine disarmament."

But this was not to be, said the Professor, because of the attitude of certain Powers "who make no secret of their policy of accelerated re-armament."

Re-armament was the genuine policy of these Governments—"the Realpolitik in which they are following the footsteps of ill-fated militarists of the past. Disarmament is merely a polite gesture which they have no intention of turning into action but which they perform to quieten the fears of their own people and to make them believe that the hard sacrifices which they are called upon to bear are only temporary. Re-armament is serious policy; disarmament is not.

"It is our main task in the World Peace Movement, and especially in the Peace Movements in the countries of the Atlantic Pact, to reverse this attitude. We have to see to it that Governments take disarmament seriously and abjure re-armament altogether.

"This is by no means an impossible task, or even one that need take very long to perform. If our movement lives up to its responsibilities it should be able to gain enormous support from the spontaneous reaction to the universal and ever-growing experience of misery and frustration that the policy of re-armament is imposing on the peoples throughout the world . . .

"People are beginning to see that this policy of Peace through strength is only another name for an armaments race and to realise that it conceals an intention to launch, when the time is ripe, a new Holy War to liberate the countries of Europe as far as the Urals, and to restore to China the 'free' Government of Chiang Kai-Shek and the open door to American enterprise."

Professor Bernal then showed how in Britain advocacy for war has to be disguised as "liberation" without making it clear that this would mean aggressive war, because of popular resistance to this policy—a resistance which is increasing.

He went on to show how the re-armament programme everywhere was getting into serious difficulties—partly political, partly economic. He mentioned specifically the resistance of the German and Japanese peoples. In spite of all attempts to restore reaction, owing to the resistance of the peoples, "the timetable has gone seriously wrong".

"The overwhelming force anticipated in 1952 is now delayed to 1954 or 1955 and that delay is of the utmost importance for it gives the possibility for the forces of Peace to rally and by their united action to bring the whole process of re-armament to a stop."

As far as the economic factors are concerned, mass unemployment and economic slump is being added to the lowering of the standard of living of the peoples of the Atlantic Pact countries.

"Partly due to the violent price fluctuations produced by the starting and stopping of United States stockpiling, but even more to the diminution of the purchasing power of the workers, consumption goods, particularly textiles, cannot find buyers and the classical symptoms of a slump appearing even in America despite the gigantic sums spent on re-armament.

"In Britain the long period of full employment is over, and nearly half-a-million people are unemployed. These effects are made worse by concurrent dollar crisis so that the whole economy is threatened. The Government is desperately trying to maintain its re-armament policy in these unfavourable circumstances, but it has been forced to delay its execution and opposition to it grows from day to day. The Labour Party can no longer be counted on to support American policies regardless of the consequences. Important sections of it have already voiced their opposition and there is no doubt that these are supported by an enormous majority of British workers and by a substantial proportion of other sections.

"Analogous developments, but of an even sharper political character, have occurred in France and other European countries. Even in the United States itself the great oil and steel strikes show that the economic effects of re-armament are making themselves felt there as well. People, not only workers but businessmen, are looking for some escape from the intolerable economic situation where, not only any hope of improvement, but even an expectation of maintaining their situation, is rapidly vanishing.

"Here, despite all the determination of the directors of policy in Washington to resist, it will be impossible to shelve for much longer a genuine move towards disarmament. What form this should take is a question which our movement should examine and re-examine with the greatest care . . ."

The Disarmament Commission at the United Nations had done nothing to clarify this question, continued Professor Bernal. From the outset there was a contradiction between a plan—essentially American—which was merely concerned with specifying the stages of revealing information on armaments (leaving atomic and bacteriological weapons to the last) after which any discussion of reduction or limitation might occur; and the plan of the Soviet Union in which an agreement for a one-third reduction and abolition of weapons of mass destruction under strict control should come first, to be followed immediately by a full declaration at one time of all forces and armaments, including atomic armaments. No effective approach between these two standpoints had been made. Although by May, "it was becoming painfully apparent, even to well-intentioned supporters of American policies, that the disarmament conference was leading nowhere", nevertheless, a serious examination should be made of the Three Power proposals to place upper limits on the armed forces of the Five Powers—the U.S.A., U.S.S.R. and China to be allowed from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 men and Britain and France to be allowed 700,000 to 800,000 each. There was nothing in the proposal about limitation of armaments or the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

"In the first place, for all their apparent precision, the proposals are remarkably vague," commented Professor Bernal. "It is not at all clear what 'armed forces' mean. A trained infantryman forms a countable unit, but armed forces can include or exclude almost any type of man, particularly in the technical services. The plain intention of this vagueness is to limit severely infantry formations while leaving the door open for an inflation of nominally civilian workers in scientific weapons radar, atomic bombs, as well as auxiliary naval ratings, staff of bases, etc. Even if such evasion were rigourously excluded, the arrangements still operate enormously in favour of the Atlantic Forces with their high proportion, especially in their air and naval services of mechanised equipment to manpower.

"Nothing whatever is said in the proposals regarding limits for armaments . . . Limiting manpower alone would inevitably lead to a greater development relatively or even absolutely of mechanical equipment, using highly trained cadres. It would put a premium on the use of 'scientific weapons'.

"The figures presented are clearly there for propaganda purposes; they bear no relation to military or economic realities. France and Britain together are allowed armed forces equal to those of the Soviet Union with nearly twice the population. 'China' is given only as much as the United States with hardly more than a third of the population. No mention at all is made of Japan or Germany. Such proposals can hardly be treated as serious and it is not surprising that Mr. Malik would not consider them as a basis for discussion. They can hardly have been considered as such by their proposers. If armed forces mean what they say, it would imply the reduction of United States forces by more than half. If the U.S. Government are apparently willing to reduce their armed forces by more than half, it seems very strange that for months on end they have refused the Soviet Union's proposals for a reduction by a third . . ."

Professor Bernal then dealt with the futility of discussing disarmament in a commission of the United Nations as at present constituted, that is without the People's Republic of China being represented. In fact any real attempt to discuss disarmament must include China "and this in itself in a decisive argument in favour of immediate Five Power negotiation," he said.

Another important aspect of the discussion at the Disarmament Commission was the consistent rejection of any attempt to prohibit atomic or bacteriological warfare.

". . . the American representatives revealed very clearly what they understood by atomic energy control. It was for them a matter of directing—preferably by purchase—all atomic material to the uses that the Atomic Development Agency should decide. Such a policy is clearly incompatible with the plan of any nation to use atomic energy in its own way for constructive purposes but perfectly compatible with the ultimate retention of stocks of atomic bombs."

The same strong resistance was shown to all attempts to control biological warfare and "it was painfully clear that the retention of both atomic and biological weapons was being defended at all costs . . ."

"If we are to succeed, and we must succeed, in bringing about disarmament while there is yet time, we can expect nothing from Governments overtly committed to re-armament and ever more rapid preparations for war.

"The Disarmament Commissions and the proposed Disarmament Conferences will not succeed in achieving disarmament unless they are backed by public opinion more powerful and more vocal than anything we have ever seen up till now.

"Yet we have today, more than ever before, a reasonable hope of achieving this result. As time goes on, the policy of re-armament is creating by its economic and social consequences a powerful opposition which is only beginning to learn its strength.

"People of all occupations . . . need, and need desperately, a reasonable hope of some way out of the fate that hangs over them. That lies, as we know, in negotiation and disarmament, but it is not sufficient for us to know it. It is not sufficient for us to be able to produce, as we produced in Warsaw and Vienna, a reasoned plan along which re-armament can be reached. We have to present this plan in a way that the people can adopt it and press for it as their own. We do not claim that we have the precise formula for Peace. We do not or should not demand that people accept our solution. What we ought rather to create is the feeling that there is an alternative to the cold war and let people look for what it is themselves. They will inevitably be drawn to our solution because it is the only one that is honest, fair and practicable.

"We have failed—I have failed myself in the past—by presenting the question of disarmament as some kind of academic themes, some ultimate solution that lay on a plane above the awkward and urgent questions of the day. Taught by experience, we should now know that disarmament means nothing unless it arises of itself out of current problems. It should come from discussions about the war in Korea with its napalm bombs and bacterial warfare, about the German question with the re-establishment of the Nazi generals, about the rise in the cost of living, about unemployment in the textile industry.

"We need to preach disarmament not for and by itself but as a practical solution to particular problems."

In conclusion, Professor Bernal said:

"In forming our movement we had first of all to agree to a unity built around specific actions—the abolition of the atom bomb in the Stockholm Appeal and the demand for a Five Power Pact launched at Berlin. The enormous impression made by those two initiatives carried out among hundreds of millions of people in identical terms, had an indispensable value in expressing a sentiment of unbreakable unity.

"But now while preserving that unity and rich in the experience of working together, we need to pay ever more attention to the particular anxieties and needs of different groups of people at different times. Our movement must more and more come from the people and not merely go to them.

"It is not only by passing resolution or attending congresses, essential as they are, that the movement for Peace will grow, but even more by finding the way to express forcibly and effectively the will of the people for Peace."

Mr. Alexander KORNEICHUK (U.S.S.R.), the writer, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. KORNEICHUK observed that the American proposals on the reduction of armaments are beginning to lose popularity even in the United States. The representatives of that country presented to the U.N. Disarmament Commission a new project for the "maximum level of armed forces." He analysed this proposal and noted that the projected number of U.S. ground forces would, as a result, be reduced from 1,580,000 men to 1,500,000. However, no maximum was being contemplated for either air or naval forces (2,300,000 men in the U.S.). Yet, the known strategy of the United States is based essentially on these two branches of the Armed forces. The same is true for Britain and the allies of the Atlantic Pact.

Furthermore, the plan presumes to set a maximum for the Chinese armed forces, regardless of the fact that its authors refuse China's participation in that Commission. The speaker thought that this indicated the desire not to arrive at any reduction of armaments. He showed also that in this plan there is no question of reducing or eliminating the 400 U.S. bases throughout the world; on the contrary, additional appropriations have been made for their strengthening under the pretext of assuring world security. Mr. Korneichuk commented on the many people, particularly in France and Italy, who have come to understand the true meaning of the Atlantic Pact and who realise what the loss of national independence means.

Instead of collective security, U.N. brings the world a colective menace. The aggressor is using U.N. to have allies for his aggression. Only a Peace Pact can assure the security of all. It can also allow for the settlement of the armaments' problem. Mr. Korneichuk called for a strengthening of the fight for the conclusion of a Peace Pact and formulated the people's demands:

—Reduction from one-third to one-half of all military, naval, air and land forces, police and semi-military groups.

—Reduction from one-third to one-half of all types of armaments, heavy and light.

—Prohibition of all atomic weapons and weapons of mass destruction.

—Establishment of strict control on the basis of equality.

M. Emmanuel d'ASTIER de la VIGERIE (France), Deputé, former Minister, Member of the World Council of Peace, recalled the circumstances in which the French Peace Movement called upon the French people to demonstrate against the coming of General Ridgway. These circumstances are part of the policy carried out by the French Government and are characterised by:

—the desire of the United States to intensify its occupation of a recalcitrant France and to tame it to its requirements;

—the desire to re-arm Germany more quickly against the wishes of the French and German peoples;

—the desire to introduce into Europe the methods of provocation and destruction employed in Korea.

Those were the circumstances under which the demonstrations of the people of Paris against the coming of General Ridgway took place on May the 28th.

M. d'Astier then examined the question of neutrality. He remarked that in France, Italy and Great Britain the groups who dream of a neutral policy are particularly important and comprise many people outside of our Movement. The Peace Movement must give a constant accounting of its activities to these people: first of all we must repeat over and over that the Peace which we are seeking must benefit all people, whatever their way of life, and that we do not conceive of it as something which can be imposed by one part of the world upon the other; furthermore, we must make clear that the concept of peaceful co-existence must include "the freedom of the peoples of the world to control their own destiny and choose their own Governments themselves". The important part already being played by the neutral elements in the fight for Peace must stir us to make many more contacts and to engage in joint action with them, that they may have special ideas. M. d'Astier then recalled the hopes which the idea of Germany's neutralisation had aroused, a neutralisation which might perhaps be extended to all of Western Europe and particularly to France. However, we must not lose sight of our overall objective, a disarmament convention and a Peace Pact. M. d'Astier concluded:

"But the chances of Peace will not be assured until the American people (who have a right to security like all the others) talk about these essential objectives together with the other peoples, until there is discussion on peaceful trade, disarmament and prohibition of weapons of mass destruction. In short, a Peace Pact must make it possible to find once again the true criteria of collective security which today have been so seriously distorted.

Such an effort at enlightenment in Western Europe, this discussion with the American people, will be the chief task of the World Movement for Peace."

Mr. Ilya EHRENBURG (U.S.S.R.), writer, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. Ilya EHRENBURG began "not only is the war of which a handful of criminals dream dreadful—dreadful likewise are the fever of waiting, the mutual mistrust, the lies, the hatred, the blank walls cutting off one people from another, the clash of arms, the younger generation growing up haphazard, the deathdealing inventions ranged against the increasing defencelessness of man."

And Mr. Ehrenburg stated that everywhere in the world the common people think that "This can't go on".

It was not enough to know that we are supported by a half of humanity. We must win the American people to our cause.

The American people have been made to believe that the Communists want to destroy the "American Way Of Life" and want to invade the United States. Mr. Ehrenburg went on to show that if a certain way of life suits the American people, everyone has the right to like or not to like it, but quite definitely, nobody has the right to interfere with it.

"It is time the plain American should understand that the Russians are not massing to deprive him of his little Ford, that the Chinese have no intention of meddling with television programmes in the U.S.A., that the Koreans do not lust after Mr. Smith's refrigerator, that the Poles are unconcerned whether the aforesaid Mr. Smith does or does not shake the hand of Dulles or even Truman, and into the bargain dreams of making not only millions but billions . . . But if the handful of criminals decides to propagate the "American Way of Life" by force of arms, that way of life will collapse like a house of cards."

One might discuss the merits of this or that way of life, but it is impermissible, in the name of freedom, to suppress the freedoms of others. There is in the United States a 'Society for the Liberation of Russia', but in the Soviet Union there does not and could not exist a 'Society for the Liberation of America'. Much as the Soviet people would like to see the abolition of racial discrimination they know that this is dependent solely on the heightening of American consciousness.

If American soldiers occupying France or Italy are received with outbursts of hostility, this is not the result of Communist intrigues aimed at the 'American Way Of Life' for which they are not reproached, but rather because the people of these countries see in the American soldier the shadow of that war which their leaders want, a war for which they hold them responsible. The Soviet people, do not hate the Americans, but on the contrary, appreciate their qualities, their science and their technical accomplishments.

"No one in the Soviet Union has ever encroached upon nor ever will encroach upon the American way of life. Let every people live according to its lights, let every people find the path to Peace, whereby the ideals, interests and tastes of one people shall not interfere with any other people's living, thinking, creating."

It is impossible to try to impose a certain way of life upon the Chinese people with the help of a vote in U.N.

"To avoid the peril of war, one must sit together at one table and come to terms. The Soviet people wants Peace with any America, the America of the Progressives and the Republicans and the Democrats. It wants Peace with the American workers and with the American capitalists, it wants Peace not only with its friends but with its enemies."

Many times the U.S.S.R. has proposed discussions but the U.S. Government has always rejected the invitation. Surely there are differences. But in an atmosphere of mutual understanding it is possible to get together.

In concluding, Mr. Ehrenburg appealed to the American people:

"Today is the national day of the United States. On the 4th of July, 1776, the American people overcame those who held them in thrall and established the independence of their Republic. It is on this day that I call to you, citizens of America! Remember the ideals that inspired the first of your forefathers, tell your responsible leaders to give up 'bragging and threatening', to sit down round a table with Soviet representatives, with the representatives of the other great powers and honestly try to reach agreement. Thereby you will save your country, your children, your future too. I believe in the head and the heart of the American people. Later this year will be held a great Peace Congress, high hope of all the peoples. Let the people of America realise the importance of this Congress and send there a delegation that shall voice the will of every class and every party. I desire only to say that in the persons of the Soviet delegates they will find friends, able to appreciate the distinct path of every people, and desiring not to enforce on others their way of life, but to save the life, culture and future of all humanity."

Mr. Howard FAST (United States), writer, Member of the World Council of Peace.

(This speech was recorded and brought from the U.S.)

Mr. Fast explained that he was unable to come to the Session since he has been made a prisoner inside his own country like so many other Americans who speak for Peace.

"Since I have only a little time to talk to you I will try to say a few things of great importance to all of us. I speak about my own people for I know them best. The great majority of them are good people and they want to live their lives in peace and give no hurt to others. This may sound strange in the light of the unspeakable horror that is happening in Korea. It is not my intention to deny the facts of that horror. The world has seen over the past two decades people of many nations turned into beasts under Fascist leadership and playing the role of beasts. The world has also seen noble and great resistance to fascism. It must be understood that both of these qualities are present in America . . .

"Therefore you may ask, if this is the case, why such a broad sentiment for Peace is not reflected in a powerful Peace movement. Well, firstly there were many errors that the leaders of the Peace Movement have made. We lacked boldness and again and again we underestimated the mood of the people. We failed to build a united front in a bold and confident way and we held back again and again because we did not believe that the people were ready when they were.

"Yet, on the other hand there is much that we did do and the Peace Movement in America, whilst small and not united, is nevertheless a factor which must be considered. Nor can one overlook the confusions that exist in America. Never in history was any people so subjected to a bombardment of lies and powerful propaganda as they are. News itself is one of the most monopolised products in America and truly it may be said that the people do not know . . .

"No effort has been spared to decry the ability of progressive America to fight back, yet the progressive forces have not been destroyed, nor have they given up the struggle. The forces for Peace grow stronger . . .

"Today as I speak, 600,000 steelworkers are on strike. They do not as yet see the connection between their misery and the war drive of the Truman Government. Much depends on whether and when they and the millions like them see this connection and turn their great will for struggle into the fight for Peace.

"Thereby much depends on those of us who lead the Peace Movement in America. We bear a most grave responsibility. We will attempt to fulfil it out of devotion to mankind and to our own beautiful and fruitful native land."

M. Jean Jules RICHARD (Canada), writer (an invited visitor), then dealt with the possibility of peaceful co-existence between countries of different regimes.

Mr. Petros KOKKALIS (Greece), professor, Member of the World Council of Peace, followed and showed the struggle of the Greek people against the transformation of their country into a base of aggression for a war in the Balkans.

Mr. Bernard BEREANU (Rumania), Secretary of the International Union of Students (an invited visitor), showed how students, in the desire to improve their life and studies, participate in the movement for World Peace.

Mr. Georgi PIRINSKI (Bulgaria), Vice-President of the Bulgarian Peace Committee (an invited visitor), devoted the main part of his speech to demonstrating how it was possible to create a broad Peace Movement in the United States.

ELEVENTH SESSION

(Friday, July 4th, night session)

Presiding: Sra. Branca FIALHO (Brazil), President, Brazilian Federation of Women, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. J. C. KUMARAPPA (India), economist, a disciple of Gandhi (an invited visitor).

Mr. KUMARAPPA showed that the history of mankind during the last period has seen a development of the technical production of weapons to the detriment of the well-being of populations; this trend must be reversed in order to put mankind on the road to Peace and progress. The so-called "underdeveloped" countries have become the prey of the industrialised countries who acquire their raw materials cheaply. The wealth of natural resources of a country, in this manner, may become the cause of its misfortune. Mr. KUMARAPPA foresaw a development of the economy of each country making each of them self-sufficient. Such an economy should be in the hands of the State. Foreign trade would concern itself only with surpluses. Only in this manner, Mr. Kumarappa concluded, would greed and violence disappear and the underdeveloped countries progress.

Signor Ricardo LOMBARDI (Italy), Deputy, former Minister, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

The struggle waged by the peoples of certain West European countries, Sig. Lombardi explained, mingled with the struggle of the colonial peoples oppressed by their Governments and ranges the peoples of the world on the side of the colonised countries. The process of colonisation, gradual subjection of the West European ruling classes—an economy of loot—is becoming a reality for the West European countries. Sig. Lombardi then showed how the economy of the Western European countries is passing into the hands of American capital: in a direct manner (as exemplified by the coal-steel pool); indirectly by the elimination of these countries from certain markets (for example, Morocco and Iran). The gradual sapping of the independence of these countries is being achieved by the unilateral limitation of commercial exchanges, by the unbalanced finances of these exchanges which cause deficits for Europe. The United States attempt, in this manner, to export their own crisis. The West European countries, unable to make up these deficits, are renouncing all economic independence and are being reduced to the state of a protectorate.

M. Gabriel d'ARBOUSSIER (North Africa), Member of the Conseil de l'Union Française, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace, demonstrated that the Western Powers, in order to make war, need raw material and particularly man-power from Africa. Specifically, France and England no longer conceal their strategic plans on that Continent. But in order for these plans to succeed it would be necessary for Africa to be completely tied to the policy of the West. However, the Africa of 1952, is no longer the Africa of 1914, nor even that of 1939. She will not become a strategic base since the war plans run up against two facts:

—the peoples of Africa have learned by bitter experience that the partnership they were offered was that of the horse and the rider;

—a tremendous feeling of resistance has been developing among the African peoples who no longer want to live the lives of slaves, as in the past. They have begun the great battle against oppression and colonial servitude. An uninterrupted chain of bloody incidents has been taking place: but the dead of today are proof that the African peoples no longer want to live on their knees and demand the right to govern their country themselves and to exploit its natural riches themselves. Science shows that there is an ancient Negro civilisation which is today striving for revival on a higher level. This was the message of brotherhood, confidence and asurance which M. d'Arboussier wanted to bring in the name of the peoples of Black Africa who want freedom because they know it is inseparable from Peace.

M. Antoine TABET (Lebanon), architect, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, then showed how the struggles of the peoples of the Middle East and of North Africa for their national independence and against the Middle Eastern Pact are part of the struggle for Peace.

M. Ahmed EL KASSAR from Syria (an invited visitor), explained how the peaceful solution of the German and Japanese problem and an end to the war in Korea would be of great assistance to the struggle of the Syrian people for their independence.

Mr. Emile HABIBI (Israel), Deputy (an invited visitor), showed how, in the fight for Peace, the Israeli people and those of the Arab countries are righting the wrong that was done them in dividing them artificially.

M. Ben SLIMAN (Tunisia), doctor of medicine, Member of the World Council of Peace.

(M. ALLEMAN of France read M. Sliman's speech at the latter's request.)

M. Ben SLIMAN recalled the events which took place some months ago in Tunisia—brutal arrests of the leaders of the National Movement, of the Peace Movement, of which he was one, and of Communists. These arbitrary arrests provoked a mass uprising of the people, a signal in turn for a savage onslaught on them. But this repression did not break the Tunisian people. On the contrary, it opened the eyes of those who still had illusions and taught them to count only on themselves to obtain their independence. M. Sliman stated that in fighting for their independence the Tunisian people are undermining an important jumping-off point for aggression. The head of the French Government admitted, in effect, that the continued presence of the French in Tunisia was a question of strategy. Tunisia has become transformed into a base of aggression: fourteen air bases are in the process of being constructed, munitions depots have been installed and extended manœuvres take place on its territory.

In fighting to be masters in their own country, the Tunisian people are quite naturally fighting for Peace. They understand that their fight for independence is not an isolated one, and they are conscious that war is the greatest hope of the imperialists. The events of the last months also taught the Tunisian people to know their enemies and their friends: the attitude of the United States in the U.N. has enlightened them on its hypocritical claim to anti-colonialism.

M. Vassos LYSSARIDES (Cyprus), doctor of medicine, Member of the World Council of Peace, then showed why, in the face of the grave war danger in the Mediterranean and the Middle East, it is imperative that the Peace Conference of the peoples from these countries be convoked.

Mrs. CHAN SUAT HONG from Malaya (an invited visitor), demonstrated that the struggle of the Malayan people, linked to the struggle of all the peoples of Asia and to that of the British people, can make it possible for the war now being fought on their soil, to be brought to an end on the basis of negotiations which respect the principle of the rights of all peoples to self-determination.

Mr. Mahmoud HORMOZ (Iran), a magistrate, Secretary of the Iranian Peace Committee, Member of the World Council of Peace.

With each intensification of the war preparations, Mr. Hormoz declared, the conditions of life for the people of the Middle East become more difficult. It is therefore not astonishing that these peoples choose the road to Peace. The Conference of Ottawa and Washington in 1951 envisaged ways and means of seizing the natural ressources of these countries, of recruiting their sons and of setting up a Middle Eastern Command. But the protests of the people who saw no need for being defended against the Soviet Union, were such that until now not a single Government has agreed to become part of the proposed pact. Then terror methods were tried, at the instigation of envoys from the United States such as dictatorial coups d'état and arrests of Peace defenders.

Mr. Hormoz illustrated these claims by showing that 1,200 U.S. advisers hold considerable power in Iran; arms abound, strategic plants are being constructed, although the economic situation of the country is catastrophic. Close to 50 airports have been installed, many more than are necessary for Iran's defence; high officers of the U.S. army visit Iran and the countries of the Middle East periodically; their interests range from oil in Iran to the Suez Canal. The peoples of the Middle East are also linking their struggle for liberty to the struggle for Peace; they are demanding disarmament, a peaceful solution of the Korean, Japanese and German problems, the conclusion of a Peace Pact. In concluding, Mr. Hormoz showed that despite all difficulties the peoples of the Middle East are firmly determined to hold their regional Peace Conference in the near future.

TWELFTH SESSION

(Saturday, July 5th, Morning)

Presiding: Mme Eugénie COTTON (France), President of the World Federation of Democratic Women, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace; later: M. Antoine TABET (Lebanon), an architect, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. Prasert SUPSOONTHORN from Thaïland (an invited visitor), spoke of the struggle of his people against the transformation of their country into a jumping-off point for provocations on the borders of China and Viet-Nam.

Mrs. Sucheta KRIPALANI (India), leader of the Socialist Praja Party in the Indian Parliament, Member for New Delhi (an invited visitor).

The Indian people, said Mrs. KRIPALANI, aim for the end of imperialism and believe in peaceful co-existence. India has not known war directly, but she has suffered from the consequences of war: Famine, in 1943, killed 3,000,000 people in the state of Bengal alone. She thought that, unlike the League of Nations and the United Nations, the World Council of Peace can prevent war because it represents the peoples, and it is they who suffer from war.

Some countries behave as if war were inevitable and arm accordingly. The Indian people have welcomed the proposals of the World Council of Peace for disarmament because they know that it was non-violence which made it possible for them to be victorious over Britain which, in terms of violence, was superior to them. Non-violence is superior to violence, just as negotiations are superior to war. We are for disarmament. Our sympathy goes out to the peoples of Korea, Viet Nam and Malaya. The Indian people greet the coming Conference of Peace of the Asian and Pacific countries. The Indian people must use all their weight to achieve the conclusion of a Peace Pact between the Five Great Powers (we are asking that it be signed at New-Delhi), the withdrawal of all occupation troops from foreign territories, for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

M. Paul RODI (France), a journalist, Member of the World Council of Peace, then showed how, as a result of the havoc created by the Atlantic policy, it has become possible to rally a large portion of the public in the West European countries to the Peace Movement.

Mr. Kristinn ANDRESSON of Iceland (an invited visitor), gave the example of how a small, peaceful country, which has never known war or military service, fights for Peace.

MR. WIRTANEN from Finland, (an invited visitor), underlined that it is necessary to explain to Social-Democrats, Liberals, and Catholics what we mean by peaceful co-existence, in order to enlarge our Movement considerably.

Mr. Joseph R. SANDY (Great Britain), Member of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. SANDY, a member of the Society of Friends (Quakers) said he knows that Peace is in the hearts of men. Never before has the need been so imperative to combine faith and action; Christians must get together with all their brothers and struggle alongside them. In the present situation the choice is not between different nations, but between life and death. We are against war and for negotiations. This, then, is our idea of a common basis. We set up no barriers either between ourselves, or between us and others.

Sra. Branca FIALHO (Brazil), President of the Brazilian Federation of Women, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Sra. FIALHO said that since 1947 World War III has been in preparation in Latin America (the Rio de Janeiro and Bogota Treaties). Under the terms of these Treaties, the countries of Latin America would be forced to participate in the war if the United States considers it has been attacked. The right to interfere in the internal affairs of these countries was also stipulated. A series of bilateral military pacts have served to strengthen these two Treaties with the aim of assuring the economic, military and political subjection of these countries to the United States.

Four-and-a-half-million signatures for a Peace Pact, a victorious struggle against the sending of 20,000 soldiers to Korea and the fight for the oil rights, testify to the great force for Peace in Brazil. Ten million signatures for a Peace Pact, that is Latin America's contribution to the world campaign. But the peoples are equally opposed to the preparation for war on their own soil; for this reason they fight, by different methods in each country, against the conclusion of bilateral pacts. This made necessary united action on their part, and the holding of the regional Peace Conference in May at Montevideo was the crowning success of that unity. The campaign for a Peace Pact permitted us to make the profound reasons for the fight for peace understood in our countries. Without the countries of Latin America the United States cannot make a war because they need their raw materials and their men.

Sr. Juan MARINELLO (Cuba), the writer, Member of the World Council of Peace, also showed the serious encroachments upon the national independence of the Latin American peoples caused by the war preparations and the need for unity among these peoples in the fight for Peace.

Sr. Ernesto GIUDICI (Argentine), General Secretary of the Argentine Peace Committee, (an invited visitor).

Latin America, said Sr. Giudici, has suffered at the hands of the U.S. Government real economic oppression, and he gave the following picture:

—the so-called "American aid" to underdeveloped countries is a source of profits and of oppression;

—the United States buys cheaply those raw materials which play an important part in the maintenance of its war economy;

—it is paralysing the export of manufactured goods, thereby creating an economic depression;

—it is making it impossible for Latin America to buy machinery for her industries, thereby forcing her into one-side development of agriculture;

—U.S. capital investments in Latin America are constantly increasing;

—they are forcing these countries to set aside a large part of their budgets for the purchase of war materials.

Faced with this situation, the consciousness of the Latin American peoples is growing rapidly. This is worrying the United States Government which needs these countries to an even greater extent because the other countries of the world are in opposition to its war policies.

Sga. Alessandra PIAGGIO of Italy, (an invited visitor), spoke of the great desire for Peace among all Catholics, a desire which manifests itself in the form of different movements whose actions, in her opinion, should be co-ordinated.

Sr. Manuel SANCHEZ ARCAS (Spain), an architect, Member of the World Council of Peace, brought to the World Council of Peace greetings from the Spanish Peace Council in Mexico, under the presidency of Dr. José GIRAL. He stated that Spain, with the eager help of Franco, has become part of the U.S. aggressive system of which she is a base of prime importance. This was sealed by the tripartite Pact of Spain-Portugal and the United States, and by the Mediterranean agreement in which Spain participates.

Sr. Arcas then went on to explain the consequences of this policy which virtually sold Spain, as well as Spanish Morocco, to the great advantage of the U.S. monopolists. The intensively exploited labouring masses constitute for them a source of incalculable profit and a reserve of manpower, since Spain possesses an army of 2,800,000 soldiers which the Spanish dictator intended to integrate into the European army.

But the Spanish people oppose this policy—as was proved by the strikes in Barcelona and Madrid which for all Spanish defenders of Peace represented an invaluable sign of confidence—and are taking their place resolutely in the camp of Peace.

Rev. U. SARANANKARA (Ceylon), a Buddhist Monk, (an invited visitor), launched an appeal to all the Buddhists of the entire world to act for Peace.

Sr. Carlos Augusto LEON (Venezuela), the writer (an invited visitor), then denounced the exploitation by the United States of Pan-Americanism, a doctrine of Peace and of peaceful co-operation, for the aims of war and oppression.

THIRTEENTH SESSION

(Saturday, July 5th, afternoon)

Presiding: Mr. Jessie STREET (Australia), Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

E. E. U. COLLOCOTT (Australia), Doctor of Philosophy, (an invited visitor), expressed the peaceful feelings of the Australian people and their desire to live in friendship with all the peoples of Asia and Australia.

Sr. Eli GORTARI de GORTARI (Mexico), Professor of Philosophy, (an invited visitor), then recalled the victorious struggle of the Mexican people against the conclusion of the bi-lateral military pact with the Government of the United States.

The Polish poet, Jaroslaw IWASZKIEWICZ, (an invited visitor), appealed to the writers of the United States, France and Great Britain who were so alive to social realities of their countries, to participate more actively in the struggle for Peace, to which they appeared to be so indifferent.

Sr. Pablo NERUDA (Chili), the poet, Member of the World Council of Peace.

In Sr. Neruda's estimate, the proposal of the World Council of Peace to celebrate great cultural anniversaries has had tremendous repercussions for unity of world culture, despite the reaction of those who want to divide the people. These American intellectuals who refuse to march in step with Truman and who do not want to implant Western culture in Korea with Ridgway methods, are faced with a tragic situation and are treated like ordinary criminals. This policy in dealing with intellectuals extends to the entre American continent. The plan of the aggressor in the field of culture is to deprive us of freedom of speech, to isolate us and to divide us. In conclusion, Sr. Neruda ardently greeted all men of culture in Spain, Turkey, the United States and Latin America who are victims of repression.

Rev. John HARTLEY TELFER (U.S.A.), Minister, First Unitarian Church, Wichita, Kansas.

The Rev. Hartley Telfer indicated that "Peace does not mean cultural uniformity, nor the sameness of economic and political systems. Co-existence is necessary because the world is one; it is the motherland of mankind."

He thought the message by Mr. Ehrenburg would be well received by the American people. Co-existence between the United States and the USSR is necessary because each needs the other.

The Rev. Hartley Telfer then showed that the standard of living of the American people is falling because of the policy of rearmament and also because they are deprived of fruitful commercial trade with certain foreign countries against which artificial barriers have been set up.

Touching on the Korean problem, he showed that the duty of every American consists in seeking out the truth hidden from him and to let his countrymen know about it. Although there are still many Americans who are not convinced that the United States was wrong in undertaking the war in Korea, there are many more who are doubtful and are asking themselves what business we had going into that country.

The Rev. Hartley Telfer continued: The American people have never experienced total war on their own soil. Nor have they known fascist oppression' as have the peoples of Europe and Asia during the war. That is why they have not yet fully understood the words of Roosevelt about the need to wipe out fascism and of maintaining friendly relations between the Soviet Union and the United States. But the majority of Americans do not want war. They are waiting for Peace. All they must now learn is that it is not a question of waiting for it, but of conquering it.

FOURTEENTH SESSION

(Sunday, July 6th, afternoon)

Presiding: Signor Giorgio FENOALTEA (Italy), lawyer, Secretary of the World Council of Peace.

M. Emile CAVENAILLE (Belgium), Member of the World Council of Peace, a businessman who participated in the Moscow Economic Conference, underlined the importance of trade relations for the strengthening of Peace, particularly in small and medium industries in the Western countries.

M. MEYER (France), leader of an agricultural organisation (an invited visitor), then showed that farmers, hard hit by the war and victimized by the new war preparations are taking and will take, an ever greater part in the fight for Peace.

Finally, Sig. Giorgio FENOALTEA informed the gathering of the letters and messages of greetings to the Session. He also said that many presents had been received, a group of which was destined for Korea. He then read a message by Mr. Youssef HELMI, President of the Egyptian Peace Committee, and Mr. Saad EL DIN KAMEL, Executive Director of the newspaper "Al Kateb", both members of the World Council of Peace, now interned in a concentration camp.

FIFTEENTH SESSION

(Sunday, July 6th, afternoon)

Presiding: Signor Pietro NENNI (Italy), General Secretary of the Socialist Party of Italy, Deputy, former Vice-President of the Italian Council, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace.

Before Sign. Nenni's speech with which the Session closed, Mr. Roy GORE (Great Britain), Secretary of the World Council of Peace, read the names of new candidates to the World Council of Peace, which had been approved. Mme Isabelle BLUME read the "Address to the Governments of the Four Great Powers And To All The Peoples On The German Problem" which was unanimously adopted. Mr. Mulk RAJ ANAND read the Resolution On The Struggle Against Japanese Remilitarisation And For A Democratic Japan, which was unanimously adopted; M. Yves FARGE read the Resolution On The Cessation Of The Korean War, which was adopted unanimously; Sign. NENNI asked the World Council of Peace to ratify the text of the Appeal Against Bacteriological Warfare, drawn up by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace (April 1, 1952) in Oslo. The text was unanimously adopted. Finally, Sign. NENNI read the text of the Call for a Congress of The Peoples for Peace which was unanimously adopted.

Closing speech by Sig. Pietro NENNI (Italy)

Vice-President of the World Council of Peace

Sig. Nenni first drew attention to certain general features of the international situation:

Three stages have been passed in the course of these last months by aggressive militarism:

—The San Francisco Treaty and the Administrative Agreements signed between Japan and the United States of America and coming into force on April 28, 1952.

—The General Treaty and the Contractual Agreements of Germany with the United States, Great Britain and France, signed in Bonn on May 26th of this year and ratified at express speed by the American senate.

—The Agreement on the "European Defence Community" (European Army) signed in Paris on May 27th, 1952.

At the same time the Korean war is being carried on and has even become aggravated; in spite of the cease-fire talks, while the bombing of the Yalu by U.S. aircraft has given new proof that the Pentagon has not given up the plan of provocation which was also that of General MacArthur.

The other conclusion to be drawn is that the objective deterioration of international relations has brought about a change in world public opinion, a broadening of the Peace Front, a heightened militancy of the masses and also an intensification of persecution.

Under these circumstances, Sig. Nenni said, "an immense effort has become necessary, and to bring it about we have just called for a Congress of the Peoples for Peace."

"A Congress is neither a parade, nor a fair, but the opportunity for fundamental work. The coming Vienna Congress will be worth what its preparatory work has been worth. The fate of the Congress will not be decided on December 5th at Vienna, by the number and quality of the delegates who attend it from all over the world. The fate of the Congress will be decided by the quality of our work between now and the time it convenes: it will be decided in the depths of Black Africa, in the Middle and Far East, India, the United States and Latin America. It will be decided in Western Europe, the USSR, China, Korea, the Eastern People's Democracies, to the exact degree that we shall find the means and the words to get in contact with that part of public opinion which has misunderstood our activities or participated in the slander which was constantly used to break the force of our propaganda."

Noting that the Bonn Agreement is of concern to all mankind, he asked that a campaign against its ratification be undertaken. This will not be an easy job, but the Peace Movement will be aided by a growing spirit, particularly in the United States, Great Britain, France and Germany:

"I will give only a few examples. The day after the bombing of the Yalu, Bevan, of the British Labour Party, turned to his Government and said: 'Tell the Americans that the British people will not make war against China'. He is already taking a polemical position as advanced as ours, and even more advanced than many members of our World Council of Peace.

"He is not obliged to come to us. But we should go to him and say: 'Mr. Bevan, we agree with you'. However, it is not only a question of saying things, but of doing them. And to do them there must be joint activity, or at least activity on parallel lines. Because it is very clear that in order not to be dragged into a war against China there are steps to be taken and things to be done which will not do themselves.

"The case of the Social Democrats of West Germany on the question of the ratification of the Bonn Agreement is even more striking.

"The day has come when Herr Schumacher was forced to take a position against the Contractual Agreements signed by Chancellor Adenauer. The moment has come when the German Social Democrats felt obliged to proclaim as a "Day of National Mourning" the day of the signing of the General Treaty of Bonn, May 26th . . .

"The problem of ratification will present itself in a very similar way in France and Great Britain.

"A large French Socialist, Radical-Socialist and even de Gaulliste sector opposes with much vehemence and emotion the Contractual Agreements and the Paris agreements, although they are themselves responsible for them. Be it the honorable M. Herriot or the old Socialist, Grumbach, their speeches sound alike and the firmness which seems to inspire them gives reason for the belief in the possibility of creating a rather large opposition front in Parliament and in the country.

"I know there can be many a slip twixt the cup and the lip. I know that in certain cases we must expect the classic move from the gentleman who, at the last minute, will vote for ratification while still talking against it and beating his breast in depair.

"But others will be drawn into an opposition against the Atlantic policy which is becoming more and more coherent. But the man in the street is less complicated and less warped than the wily experienced politician and, in the final count, it is he, the man in the street, who forms public opinion and without whose support politics are but a house of cards which will collapse at the slightest breath.

"This is the direction in which we must pursue the broadening of our Movement, in which this session has shown marked progress . . ."

Sig. Nenni thought that the preparations for the Congress and the Congress itself will be the opportunity for the Peace Movement to seek "new friendships". He concluded in drawing from the world struggle for Peace, just as from the spectacle of Berlin rising from its ruins "a great lesson of confidence and optimism".

GREETINGS AND PRESENTS SENT TO THE SESSION OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Two thousand letters, telegrams and messages of greeting were sent to the Session of the World Council of Peace, of which 1,400 came from factories, schools and administrative bodies in Germany.

An exhibition of presents from the German people to the World Council, to its President and to the Korean delegation was set up in the hall where the Session was held.

The many messages included those from the "National Council of the National Front of Democratic Germany", the "Democratic Peasant Party of Germany", the "Christian-Democratic Union of Germany", the workers from the "Neptune" naval shipbuilding yard in Rostock; the "Lowa" rolling-stock construction works in Görlitz, the "Zeiss Ikon" plant in Dresden, the chemical combine of Leuna, the steel plants of Brandenburg, Hennigsdorf, etc . . .

A worker from the E.M.W. plant at Eisenach, Walter Euccarius, wrote:

"Having been a regular soldier, I experienced the last world war, with all its horrors, from the first to the last day. A new world war would be conducted with still more horrible weapons and would bring untold misery to mankind . . .

"We Germans do not need a war and want to live in Peace with all peoples. In my capacity as member of the Peace Committee of the E.M.W. plant at Eisenach, I personally pledge to make an even greater effort to safeguard world Peace."

From Düsseldorf, Frau Kathinka von Kardorf-Oheimb wrote:

"As President of a circle working for an understanding among Germans and for an equitable Peace, I am awaiting with impatience the resolutions of the World Council of Peace. Let us hope that it will bring us Germans re-unification which in turn will make possible a peaceful life in mutual respect."

Numerous messages also arrived from peoples' organisations in Korea; from the state of Bahia in Brazil (in the name of 310,000 signatories of the Appeal for a Pact of Peace); from Pernambuco (Brazil); from Rio de Janeiro, a telegram from the Brazilian Peace Movement said:

"The Movement of the Brazilian Fighters for Peace greets the meeting of the World Council. We are informing you that 4,500,000 signatures have been gathered for the Appeal for a Peace Pact. In the name of the millions of Brazilian Peace fighters, we express all good wishes for the success of your deliberations which will strengthen the position of the Brazilian people in the defence of Peace and for national liberation."

From Springs, Transvaal (Union of South-Africa); from Rumania and Czechoslovakia; from Mufti Ifhan Babahon Ibne Abdoul Magid Han (Kazakhstan) in the name of the clergy of Central Asia and Kazakhstan.

A letter from the Peace Council of Lapland (Finland) was particularly interesting. It said:

"We, the inhabitants of Lapland, suffered very much from the fury of the Nazis who destroyed the homes of our province during the war.

"The conviction that the chances of maintaining Peace are as real as the chances of war is gaining ground among ever larger groups. In our province, 59,600 inhabitants have signed the Appeal for a Peace Pact."

A telegram also arrived from Youssef Helmy and Saad El Din Kamel, Egyptian members of the World Council, greeting the Session of the World Council from inside their internment camp, and pledging their "determination to fight for Peace until victory"; also a telegram from M. André Bonnard, Swiss member of the World Council of Peace:

"Detained in Switzerland by police interference, I send fraternal greetings to the World Council and express the desire for Peace of the Swiss people."

No 2 — OCTOBER 24th, 1952 — PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Many newspapers, reviews and bulletins appearing in different countries have published articles and reports taken from the first number of this bulletin.

In publicising in their respective countries the preparations throughout the world for the Congress of the Peoples for Peace they are helping to make the Congress a "discussion on the widest possible scale".

We remind everyone of the fact that all articles and information contained in this number can be reproduced and we urge all our correspondents to make known by all possible means the material which they consider useful.

STATEMENT

of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace on the preparation of the Congress of the Peoples for Peace to be held in Vienna.

December 12th, 1952

The Appeal for a Congress of the Peoples, issued by the World Council of Peace, is arousing great interest in all countries, and is already evoking a considerable response.

The resort to a policy of force in international relations has resulted in tension, the effects and dangers of which are daily more obvious. Faced with this situation, social groups of the most varied kinds, in particular political, trade union, religious and pacifist, agree that a way must be found to break the deadlock.

How can the wars now going on be stopped?

How can the cold war be brought to an end?

How can the independence of nations be safeguarded and the security of every country be guaranteed?

The answers to these questions can only be found through genuine discussion among forces truly representative of the peoples' desire for Peace.

The Congress of the Peoples called by the World Council of Peace will be an international assembly bringing together men and women of different countries and devoted to different ways of life.

The participation of delegates, guests and observers will not imply their adherence to the Peace Movement.

The Congress of the Peoples will try to find, in free and effective discussion, reasonable solutions to the questions today dividing the world.

Agreement reached, even on a single point, will make easier understanding on further points and will contribute to a lessening of international tension.

The peoples will find the road to Peace together.

Adopted unanimously.
Vienna, October 16th, 1952

The Congress of the Peoples for Peace . . .

Although it was built during our century (it was finished in the Autumn of 1913), this hall already has a great history.

The first concert was given on October 19th, 1913. Richard Strauss had composed the music for this concert. The audition of his "Prelude Solonnel" was directed by Ferdinand Löwe. This work had been specially composed to fit the majestic proportions of the great concert hall.

On the occasion of the centenary of the death of Beethoven, in 1927, the "Missa Solemnis" was executed in the great hall by the Philharmonic Orchestra and the choirs of the National Opera, under the direction of Franz Schalk, with Elisabeth Schuman, Rosette Anday, Hermann Gallos and Richard Mayr. Among the public were the great German scientists, Hermann Abert and Albert Einstein; the present Minister of Education in Czechoslovakia, Zdenek Nejedly, an authority on the works of Beethoven and Smetana; the composer Boris Assasieff of Leningrad; the founder of American musical science, Carl Engel of Washington and the great English musicologist, Edward Dent. Romain Rolland also came here to talk on Beethoven.

The concerts given during the Beethoven centenary and other great international musical festivals made this musical centre famous. The very history of this concert hall testifies to the fact that Peace is a necessary concomitant of the development of musical life. The "sun of universal culture", to quote Romain Rolland speaking of music, shines brightest when the theme of Peace triumphs over the fracas of war, as in the "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven.

The great concert hall in Vienna is where this truth finds daily confirmation.

. . . will open on December 12th, in the Great Concert Hall in Vienna

Britain prepares...

Above the Gothic spires of the world-famous university city of Cambridge where generations of scholars from many different lands have for centuries assimilated and made contributions to world culture, a thousand balloons floated skywards trailing messages of Peace.

And so began a week, during which the citizens and scholars of Cambridge were constantly reminded that civilisation, whether it meant for them individually the pursuit of learning or a workman's pride of craftsmanship, the preservation of traditions and principles, or the maintenance of a family according to certain standards, all this is threatened with total obliteration. But they were also reminded that they themselves can help save the Peace — and the civilisation they cherish.

Across one of the main streets, there flew a huge banner bearing a Peace emblem designed by a well-known sculptress; in the city centre there was a bookstall and information bureau; a concert sponsored by the Musician's Organisation for Peace was advertised by 10,000 programmes distributed door-to-door and was well attended. There was a dedication service in a church; film shows were arranged by the local Labour Party and the Cambridge Assembly of Women, while several meetings were addressed by speakers of varying political and religious views.

A message from the United States ambassador wished the Peace Week "all success". Another, from the Soviet ambassador, read: "I wish you good success in your work for the promotion and understanding between our peoples."

This is one of the latest examples of the preparations that are being made in Britain for the great Congress of the Peoples for Peace.

Other towns and cities have also been quick to respond to the Appeal of the British Sponsoring Committee for the Peoples' Congress which includes some 60 well-known professional men and women and prominent trade-unionists, and to the new feeling of urgency amongst the people (reflected in the mood of delegates at the Trade Union Congress and the Labour Party Conference which was flooded with resolutions from every part of the island demanding, in one way or another, an end to current conflicts, to re-armament and for a let-up in restrictions on international trade).

In Glasgow, for example, a Peace parade marched through the city, recently, bearing a tableau and over 100 posters drawing people's attention to the things which concern them most — the rising cost of living, pools of unemployment, lengthy conscription and so on — all of which were linked with the international tension and the way this can be eased by the peoples voicing their views at the Vienna Congress.

In the West-country city of Bristol, a conference attended by Quakers, trade union and co-operative branches, shop stewards in a local aircraft factory, the local branch of the Assembly of Women and students from the university, unanimously passed a resolution demanding immediate negotiations for the ending of hostilities in every part of the world. At the same time it drew up a list of prominent citizens who will be asked to form a panel from which delegates will be drawn to attend the Peoples' Congress.

But not only are preparations being made on a regional scale. Even more important, delegates are being chosen for Vienna from the factory floor, from the pit-head and on the docks, as well as from trade union branches, co-operative guilds and religious organisations.

At least ten delegates have already been elected in this way from London and Yorkshire alone.

In a Glasgow shipyard, the shop stewards have welcomed the Congress.

In a big engineering shop in Scotland where a decision was taken to send delegates to Vienna, it was estimated that if 3,000 workers were to pay 6d each week for a fortnight, the expenses would be found for two delegates.

Another method of overcoming the difficulty of expenses was solved by railwaymen in one depot who got in touch with their colleagues in another and decided to send a delegate to Vienna jointly.

But perhaps the medium which is winning the widest publicity and support in Britain for the Vienna Congress is the "Note-books for Peace", of which more than 7,000 are in circulation.

On the cover, under the tittle: "Your Voice For Peace", people are asked such questions as:

"How do you think the danger of war could be reduced?"

"Can anything be done to reduce the burden of armaments?"

They are then asked to contribute their views to the discussion at the Peoples' Congress by writing them down inside the 16-page notebook.

In addition, pamphlets describing the purpose of the Congress and the ways by which it can be made a success are being distributed and, together with the Notebooks for Peace are stimulating discussions in factory canteens, in house meetings over a cup-of-tea, in church halls and sewing circles, in formal discussion groups and, informally, in pubs and clubs.

Twelve of the women members of the British Sponsoring Committee including the wife of an air Vice-Marshall, a celebrated actress and an eminent zoologist, have sent an appeal to over 2,000 womens' organisations in Britain. "War settles no differences," it says. "There must be an alternative to death and destruction. The Peoples Congress will bring together all who wish to replace violence and war by negotiation and understanding."

Britain's young people — whose interests are so vitally concerned in a country where the conscription period is longer than anywhere else, are also playing a vigorous part in the preparations.

They are joining in the great international relay to Vienna, which will carry messages from young people the world over. The British team will start from Clydebank, Glasgow, on November 9th after a celebration of World Youth Day. On its way South, the team will collect votes in favour of a reduction in the two years' conscription. Meetings, socials, concerts and film shows will take place en route. By the time the relay reaches London, it is expected that thousands of votes will have been collected and will feature in London's World Youth Day Celebration on November 24th.

The theme "things can't go on as they are", is a common one in Britain today in every section of the community — among housewives contending with rising prices; among shopkeepers who see their customers dwindling and among businessmen starved of raw materials and denied overseas markets.

This is why the Congress of the Peoples is receiving widespread recognition as a timely event of supreme importance to all who gain from a world at Peace.

...for the Congress of the Peoples

AN ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLES CONGRESS by Henri MATISSE and Pablo PICASSO

Dear Friends who work for Peace,

We are glad to learn that men of all opinions are going to unite for a free discussion of the problems of Peace.

We are in agreement with them in the desire to see a lessening of international tension.

Disarmament must be brought about by negotiation between States and not by a display of force.

We are convinced that mutual respect between peoples and the forms of governments of their choice will advance the cause of Peace and, to maintain this thing we all hold dear — Peace — we think that discussion is better than threats.

In the profound belief that thanks to the united efforts of all, the spirit of Peace will prevail over that of war, we send you our best wishes for success in your meetings.

10th October, 1952.

Signed: Henri MATISSE
Pablo PICASSO.

AN APPEAL of Anna SEGHERS

A writer expresses what his people feel and think. The Congress of the Peoples expresses what the peoples feel and think.

It cries "Halt!" to the war-makers. It points the way to men to free themselves from the anguish of death and intolerable tension and advance towards a future of security and Peace.

To those who make profit out of war and armaments, all works of art are only things to be bought and sold. Their contacts with artists are on the basis of contempt or corruption, of slander or flattery. A work of art is sold for some base price or forgotten — or burned under fascism or during war.

At the Congress of the Peoples, the words of the writers will carry their full weight. There, they will express what their peoples feel and think.

For they are the conscience of their people. If this were not so, their words would be like a silent bell.

However great their talent, it would dry up drop by drop, like a river in a dry land, without source or mouth.

We call on artists to join us in defending their art and the art of all centuries and all peoples at the Congress of the Peoples in Vienna.

We call on writers to speak on behalf of their people and their own children in their works and at the Congress of the Peoples.

We call on them to express in loud voice, each in his own tongue, what his conscience and the conscience of his people dictates.

Result of the exchange of letters between Sig. Giuseppe NITTI and Professor Frederic JOLIOT-CURIE

We have learned that at the meeting called by Sig. Nitti in Rome after receipt of the letter from President Joliot-Curie, the personalities present decided to establish a secretariat which will be independent of the Italian Peace Movement and will ensure the participation of different well-known people and organisations at the Congress of the Peoples.

The point of view of Signor TERRANOVA Christian Democrat Deputy Raffaele Terranova, Deputy and member of the Christian Democratic Party — the Party to which Premier De Gasperi belongs — took part in the meeting of Members of Parliament organised in Rome by Sig. Giuseppe Nitti. During this meeting a committee was formed of persons not belonging to the Peace Movement but who want to go to the Congress of the Peoples for Peace in Vienna. Sig. Terranova gave the newspaper "Paese Sera" these points of information on the intentions of this committee of Italian Members of Parliament. The following is an extract from his statement.

"The fullest and most explicit guarantees have been given to those who want to go to Vienna to find a meeting place for the exchange of opinions and suggestions on general and specific ideas for peaceful co-existence of the peoples. Professor Joliot-Curie has shown great wisdom and breadth of vision in accepting the demands put forward in Sig. Nitti's letter which asked for certain guarantees. In this way, Professor Joliot-Curie has set a good example of the way in which people can get together despite widely differing points of view.

We know that many Peace Committees are organising very broad delegations which are not solely composed of active peace workers. Nevertheless, we also know that there are many Italians, including myself, who wish to retain the fullest freedom of judgement and action with regard to the Defenders of Peace and yet wish to be present or represented in Vienna. It is not unlikely that certain Defenders of Peace may be surprised at or opposed to our proposals. If so, I believe that they would be showing an extremely partisan spirit, which has certainly not been shown by their President, Professor Joliot-Curie. No one has the monopoly of working for Peace. Others may say we are mistaken because we are ready to talk and act with the Communists, the Russians and the Chinese; but do we not have to talk with and listen to everyone if we really want to establish Peace?"

THE SPONSORING COMMITTEE FOR THE BRAZILIAN DELEGATION TO THE CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLES

Fifty - three personalities of all backgrounds, professions and opinions, including M. P.s belonging to the Social-Democratic Party, the National Democratic Union, the Brazilian Labour Party, the Social Progressive Party, the Republican Party, the Christian-Democratic Party and the Republican Labour Party, and five independent M. P.s have just set up a Sponsoring Committee for the Brazilian Delegation to the Congress of the Peoples.

The Sponsoring Committee has launched the following appeal to the Brazilian people:

"The Congress of the Peoples for Peace will open in Vienna on December 12th. Today the peoples are much more conscious of the danger of being dragged into a war they do not want.

"We welcome the appeal for the convocation of the Congress of the Peoples for Peace and we invite the Brazilian people to give every support to this document by working with it and by seeking to unite all those who wish to protect our motherland and mankind from the horrors of a new war.

"The Brazilian delegation to the Congress of the Peoples will express the traditionally peaceful feelings of our people and their desire to contribute to the safeguarding of Peace.

"Let all take to heart the words of the Convocation Appeal for the Congress."

The following people signed this appeal: Senora Branca Fialho, educationist, member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace; General Edgard Buxbaum; Monseigneur Costabile Hipolito, Catholic Priest, apostolic protonotary, Vicar of Sagé since 1892, founder of the Rosario Gymnasium at Porto-Alegre; Silvio de Campos, lawyer, former President of the State of Sao Paulo; Jorge Amado, writer, Stalin International Peace Prize winner; Santiago Americano Freire, professor at the Minas Gerais University, winner of the Gold Medal of the International Congress of Biochemistry (Paris 1952); Matias Olimpo, Senator of the Republic, member of the National Democratic Union; Julio Rocha Xavier, lawyer, Deputy, former assistant Governor of Parana, member of the Brazilian Labour Party; Campos Vergal, Social-Progressive Party, Deputy in the Federal Parliament, spiritualist leader; Henrique Fialho, judge in the Court of Appeal of the Justice Tribunal of the Federal District; Candido Portinari, artist; Janio Quadros, Christian-Democratic Party, Deputy, in the State of Sao Paulo; Bibi Ferreira, theatre and cinema artist; Father Benedito M. Cardoso, director of the Saint Francis de Sales Institute in the State of Sao Paulo; Clovis Ribeiro Cintra, Deputy from the State of Mato Grosso; Arnaldo Marques, doctor, professor at Pernambuco University; Tarcilo Vieira de Melo, Social-Democratic Party, Deputy in the Federal Parliament, former secretary of Education for the State of Bahia; Arnaldo Estrela, pianist, professor at Brazil university; Romulo Finamore, judge in the Court of Appeal of the State of Espirito Santo; Henrique Marques Lisboa, professor at Minas Gerais University; Alcides Antonio Maciel, landowner, Sao Paulo; Milton Marcondes, municipal councillor, member of the National Democratic Union, president of the Trade Union of Bank Employees of the State of Sao Paulo; Pedro de Camargo (Vinicius), advisory member of the Spiritualist Federation of the State of Sao Paulo; Graciliano Ramos, writer, president of the Association of Brazilians Writers; Radames Gnatali, composer; Milton Roberto, president of the Institute of Brazilian Architects; Moacir Fenelon, film producer and director, president of the Film Producers Union; Decio Toledo Leite, judge at the regional Working Tribunal, Sao Paulo; Adalmo Saldanha, Deputy from the State of Mato Grosso; Geraldo Simões, industrialist and cattle-breeder from Minas Gerais; Floriano Benevides Guimaraes, judge in the State of Geara; Edson Mouri Fernandes, Social-Democratic Deputy in the State of Pernambuco; Canon Antonio de G'oes Bittencourt, Catholic Priest in the State of Bahia; Oscar Niemeyer, architect; Osny Duarte Pereira, judge of the Federal District; Wilson Lins, Republican Party Deputy in the State of Bahia; Pericles Gomes Araujo, Deputy of the National Democratic Union from the State of Ceara; Benedito Vaz Figueiredo, Deputy from the State of Matto Grosso; Miguel Nicolau, Deputy from the State of Sao Paulo, member of the Brazilian Labour Party; José Carvalheira Ramos, Deputy of the National Democratic Union of Minas Gerais; José Geraldo Vieira, writer; Benedito Leite de Campos, judge in the Court of Appeal in the State of Matto Grosso; Mileto Rizzo, Deputy of the Brazilian Labour Party of the State of Ceara; Fernando de Oliveira Coutinho, judge in the Working Tribunal, Sao Paulo; Marinho Falcao, Deputy from the State of Matto Grosso; Fabricio Soares, Deputy of the National Democratic Union from the State of Minas Gerais; Evandro Lins e Silva, criminologist; Professor Maria Setla de Novais, poetess, from the State of Espirito Santo; José Morize de Andrade, Social Progressive Party, Deputy in the State of Ceara; Joao Salgadó Sobrinho, Republican Labour Party Deputy in the State of Sao Paulo; Colonel Olimpo Ferraz de Carvalho, lawyer, secretary of the Executive Committee of the Brazilian Labour Party, in the State of Minas Gerais; Vera Nunes, cinema and theatre artist.

Conference for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem

STATEMENT

The representatives of the Bureau of the International Initiating Committee for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem held a meeting in Berlin on October 19th, 1952, with representatives from the majority of participating countries.

Among those present at this meeting were: Jean-Marie DOMENACH, Michel BRUGUIER and Stephan HERMLIN, members of the Bureau of the International Initiating Committee; Mme HODINOVÁ-SPURNÁ (Czechoslovakia); Mme Isabelle BLUME (Belgium); Mrs José SOLLEY (Great Britain); M. Yves FARGE (France); Sig. Guiseppe NITTI, General GUIDOTTI, General ROVEDA, Arnoldo FRATEILI (Italy); Dr. Robert SEITSCHEK (Australia); Ostap DLUSKI (Poland); Johannes DIECKMANN, Président of the People's Chamber; Franz DAHLEM, Deputy, Professor Albert NORDEN and Alexander ABUSCH (German Democratic Republic); Pastor Martin NIEMÖLLER and other representatives from West Germany.

The following statement was published at the close of the meeting:

"The Parliaments which are being asked to ratify the Bonn and Paris Agreements will assume an overwhelming responsibility. These Agreements are endangering Peace and the national independence of the peoples.

"Men of all opinions, of all beliefs and representing all political trends in Europe and the majority of countries interested in the German problem, were to meet today in Stockholm the delegations from West Germany and East Germany, in order to seek a solution satisfactory both to the aspirations of Germany from the national point of view and the legitimate concern of other nations to guarantee their security.

"The obstacles which were designed to prevent this Conference from taking place in full strength, testify to the importance, the necessity and the urgent need of such a meeting.

"On November 8th, 9th and 10th, the 'Conference to Seek a Peaceful Solution to the German Problem' will be held in West and East Berlin.

"Conscious that we interpret the true interests of our countries, we call upon the peoples of Europe to condemn the Bonn and Paris Agreements so that the chances of a peaceful settlement are not jeopardised.

"We invite them to deliberate and to mandate national delegates who will participate in this Conference.

"We have together made a beginning to the drawing up of a peaceful solution of the German problem. In common and fraternal work we shall continue to defend Peace in Europe and to demonstrate that understanding is possible between all the countries on our Continent."

AN APPEAL
from the Synod of the Evangelical Church of Germany

The Synod of the Evangelical Church of Germany which was held in Elbingerode (German Democratic Republic) decided to address an appeal for understanding to the Four Great Powers and has decided to make known to the Government of the German Democratic Republic and the Government of the Federal Republic of Bonn their anxiety at the division of Germany.

On the item on the agenda headed: "The public responsibility of Christians", the Synod unanimously adopted a resolution which said in part:

"The Synod feels very deeply the misery which befell and which can again befall the two parts of Germany as a result of the division of our country. It sees and understands the moral distress which will afflict countless men and women, and particularly the young people, when armed forces are again constituted on the two sides and when compulsory military service is re-established. It aspires to Peace for the German people and for the whole world, and for Peace Christianity must take its stand".

FRANCE
Radical Party Congress

The Radical Party Congress has just been held in Bordeaux. Here are two items from contributions to the discussion made by two of the party leaders, M. Herriot and M. Daladier:

M. HERRIOT:

"The plan for a European Army gives Germany new advantages while demanding sacrifices of France which she cannot accept. It is contrary to our constitution and means that we lose part of our national sovereignty."

M. DALADIER:

"Do you consider that it would be dishonourable to make an effort to resolve the differences between the East and the West?"

IT CAN'T GO ON!

"I am prepared to give up War"
Lord Boyd ORR

At a public meeting of the "World Association of Parliamentarians for World Government" which was held at the beginning of October in Kingsway Hall, London, Lord Boyd Orr, former President of the U. N. Food and Agricultural Organisation, talked about the armaments race:

"It has been said that if we are going to apply science to produce food to eliminate disease from the world, we will need to give up something in the highly industrialised wealthy countries. I am prepared to give up something. I am prepared to give up war.

"If the present effort of rearmament, the terrific force which is being spent on it by practically every country in the world, were directed towards constructive ends, within 10 years there would be an abundance of food for everybody. This would be easy to do if every nation were existing alone. The trouble is that the world is now so small that the nations must agree to co-operate to do these things or they will fight."

Distinguished People support the Congress of the Peoples

"I wish the Congress of the Peoples every success", says Rabbi BAUER of Paris.

"It goes without saying that we have not forgotten the suffering of the last war during which six million Jews perished.

"I consider that all Jews cannot but want peace in view of all that they have suffered in the past.

"At this time of the year, on the occasion of the Festivals of the New Year and the Great Pardon, we ask in our prayers that peace should reign on earth. It follows that we must do all in our power to avoid a repetition of the slaughter and the torture that we have formerly known.

"I wish the Congress of the Peoples full and complete success in the tasks which it has set itself".

AN APPEAL
for the Congress of the Peoples
by M. Gustave MONOD

Honorary Director of Higher Education in France.

I wish that all teachers of France were aware how deeply the forthcoming Congress of the Peoples for Peace, due to meet in Vienna on December 12th, concerns them. They have the young people of France under their charge, but many of them work in difficulty and with an uneasy conscience. How can one face up to the future of these children. And as for the present, a system which is out of all proportion to the problems, inadequate grants, children on the street and hosts of adolescents, virtually neglected, whose leisure hours are being exploited by businessmen.

All this, because instead of responding to the fervent hopes of the peoples who demand peace, some of the World's leaders are allowing the threat of war to increase and are sacrificing the future of our children to the building of tanks and bombs.

But, here is a unique occasion: the Congress of Vienna has been called to give voice to this desire for Peace which is in all peoples. Here, there will be no party, no political obligations, only the simple desire for Peace. This desire must be expressed and imposed with such vigour that it will go down in history.

We believe that it is the duty of teachers, whose work can only be practiced under peaceful conditions, to take part in this enterprise of those who are promoting and winning the Peace. Let them establish contacts between these hosts of men and women who do not know each other, yet who all feel the curse of war weighing down upon the life of their children. Let them promote delegations for Vienna, let them do all in their power to make the vibrant appeal of the French people in favour of Childhood and Peace be heard there.

This message comes to them from men who are strangers to political action, who have devoted their lives and their efforts to the young people and who cannot accept that for the third time in less than 50 years, these children could be victims of the crimes or the incompetence of governments.

PARIS October 11th 1952

THERE MUST BE AN END TO IT!

MESSAGE FROM INDIA

Mr KARANJIA, director of the English-language review, "Blitz", has sent the following message:

"Our people know that our hopes lie in the beautiful and shining Evangel of Peace. Peace is the last thread which keeps our land and its people from drowning. Through Peace, and Peace alone, shall we survive with the rest of the world on the principles of the new ideal of co-existence, co-operation, trade and co-prosperity between the Socialist and Capitalist worlds. The solution to all our problems lies in Peace.

"Understanding the supreme necessity of Peace for our freedom, our means of existence and our survival, we are doing all in our power in order to attain that golden age. The Peace Movement in India today enjoys the support of all patriotic parties in India. The Indian National Congress — the leading party — has itself adopted the principles of our resolutions demanding a cessation to the hostilities in Korea followed by a Conference of the Great Powers in order to draw up a formula for Peace in our time. At the same time, Mr Nehru, the Prime Minister, has made his contribution to the universal movement by sending Dr. Sarvapalli Radhakrishna, Vice-President of the Indian Union and distinguished peace-lover, on a mission to bring light to 'that darkling plain, where ignorant armies meet and clash in the night'.

"It is in the spirit of a people thirsting for Peace, in body, in mind and in soul that we in India join with honest people throughout the world in welcoming the forthcoming Congress of the Peoples for World Peace in Vienna. May every success and glory attend your efforts."

"YOUNG MUST BE GIVEN HOPE"

author of children's books

M. Charles Vildrac is a well-known French writer. This author has written many books for children and young people, including "L'Ile Rose" which is widely known among educationists.

"I would like to lay stress on the repercussions which the Congress of the Peoples can have on the young people.

"You know that everything young people hear on the radio, everything they see in the Press, in their magazines, is nothing but armaments, experiments, weapons of destruction, fighter planes, atomic bombs, etc. That is the ideal and future being proposed to them.

"It is up to the educationists to propose something else to them and we well know that they will do so. We know that they are doing it every day. But it is necessary that the young people be informed of the vast and impressive undertaking of Peace which is developing and the importance of an event like the Congress of Vienna.

"The prospects for youth are dull and they are being made to believe in the fatality of war, in the terrible, in the infernal and constant development of machines of war, in scientific and total war.

"On the occasion of the Congress of the Peoples, as on every occasion, it is necessary to guide the minds of young people towards enlightenment, towards hope and towards the ideal of Peace within the framework of the great humane ideal. And it is up to the educationists to devote themselves to this task. We are sure that they will not fail."

BRITISH TRADE UNIONIST AND PEACE

The concern felt by British workers in face of the increasing dangers of war was one of the most striking facts of the Trade Union Congress which was held in Margate at the beginning of September.

This feeling was interpreted at Margate by the passing of two resolutions — one condemning bacterial warfare and the other calling for large-scale extension of East-West trading relations.

The first resolution, presented by the Association of Scientific Workers, was adopted by the majority of delegates in spite of opposition by the leadership of the T. U. C. The resolution condemns any use of bacterial weapons and demands that the British Government intervene in the United Nations in order that an international agreement outlawing the use of this weapon be signed.

As far as the problem of economic exchanges is concerned, a resolution submitted by the National Union of Mineworkers was unanimously adopted by delegates. Recommending an extension of trade with China, the Soviet Union and the Peoples' Democracies as a means of contributing to a way out of the growing economic difficulties of Great Britain, the resolution further declared that the extension of such relations would make an effective contribution to diminishing international tension which is causing anxiety among all the peoples.

Two other resolutions advocating negotiations between the Great Powers with a view to settling international differences and a reduction of armaments, received nearly two million votes.

EPISCOPAL ADDRESS OF THE BISHOPS OF THE METHODIST CHURCH TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF SAN FRANCISCO, 1952

"Nothing can be more disastrous than a fatalist acceptance of the inevitability of a third world war. It is the most threatening spectre haunting the life of our generation. To envisage it is like destroying all future hope of a more Christian world."

After the Peace Conference of Asia and the Pacific Regions

THE CONFERENCE AND THE CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLES

(Resolution)

The Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions in which the representatives of the peoples of 37 countries are taking part hereby solemnly declares:

We warmly support the call, issued by the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace held in Berlin, for a Congress of the Peoples for Peace in Vienna in December 1952.

This regional Peace Conference here in session is, in fact, an important step towards the Congress of the Peoples for Peace.

We call on all sections of the people and all political, social and religious organisations of the countries in the Asian and Pacific regions, to use their utmost efforts after the Conference to lay the groundwork for the forthcoming Congress of the Peoples for Peace.

Only two months remain before the date of the Congress. Let all delegates on their return take immediate action, side by side with the other supporters of Peace in their respective countries, to rally people of all walks of life, on the widest possible basis, to intensify the preparatory work for the Congress of the Peoples for Peace. We must bring home the paramount importance of the convocation of this Congress of the men and women in every country, in every corner, in every city and village of the regions we represent and urge them to send the most representative delegations possible to this Congress of the Peoples which is of vital significance in the struggle to defend Peace. Peking, October 10th 1952

Statement by Saifuddin KITCHLEW

Indian Congress Party Member of Parliament

The Vienna Congress is quite indispensible. This Congress will carry forward the work which has been done in Peking. The Peking Conference is not an isolated affair. It is part of the general movement of the peoples for Peace.

We must go to Vienna. Our place is in Vienna. I hope that constructive proposals for economic and cultural exchanges and for friendship between all peoples will emerge from the Congress of the Peoples.

PEKING

The Peking Conference is significant not only because of the unanimous agreement reached between the delegates of all the countries represented, to defend the national independence of each, and also to defend Peace; it is also significant by reason of the remarkable spirit of co-operation and friendship which was aroused there.

This spirit was demonstrated in a very graphic manner. Suddenly, at the close of a speech, lively, harmonious music would begin to play and down the centre of the Conference hall would march a delegation loaded with flowers and gifts.

They were representatives of the national minorities of China in their colourful costumes not the least strange of which, to Western eyes, were those of the inhabitants of Tibet who wore their traditional glittering robes and felt hats. The Buddhist monks clothed in their yellow robes, the Mohammedans, leaders of the Catholic Church and nuns, went to the tribune and presented a banner to the President of the Conference and turning to the hall joined in the applause, testifying to the peoples will for Peace. There were so many delegations that it is difficult to remember all. But unforgettable was the delegation of women workers from Peking whose liveliness and enthusiasm, testified to the fundamental transformation in the great Chinese people where women are emancipated and have an important role to play.

There was a dramatic moment when the whole American delegation, to the sound of the same, lively, harmonious music, mounted the tribune to embrace the Korean delegates.

The representatives of India and Pakistan solemnly marched together to the tribune and in front of President Kuo Mo-jo, they exchanged gifts and garlands of flowers and signed an agreement in which the two delegations undertook to make a common effort to bring about a peaceful solution in accordance with the desire of their two peoples, to the conflict over Kashmir which has for such a long time separated and caused bloodshed between them.

This was not only a symbolic ceremony but the beginning of action. When Dr Saifuddin Kitchlew, Congress Party Member of Parliament and leader of the Indian delegation at the Conference came down from the tribune, he said:

"This agreement must now be strengthened by a great publicity campaign. India will do this."

And now delegates from Pakistan have left for India while Dr Kitchlew himself has gone to Pakistan. And so something concrete has already evolved from the expression of good intentions. A demonstration of the will for Peace can become the beginning of constructive undertaking. On a world scale, if we desire it strongly enough, international tension can and must be lessened.

Letter from the General Secretary of the "Movement of French Universities under the Threat of a New World War"

The "Movement of French Universities under the Threat of a New World War" was set up two years ago by 150 university professors in Paris and in the provinces who were alarmed by the menace of a new conflagration. Since then, it has considerably increased its influence and set up international contacts with University professors in Great Britain, the USSR and Switzerland.

To M. Yves Farge

President of the Peace Movement

(letter dated October 7th 1952)

Dear Sir,

Thank you for your invitation to participate in the Congress of the Peoples in Vienna. So far, we have declined to participate actively in the various Congresses or Conferences of your organisation in order to preserve — in conformity with the opinions of our supporters — the "non-political" and independent character of our Movement. We have, therefore, only been able to send observers to such meetings.

From the reports and documents presented by M. Dumont who was our observer at the Berlin Session of the World Council on July 1st to 6th, it seems that the Vienna Congress will present a new character.

Desirous of seizing every opportunity of contributing to the building of Peace, we would like to be enlightened as to this new character, in order that we may decide whether it is possible for us to contemplate taking part in this Congress and to ask the same of other organisations in France and abroad with whom we are in contact and to whom we shall communicate your correspondence.

In such conditions, would you be so kind as to reply to the following questions:

1) Will this Congress be of a truly different character from preceeding Congresses or will it be a Congress of the "Peace Movement"?

2) Is it a meeting place for all men and all organisations working for Peace? Will the delegates be able to put forward their opinions and take part in the discussion, in the drawing up of the agenda and the resolutions in strict equality and in complete freedom, within the confines of courtesy and mutual understanding?

3) In view of the fact that you are organising local assemblies with a view to setting up a national delegation, what will be the position of the delegates elected by independent associations with regard to this delegation?

4) Will the meeting take place in the international zone or in the Soviet zone of Vienna? We attribute considerable symbolic value to the first hypothesis.

5) Should the answers to these questions be such as to allow us to attend this Congress, we would like to have the assurance that we shall be the sole judges of the form of our participation (preparation of our motions, choice and independence of our delegates) and that we shall be able on the platform to expound the feelings of our Movement and present resolutions which will conform to it.

Very sincerely yours,

Reply from M. Yves FARGE

(dated October 10th 1952)

Dear Sir,

Your letter of October 7th was given the most careful attention by our Bureau. We understand your concern to preserve the independence of your Movement and in replying to your questions, we are happy to be able to specify the character given to the Congress of the Peoples for Peace.

The Congress of the Peoples for Peace will not be a third Congress of our Movement. Our Appeal for this Congress is an offer for an international meeting to which the Peace Movement will bring its own solutions while accepting and welcoming the broadest exchange of viewpoints.

The Congress of the Peoples is quite open — as you desire — to all people and to all organisations working for Peace who will freely uphold their own points of view at this Congress. In these conditions, it goes without saying that your organisation will remain the sole judge of the form to be given to its participation, to the expression of its ideas and to its contribution in general.

From this it will appear clear that your delegates to the Congress of the Peoples should be direct representatives of your Movement; we can also, with regard to the point raised in your third question, examine with you how best the most effective representation can be assured to your satisfaction.

In answer to your fourth point, on which we also felt some concern, we would add that the date of the Congress of the Peoples for Peace has been postponed until December 12th. in order that the Congress could take place in the Concert Hall in Vienna, which is situated in the British sector.

We firmly believe that in the mutual respect of opinions, as in the mutual concern not to interfere in the internal affairs of States, we can aim at that objective which is common to us both — to make negotiated rather than dictated solutions prevail, to seek grounds which can assure the peaceful co-existence of systems and peoples, that is to say, the surest means of putting an end to the perilous international tension.

In this good will endeavour which should show us the way to arrive at solutions, we can contribute to dispelling distrust, that is to putting an end to the cold war which is contrary to and hinders negotiations.

Very sincerely yours.

PROFESSOR INFELD
(Polish Physicist)
speaks to American scientists

"We scientists have, like all other people, a great stake in preserving the Peace of the world. We scientists have, like all other people, a great stake in ending the cold war; but in working for the preservation of the Peace and for ending the cold war, we scientists have our additional, very important reasons.

"Working with a view to ending the cold war means returning to science its international character, its dignity, based on the collaboration of all scientists of all countries. We do know that by preserving Peace we avoid destruction, we avoid the use of terrible weapons that were created by using the discoveries of the scientists of the world.

"Therefore, it is specially important that the scientists who strive for Peace should come to the Congress of the Peoples and tell us how they envisage the fulfilment of our common aims. You know that our Peace movement is headed by one of the greatest living scientists — Professor Joliot-Curie. There are others, both in the World Council of Peace and in our Bureau. If you agree with us, do come to the Congress of the Peoples and join us in our work. If you don't agree with us, but agree with our ultimate aims, come to the Congress and tell us your views.

"The establishment of personal contact in an atmosphere of free discussion will serve the cause of Peace and it will serve science."

At the I. L. C. O. P. International Conference

A resolution unanimously adopted by an international conference held at Elfinsward, Haywards Heath, England, from August 26th-31st, 1952, under the auspices of the International Liaison Committee of Organisations for Peace, begins as follows:

"That this Conference of I. L. C. O. P. desires to assert its strong belief in the possibility of the peaceful co-existence of peoples living under different ideological, political or economic systems. It asserts that war is not inevitable, nor does war resolve the underlying causes of international conflict. As the choice is between living together or dying together, the Conference urges all Governments to substitute conciliation for cold war, to make and use every opportunity for negotiations, and to display the spirit necessary for their success."

The resolution went on to urge an immediate armistice in Korea, a peaceful solution of the German problem, a general agreement on disarmament, the cessation of all antagonistic propaganda, the recognition of the right of all peoples to that form of government which they believe to be best suited to their own circumstances, and co-operation by all nations in a war on want.

A message from Paul Robeson

"The American people are weary of wasteful wars. We can and must build — you and we together — a lasting Peace, East and West, with hands and hearts joined, working and building and singing together as we fashion man's unlimited future."

STUDENTS AND PEACE

"PAX ROMANA" writes to International Union of Students

Some time ago, letters were exchanged between the Secretariat of the International Union of Students and the Secretariat of "PAX ROMANA" (International Movement of Catholic Students) on the possibility of co-operation between the two world associations of students in the interests of easing the international tension. Because of the discussion which has arisen in broad circles by the forthcoming Congress of the Peoples, we are reproducing extracts from these letters.

In the letter from "PAX ROMANA" to the International Union of Students, signed by the General Secretary, M. Bernard Ducret, speaking of the peaceful co-existence of various economic and social systems, says:

"We are glad to see that you affirm the possibility of co-existence especially since a number of your statements, accepted as classics by you, appear to us to give the opposite impression.

"We insist, however, in making clear that such a proposition in no way signifies in our eyes, approval af all economic and social systems. But we wish to say that the present difference between these systems should not lead to war. This does not prevent us from expressing our desire that all systems safeguard the essential rights and the dignity of the human personality. Work towards this appears to us as one of the indispensible conditions of a real peace."

The letter then deals with the solution of the differences between nations by peaceful negotiation.

"It is also our dearest wish that henceforth peaceful negotiations should be used to settle the differences which might set the nations against each other. War is never a fitting way of resolving such conflicts..."

The letter from "PAX ROMANA" then goes on to compare the future ideal of an "organic community of the peoples" and the present situation.

"It seems to us that the present situation of the world is precisely such that a war setting the two existing political blocs fighting would have terrifying consequences, surpassing in horrors all the evil it might pretend to cure. This is why we affirm that a declaration of war, from whichever bloc it may come, would be today a crime against humanity. This is why we stigmatise all political action (aggression, fomentation of trouble and civil wars, refusal of negotiations, etc.) which tends by itself to aggravate the international situation. This is, finally, why we hail with joy all efforts, from whatever side they may come, which can be a step towards a real and honest understanding, towards a better comprehension among the peoples.

"Where there is a war already raging we deem it the implicit duty of the belligerents to seek to confine the conflict and to do their utmost to reach an amicable settlement as soon as possible...

"In other words, what we want is a just peace, that is to say a peace which safeguards the essential rights of the human being and ethnic minorities. That we are still far from it does not however, justify in our eyes, the resort to war..."

Thirdly, the letter deals with collaboration for Peace in which the resasons are give why "PAX ROMANA" did not sign the Stockholm Appeal.

"...Our activities are not on a political basis. This is why we cannot associate ourselves with your appeal for a pact between the Great Powers. We are speaking here, in fact, as a Movement, leaving each of our members free to decide for himself those political engagements which his conscience dictates..."

Extracts from the reply of the International Union of Students

M. Paolo Pescetti, assistant Secretary of the I. U. S. in his reply to "PAX ROMANA", wrote:

"As we already wrote to you in our previous letter, we are deeply convinced that Catholic students cherish peace and we are aware of the many actions in support of peace in which Catholic students are participating together with their colleagues of other beliefs. You undoubtedly realise that the very co-operation between students from different countries holding different religious and political beliefs is by itself an important contribution to the fostering of mutual understanding among peoples and thereby to the cause of peace. To renounce this co-operation would not only mean to confine oneself to dangerous self righteousness but in fact to work against the very principles of the necessity of peaceful co-existence and co-operation between different social systems..."

Dealing point by point with the letter from "PAX ROMANA", the assistant General Secretary of the I. U. S. writes:

"...On the basis of the principles raised in your letter on the co-existence of different economic and social systems, and of the settlement of international differences by negotiation, we believe it is possible for our organisations to co-operate on certain specific principles and actions..."

"It was not suggested that "PAX ROMANA" sign a particular document but simply that the Association of Catholic Students support the idea of such a meeting and the conclusion of a pact of peace..."

"The condemnation of bacterial and atomic warfare, in accordance with the resolution of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches in Toronto, in July, 1950.

"Because of its support for negotiations, 'PAX ROMANA' could give its support to the efforts to stop the wars in Korea and Viet Nam by negotiation.

"...This exchange of views", the letter concludes, "has strengthened our conviction that a meeting between the representatives of our two organisations would be useful...

"...We consider that, particulary in the field of activities for peace, differences of programme, nature and structure which exist between different international organisations should not be a reason for ruling out co-operation among them..."

Bacterial Warfare

BAN GERM WEAPONS!
Federation of American scientists

It may be remembered that the June issue of the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists published a statement by the Federation of American Scientists which said:

"A new and clearer statement as to the extent and the aims of the American programme of bacterial warfare is absolutely essential to combat the effects of the recent Soviet accusation that the United Nations forces in Korea have employed bacterial warfare. In our opinion, the scanty available evidence offered to support these accusations certainly do not succeed in proving it. Nevertheless we desire to state that the effects of the Soviet accusations do not entirely depend on their exactitude, and that a denial in this particular case does not entirely answer the accusation. The question raised in the minds of the whole world is not so much whether we have used bacterial warfare in Korea, but whether we are ready and disposed to use it in the future..."

"... Unfortunately, the memory of Hiroshima and Nagasaki has half prepared them to believe that we are ready for it. Therefore it is not enough to answer the Soviet accusation with a denial and by claiming that the evidence offered in Korea is not conclusive. We must answer the accusations in substance as well as in fact. A statement coming from the highest level — including the President, the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State, as well as the Committee of Chiefs of Staff — is obviously necessary. This statement must explicitly specify the intentions of the USA with regard to bacterial warfare. The policy expounded must be based on a complete evaluation by the civil authorities of the political and military consequences. We insist that this statement clearly specify that the Government of the United States is ready and desirous to conclude with other Governments an agreement officially repudiating any use of bacterial warfare."

The publication of the Report of the International Scientific Investigating Commission has helped to throw light on the facts of bacterial warfare.

The scientists who comprised this Commission have made known, in their respective countries the conclusions to which they arrived. In our last number we published a report of the Press Conference given by Professor Needham in London. Today we give news from Italy.

University of Bologna for Science and Peace

An outstanding proof of the devotion to duty of men of science in matters concerning truth and Peace has been shown recently by the Italian University of Bologna, which is the oldest university in the world.

It is the courageous witness of the eminent Italian scientist Professor OLIVO that has given rise to this demonstration.

Professor Oliviero Mario OLIVO, anatomy professor in the Faculty of Medicine at Bologna University, recently awarded the Italian Science Prize by the Lincei Academy, took part in the International Commission of Scientists in Korea for the investigation into bacterial warfare. On his return he held a public conference in a hall in Bologna before a qualified audience to whom he recounted the results of his investigation.

As a result of his exposure of the facts which was made in a scientific and humane manner, he was made the target of violent attacks in a Bologna daily newspaper.

A broad delegation of professors and students representing a variety of political views, recognising the scientific worthiness, the integrity and the moral standing of the eminent scientist, went to the President of the Faculty of Medicine to protest against the wanton attacks to which Professor Olivo had been subjected. Jealous of the honour of science and of the University of Bologna, the President of the Faculty and his colleagues of the Atheneum decided to issue an official invitation to Professor Olivo to make a report to the University itself for the doctors and the scientists of Bologna.

The members of the Academic Board and the most distinguished figures in Italian science took part. Among those present were Professor Chastoni, president of the Faculty of Pharmacy; Professor Bronsi of the Faculty of Medicine; Professor Tinozzi, director of the anti-tuberculosis dispensary; Professor Rosa, professor of Bacteriology; Professor Businco, lecturer in Pathological Anatomy; Professor Dina, professor of Anatomy; Professor Vecchi, professor of Zoology; Professor Arnaud; Professor Favilli, lecturer in General Pathology; Professor Scrocco, professor of Chemistry and Physics; Professor Poppi, professor of Medical Pathology; Professor Supino, of the Faculty of the Polytechnic; Professor Brunello of the Faculty of Philosophy; Professor Toni, lecturer in Histology; the school of Professor Valli, represented by assistant professors Galli, Brini, De Sabata, Rimondi, Vernonesi; Professor Manarini, president of the Faculty of Science in Bari; Professor Fortunati, lecturer in Statistics; Montaldo of the Faculty of Medicine; Doctor Balboni; Professor Rondinini of the Institute of Histology; Professor Aloisi of Modena University; Professor Bottiglioni of the Institute of Physiotherapy; Professor Longhena of the Institute of Clinical Ophthalmology, and many other eminent people in the cultural circles of Emilia.

This distinguished audience warmly applauded Professor Olivo at the close of the conference and on behalf of Italian Science condemned the abuse of freedom, human dignity and Science.

CONGRESS NEWS BRIEFS

UNITED STATES
American Peace Crusade

In one hour in Manhattan: 411 out of 414 persons say "YES" to immediate ceasefire in Korea

Thousands of workers in the clothing and furrier district in the centre of Manhattan heard the appeal asking them to vote for an immediate cease-fire in Korea.

From midday until 1. p. m., out of 414 persons questioned, 411 answered "yes" and three "no". 5,000 leaflets were distributed. Loud-speakers on lorries talked about peace to the workers going for lunch.

During the lunch hour, 702 voting bulletins with the word "yes" were collected.

INDIA
An Indian Physicist Protests Against Atomic Weapons

An eminent Indian Physicist, Professor M. M. SAHA, Director of the Institute of Nuclear Physics in Calcutta, has stated that scientists of repute should refuse to obey the "diabolical orders" of leading authorities. The Professor believes that a new method of exploding the atom bomb has just been used. If such a weapon has been developed, he said, it is terrible.

He also expressed the opinion that with a weapon of this sort atomic warfare could be carried from distant bases by pressing a button and in this case nothing could save large towns from complete destruction.

SPAIN
462,343 signatures for a Peace Pact

Spanish Peace workers living abroad, particulary those in the American Continent and Western Europe, have collected 462,343 signatures for the Appeal of the World Council of Peace for the conclusion of a Peace Pact between the Five Great Powers.

IRAN
"Peace Fortnight"

In Iran a "Peace Fortnight" is being organised between October 20th and December 5th.

During these two weeks it is proposed to intensify by every possible means the great campaign in support of the Congress of the Peoples in Vienna.

ITALY
A message to journalists throughout the world

"At the Fourth National Congress of the Italian Press in Merano, the representatives of 8,072 journalists who constitute the great united family of Italian journalism, send a warm and fraternal message to journalists in every country in the world, convinced that today as in the future, they will be the guides of public opinion showing humanity the way to closer understanding among the peoples, for agreement, peaceful co-existence and peace among the men who people the earth."

The Peace Ribbon of the Women of Genoa

The delegates from Genoa will arrive in Vienna with thousands of coloured flags.

The Italian delegates will be very proud to present these symbols to the men and women who have come from all parts of the world to help in the task of building a lasting Peace. These brightly coloured flags will represent the support of thousands of Genoese families, for the women folk are collecting ribbons from house to house.

The housewife, the woman factory worker, the teacher or shop-assistant, while helping to make these flags by giving pieces of ribbon and sewing them together, know that they are also giving their support to the Congress of the Peoples.

At the Levant Fair in Bari

At the Levant Fair in Bari the local Peace Committee held discussions with the various trade representatives present on the possibilities of developing international commercial exchanges.

Dr. Hassam Sciffedin wished the Fair every success and expressed his hope that international tension be reduced by a meeting of the Four Great Powers. This would also be in the interests of the small states.

The Lebanase delegation stated that it was in full agreement with the proposal that an annual meeting of the exhibitors at the Levant Fair be held for a "frank and peaceful discussion" of the best ways of safeguarding peace and developing international trade relations.

NICARAGUA
A Peace Workers' Committee is set up in Nicaragua

In Guatemala, Central America, a Nicaraguan Peace Workers Committee has been set up. It has its headquarters in Guatemala and affiliated groups all over America wherever Nicaraguans are living.

This Committee condemns the intervention by one nation in the internal affairs of another. It will be a free association of individuals of all beliefs and opinions, the sole condition of membership being that they wish to work for the maintenance of Peace.

CEYLON
Statement of Buddhist Monk

"All men of religion must serve the cause of Peace,' says the Reverend U. SARANANKARA, Buddhist monk from Ceylon.

In a letter to the World Council of Peace a Buddhist monk from Ceylon, the Reverend U. Saranankara expressed his profound wish to make his contribution to the maintenance of Peace.

"I consider that as a Buddhist monk it is my duty to work for World Peace. I believe that the danger of war is so serious for the whole world that all men of religion must serve the cause of Peace", he wrote.

In conclusion he said: "We can save the world from another world war. We who work for Peace must have a single determination. In the name of my country and in my own name I assure you that we shall do our very best to contribute to the success of the Vienna Congress."

COLOMBIA
The Colombian delegation to the Peking Conference

Dr. Diego Montana-Cuellar, ex-member of Paliament of Colombia, former Mayor of Bogota, former member of the national leadership of the Liberal Party, lawyer, Professor of Constitutional Law at the Free University of Bogota.

Jorge Zalamea Borda, former member of the national leadership of the Liberal Party, former Colombian Ambassador to Italy and Mexico, writer and well known scholar, greatly respected in American literary circles.

Jorge Bayona, trade union leader.

Alipio Jaramillo, artist, winner of various national exhibitions and one of the most eminent national painters.

Ventura Puentes Vanegas, trade union leader, former member of the Executive Committee of the Federation of Colombian Workers.

Victor M. Bautista, peasant leader.

José Domingo Velez, lawyer.

Nicolàs Buenaventura, engineer, businessman.

Rosalia Cruz de Buenaventura, former Director of the Conservatoire of Music of Cali, pianist.

Elias Botera Isaza, industrialist from Bucaramanga.

Mathilde Espinosa de Perez, writer.

Luis Vidales, writer and poet.

Manuel Zapata Olivera, doctor, coloured writer, exponent of folklore.

Humberto Grandos, biologist, scientist.

Jorge Gaitan Duran, young poet, art critic, contributor to several important American publications.

Guillermo Hurtado, law student.

ARGENTINA
Musicians for Peace

In the Argentine a group of Musicians for Peace has just been set up. Composers who are members of this organisation are studying ways of arranging an album of Peace songs and compositions with a view to sending them to the Congress of the peoples as a tribute from peace-loving musicians of the Argentine.

CANADA
Poster Competition

In Toronto, Canada, a competition of posters on the subject of Peace has been launched.

Many artists are preparing their entries. The poster which wins first prize will be shown at the Congress of the Peoples in Vienna.

An exhibition of all the posters entered in the competition will be opened in the middle of November. The Canadian artists hope to receive from all parts of the world posters which have been produced for the Congress of the Peoples.

GREECE

In the three villages of Vassilopoulo, Machaira, and Karaiskaki in the district of Xeromeros (Aitoloacarnanie), 150 inhabitants signed the following message which was published in the Athens newspaper "Avigi" on October 12th:

"We, the inhabitants of the villages of Vassilopoulo, Machaira and Karaiskaki in the district of Xeromeros, who have seen with our own eyes the horrors and devastation of war in our own country, raising our eyes above the blood which has been shed and the wooden crosses, above the ruins of our devastated houses see a star arise and the sound of the beating of the wings of a dove, bright and joyful, reaches our ears. It is Peace...

"...We send heartfelt greetings to the World Council of Peace which has convoked the Congress of the Peoples for Peace in Vienna and we issue a strong appeal to all and particularly to the Five Great Powers so that they may find peaceful means of solving their differences by negotiation, so that the use of atomic weapons may be prohibited, so that an end may be put to the dangerous progress down the slippery slope of re-armament..."

Things can't go on like this!

Things can't go on like this!

Leaning on his stick, he is thinking of the difficulties besetting him, of the fact that he is unable to sell his produce. Feeding stuffs are too dear. Taxes are too heavy.

These are the hard consequences of the preparations for a new conflict. This French peasant understands; he also knows the price of the blood spilt in the last two world wars and now in Korea, in Viet Nam...

And yet, men are cold - bloodedly thinking of starting a new slaughter. No! Things can't go on like this!

An elderly woman with her elbow resting on her knee, looks far away at the horizon.

Near her, the open face of a child, probably her grand-child, also in a pensive mood.

Yesterday, bombs killed the mother of this child; his father did not return from the camp where he had been deported.

No, it is not possible that it be his turn tomorrow.

We must stop the killing, we must prevent the arms drive.

We must ease the anguish of mothers. We must put an end to it!

These themes are illustrated in two posters published by the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace which will soon be attracting the attention of the man in the street who wants an end to this situation.

M. JOLIOT - CURIE'S

LETTER TO

Mr. WARREN AUSTIN

Mr. Warren R. Austin

2, Park Avenue

New York (N.Y.), USA

Paris, May 3rd, 1952

Dear Sir,

I received your letter of April 3rd, 1952, after having been made acquainted with its contents through the Press and in the daily bulletin of the American Information Services. I waited until I had the original complete text before replying to you.

I did not launch the Appeal, to which you replied, without having given the matter the most careful thought. Those who are not aware of the intensive efforts which have been made in your country for more than ten years to develop bacteriological weapons; those who do not know of the close co-operation between your specialists and Japanese experts in bacteriological warfare; those who may have forgotten Hiroshima and Nagasaki; those who do not know of the means of extermination such as the napalm bomb used by the American Armed Forces in Korea; such people may consider it unthinkable that men could have recourse to this new perversion of science—bacteriological warfare.

But you yourself, Mr. Austin, are perfectly well aware of all these facts and you are not unacquainted with statements made by responsible politicians and by your Press in which repeated threats have been made to use the most terrible and fantastic weapons which are even capable of obliterating all life on our planet. The use of the bacteriological weapon in Korea and in China is a first step to the implementation of these threats.

The President of the Academy of Sciences of Peking, my colleague Mr. Kuo Mo-Jo, and Chinese scientists (many of whom have completed their higher studies in the United States, Great Britain and France), who communicated to me the reports of statements and analyses effected in Korea and in China, are scientists for whom I hold the greatest esteem and whose professional capacity and moral integrity cannot be doubted.

The facts which they were in a position to ascertain and which they reported to me, show that bacteriological warfare is now being carried out.

After categorically denying the employment of the bacteriological weapon, your Government proposed that the International Red Cross Committee be entrusted with the task of making an investigation.(1)

You are well aware, and your Government is certainly not ignorant of the fact, that this Committee is not especially empowered by its statutes to undertake such investigations. It was presumably for this reason that the Committee did not consider it to be its duty during the last war to denounce the Nazi concentration camps and the systematic extermination which obtained therein, of which the International Red Cross was fully cognizant.

(1) Resolution 5 adopted at the 12th International Conference of the Red Cross at Geneva, the text of which is reproduced below, does not entitle this organisation to carry out investigations into acts of a criminal character:

"In the event of the Geneva Protocol of the 17th June, 1925, being violated, it must become the duty of the Red Cross, even in peace-time, to seek together with the civil and military authorities, the means of protecting and taking care of its personnel, the belligerent armies and, above all, the civil population, from the effects of chemical warfare.

"It is the duty of the International Committee to keep itself informed as to the fulfilment of this programme and to keep in communication with the National Societies on this matter.

"As a general rule, the moral and propaganda fight against the use of poisons as a form of weapon, and against bacteriological warfare as well as the scientific and technical preparation of the best preventatives and therapeutics against such methods of warfare, should be one of the first obligations of the International Red Cross and of the National Societies of the Red Cross."

Even before there was any question of bacteriological warfare, the Koreans and the Chinese for their own reasons—of which they are the sole judges—refused to allow the International Red Cross Committee to enter their territory.

It would, therefore, appear that the Government of the United States proposed the International Red Cross Committee knowing that this offer would not be accepted by the Koreans and the Chinese.

On the other hand, the Government of the People's Republic of China has proposed the setting up of an international commission, whose competence and impartiality should be beyond question and who would be able to gather facts and evidence. This commission, composed of eminent scientific, legal and religious personalities will soon be constituted. It will go to the spot and proceed with its investigations. Without knowing who these persons are, you have thought fit to disparage them. Such arguments are no doubt meant to discourage the fainthearted. They can never prevent honest and courageous people from making the truth prevail.

I had already read the article in the "New York Times", a copy of which you sent me.

The experts consulted by the "New York Times", criticised certain photographs published in a Peking newspaper. For basing their arguments on documents reproduced in newspapers, these critics could themselves, be the object of criticism by experts no less competent.

Furthermore, before drawing conclusions from their criticisms, the experts should not forget that for ten years under a "mantle of secrecy surpassing that surrounding the atomic bomb" (2), many eminent scientists, provided with considerable funds, have certainly achieved new scientific results.

You are, yourself, perfectly well aware of the considerable efforts being undertaken in your country on behalf of bacteriological warfare—to which the reports by G. W. Merck, the article by Theodor Rosebury and A. Kabat, the book "Peace or Pestilence" by Theodor Rosebury and many statements by responsible persons in the United States all bear witness.

Besides, you must surely remember the report of the American Alsos mission, in which the physicist, S. Goudsmit, mentioned that the famous German expert on nuclear physics, Heisenberg, refused to believe in the atomic bomb the very day after Hiroshima.

In the same article of the "New York Times" which you sent me, a "Pentagon spokesman" purports to expose the falsity of the Chinese accusations by asserting that the bacteriological bombs were only containers for spreading leaflets and that "the leaflet bombs even theoretically were not adaptable to germ warfare" ([3]).

But, according to the "New York Herald Tribune" of April 6th ([4]):

> "After hearing secret testimony in this military field, Rep. Robert L. F. Sykes, D. Fla., chairman of the House Appropriations Sub-committee ... said: retaliatory bacteria warfare 'does not involve some complicated super-weapon'. The means of delivering germs to enemy territory, he said, are simple and involve equipment of the type with which the services are now 'already well stocked ... such as the containers used currently for dropping propaganda leaflets'."

It would be easy for me to speak ironically about the declaration of this same spokesman to the effect that a glass tube containing germs and transported by aircraft would break as a result of the pressure!

All this, Mr. Austin, is not enough to assuage the horror of those who are wondering if they have not been made the accomplices in some enormous crime, nor the anxiety of the American citizens and the citizens of the countries allied to the United States, who are beginning to question this "crusading" war into which your country would like to drag them: this crusade against which your British colleague, Sir Gladwyn Jebb, protested some days ago.

Before I conclude, I would like to say that I was struck by the deliberately insulting tone of your letter. You accuse me of prostituting science because I protest against the criminal use of the discoveries of the great Pasteur and because I make an appeal to the public to prevent the waging of bacteriological warfare.

To my mind, those who prostitute science are those who inaugurated the atomic era by annihilating 200,000 civilians in Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

You are well aware that American scientists, on completion of their scientific and technical work, pleaded in vain that those responsible for American policy should not use the only two atomic bombs available. Yet these bombs were dropped before Japan had replied to the Potsdam ultimatum, and the objectives were chosen (as the United States Strategical Bombing Survey indicates), by reason of their being centres of activity with concentrated populations.

Hiroshima wrecked, 100,000 civilians killed—this was not enough: a few days later the same thing was inflicted on Nagasaki!

Re-read, Mr. Austin, the report of the James Franck Committee addressed to the Secretary of State for War, on June 11, 1945, that is, before Hiroshima ([5]):

"If the United States is the first to use this new means of blind destruction against mankind, we will lose the support of world public opinion, precipitate the arms' race and compromise the possibility of reaching international agreement on the future control of such weapons."

And since then, you have refused to agree to the outlawing of atomic weapons.

Concerning bacteriological weapons, there exists an international agreement—the Geneva Protocol of June 17, 1925. But of all the Great Powers, only two have not ratified it—Japan and the United States.

As far as your country is concerned, on April 8, 1946, President Truman, with the results of secret research in the United States in his possession, withdrew the ratification of this treaty from the Congress Agenda.

When the question of bacteriological warfare was raised at the United Nations, were you not embarrassed, Mr. Austin, to be the representative of the only country which has reserved the legal right to utilise such weapons?

Just because the Koreans and the Chinese have chosen a different system from that which prevails in your country and because their skin is not white, this does not make it lawful to attempt to exterminate them en masse by napalm or bacteria.

In 1903, at Stockholm, Pierre Curie spoke of "the terrible means of destruction in the hands of great criminals who would drag the peoples into war".

I have often thought of this warning given by one who, along with Becquerel and Marie Curie, gave radioactivity to the world. It is because I know all that science can bring to the world, that I shall continue in my efforts to make it serve the well-being of men, be they white, black or yellow, and not their annihilation in the name of I-know-not-what divine mission.

Yours faithfully,

Frédéric JOLIOT-CURIE

STATEMENT OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE ON THE PREPARATION OF THE CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLES FOR PEACE

TO BE HELD IN VIENNA,

DECEMBER 12th, 1952

The Appeal for a Congress of the Peoples, issued by the World Council of Peace, is arousing great interest in all countries, and is already evoking a considerable response.

The resort to a policy of force in international relations has resulted in tension, the effects and dangers of which are daily more obvious. Faced with this situation, social groups of the most varied kinds, in particular political, trade union, religious and pacifist, agree that a way must be found to break the deadlock.

> How can the wars now going on be stopped?
> How can the cold war be brought to an end?
> How can the independence of nations be safeguarded and the security of every country be guaranteed?

The answers to these questions can only be found through genuine discussion among forces truly representative of the peoples' desire for Peace.

The Congress of the Peoples called by the World Council of Peace will be an international assembly bringing together men and women of different countries and devoted to different ways of life.

The participation of delegates, guests and observers will not imply their adherence to the Peace Movement.

The Congress of the Peoples will try to find, in free and effective discussion, reasonable solutions to the questions today dividing the world.

Agreement reached, even on a single point, will make easier understanding on further points and contribute to a lessening of international tension.

The peoples will find the road to Peace together.

Adopted unanimously.

A Call for the Convocation of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions

In the present international situation, the safeguarding of the peace of the Asian and Pacific regions has become an important factor in safeguarding the peace of the world.

The resurgence of Japanese militarism has been accelerated by the signing of both the San Francisco unilateral peace treaty with Japan and the recent US-Japanese "Administrative Agreement". The armistice negotiations in Korea have been protracted and stalled and recently, even inhuman bacteriological warfare has been resorted to. The expansionists who attempt to dominate the world have established military bases at many places in Asia in preparation for unleashing another aggressive war on a larger scale. On account of all this, the security and peace of the nations in the Asian and Pacific regions have been seriously threatened and the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions are confronted with the danger of another armed aggression.

But, on the other hand, the broad masses of the Asian and Pacific regions are eagerly demanding and longing for peace. Just like the peoples of other nations of the world, they feel the greatest anxiety about the worsened international situation and the menace of war. The peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions have not quite recovered from the wounds inflicted by the distress which Japanese imperialism brought them during World War II and the painful experiences are still fresh in their memory. Except for a handful of aggressors, there are no peace-loving people who wish for war, and there are no good, honest people who do not long for peace. This constitutes an important factor which makes it possible for the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions to eliminate the threat of war and to safeguard peace. This also makes us believe that another world war is avoidable.

It must be pointed out that peace cannot be awaited, and that peace has to be won by the peace-loving peoples in unity. The peace in the Asian and Pacific regions can be ensured if the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions are mobilized to strive for peace. The solemn task that lies before us is that we must in close unity oppose the rearming of Japan by the United States in order to safeguard the security of the Asian and Pacific regions; that we must oppose the intervention of any nation in the internal affairs of another nation in order to safeguard the independence and integrity of sovereignty of nations as well as to ensure the peaceful co-existence of nations with different systems; and that we must insist upon the peaceful settlement of the existing conflicts in order to restore and develop the normal trade relations and the interflow of culture among nations.

In view of the situation as stated above, we, the undersigned, consider it a matter of urgency and great significance to convoke a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions at a suitable time in the immediate future, in order to have a comprehensive exchange of opinions on the problems of safeguarding the interests of peace and to seek for appropriate measures for their solution.

Already in 1951, this proposal was put forward by persons in Asian countries and in other countries of the world, who strive for the cause of peace. In the course of its discussion and examination, this proposal has been enthusiastically endorsed by the broad peace-loving masses of the Asian and Pacific regions, and they have been unanimously in favor of immediately taking steps to carry it out. The leaders for the cause of peace in India have suggested that this conference should be held in Peking. The Chinese people enthusiastically welcome the idea of convoking in Peking this conference to safeguard peace, and consider it their bounden duty to issue immediately a call for this conference, jointly with the peoples of all nations who love peace and stand for justice.

On the preparation for and the convocation of this conference, we take the liberty of putting forward the following proposals for consideration.

1. The delegates to the conference should come mainly from the nations in the Asian and Pacific regions, representing circles as wide as possible and irrespective of race, social stratum, religious belief and different political views; all the people who are in favor of peace and oppose war should be welcomed (including scientists, educators, men of letters, scholars, professors, art workers, journalists, trade-union leaders, leaders of peasant movements, youths, students, women leaders, workers of the peace movement and other peace-loving persons).

2. The nations in the Asian and Pacific regions should appoint persons of their respective nations, who have made contributions to the cause of peace, and who are distinguished and are really peace-loving, to participate in the joint sponsoring of this conference. The following eleven persons have been nominated as sponsors on behalf of the People's Republic of China: Soong Ching-ling, Kuo Mo-jo, Peng Chen, Chen Shu-tung, Li Szu-kuang, Ma Yin-chu, Chang Hsi-jo, Liu Ning-I, Tsai Chang, Mao Tun and Liao Cheng-chih. It is hoped that your country will take part in the joint sponsoring of this conference, and that the list of the sponsors from your country will be sent to us by wire before the tenth of April.

3. The nations in the Asian and Pacific regions should at once set up preparation committees in their respective nations in order to proceed with the preparations for participation in the conference and to propagandize extensively the momentous significance of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions so as to promote a better understanding of it among the broad masses. The preparation committee for the participation of the People's Republic of China in the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions has already been formed, with Liu Ning-I, Liao Cheng-chih and Liu Kuan-I in charge. It is requested that constant contacts be maintained with them.

4. A preparatory conference should be convoked in Peking at a suitable time. It is hoped that your country will appoint delegates to this conference, and that the list of your delegates will be sent to Liu Ning-I before the tenth of April.

We are eagerly waiting for you to give us your views on and response to our call and proposals at your earliest convenience.

Opening Speech Delivered by Kuo Mo-jo At the Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian And Pacific Regions

June 3, 1952

Honourable Delegates, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Today, the Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions convenes in Peking. As one of the sponsors of the Peace Conference and on behalf of the Chinese people, I rejoice over this occasion and extend to you greetings and a hearty welcome, as well as express our profound respect for the peace-loving peoples that the delegates here represent.

It is not only the common demand of the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions but also the common desire of all the peace-loving peoples of the world, that a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions be convoked. Last October, the All-India Peace Council suggested that China be entrusted with the task of organizing such a Conference in Peking. We accepted the suggestion and, therefore, sponsored this Preparatory Conference in order to proceed with the preparatory work. The enthusiastic support of the countries in the Asian and Pacific regions has made it possible for this Preparatory Conference to be solemnly convened today. For this, we are deeply grateful.

The purpose and guiding principles of the coming Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions have been stated very clearly in the call issued by the eleven Chinese sponsors, and have been concurred with by the peoples of all the countries concerned. I am confident that valuable suggestions will be made in accordance with the basic spirit of the call.

This Preparatory Conference is a working conference. There are delegates from 19 countries in Asia, Australasia, and North and South America. We have gathered together in this hall to discuss the preparatory steps to be taken for the holding of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions. I believe, all of you must have felt as profoundly as I do, that the work we are now beginning will surely lay a sound foundation for the coming Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions.

I have noticed that all the delegates have full confidence in the work they are doing. This is fully understandable, because our work is in accordance with the desires of the people of every country.

Peoples of all countries have reached a common conclusion through their own experience: They want peace. It is this desire of their countrymen that the delegates have brought to this Conference.

Although the delegates have come from different countries and are of different political views and religious beliefs, our Conference will prove that we have a common language for mutual understanding, because the people we represent all fervently love peace.

The peoples we represent are against interference in the internal affairs of other countries, and will not allow the internal affairs of their own countries be interfered with. We are against aggression and will never commit acts of aggression against others. We ask for mutual respect of independence and freedom, and firmly believe that countries with different political systems can co-exist peacefully. We ask that peoples of all countries be not made to suffer again from the threat of war, but be free to proceed with cultural exchange and to develop normal economic relations under peaceful conditions.

Friends! We firmly believe that there is no force that can obstruct the mutual understanding among the nations of the Asian and Pacific regions, and that there is no force that can ignore the common will of more than one thousand and six hundred million people. Since our work is built on such a common will, there is no doubt that with the efforts of all the delegates here this Conference will pave the way for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions. Our Conference will certainly be able to fulfil this task satisfactorily.

Friends! We, the Chinese people, consider it a great honour that friends whole-heartedly devoted to the cause of peace have come from so many countries to Peking and have gathered here in this hall to discuss such an important subject as the enhancement of the cause of peace.

I would like to assure you that the Chinese people whole-heartedly support the Conference. We shall do our utmost to assist in anything that is in the interests of the cause of peace.

It is our earnest desire to strive determinedly and incessantly for the cause of peace in the Asian and Pacific regions hand-in-hand with the peoples of the countries of these areas.

We earnestly hope for the mutual exchange of cultural achievements, and the development of economic relations through friendship based on mutual respect and mutual assistance, in order to contribute strongly towards the defence of world peace and the progress of civilization.

War can be prevented as long as people of good-will strengthen their solidarity and make unceasing efforts.

Let us show the dignity of reason and the greatness of the strength of the people!

Let us see to it that justice and truth lead to peace and triumph over War!

I wish the Conference success, and good health to you all.

Report by Chen Shu-tung on the Initial Sponsorship of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions and Subsequent Developments

June 3, 1952

Mr. Chairman, Honourable Delegates and Honourable Guests:

I feel greatly honoured to be entrusted by the Presidium with the task of reporting to you on the initial sponsorship of the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions and on subsequent developments.

The broad masses in the countries of the Asian and Pacific regions have long shared a common desire to see delegates from every country in the Pacific area, in Asia, Australasia and North and South America meet together and consult on the all-important question of preparing for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions. This is also a question about which people all over the world are very much concerned.

This eager desire and demand are fully understandable, because the defence of peace by the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions in solidarity is an urgent and important problem which involves the interests of every individual who has suffered from war.

To this end, many peace-loving people of the various countries in the Asian and Pacific regions have, on different occasions, voiced lofty hopes entertained by the broad masses in their respective countries. They have unanimously proposed the convening of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions in order to have a comprehensive exchange of opinion on the problems connected with the safeguarding of peace and to seek effective measures for cooperation. On the basis of the demand for peace by peoples all over the world, the World Council of Peace also suggested to the peace-loving peoples in the Asian and the Pacific regions that a regional peace conference be convened at the earliest opportunity, in order to eliminate the threat of war. Leaders of the peace movement in India further suggested that the conference be convened in Peking. Thus it came about that in March this year, in compliance with the earnest proposals from various quarters, eleven leading Chinese, devoted to the cause of peace, headed by Soong Ching-ling and Kuo Mo-jo, and representing the will of the Chinese people, jointly invited all lovers of peace and justice in the countries of the Asian and Pacific regions to jointly sponsor the regional peace conference.

The call to such a peace conference immediately elicited enthusiastic answers from the broad peace-loving masses of many countries. People who have made contributions to the cause of peace, well-known celebrities, and lovers of peace and justice in various countries have been named by their countrymen as joint sponsors. National preparatory committees have been organised and preparatory work for actual participation in the Conference has begun. To speed up the convocation of the Conference, the various countries have agreed first to convene this Preparatory Conference in Peking.

Honourable delegates and friends, I wish particularly to mention something which should hearten us. Among the illustrious sponsors and delegates of the various countries to this Preparatory Conference, there are people from all social strata and various professions, including representatives and leaders of various social organisations, experts, scholars, professors, authors, journalists, lawyers, members of parliaments, religious leaders and devout believers. While it is true that friends of peace hail from different parts of the Pacific area, the will and demand to safeguard peace, to which we give expression, remain one and the same. As Mr. Kuo Mo-jo said this morning in his message of greetings: "Although the delegates have come from different countries, and are of different political views and religious beliefs, our Conference will prove that we have a common language for mutual understanding, because the people we represent all fervently love peace."

So far, according to telegrams received, 12 countries have already nominated sponsors and the number of joint sponsors totals 96. Forty-five delegates from 19 countries have already arrived in Peking to take part in this Preparatory Conference. Delegates from other countries are on the way here. We are also very much honoured by the presence of two secretaries of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace and two members of the Asian and Australasian Liaison Bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions. A separate bulletin on the details of these facts will be issued for your reference.

Honourable delegates and friends, this by no means exhausts the things that hearten us. Upon receiving the call to the Conference, besides immediately nominating sponsors, organising preparatory committees and sending delegates to participate in the Preparatory Conference, various countries in the Asian and Pacific regions have demonstrated their enthusiastic support for a regional peace conference in various forms and on different occasions. The momentous significance of the Conference has been made the subject of timely and extensive publicity among people of all strata. Peace organisations and social groups in many countries have held meetings specifically to discuss problems connected with the regional peace conference and have adopted many important resolutions. Some of these organizations have issued declarations expressing the exultation with which they greet the convocation of such a peace conference; some have issued calls and decided on specific slogans to mobilise the people throughout their country to actively participate in this movement; still others have tremendous expectations with regard to the coming regional peace conference and have submitted a number of sincere, well-meant suggestions. Friends, this is the actual situation which has followed the sponsorship of the Peace Conference.

We congratulate ourselves upon the fact that this Conference is so well-attended. What makes it all the more memorable is the signal success with which some of our friends have overcome man-made obstacles to attend. The fact that you, my friends, have shouldered the arduous mission for the cause of peace reflects the unwavering will of more than one thousand and six hundred million people of the Asian and Pacific regions to strive for peace. The contacts and the conversations we have already had with each other have revealed the sincerity and candour prevailing among us, and given full evidence of the spirit of friendship and solidarity that exists among the peoples of the various countries in the Asian and Pacific regions. We are deeply convinced that with the support of the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions and the rest of the world, and with the unceasing efforts of all the delegates, this Preparatory Conference will successfully fulfil its task and the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions will be triumphantly convened.

Victory to Peace!

Good health to you all!

亞洲及太平洋區域
和平會議籌備會議宣言

ВОЗЗВАНИЕ

Подготовительного совещания по созыву Конференции сторонников мира стран Азии и Тихого океана of the Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions

DECLARATION

亞洲及太平洋區域
和平會議籌備會議宣言

我們，出席這次一九五二年六月三日至六日在北京舉行的亞洲及太平洋區域和平會議籌備會議的，來自亞洲、澳洲、南美洲、北美洲二十個國家的四十七位代表，向亞洲及太平洋區域的人民提出一個迫切的呼籲，那就是，亞洲及太平洋區域各國人民團結起來，加強和擴大保衛和平的運動。

我們來自不同的國家，說着不同的語言。我們雖然抱着各種不同的政治見解和宗教信仰，然而我們却代表亞洲及太平洋區域各國人民爭取和平的共同意志。我們深切知道人民要求和平而厭恨戰爭；人民反對侵略亦決不侵略別人；人民要求貿易來往而反對禁運和封鎖；人民願意互相瞭解、互相友好而不願意遭受阻礙和隔絕；人民需要豐衣足食的生活而痛恨原子彈、細菌彈和化學武器。

然而在今天，我們亞洲及太平洋區域各國十六億人民的善良願望，却正在遭受着戰爭和備戰的魔影的威脅。

一切愛好和平的人民長久以來就迫切地要求在公平合理的基礎上在朝鮮停戰，以便結束朝鮮人民所遭受到的慘重災難，並為和平解決遠東問題開闢道路。現在這個停戰正在被延遲中。與此同時，極殘酷的濫施屠殺的武器之被使用，使戰爭反而有擴大的危險。此外，在亞洲其他地方，譬如在越南和馬來亞，現有的軍事衝突也正在使人民的生命財產受到重大損失，並危害及其他地域的和平。

在日本強施單獨對日和約及軍事協定，違反了現有國際協定，違反了日本人民想通過真正對日和約來獲得完全獨立及和平生活的願望。這樣就給日本人民帶來新的苦難。在第二次世界大戰中，侵略性的日本軍國主義，曾使亞洲及太平洋區域的各國人民遭受重大災害。現在這些人民又感受到日本軍國主義復活的威脅。由於有外國軍隊駐在日本領土，日本人民也有被捲入新戰爭中的危險。

在整個亞洲及太平洋區域，許多國家的主權與領土完整受到侵略性的協定的危害。這些協定使人民背負了軍備的重擔，使他們的國境內駐紮着外國軍隊，並剝奪了人民所需要用於自己福利及經濟發展的資源。廣泛的備戰和越南、馬來亞等地現有的軍事衝突使民族解放運動和保衛民族獨立運動受到日甚一日的鎮壓，而這種運動，由於其旨在結束民族壓迫和民族奴役，對於為各國和平

共存創造基礎，是有極大貢獻的。在戰略的藉口下，國家相互間自由的經濟和文化交流，日益受到阻撓，而這種交流對於人民的興旺與人民間的相互瞭解是非常必要的。

亞洲及太平洋區域各國人民為了和平而採取一致行動，就能夠改變這種情勢，就能夠結束亞洲一切現存的和潛伏的衝突，並打退戰爭的威脅。如果他們能夠把要求和平的共同意志，變成保衛和平的團結一致的力量，就能夠贏得和平的條件，以保證完全的民族獨立，終止他們現在所正遭受着的由擴軍備戰所帶來的災難；就能夠在各民族平等及各民族有權處理自己的事務而不受外來干涉的基礎上，保證不同政治經濟制度的國家和平共存；就能夠使要求和平解決國際分歧和達成大國協議的聯合國憲章的原則與精神得以實現；就能夠通過國際裁軍和禁止原子武器、細菌武器、化學武器及其他大規模屠殺的武器等方法，來停止浪費財富的擴軍競賽；就能夠摧毀一切阻撓世界貿易及人民間文化交流的障礙。

和平不能坐待，和平需要愛好和平的人民團結起來爭取。

與世界其他地區抱有同樣願望的愛好和平的人民結合在一起，亞洲及太平洋區域的人民是能夠使和平戰勝戰爭的。

為了達到這個偉大的目的，我們號召亞洲及太平洋區域各國的所有愛好和平的人士和社團，不分政治見解、宗教信仰、民族差別和職業種類，都在各國業已組成和行將組成的籌備委員會的推動之下，更廣泛地團結起來，展開關於上述這些問題的討論，並選出代表來，以便在短期內在北京舉行亞洲及太平洋區域和平會議，來協商並求得鞏固本區域的和平與安全的有效方案。

我們要求亞洲及太平洋區域以外的各國愛好和平的人民和社團，給予我們以熱烈的支持和寶貴的意見。

亞洲及太平洋區域各國的人民業已在熱烈響應亞洲及太平洋區域和平會議的發起和籌備上，表現出了偉大的團結力量。這力量顯然還在繼續增長和擴大中。亞洲及太平洋區域各國人民已經認識到了自己的這個力量，因而對保衛和平運動的勝利懷有堅定的信心。

亞洲及太平洋區域的和平如能確保，那對於世界和平就會有莫大的貢獻。

讓我們更廣泛地緊密團結，更堅決地一致行動，更堅強地把保衛和平的崇高事業擔當起來。

人類理性和國際正義必定會戰勝侵略的暴力和戰爭。

ВОЗЗВАНИЕ ПОДГОТОВИТЕЛЬНОГО СОВЕЩАНИЯ ПО СОЗЫВУ КОНФЕРЕНЦИИ СТОРОННИКОВ МИРА СТРАН АЗИИ И ТИХОГО ОКЕАНА

6 июня 1952 года, Пекин

Мы, участники состоявшегося в Пекине с 3 по 6 июня 1952 года подготовительного совещания по созыву конференции сторонников мира стран Азии и Тихого океана, в лице 47 делегатов, прибывших из 20 стран Азии, Австралии, Южной и Северной Америки, обращаемся к народам стран Азии и Тихого океана с настоятельным призывом сплотиться, усилить и расширить движение в защиту мира.

Мы прибыли из различных стран и говорим на разных языках. Хотя у нас различные политические взгляды и религиозные верования, мы все представляем единую волю к миру народов стран Азии и Тихого океана. Народы требуют мира и ненавидят войну; они против агрессии и не желают совершать ее по отношению к другим; народы требуют развития торговых сношений друг с другом и выступают против эмбарго и блокады; народы хотят взаимопонимания и дружбы и не желают, чтобы этому чинились препятствия и преграды; народы хотят обеспеченной жизни и ненавидят атомное, бактериологическое и химическое оружие. Но сегодня над 1600 млн. людей доброй воли стран Азии и Тихого океана нависла чудовищная угроза войны и подготовки к войне.

В Корее все еще продолжаются военные действия, прекращения которых так долго и настоятельно требуют все миролюбивые народы, стоящие за то, чтобы положить конец тяжелым страданиям корейского народа и проложить путь к мирному разрешению дальневосточных вопросов. Одновременно с этим, применение самых жестоких видов оружия массового истребления создает угрозу расширения войны. Помимо этого, в других частях Азии, как, например, во Вьетнаме и Малайе, продолжающиеся военные столкновения наносят народам огромные потери людьми и материальный ущерб и угрожают миру других стран.

В Японии заключение сепаратного мира и военного соглашения в нарушение существующих международных соглашений и воли японского народа к полной независимости и мирной жизни на основе подлинного мирного договора принесло новые трудности японскому народу. Во время второй мировой войны агрессивный японский милитаризм принес народам Азии и Тихого океана огромные бедствия, а сегодня в результате сепаратного мира с Японией эти народы снова оказались перед угрозой восстановления японского милитаризма. В результате пребывания иностранных войск на территории Японии японский народ вновь подвергается опасности быть ввергнутым в войну.

Агрессивные соглашения угрожают суверенитету и территориальной целостности многих стран Азии и бассейна Тихого океана. В результате этих соглашений на плечи народов возлагается тяжелое бремя подготовки к войне, на их земле расквартировываются иностранные войска, у народов беспощадно отнимаются материальные средства, необходимые для увеличения благосостояния и экономического развития. Гонка вооружений, военные приготовления и продолжающиеся военные столкновения, как, например, во Вьетнаме и Малайе, направлены на подавление национально-освободительного движения и борьбы народов в защиту национальной независимости, имеющих целью путем искоренения угнетения и порабощения наций создать основу для мирного сосуществования всех стран. Под предлогом стратегической необходимости с каждым днем создаются все новые препятствия свободному экономическому и культурному обмену между странами, а между тем такой обмен настоятельно необходим для процветания и взаимопонимания народов.

Единодушно сплотив свои действия в борьбе за мир, народы стран Азии и Тихого океана смогут изменить эту обстановку, положить конец всем имеющимся и грозящим столкновениям, предотвратить угрозу войны. Если народы смогут претворить свою общую волю к миру в объединенную силу на защиту мира, они выиграют мир, который обеспечит полную национальную независимость и уничтожит те трагические результаты гонки вооружений и военных приготовлений, от которых они теперь страдают; они смогут обеспечить мирное сосуществование стран с различными политическими системами и экономическим строем на основе равноправия всех наций и права каждого народа устраивать свои дела без вмешательства извне; они смогут осуществить принципы и дух Устава Объединенных Наций, которые требуют мирного урегулирования международных разногласий и достижения согласия между великими державами; они смогут путем международного разоружения и запрещения атомного, бактериологического, химического оружия и других средств массового истребления прекратить гонку вооружений, расточающую материальные ценности; они смогут смести все искусственные препятствия к международной торговле и культурному обмену между народами.

Мира нельзя ждать, его нужно завоевать совместными усилиями всех миролюбивых народов.

Народы стран Азии и Тихого океана, сплотившись с миролюбивыми народами других стран мира, несомненно, добьются победы мира над войной.

Для достижения этой великой цели мы призываем всех миролюбивых людей и общественные организации стран Азии и Тихого океана, независимо от политических убеждений, религиозных верований, национальности и профессии, под руководством уже организованных или вновь организуемых местных подготовительных комитетов объединиться еще теснее, обсудить вышеизложенные вопросы и избрать делегатов с тем, чтобы иметь возможность в ближайшем будущем созвать конференцию сторонников мира стран Азии и Тихого океана, которая будет проходить в Пекине и на которой будут разработаны эффективные мероприятия для укрепления мира и безопасности в Азии и на Тихом океане.

Мы призываем миролюбивых людей и общественные организации стран вне пределов Азии и Тихого океана оказать нам горячую поддержку и помочь нам ценными советами.

Народы стран Азии и Тихого океана своим горячим откликом на предложение обсудить вопросы созыва конференции сторонников мира стран Азии и Тихого океана и своим участием в подготовке к этой конференции уже показали великую силу своей сплоченности. Эта сила с очевидностью растет и ширится. Народы стран Азии и Тихого океана уже осознали свою силу, и поэтому они твердо уверены в победоносном завершении движения в защиту мира.

Обеспечение мира в странах Азии и Тихого океана будет огромным вкладом в дело мира во всем мире.

Еще теснее сплотим свои ряды, еще решительнее объединим свои действия, еще энергичнее развернем благородное дело борьбы за мир.

Человеческий разум и международная справедливость, несомненно, одержат победу над грубой силой агрессии и войны!

DECLARATION OF THE PREPARATORY CONFERENCE FOR A PEACE CONFERENCE OF THE ASIAN AND PACIFIC REGIONS

June 6, 1952

Peking

We, the 47 delegates from 20 countries of Asia, Australasia, South America and North America, meeting in Peking from June 3 to 6, 1952. in the Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, hereby issue an urgent call to the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions: we call on the peoples of the various countries in these areas to unite, strengthen and extend the movement for safeguarding peace.

We come from different countries and speak different languages. Although we are of different political views and religious beliefs, nevertheless we represent the common will to strive for peace of the people of the countries in the Asian and Pacific regions. We understand profoundly that the people demand peace and abhor war. They are against aggression and will never commit acts of aggression against others. They ask for commercial intercourse and oppose embargoes and blockades. They desire mutual understanding and friendly relations and do not want to be obstructed and barred from meeting each other. They need a prosperous life and abhor atom bombs, germ-bombs and chemical weapons.

Today, however, the ardent aspirations of the 1,600 million people in the Asian and Pacific regions are menaced by the spectre of war and military preparations.

In Korea, the cease-fire on a just and reasonable basis so long and urgently demanded by all peace-loving peoples in order to end the terrible suffering of the Korean people and to open the road to a peaceful settlement of problems in the Far East, is being delayed while the use of ever more horrible weapons of indiscriminate slaughter threatens to spread the hostilities. Elsewhere too, as in Viet-Nam and Malaya, existing military conflicts in Asia are taking heavy toll in the lives and treasure of the people and jeopardize the peace of other lands.

In Japan, the imposition of the separate treaty and military pact in violation of existing International Agreements and of the will of the Japanese people for full independence and a peaceful life secured by a genuine Peace Treaty, is bringing new hardships to the Japanese people and threatens the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions with the resurgence of the aggressive Japanese militarism which wrought such great devastation on these peoples in World War II, while the presence of foreign troops on Japanese soil threatens to involve the Japanese people in new wars.

Throughout the Asian and Pacific regions, the sovereignty and territorial integrity of nations are being jeopardized by aggressive pacts which burden the people with armaments and the stationing of foreign troops on their soil. These pacts deprive the people of material resources needed for their own welfare and economic development. Wide-spread military preparations and existing military conflicts as in Viet-Nam and Malaya are bringing ever greater oppression of the movements for national liberation and for the defense of national independence. These movements, by seeking to end national oppression and national enslavement, make a great contribution to creating the basis for the peaceful co-existence of nations. In the name of military strategy, barriers are increasingly being raised to prevent the free economic and cultural exchange between nations which is so necessary for the prosperity and mutual understanding of peoples.

We believe that by acting together for peace, the peoples of the Asian and Pacific countries can change this situation. They can bring to an end all present and potential conflicts in Asia and can push back the menace of war. By turning their common will for peace into a united force for the defense of peace, they can win the conditions of peace which will assure full national independence and will bring to an end the disastrous consequences of military preparations which they now suffer. They can assure the peaceful co-existence of nations with differing political and economic systems, based on equality between nations and on the right of peoples to settle their own affairs without outside interference. They can win the application of the principles and spirit of the United Nations Charter which demands the peaceful settlement of differences between nations and the reaching of agreement between the Great Powers. They can put an end to the wasteful armaments race through international disarmament and through the banning of atomic, bacteriological, chemical and all other weapons of mass destruction. They can tear down the barriers to world trade and to free cultural exchange between all peoples.

Peace cannot be awaited. It has to be won by the peace-loving peoples in unity.

Joined with the peace-loving peoples in all other regions of the earth who share the same aspirations, the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions can win the victory of peace over war.

To help achieve this great goal, we call on all peace-loving individuals and social organisations in the various countries in the Asian and Pacific regions, irrespective of political views, religious beliefs, nationalities or professions, to unite on an ever wider basis under the guidance of the preparatory committees which have already been formed or are going to be formed in their respective countries, to hold discussion on the aforementioned problems and to elect their representatives to the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific regions which will be held in Peking within a short time, in order to work out an effective programme for consolidating peace and security in these regions.

We further call upon all peace-loving peoples and organisations in other parts of the world to give us their enthusiastic support and valuable opinions.

The peoples of the various countries in the Asian and Pacific regions have already demonstrated the great strength of their unity in enthusiastically responding to the call to sponsor and prepare for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific regions. They are already conscious of their strength which is still growing and expanding. They are therefore fully confident of the victory of the movement to safeguard peace.

If peace can be ensured in the Asian and Pacific regions, it will contribute immensely to world peace.

Let us unite still more closely and on an ever broader basis! Let us act determinedly in unison and still more firmly shoulder the lofty task of safeguarding the peace!

Human reason and international justice will undoubtedly triumph over the brute force of aggression and war!

Proposals for the Preparation of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions

June 6, 1952

(1) Place for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions: Peking, China.

(2) Conference Date: The last week in September, 1952.

(3) Number of Delegates: The total number of delegates shall not exceed 500. The number of delegates from each country shall be decided upon through consultation between the Preparatory Committee and the country concerned.

(4) Finances: The total expenditures shall be shared by all the countries. Possible donations shall be solicited if necessary.

(5) The delegations of all the countries shall appoint one committee member each to form the Preparatory Committee for the Conference. The Preparatory Committee shall have its office in Peking. The Committee members shall not be required to station themselves in Peking all the time, so that they may hasten forward the preparatory work in their respective countries. Persons to be appointed as Committee members shall not be limited to the delegates attending this Preparatory Conference.

A Secretariat shall be set up under the Preparatory Committee, to take care of the preparatory work. Persons to be the Secretary-General and Deputy Secretaries-General of the Secretariat shall be decided upon by the Presidium of the Preparatory Conference.

(6) Topics for Discussion in the Conference:

1. To safeguard the independence, freedom and peace of the peoples of the Asian and Pacific regions; to oppose the expansion of armaments and war preparations; to prohibit war clamouring and propaganda inciting racial hatred; to abolish any suppression of peace propaganda; to demand freedom for the peace movement; to prohibit the use of atomic, bacteriological and chemical weapons; to oppose the bombing and massacre of non-combatants and civilians, to emphasize the observance of international law.

2. To develop equal, mutually beneficial and normal international economic relations and cultural exchange; to oppose blockade and embargo; to improve the people's livelihood; to promote the welfare of women and children.

3. To oppose the re-militarization of Japan and to oppose the use of Japan as a base for aggression, in order to eliminate the serious threat to peace in the Asian and Pacific regions.

4. To settle peacefully the Korean question on a fair and reasonable basis and to solve reasonably all the questions relating to peace in the Asian and Pacific regions including Viet-Nam, Laos, Cambodia, Malaya and other places.

(Adopted by the Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions on June 6, 1952.)

Bulletin of the Preparatory Conference for A Peace Conference of the Asian And Pacific Regions

June 8, 1952
Peking

The Preparatory Conference for a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, which began its session on June 3 in Peking, was successfully concluded on June 6.

Eleven Chinese, well known for their devotion to the peace movement, representing the will of the Chinese people and accepting the proposal of the Indian and other peace-loving people, sponsored this Conference. Participating in this Conference were 47 delegates from 20 different countries, namely: China, India, Pakistan, the Soviet Union, Japan, Korea, the United States, Australia, Mexico, Viet-Nam, Indonesia, Canada, Burma, Ceylon, Mongolia, Chile, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and Malaya. Two secretaries of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace and one delegate from the Asian-Australasian Liaison Bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions also took part in the Conference. While the Conference was in session, delegates from five countries—Colombia, Guatemala, Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica—were on their way to Peking. Countries who have agreed to the convocation of this Conference but were unable to send delegates to this Conference on account of various difficulties are Peru, Ecuador, the Laos and Nepal. Two persons from Australia, two from Burma, five from China, one from India and one from Indonesia attended the Conference as observers. In this Conference delegates of all the countries reported on the urgent desire of their people for peace and the situation of the peace movement in their respective countries and expressed their opinions concerning the convocation of the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions for extending and strengthening the peace movement. The chief task of this Conference was to discuss and adopt the declaration of the Preparatory Conference and the proposals for the preparation of a Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions.

For the drafting of these two documents, a Drafting Committee for the Declaration and an Organisational Committee were formed by the Conference. These two committees, having exerted great efforts, successfully completed their task.

After extensive and searching discussions, the declaration of the Conference and the proposals for the preparation of a Peace Conference cf the Asian and Pacific Regions were unanimously adopted without a single abstention.

Besides Mr. Kuo Mo-jo who signed the declaration in the capacity of a sponsor of the Conference, other signatories are the following delegates from the various countries:

China	Chen Shu-tung, Liu Ning-yi, Li Teh-chuan, Nan Han-chen, Wu Yao-tsung.
India	D. D. Kosambi, Indulal Kanaiyalal Yagnik, Sardar Gur Bakhsh Singh.
Pakistan	Ghulam Mohammed Khan, M. A. Shakoor.

Secretaries of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace: P. V. Gulyayev, John W. Darr.

Delegate of the Asian-Australasian Liaison Bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions, E. Thornton.

S. S. Yusuf also signed with the authorisation of the All-India Trade Union Congress.

According to the resolution of this Conference, the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions will be held in Peking during the last week of September 1952. In order to help the preparatory work for the Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions, the Conference decided to appoint a Secretary-General and two Deputy Secretaries-General under the Preparatory Committee, the Secretary-General to a Chinese and the two deputy Secretaries-General to be an Indian and a Japanese. When necessary, the Secretary-General is entitled to invite delegates appointed by other countries concerned to act as his assistants. Liu Ning-I has already been designated by China to be the Secretary-General to immediately proceed with the various aspects of the preparatory work.

FOREWORD

At a Press Conference which was held at the end of the Oslo session of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace (March 29th—April 1st, 1952), M. Kuo Mo-Jo, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace and President of the Chinese Committee for the Defence of Peace gave to the journalists present important details concerning the conditions in which bacterial warfare was launched by the Armed Forces of the United States in Korea and over parts of Chinese territory.

Several of the journalists present at this Press Conference asked whether there were further proofs to back up these charges. M. Kuo Mo-Jo replied in the affirmative.

Events which followed were to confirm this statement. Some time later, Peking Radio announced, along with other disclosures, that two U.S. airmen captured by the Korean People's Army and by Chinese Volunteers had given irrefutable proof of the premeditated crime perpetrated by the Government of the United States—the use of bacterial weapons on a vast scale in order to decimate the peaceful Korean civilian population and the Korean and Chinese Armed Forces.

The two captured airmen had formed part of a crew of an American aircraft (a B-26, the last three figures of which were 600) which was shot down on January 13th at 11 p.m. Two of them, Campbell, the mechanic and Downes, a bombardier, were killed instantaneously. The other two baled out and were taken prisoner by the Chinese Volunteers near Sunan. They were Kenneth Lloyd Enoch, First Lieutenant, navigator, serial number AO 2069988 and John Quinn, First Lieutenant, pilot, serial number 17993A. They both belonged to the U.S. Fifth Air Force, 3rd Bomber Wing, 3rd Group, 8th Squadron.

In this book we publish the facsimiles of the written depositions and the photographs of these two prisoners without further comment.

At the end there are statements made by Mrs Quinn, the airman's wife, to the International News Agency published May 7th and to the New York Herald Tribune May 9th. These statements corroborate some of the details given by her husband.

War prisoner Kenneth L. Enoch

THE TRUTH ABOUT HOW AMERICAN IMPERIALISM LAUNCHED GERM WARFARE

(A deposition made by war prisoner Kenneth L. Enoch on April 7, 1952)

I was at Iwakuni, Japan, during the last two weeks of August, 1951. During the month of August the 3rd Bomb Wing was in the process of moving to Kunsan, Korea, and the last thing to make the move was the ground school, which moved on to Kunsan in early September, 1951. During my stay at Iwakuni there were about 15 crews which had just come from the United States and were attending the ground school. This ground school gave the same kind of classroom subjects as the school at 4400 CCTG. We navigators received lectures and problems in navigation and the B-26 and Korea, so we would understand our jobs better and thus be better equipped to fly in combat.

On 25 August, 1951, at 1300 hours, we attended a secret lecture in the ground school navigation classroom. There were as I recall, 10 pilots and 15 navigators present at the lecture. Of the pilots I recall Lt. Broughton, Lt. Schmidt, and Capt. Lemak. Among the navigators I remember Lt. Brown, Lt. Hardy, Lt. De Gaugh, Lt. Zielinski, Lt. Garwin, Lt. Larson and myself. I did not know all the pilots and navigators, only those I had been with at Langley Field. Our instructor's name was Mr. Wilson, a civilian. There were no other instructors in attendance at this lecture.

Mr. Wilson told us that his lecture was concerning bacteriological warfare. He told us that our side had no plans at that time of using bacteriological warfare, but nevertheless we might at some time, and thus the lecture was secret information and we were not to divulge its contents to anyone, or even talk about it among ourselves.

The main part of Wilson's lecture was devoted to the weapons of bacteriological warfare. He did not have any examples with him, but he discussed the various methods of scattering germs, either by scattering the germs by themselves or by dropping insects and animals to spread the germs. The contents of Mr. Wilson's lecture is as follows:

The ways of dropping the germs by themselves are:

(1) by dropping a bomb full of dust and germs mixed together, which will open in the air and spread the germ-laden dust with the wind;

(2) by dropping dust directly from the airplane itself, by means of a spraying device, so that there will be germs in the air wherever the dust is sprayed;

(3) or by dropping a container full of germ dust, either a bomb which will open in the water or a paperboard box which will be opened by the water, into reservoirs and lakes where the people and animals use the water, and where insects will pick up the germs and spread them.

The ways of dropping insects are:

(1) by dropping a germ bomb which looks just like an ordinary bomb, but is filled with germ-laden insects, and which will open on contact with the ground to release these insects;

(2) by dropping insects in paperboard containers which will break open on contact with the ground, releasing the insects with their germs;

(3) or by spreading insects with animals.

The ways of releasing germs by animals are:

(1) to release the rats or rabbits or small game by a parachute container which will release the animals upon contact with the ground, and these animals are covered with germ-bearing lice and fleas:

(2) or by releasing such animals from a boat behind the enemy shore line.

There are other ways of spreading germs also:

(1) by dropping leaflets, toilet paper, envelopes, and paper materials which have been covered with germs,

(2) by dropping germ-filled soap or clothing;

(3) by dropping fountain pens filled with germ-laden ink;

(4) or by dropping infected food to the enemy troops.

You can also spread germs by howitzer or mortar shells, but since it is so close to the front it is not safe to do so.

There are many types of germs that can be spread. In addition to many weird and unusual germs, the germs of more well-known diseases, such as *typhus, typhoid, cholera, dysentery, bubonic plague, *smallpox, *malaria, and *yellow fever, may be employed. There are many types of insects to carry these germs, the most popular being the louse, flea, fly, and mosquito. The louse can carry typhus, cholera, smallpox, plague, and dysentery, as can the flea and the fly. The mosquito can carry malaria, and yellow fever.

The best way to defend against germ warfare is to be prepared. All possible people should be inoculated against all diseases possible. If insects are dropped, it is advisable to pour kerosene or oil on the containers they are dropped in and set fire to them. If they have already escaped from the containers, it is best to spray DDT over the area, preferably from an airplane. In case germ-laden dust is employed, DDT spray must be used. All exposed food must be disposed of. All exposed clothing and articles must be washed with hot water and strong soap. All water must be boiled. All food eaten must be thoroughly cooked. You must use some protection over your nose and mouth to breathe, and you must, when everything else is done, change clothes and take a good bath. All trash and waste exposed to germs must be burned. Screens should be placed on all windows in the summer for insect protection. In all cases, small animals such as rats should be destroyed so the danger of plague, which they spread with their fleas, will be lessened. If paper objects or other such items are dropped, they should be burned at once.

All weapons of bacteriological warfare are of such a nature that they should, when employed, be dropped from as low an altitude and at as low an airspeed as possible, to avoid harm to the insects. If parachute-type weapons are used any altitude will suffice, but it should be sufficiently low, say 1,000 feet, so that the parachute will not drift from the target area.

When Mr. Wilson had finished his lecture it was 3 o'clock (1500 hours) and he reminded us not to discuss the weapons subject to anyone and took his leave. This was the only such lecture we ever received. On September 1st, 1951, I went to Kunsan.

In October, 1951, and again in December, 1951, a one-hour lecture was given at Kunsan by a Major Browning on protection against germ warfare. This lecture he gave many times on each occasion, and every person was required to attend one hour's lecture. He gave the same lecture in December as in October. The idea, of course, is that due to the rotation plan there are always new troops, and it is also good to keep in mind the contents of his lecture. He told us that it was not unreasonable to expect bacteriological warfare to be used against us by the enemy. If they did, germ dust or germ-laden insects would be used, and he stressed that we should keep our 'shot' records, or inoculations, current and up-to-date and also discoursed on the other pertinent data as I have discussed in the second paragraph on page 3 of this paper.

On the 1st of January, 1952, we were told by the operation's section group briefing officer at our regular briefing to be sure and report all our duds and where they fell. This was a usual procedure and just seemed to be a casual reminder at that time. The 'reminder' was given to all the crews at the briefing by Capt. Carey, the group briefing officer. Due to a head cold I did not fly on this night, but was replaced by another navigator.

My next scheduled flight was on the night of 6 January, 1952. We were scheduled to fly on Green 8 route (between Pyongyang and Sariwon) and our take-off was scheduled for 0300. The crew was Capt. Amos, pilot, myself, navigator, and Sgt. Tracy, gunner. As usual Capt. Amos and I reported to the group briefing room and group operations office at 0200, an hour before take-off. There we always checked for the latest weather and information on the mission to be flown. On this night we were informed by the officer on duty, a captain I am not familiar with, that we were to fly to the town of Hwangju and drop our outboard wing bombs (of which there are two) and then to drop the rest of our load as quickly as possible and come directly back to Kunsan. He told us to drop at Hwangju at 500 feet of altitude and 200 miles per hour maximum airspeed. We called his attention to the low altitude, as we were to carry ten 500 pound bombs according to briefing, but he told us that this was top secret and that these were germ bombs, and to tell no one whatsoever about our mission. He told us that the wing bombs were already loaded and checked for us, and not to bother them, and when we returned to report them as "duds". We went over to squadron operations and met our gunner, who did not report to group, and, as far as I know, did not know of our special mission. When we got out to the plane a guard was standing there from armament section. He told us the wing bombs were already checked, which we already knew. I checked the bombs in the bomb bay, 6 of them, and they were 6 regular 500-pound bombs. We took off at 0300 and flew to Hwangju, dropping our two germ bombs just outside the west edge of town. There were no explosions or any unusual things to be seen. Then we continued for two minutes to the north and dropped our eight live bombs on the highway 5 miles north of Hwangju, and went directly back to Kunsan. We took off at 0300, our bombs were dropped at 0400, and we landed at Kunsan at 0500. This was the first time I ever heard of anyone dropping germ bombs, and we kept it a secret. These germ bombs looked exactly like a regular 500-pound bomb to me. In the day time they may have some distinguishing characteristics, but it was dark when I saw them. I did not load these bombs or see them loaded but there was no special equipment on the wings, so they are loaded in the same way as ordinary bombs.

When we reported to group intelligence for debriefing after this mission we reported two bombs [500 pounds] (as a matter of fact 150 pounds) dropped at Hwangju and reported them as "duds", and reported where we dropped our eight good bombs. The bombs are evidently reported as "duds" to keep too many people from knowing the purpose of the mission, but higher headquarters can check the reports and know where the germs were dropped.

On the 10th of January, whether by accident or design I do not know, I was again scheduled for the same mission with Amos and Tracy. This time Amos and I reported to group operations, and we were told that all 4 of our wing bombs were to be germ bombs. This time our target was to be the town of Chunghwa, on Green 8, and we were then to get rid of the rest of our bombs as quickly as possible and return to base. We were still to keep our operation a secret and report our germ bombs as "duds". Our maximum airspeed was to be 200 miles per hour and our altitude 500 feet for the germ bombs. Once again armament was to have the wing bombs checked for us. We picked up Tracy at squadron operations and went out to the plane. Once again the wing bombs looked like regular bombs. An armament man told me that we were not to bother the wing bombs, as they were all set to go. I checked the regular bombs in the bomb bay. At 0300 we took off and flew directly to Chunghwa, dropping our 4 germ bombs at 0410 hours, at an altitude of 500 feet and an airspeed of 190 miles per hour, on the western edge of Chunghwa. We proceeded south and dropped our regular bombs on the highway north of Hwangju and returned to Kunsan base, landing at 0515.

When we reported for debriefing we reported where we had dropped our 6 good bombs, and reported 4 "duds" at Chunghwa, for the same reason as before, for secrecy.

Drawing of the Germ Bomb

Above is a drawing of the type of germ bombs which we used.

As I see it, the germ bombs come from a medical supply source, such as the same type which manufactures the vaccine used to combat disease, and I believe this source is in Japan, either on Honshu, or Kyushu Island.

If the type of germ bomb which we dropped is used, it will open on contact with the ground, exposing the germs and insects to the open air. If it is cold outside, the insects will be dormant and sluggish, but the sun will cause them, by its heat, to become active.

The leaflets are dropped in North Korea by B-29's. These leaflets are dropped in boxes which open in the air scattering the leaflets over a wide area. These leaflets can be used in bacteriological warfare.

When the germ bombs are dropped, they are released by the pilot The navigator takes notes on when and where they are dropped, and how many germ bombs. The bombs are released by pushing a button, which releases the bombs by electricity.

After the mission when the crew reports to group intelligence for debriefing, the whole crew attends the debriefing, and the report is given by the pilot and navigator. It is an informal report, and the whole crew sits around a table and give their report to an enlisted man from the intelligence section, who takes the report and puts it on paper, which he turns in to his superior. This is why the germ bombs are reported as "duds", to keep unauthorized personnel in intelligence and on the crew from knowing the secret of the mission.

To the best of my knowledge, B-26 aircraft are the only ones dropping the regular germ bomb, which looks like a regular bomb. However, the B-26 is unsuitable for dropping the other types of weapons. The leaflets are dropped by B-29's and cargo type C-47 and C-46 aircraft, but mainly by B-29's. The cargo type aircraft are the best suited for dropping all other types of germ weapons, such as cardboard boxes, parachute containers, and articles of clothing, food, soap, and paper and fountain pens, but the B-29 can be used for these weapons also.

As to when we first started to use germ bombs, it was about the first of the year, about 1 January, 1952, I should say, since that is when we were all reminded to look for "dud" bombs. It is probable that other outfits, such as the 452nd Wing, started to use germ warfare at the same time.

The decision to use germ bombs, of course, is top secret, but due to the serious nature of this decision it undoubtedly rests with a very high command, probably the Far East headquarters in Tokyo.

The Truth About How American Imperialism Launched Germ Warfare

I was at Iwakuni, Japan, during the last two weeks of August, 1951. During the month of August the 3rd Bomb Wing was in the process of moving to Kunsan, Korea, and the last thing to make the move was the ground school which moved on to Kunsan in early September, 1951. During my stay at ~~Kunsan~~ Iwakuni there were about 15 crews which had just come from the United States and were attending the ground school. This ground school gave the same kind of classroom subjects as the school at 4400 CCTG. We navigators recieved lectures and problems in navigation and the B-26 and Korea, so we would understand our jobs better and thus be better equipped to fly in combat.

On 25 August, 1951 at 1300 hours, we attended a secret lecture in the ground school navigation classroom. There were as I recall, 10 pilots and 15 navigators present at the lecture. Of the pilots I recall Lt Broughton, Lt. Schmidt, and Capt. Lemak. Among the navigators I remember Lt. Brown, Lt. Hardy, Lt DeGaugh. Lt. Zielinski, Lt Garvin, Lt. Larson, and myself. I did not know all the pilots and navigators, only those I had been with at Langley Field. Our instructors name was Mr. Wilson, a civilian. There were no other instructors in attendance at this lecture.

Mr. Wilson told us that his lecture was concerning bacteriological warfare. He told us that our side had no plans at that time of using bacteriological warfare, but nevertheless we might at some time, and thus the lecture was secret information and we were not to divulge its contents to any one, ~~one~~ or even talk about it among ourselves.

The main part of Mr Wilsons lecture was devoted to the weapons of bacteriological ~~weapons~~ warfare. He did not have any examples with him, but he discussed the various methods of scattering germs; either by scattering the germs by themselves or by dropping insects and animals to spread the germs. The contents of Mr Wilsons lecture is as follows:

The ways of dropping the germs by themselves are: ① by dropping a bomb full of dust and germs mixed together, which will open in the air and spread the germ-laden dust with the wind; ② by dropping dust directly from the airplane itself, by means of a spraying device, so that there will be germs in the air wherever the dust is sprayed; ③ or by dropping a container full of germ dust, either a bomb which will open in the water or a paperboard box which will be opened by the water, into reservoirs and lakes where the people and animals use the water, and where insects will pick up the germs and spread them.

The ways of dropping insects are: ① by dropping a germ bomb which looks just like an ordinary bomb, but is filled with germ-laden insects, and which will open on contact with the ground to release these insects; ② by dropping insects in paperboard containers which will break open on contact with the ground, releasing the insects with their germs; ③ or by spreading insects with animals.

The ways of releasing germs by animals are: ① To release the rats or ~~rabbits~~ rabbits or small game by a parachute container which will release the animals upon contact with the ground, and these animals are covered with germ-bearing lice and fleas; ② or by releasing such animals from a boat behind the enemy shore line.

There are other ways of spreading germs also: ① By dropping leaflets toilet paper, envelopes, and paper materials which have been covered with germs; ② by dropping germ-filled soap or clothing; ③ by dropping fountain pens filled with germ-laden ink; ④ or by dropping infected food to the enemy troops.

You can also spread germs by howitzer or mortar shells, but since it is so close to the front it is not safe to do so

There are many types of germs that can be spread. In addition to many weird and unusual germs, the germs of more well-known diseases such as typhus, typhoid, cholera, dysentery, bubonic plague, smallpox, malaria, and yellow fever, may be employed. There are many types of insects to carry these germs, the most popular being the louse, flea, fly, and mosquito. The louse can carry typhus, cholera, smallpox, plague, and dysentery, as can the flea and the fly. The mosquito can carry malaria, and yellow fever.

The best way to defend against germ warfare is to be prepared. All possible people should be inoculated against all diseases possible. If insects are dropped, it is advisable to pour kerosene or oil on the containers they are dropped in and set fire to them. If they have already escaped from the containers, it is best to spray DDT over the area, preferably from an airplane. In case germ-laden dust is employed, DDT spray must be used. All exposed food must be disposed of. All exposed clothing and articles must be washed with hot water and strong soap. All water must be boiled. All food eaten must be thoroughly cooked. You must use some protection over your nose and mouth to breathe, and you must, when every thing else is done, change clothes and take a good bath. All trash and waste exposed to germs must be burned. Screens should be placed on all windows in the summer for insect protection. In all cases, small animals such as rats should be destroyed so the danger of plague, which they spread with their fleas, will be less used. If paper objects or other such items are dropped, they should be burned at once.

All weapons of bacteriological warfare are of such a nature that they should, when employed, be dropped from as low an altitude and as low an airspeed as possible, to avoid harm to the insects. If parachute-type weapons are used any altitude will suffice, but it should be sufficiently low, say 1000 feet, so that the parachute will not drift from the target area.

When Mr. Wilson had finished his lecture it was 3 o'clock (1500 hours) and he reminded us not to discuss the weapons subject to anyone and took his leave. This was the only such lecture we ever received. On September 1st, 1951, I went to Kunsan.

Dear Mom, Bob, Dot, Frank and Donnie,

I sure am lucky today to be able to broadcast a message to you through courtesy of the Chinese People's Volunteer Army. I am in main camp now, camp Number two. Everything is fine. Chow is excellent and there is lots of tobacco and cigarettes and I have been given a pipe to smoke. I am in good health and looking forward to the day the peace talks are settled and I can return home to see you all. There is a lot of reading material to help pass the time, and sometimes I go for walks with the Chinese comrades and enjoy the beautiful scenery of these mountains. Spring is here and everything is full of life and cheer, and I know that good old Youngstown is also very beautiful now. I hope you all are well, hope everything is okay at the hospital, Mom, and Bob is busy working on those trucks, and Dot and Frank are busy raising my favorite nephew. I've got his picture here, and everyone agrees he is very cute.

Tell all my friends I am okay, and hope to see them soon. Keep the home fires burning, and drop me a line or two.

Love to all

HOW I WAS FORCED TO TAKE PART IN THE INHUME* BACTERIOLOGICAL WARFARE LAUNCHED BY THE U.S. WALL STREET

(A deposition made by war prisoner John Quinn on April 13, 1952)

I am John Quinn, a 1st/Lt in the United States Air Force, serial no. 17993A. I am 29 years old. I joined the Air Force when I was 26 in February 16, of 1948. My home is in Pasadena, California. After I graduated from Aviation Cadets in February 25, 1949, I was assigned to the Air University. They sent me through a six weeks course on how to teach called the Academic Instructor's Course. After I finished they assigned me to the Academic Instructor's Division as a Staff member. My job was training aide officer, to teach people how to make good use of pictures, charts, movies, and slides in their instruction. I was teaching there when I got my orders to the Far East Air Forces for further assignment to fly B-26s in Korea. I was told to report first on August 25 to Langley Air Force Base to learn to fly B-26s. I was there for 8 weeks. We were sent from there to Camp Stoneman for processing. At Camp Stoneman I was innocculated for Typhoid fever, Typhus, Cholera, and Smallpox. We left the United States by airplane and arrived in Japan on 27 November 1951. We arrived at Haeneda Air Terminal and taken to Foochu, Area B, to await being sent to Korea. We were there until the 29th of November and then sent by train to Ashia Air Base in Southern Japan. It was an overnight trip by train and we arrived on the 30th. The same day we were sent by C-47 to Kunsan Air Base in Korea. I was assigned to the 8th Squadron, 3rd Group, of the 3rd Bomb Wing. The 3rd Group is composed of 3 squadrons, 8th, 90th, and 13th and is the only group at Kunsan.

On December 17, 1951 I reported to the 8th squadron orderly room and saw my name on the bulletin board to attend a lecture the next day at 9 o'clock. The next day Larson, a navigator who was also on the list, and I went to the lecture. The lecture was given in the Ground School building in a large room. Filled the room would seat 30 people. There were 20 people in the room, all pilots and navigators. In addition to Larson and myself were Roberts 2nd Lt, Schwartz 1st Lt, Rogers 1st Lt, Watson 1st Lt, Long-Capt., Duffy-Capt, all navigators, Howarth-Capt, Schmidt 1st Lt, Beeson Capt, Robertson-Capt, McAllister 1st Lt, all pilots. Larson and I had been drinking coffee and arrived a few minutes late, the others were already there. The Capt. that was talking seemed very displeased that we were late and repeated for us that the lecture that we were to receive was considered very important and highly secret. That we were to pay close attention to everything that was told us but not to discuss the lecture later—even among ourselves. He said the lecturer had come from Japan and was an expert in his field. Then he introduced the lecturer, a civilian, as Mr Ashfork. Mr Ashfork was a middle aged man, 40 years old, slender, 5ft 10", and losing most of his hair.

He started his lecture by telling us that his lecture was on Biological Warfare. He said that it was a terrible thing to contemplate but in this day of the atom bomb when science was making such rapid strides, that we must be prepared for any turn of events. He said that we never know what turn events might take in the future and that we must be ready to defend ourselves, we must also know how to carry out Bacteriological Warfare ourselves in case it proved necessary. He said that he had spent many years studying germ warfare and that he would give us as much information as he thought we needed.

He first told us that there were many ways of spreading germ warfare. Germs could be spread anywhere at any time, that the means were ready. He told us that germs by themselves could not be dropped because they would die in 60 seconds in direct sunlight. That germs could, however, be carried by many different types of insects and rodents. These insects and rodents have been bred for many of their generations under laboratory conditions and selected for their ability to survive anywhere at anytime, even under the most adverse conditions. To name a few of the ways that they can be spread, he said, was by dust, just like a smoke screen is laid down. That they could be spread in this way by ships moving in close to shore when the wind was blowing onto shore. That they could also be spread in this way by low flying jet aircraft. He meant any type of jet aircraft. He said that they could be spread by bugs in clothes, fleas, flies, lice, and mosquitoes. These same bugs could also be dropped in many other ways, in boxes that would become very fragile in the sun and allow the bugs to crawl out, and also in bombs. He said since we were flying B-26s he would discuss mostly this last way, by bombs. He then showed us pictures of a jet, a drawing of an F-84, spraying dust with germs, out of its tip tanks. He showed us a picture of some old clothes with bugs that looked like flies and lice crawling in them. These bugs can keep very warm in the clothes, altho he said that they can be selectively bred so that the cold wouldn't harm them. Also they can go a very long time without food.

He then showed us pictures of bombs which could be used for dropping germs. These bombs looked very much like 500 pound Gps that we had been carrying except that they had no fuzes. He said that the size and shape of the bomb was not important, only what it contained. He said it was a very safe way to carry these germs since the bombs were sealed and would not open except when dropped from the airplane. The pictures he showed us was a picture of a 500 pound bomb with a very much thinner shell, less than ¼ inch thick. These bombs, he said, were still in the experimental stage and there were various types. One picture he showed us was of a bomb that split in half when it struck the ground. Another had doors in the back (near the tail where the bomb curves) that open when the bomb hits. These doors are opened by a very small electric motor hooked to a battery which doesn't work until the bomb strikes the ground. The fluid is kept away from the plates of the battery until the bomb strikes the ground by a thin plastic shield. The force of the bomb hitting the ground is sufficient for the fluid to break the plastic shield and then the fluid covers the battery plates and the motor opens the doors.

Also he showed us a picture of a bomb which the tail breaks off when it hits the ground. All of these bombs that he showed us were made to look like ordinary 500 pound bombs but none of them were pictured with fuzes. He told us they also had bombs which came apart in the air and the insects were scattered in boxes to get them over a large territory before they struck the ground. He told us that these boxes would become very weak in the sunlight and the insects (flies, fleas, and mosquitoes) could crawl out. The structure of all three of the bombs he showed us was the same and they all looked like 500 pound bombs with thin casings. The first was shown split open.

The second with the doors in the back near the tail, and the third with the tail broken off.

The bombs that open in the air are hooked up by a regular arming wire to the wing bomb racks. They have a little propeller in the nose which cannot turn before the bomb is dropped because of the arming wire. When the bomb is dropped the arming wire stays with the airplane and the propeller is free to turn. The propeller turns a generator which supplies electricity to a small electric motor, just as the one I described. This motor first opens 3 doors in the back, just as in the other bomb, and then opens one door in the front. The wind thru the bomb is sufficient to blow the boxes out and they scatter as they fall. He showed us no pictures of this type of bomb and described it very little.

Next he described how germs could be spread. He said that almost any insect could be used for spreading germs, but he would just tell us about a few of them and that would be sufficient for our own protection in case any of these germs got back into South Korea. He said that Bubonic Plague could be carried by rats, but it wasn't necessary for the rats themselves to be dropped, altho they could be. The germs could be dropped in anything that rats could and would get into and they would pick up the germs and carry them. The insects can most easily be dropped and these carry many germs. Flies can carry Typhus* and Cholera and fleas can carry plague. Mosquitoes can carry fever of different types, yellow fever, typhoid fever*, malaria, and encyphilitis* for which no positive cure is known. Encyphylitis is also known as Japanese B and was brought to Korea first by Japanese as a disease in their own ranks. Very little is known about combating it and prevention is the same as that for malaria. He said he would describe how malaria was carried and that the rest of the fevers were carried by mosquitoes in a similar way. He showed us a large picture of a mosquitoe.

These mosquitoes are harmless, he said, until they have been infected with malaria either by biting someone who has malaria or by being infected with it in the laboratory. The inner and outer tubes are both stuck into a person when bitten by the mosquitoe. The mosquitoe sucks blood up thru the inner tube and injects a form of saliva into the person thru the outer tube at the same time. If the mosquitoe is infected the germ is carried by this saliva into the person bitten and he will get the fever. He said that the posters on the walls of the mess hall (on protecting yourself against encyphylitis) were not up there just to cover the walls.

He said that we must all follow rules of cleanliness, especially in the months to come. When we were given atabrin to take not to throw it away but to take it. He said we should all keep our innoculations up to date. If we did these things we had nothing to fear. The lecture started at 9 o'clock and was over just before 11. We all noted that germ bombs would not explode, that they would be duds.

In our regular briefing on the 31st of December the operations officer, told us to be sure and report all duds to the intellegence section at de-briefing when we returned.

On the 3rd of January, I reported to Group Operations at 2 o'clock in the afternoon along with 26 other pilots, 27 navigators, 27 radio bombadiers, and 27 engineers (in some cases these engineers were gunners. In our squadron we had 3 ships which could carry gunners). My crew was Rogers 1st/Lt navigator, and Sayer Sgt. as engineer. We didn't carry a radio bombadier because the weather was good. I copied off the board our route assignment which was Sariwon to Pyongyang and our time of take off which was 2:30 in the morning. The regular briefing started. The regular briefing consists of the operations officer telling us that everything we are to hear is secret and to be treated as such—not to be discussed except among ourselves. Then the intellegence officer gave a picture of what traffic was sighted the night before and how many were damaged and destroyed. The Army Liaison officer explained the front line situation and the weather officer described the weather to us. Other information, winds, and temperatures the navigator copied off the board. In every respect this seemed like it was to be a regular mission.

Rogers, Sayer and myself met in Group operations at 5 minutes after 1 and I went into the little room where the alert operations officer stayed at night, Capt Reynolds was on duty. I gave him our names and he told me that I had a special mission. He said that before I did anything else I was to drop my wing bombs as close to Pyongyang as I dared get. He indicated a place on the wall map that he stuck a red pin into which was 5 miles south of Pyongyang and 3 miles east of the main highway. He said that we should then continue with our regular mission and finish it as soon as possible and report back to the intellegence section. He said that I should drop the bombs from 200 feet or lower if possible and for me not to worry about them exploding that they would be duds. I asked him what it was all about, remembering the lecture we'd been given on germ bombs, but he said he didn't know and it would be best just to do as instructed and not worry about why or what. I thought it was germ bombs.

When we went out to the airplane we were met by a guard and then I was sure they were germ bombs. He said not to worry about the wing bombs, they'd already been taken care of. But I looked up at them when I was inspecting the airplane and noted that what the navigators said "the wing bombs don't have any fuzes" was correct. We both looked at each other and I said orders are orders and we left it at that. I told him where we were to drop them and he marked it on his map.

We took off at 2:25 and arrived just south of Pyongyang at 3:30. I turned east from the road, just south of the bridge, and when we reached 200 ft Rogers said this ought to be it and I dropped the four wing bombs, one at a time in rapid succession. They were duds. We both knew then for sure they were germ bombs.

We finished the rest of the mission by 4.15 and landed back at Kunsan at 5:10. We left the airplane and after turning in our equipment and reporting that the plane was OK we went directly to the intellegence section in Group Operations for de-briefing. We reported that we had dropped four bombs where had been told at 200 ft and that they were all duds. The Sgt took this down to give to intellegence that morning.

On January 10th I was briefed on a regular mission as usual to fly between Kunuri and Kangye at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. My crew was Schwartz 1st/Lt navigator and Sayer Sgt, engineer. Our take off time was 2 o'clock the next morning. This briefing was routine. When we reported at 12:30 to operations I went in as usual to check off our names and was told again that I had a special mission. Capt. Reynolds was again on duty. He remembered that I had already had one special mission with duds so he referred to that and told me this would be the same type of mission. That this time I only had two duds and that I should drop them Northeast of Kunuri and he showed me the place on the wall map which was 3 miles North of Kunuri and 5 miles east of the railroad track. Again we were met by a Guard at the airplane and told that the wing bombs had been taken care of. I noticed that again the two outboard bombs had no fuzes. I told Schwartz where we were to make the special drop and we knew we had germ bombs. We took off at 2 o'clock and arrived over Kunuri at 3:25. I turned when Schwartz told me to and let down to 200 ft. and dropped the bombs. They were duds. We finished up the rest of the mission as quickly as possible and started back to Kunsan, at 4:10. We landed back at Kunsan at 5:25 and after turning in our equipment and telling them the airplane was OK we went to the intellegence section in operations and reported having dropped two duds and where we dropped them. The Sgt made a note of this to give to the intellegence.

—On the 14th of December I noticed my name on the bulletin board to attend a lecture the next morning at 9 o'clock in the ground school building. I was there at 9 o'clock in the large room with 25 other officers, pilots and navigators. Beeson, Capt., Schmidt 1st/Lt, Long Capt, Land Capt., Howard Capt., Larson 1st/Lt, Schwartz 1st/Lt, Roberts 2nd/Lt, Watson 1st/Lt were there. Maj Allen, base operations officer was the senior officer present and introduced the lecturer. He said that this lecture was important and secret. He said that the lecturer, Mr Clark was an eminent physicist in the field of nuclear research and that he was there to explain some about atomic warfare to us. He said Mr Clark had come from Japan.

The lecturer started by saying that the science of atomic warfare had advanced a long ways since the bombs that were dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The days when these bombs could only be carried by B-29s was over. Bombs of that size were now many times (he didn't say how many) as powerful as they were then. That bombs could now be made almost any size they wished to make them. He said that they had conducted experiments in the United States on what he called the "Baby" atom bomb and that they were doing further work so that they could be used as artillery as well as bombs. He said that work on a mortar shell with an atomic warhead was nearly perfected for use. He said that much progress was being made on the hydrogen bomb which would be a thousand times more powerful than the types of atom bombs we now had. He said that these bombs, a single one, could completely level a city like New York. Then he told us that there were various ways of using atom bombs. They could be dropped to explode under-ground and spread radio active dust over a large area. This dust is deadly to any living thing it comes in contact with and the radio activity lingers many weeks. He said that the bombs could be dropped by parachute to explode in the air as they were at Hiroshima and Nagasaki and in this way the heat and the blast effect is more deadly, that the radio activity is not so persistent and most of it blows away and disperses in the air. He said that the bombs could be exploded deep under water and this could be used on cities near the coast. That it would lift most of the water out of any known port, the deeper the better, and the water would be radio active and rain down on the city. Besides that there would still be the blast effect and a tidal wave would rush in to fill up the harbour and do much damage. He said that experimentation had been done on radio active clouds which would hold radio activity for a long time and would be deadly wherever it rained.

He said that experiments on the smaller atom weapons (bombs) had been carried out in Nevada, United States, with troops in the fields near the blast—about 2 miles away, and that no one had been hurt. This was because the explosions had been small and proper precautions had been taken. He said that they had all been clothed well and were in deep fox holes so that their heads were 2 to 3 ft below the top of the fox hole. This was a very necessary precaution, he said, and we should understand why.

The atom bomb gives off three rays, he said. When a bomb goes off there is first very much heat created, the center of the blast is many millions of degrees, as hot as the sun, and this heat wave extends outward from a half mile to many miles depending on the size of the blast. Next, there is the shock wave which is much longer in duration than a high explosive blast. And next there is the radio activity. If you are far enough away from the blast not to be killed outright the fox hole will protect you against both the heat wave and the blast effect, and also against radio activity unless it comes in as dust or rain. The three rays given off by the atom bomb are alpha, beta, and gama. The alpha and beta only last during the explosion and if you are safe from the searing heat of the blast, then even a shirt, especially a light colored shirt, is sufficient to keep the alpha and beta rays from burning you. Wherever you don't have clothes like hands, neck, face, that part will be burned that is facing the blast when the bomb goes off. The gama rays last for a longer time depending on the type of blast, but a foxhole is good protection against this altho clothes are not of any use. Only lead or a thick layer of dirt will stop these gama rays which go thru everything just like X-rays and destroy the life of bones and cause blood to break down. Then he showed us pictures of how the fox holes must be dug. He said that a half inch of lead would stop the gama rays, but it took at least two feet of dirt to stop them. They could penetrate almost two feet of dirt. The area around the blast continues to give off gamma rays because those objects which are strongly effected by the gamma rays also become radioactive and give off these rays. It would be very dangerous to touch especially metal objects which were in the near vicinity of the blast. He said that most of the radio active gamma rays are carried off in a large cloud in an air burst and dispersed by the winds. He showed us a picture of this.

He said that altho after being dispersed they would not be harmful to people, that a report had come from a photographic laboratory in New York, several days after the experiments in Nevada, that much of their photographic paper showed signs of having been exposed to gamma rays. These rays had traveled in clouds all the way across the United States and exposed this paper. He said that because of most of these rays being carried off in the radio active cloud, it was quite possible to safely enter an area after an air burst provided you didn't stay too long. However, except when absolutely necessary to enter for some reason it was best to wait until trained people could go in first with giegar counters. If you must go in, he said, don't touch metal objects. He said that they had a pocket radiation detector that could be carried by every one that would indicate when you had been in the area as long as was safe. He showed us this object which was the same size as a pack of cigarettes but only 1/8″ thick. It had an opening in the middle ¼″ high and 2″ long covered with a thin piece of lead.

This lead could be slid out of the way and expose the opening. Behind the lead was a piece of photographic paper which would turn dark when exposed to radio-activity. It also had on the outside a colour with which to match the colour of the paper so that when they matched you could leave the area, otherwise you would get too much radio-activity and it would be dangerous. After you go in once you can't go back again.

When you enter the area you raise the lead shield and then watch the colour of the opening and compare it to the dark colour and leave when they're the same. Next he told us that these pocket indicators were only necessary substitutes for Giegar Counter which were much more accurate. The Giegar Counter works like a radio and when it is near radio-activity you can hear it in earphones connected to the Giegar Counter. Also it has a little meter which looks like an ampmeter in a car to tell how much radioactivity is present. He said it was measured in radiotrons, or some term like that. Then he let each of us file up and put the earphones on and listen as he brought a piece of radioactive material near the Giegar Counter. At first the ticking was very slow but as the piece came close the ticking got very fast until it sounded like a purr, one tick mixed with the next. The lecture lasted from 9 o'clock to 10:30.

It is very clear from these facts that the capitalistic Wall Street warmongers in their greed, their ruthless greed, have caused this horrible crime of Bacteriological Warfare to be launched in order to get more money for themselves and in the hope of spreading this war.

Even their desire to start a third world war by adding atomic warfare to their list of inhumane crimes is indicated. These imperialists will stop at nothing to get more money in their pockets and the more war the more they make. They do not care about the innocent people of the world. Surely the people of America, the workers, if they know about these crimes must condemn them. The American workers seldom get the truth from their newspapers, magazines, and radios which are controlled by the money mad Wall Street imperialists. These warmongers do not want the people to learn the truth or they would not permit them to carry out their warmongering inhumane crimes against the people of the world. It is very clear that they are doing these inhumane crimes to expand the war and make more profits.

I was forced to be the tool of these warmongers and made to drop germ bombs and do this awful crime against the people of Korea and the Chinese Volunteers. Because I am a soldier I must follow orders and these orders came from those imperialists on Wall Street. I could not refuse to do this crime. But on the other hand I was the person who did this inhumane crime against the people, by carrying germ bombs and dropping them where innocent women and children would be the most likely victims. This is a horrible crime against the people, even the German Nazis would not use it, those people like Ilsa Koch who would make lamp shades out of human skin would not use it, but I used it for the U.S. imperialist warmongers of Wall Street. Since I have been captured by the Chinese Volunteers and I laid down my arms I have been treated far better than a person who had committed even much lesser crimes deserves to expect. But they always said after I laid down my arms that I was no longer an enemy. They explained the lenient policy toward POWs which I, brought up as I was on the propaganda lies of the Wall Street imperialists, found very difficult to understand. But the Chinese Volunteers were very patient. They issued me warm clothing against the cold, gave me excellent food, bedding and a warm place to sleep. I am eternally grateful for their kind treatment. At last, after much patience on the part of the Volunteers, I realized my crime. My own conscience bothered me a great deal, and it is very good to be rid of this burden to confess and repent.

I have realized my terrible crime against the people, I have done an inhumane thing against innocent peace loving people. I know now how wrong this crime is, and I ask that the people can see it in their hearts to forgive me for this crime. It was a crime against all the peace loving people of the world and one which should surely be condemed by all peace loving people. I ask forgiveness from all people who want peace because my crime has been against them.

"The accepted vectors of ricketssial diseases are lice, ticks and mites. So far as known, flies do not transmit typhus fever as they do not normally carry pathogenic rickettsiae. The transmission of typhoid fever requires no insect vector except flies which may serve as mechanical carriers of various virulent micro-organisms on account of their habitual contact with fecal matter. Certainly mosquitoes are not vectors of typhoid fever. Some of the statements given by this prisoner concerning the transmission of infectious diseases are not consistent with current medical knowledge. However, the prisoner in question, not being a medical man, cannot be expected to know or remember everything about diesase transmission. Thus it is also natural that he spelled and wrote encyphilitis for encephalitis."

How I Was Forced To Take Part in the Inhume Bacteriological Warfare Launched By the U.S. Wall Street

I am John Quinn, a 1st/Lt in the United States Air Force, serial no. 17993A. I am 29 years old I joined the Air Force when I was 26 in February 16, of 1948. My home is in Pasadena, California. After I graduated from Aviation Cadets in February 25, 1949, I was assigned to the Air University They sent me through a six weeks course on how to teach called the Academic Instructors Course after I finished they assigned me to the Academic Instructors Division as a staff member. My job was training aide officer, to teach people how to make good use of pictures, charts, movies and slides in their instruction I was teaching there when I got my orders to the Far East Air Forces for further assignment to fly B-26s in Korea I was told to report first on ~~October~~ August 25 to Langley Air Force Base to learn to fly B-26s. I was there for 8 weeks. We were sent from there to

Camp Stoneman for processing. At Camp Stoneman I was innoculated for Typhoid fever, Typhus, Cholera, and Smallpox. We left the United States by airplane and arrived in Japan on 27 November 1952. We arrived at Haeneda Air Terminal and taken to Fosshu, Area B, to await being sent to Korea. We were there until the 29th of November and then sent by train to Ashia Air Base in Southern Japan. It was an overnight trip by train and we arrived on the 30th. The same day we were sent by C-47 to Kunsan Air Base in Korea. I was assigned to the 8th Squadron, 3rd Group, of the 3rd Bomb wing. The 3rd Group is composed of 3 squadrons, 8th, 90th, and 13th and is the only group at Kunsan

On December 17, 1951 I reported to the 8th Squadron orderly room and saw my name on the bulletin board to attend a lecture the next day at 9 o'clock The next day Larson, a navigator who was also on the list, and I went to the lecture The lecture was given in the ground School building in a large room. Filled the room would seat 30 people. There were 20 people in the room, all pilots and navigators In addition to Larson and myself were Roberts 2nd Lt Schwartz 1st Lt, Rogers 1st Lt, Watson 1st Lt Duffy-Capt Long-Capt, all navigators Howarth-Capt, Sand-Capt, Schmidt 1st Lt, Beegan Capt. Robertson-Capt, McAllister 1st Lt all pilots Larson and I had been drinking coffee and arrived a few minutes late the others were already there. The Capt that was talking seemed very displeased that we were late and repeated for us that the lecture that we were to receive was considered very important and highly secret. That we were to pay close attention to everything that was told us but not to discuss the lecture later - even among ourselves. He said the lecturer had come from Japan and was an expert in his field. Then he introduced the lecturer, a civilian, as Mr Ashfork. Mr Ashfork was a middle aged man, 40 years old, slender, 5 ft 10", and losing most of his hair.

He started his lecture by telling us that his lecture was on Biological warfare. He said that it was a terrible thing to contemplate but in this day of the atom bomb when science was making such rapid strides, that we must be prepared for any turn of events He said that we never know what turn events might take in the future. and that we must be ready to defend ourselves, we must also know how to carry out Bacteriological warfare ourselves in case it proved necessary He said that he had spent many years studying germ warfare and that he would give us as much information as he thought we needed

I copied off the board our route assignment. which was Sariwon. to Pyongyang and our time of take off which was 2:30 in the morning. The regular briefing started.

The regular briefing consists of the operations officer telling us that everything we are to hear is secret and to be treated as such - not to be discussed except among ourselves. Then the intellegence officer, ~~gave~~ gave a picture of what traffic was sighted the night before and how many were damaged and destroyed. The Army liason officer explained the front line situation and the weather officer described the weather to us. Other information, winds and temperatures the navigator ~~taken~~ copied off the board In every respect this seemed like it was to be a regular mission

Rogers, Sayer, and myself met in group operations at 5 minutes after 1 and I went into the little room where the alert operations officer slayed at night, Capt Reynolds was on duty

I gave him our names and he told me that I had a special mission. He said that before I did anything else I was to drop my wing bombs as close to Pyongyang as I dared get. He indicated a place on the wall map that he stuck a red pin into which was 5 miles south of Pyongyang and 3 miles east of the main highway. He said that we should then continue with our regular mission and finish it as soon as possible and report back to the intelligence section. He said that I should drop the bombs from 200 ft or lower if possible and for me not to worry about them exploding that they would be duds. I asked him what it was all about.

remembering the lectures we'd been given on germ bombs, but he said he didn't know and it would be best just to do as instructed and not worry about why or what. I thought it was germ bombs.

When we went out to the airplane we were met by a guard and then I was sure they were germ bombs. He said not to worry about the wing bombs, they'd already been taken care of. But I looked up at them when I was inspecting the airplane and noted that what the navigator said "the wing bombs don't have any fuzes" was correct. We both looked at each other and I said orders are orders and we left it at that, & told him where we were to drop them and he marked it on his map.

We took off at 2:25 and arrived just south of Pyongyand at 3:30. I turned east from the road, just south of the bridge, and when we reached 200 ft Rogers said this ought to be it and I dropped the four wing bombs, one at a time, in rapid succession. They were duds. We both knew then for sure they were germ bombs.

We finished the rest of the mission by 4:15 and landed back at Kunsan at 5:10. We left the airplane and after turning in our equipment and reporting that the plane was OK we went directly to the intellegence section in group operations for de-briefing. We reported that we had dropped four bombs where we had been told at 200 ft and that they were all duds. The sgt took this down to give to intellegence that next morning.

On January 10th I was briefed on a regular mission as usual to fly between Kunuri and Kangye at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. My crew was Schwartz 1st navigator and Sayer Sgt. engineer. Our take off time was 2 o'clock the next morning. This briefing was routine. When we reported at 12:30 to operations I went in as usual to check off our names and was told again that I had a special mission Capt. Reynolds was again on duty. He remembered that I had already had one special mission with duds so he referred to that and told me this would be the same type of of mission. That this time I only had two duds and that I should drop them North-east of Kunuri and he showed me the place on the wall map which was 3 miles North of Kunuri and 5 miles east of the railroad track. Again we were met by a guard at the airplane and told that the wing bombs had been taken care of. I noticed that again the two outboard bombs had no fuzes. I told Schwartz where we were to make the special drop and we knew we had germ bombs. We took off at 2 o'clock and arrived over Kuriuri at 3:25 I turned when Schwartz told me to and let down to 200 ft. and dropped the bombs. They were duds.

We finished up the rest of the mission as quickly as possible and started back to Kunsan, at 4:10. We landed back at Kunsan at 5:25 and after turning in our equipment and telling them the airplane was OK we went to the intellegence section in operations and reported having dropped two duds and where we dropped them. The Sgt made a note of this to give to the intellegence.

— On the 14th of December I noticed my name on the bulletin board to attend a lecture the next morning at 9 o'clock in the ground school building. I was there at 9 o'clock in the large room with 25 other Officers, pilots and navigators. Beeson, Capt. Schmidt 1st/Lt, Song Capt, Sand Capt., Howarth Larson 1st/Lt Capt. Schwartz 1st/Lt, Roberts 2nd/Lt, Watson 1st/Lt were there. Maj Allen, base operations officer was the senior officer present and introduced the lecturer. He said that this lecture was important and secret. He said that the lecturer, Mr Clark was an emminent physicist in the field of nuclear research and that he was there to explain some about atomic warfare to us. He said Mr Clark had come from Japan.

The lecturer started by saying that the science of atomic warfare had advanced a long ways since the bombs that were dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The days when these bombs could only be carried by B-29s was over. Bombs of that size were now many times (he didn't say how many) as powerful as they were then. That bombs could now be made almost any size they wished to make them. He said that they had conducted experiments in the United States on what he called the "baby" atom bomb and that they were doing further work so that they could be used as artillery as well as bombs. He said that work on a mortar shell with an atomic warhead was nearly perfected for use. He said that much progress was being made on the hydrogen bomb which would be a thousand times more powerful than the types of atom bombs we now had. He said that these bombs, a single one, could completely level a city like New York. Then he told us that there were various ways of using atom bombs. They could be dropped to explode under ground and spread radio active dust over a large area. This dust is deadly to any living thing it comes in contact with and the radio activity lingers many weeks. He said that the bombs could be dropped by parachute to explode in the air as they were at Hiroshima and Nagasaki and in this way the heat and blast effect is more deadly, that the radio activity is not so persistent and most of it blows away and disperses in the air He said that the bombs could be exploded deep under water and this could be used an cities near the coast That it would lift most of the water out of any known port, the deeper the better, and the water would be radio active and rain down on the city. Besides that there would still be the blast effect and a tidal wave would rush in to fill up the harbour and do much damage. He said that experimentation had been done on radio active clouds which would hold radio activity for a long time and would be deadly wherever it rained.

He said that experiments on the smaller atom weapons (bombs) had been carried out in ~~in the~~ Nevada, United States, with troops in the fields near the blast - about 2 miles away, and that no one had been hurt This was because the explosions had been small and proper precautions had been taken He said that they had all been clothed well and were in deep fox holes so that their head were 2 to 3 ft below the top of the fox hole. This was a very necessary precaution, he said, and we should understand why.

The atom bomb gives off three rays, he said. When a bomb goes off there is first very much heat created, the center of the blast is many millions of degrees as hot as the sun, and this heat wave extends outward from a half mile to many miles depending on the size of the blast. Next there is the shock wave which is much longer in duration than a high explosive blast. And next there is the radio activity. If you are far enough away from the blast not to be killed outright the fox hole will protect you against both the heat wave and the blast effect, and also against radio activity unlss it comes in as dust or rain. The three rays given off by the atom bomb are alpha, beta, and gama. The alpha and beta only last during the eplasion and if you are safe from the searing heat of the blast, then ever a shirt, especially a light coloured shirt, is sufficient to keep the alpha and beta rays from burning you wherever you don't have clothes like hands, neck, face, that part will be burned that is facing the blast when the bomb goes off The gama rays last for a longer time depending on the type of blast, but a fox hole is good protection against this altho clothes are not of any use. Only lead or a thick layer of dirt will stop these gama rays which go thru everything just like x-rays and destroy the life of bones and cause blood to break down. Then he showed us pictures of how the fox holes must be dug.

He said that a half inch of lead would stop the gama rays, but it took at least two feet of dirt to stop them. They could penetrate almost two feet of dirt. The area around the blast continues to give off gamma rays because those objects which are strongly effected by the gama rays also become radio-active and give off these rays. It would be very dangerous to touch especially metal objects which were in the near vicinity of the blast. He said that most of the radio active gamma rays are carried off in a large cloud in an air burst and dispersed by the winds. He showed us a picture of this.

He said that although after being dispersed they would not be harmful to people, that a report had come from a photographic laboratory in New York, several days after the experiments in Nevada, that much of their photographic paper showed signs of having been exposed to gamma rays. These rays had traveled in clouds all the way across the United States and exposed this paper. He said that because of most of these rays being carried off in the radio active cloud it was quite possible to safely enter an area after an air burst provided you didn't stay too long. However, except when absolutely necessary to enter for some reason it was best to wait until trained people could go in first with geiger counters. If you must go in, he said don't touch metal objects. He said that they had a pocket radiation detector that could be carried by everyone that would indicate when you had been in the area as long as was safe. He showed us this object which was the same size as a pack of cigarettes but only ¼" thick. It had an opening in the middle 1/4" high and 2" long covered with a thin piece of lead This lead could be slid out of the way and expose the opening Behind the lead was a piece of photographic paper which would turn drark when exposed to radio-activity. It also had on the outside a colour with which to match the coular of the paper so that when they matched you could leave the area, otherwise you would get too much radio-activity and it would be dangerous. After you go in once you can't go back again.

when you enter the area you raise the lead shield and then watch the colour of the opening and compare it to the dark colour and leave when theyre the same

Next he told us that these pocket indicators were only necessary substitutes for Giegar Counter which were much more accurate. The Giegar Counter works like a radio and when it is near radio-activity you can hear it in ear phones connected to the Giegar counter. Also it has a little meter which looks like an amp meter in a car to tell how much radio activity is present. He said it was measured in radiotrons, or some term like that. Then he let each of us file up and put the earphones on and listen as he brought a piece of radioactive material near the Giegar Counter at first the ticking was very slow but as the piece came close the ticking got very fast until it sounded like a purr, one tick mixed with the next.

The lecture lasted from 9 o'clock to 10:30.

It is very clear from these facts that the capitalistic wall street war monger in their greed, their ruthless greed, have caused this horrible crime of Bacteriological warfare to be launched in order to get more money for themselves and in the hope of spreading this war. Even their desire to start a third world war by adding atomic warfare to their list of inhumane crimes is indicated. These imperialists will stop at nothing to get more money in their pockets and the more war the more they make. They do not care about the innocent people of the world. Surley the people of America, the workers, if they know about these crimes must condem them. The American workers seldom get the truth from their newspapers, magazines, and radios which are controled by the money mad wall street imperialists. These war mongers do not want the people to learn the truth or they would not permit them to carry out their war mongering inhumane crimes against the people of the world. It is very clear that they are doing these inhumane crimes to expand the war and make more profits.

I was forced to be the tool of these war mongers and made to drop germ bombs and do this awful crime against the people of Korea and the Chinese Volunteers. 1. cause I am a soldier I must follow orders and these orders came from those imperialists on wall Street. I could not refuse to do this crime. But on the other hand I was the person who did this inhumane crime against the people, by carrying germ bombs and dropping them where innocent women and children would be the most likely victims. This is a horrible crime against the people, even the German Nazis would not use it, those people like Ilsa Koch who would make lamp shades out of human skin would not use it, but I used it for the U.S. imperialist warmongers of wall street. Since I have been captured by the Chinese volunteers and I laid down my arms I have been treated far better than a person who had committed even much lesser crimes deserves to expect But they always said after I laid down my arms that I was no longer an enemy. They explained the lenient policy toward POWs which I, brought up as I was on the propaganda lies of the Wall Street imperialists, found very difficult to understand. But the Chinese volunteers were very patient. They issued me warm clothing against the cold, gave me excellent food, bedding, and a warm place to sleep. I am eternally grateful for their kind treatment. At last, after much patience on the part of the volunteers I realized my crime. My own concience bothered me a great deal, and it is very good to be rid of this burden, to confess and repent.

I have realized my terrible crime against the people, I have done an inhume thing against innocent peace loving people I know now how wrong this crime is, and I ask that the people can see it in their hearts to forgive me for this crime It was a crime against all the peace loving people of the world and one which should surely be condemed by all peace loving people. I ask forgiveness from all people who want peace because my crime has been against them.

HOW I WAS FORCED TO TAKE PART IN BACTERIOLOGICAL WARFARE BY THE U.S. WALL STREET

(A statement broadcast by John Quinn on April 14, 1952)

I am John Quinn, 1st Lt. U.S. Air Force, serial No. 17993A, age 29, from California. I joined the Air Force in February 1948, aviation cadets. After graduation I was assigned to the Air University as an instructor and was sent later to Korea to Kunsan on December 1, 1951. I was assigned to the 3rd Bomb Wing, 3rd Group, 8th Squadron, to fly B-26s.

I was shot down on January 13, 1952 and captured by the Chinese People's Volunteers 10 miles S.W. of Sunan. When I laid down my arms they gave me my first realization of the lenient policy treatment. They gave me good food, treated me kindly, gave me warm clothes, and blankets. Their kind treatment made me realize that the Chinese People's Volunteers are truly a peace loving people. The Volunteers explained many times their lenient policy of POWs to me, they were patient and kind and realized it was difficult for me to understand such a policy. But finally I did realize they were a peace loving people and I was blamed by my conscience and good will for the crimes I had committed against them and the peace loving people of Korea. I wished to confess my crime and repent this crime against these people.

On December 18, 1951, I attended a lecture on Bacteriological Warfare from 9 o'clock until 11 o'clock. It was given by Mr. Ashfork from Japan, in the ground school building. 20 pilots and navigators were there. Larson 1st Lt., Duffy Capt., Roberts 2nd Lt., Rogers 1st Lt., Schwarz 1st Lt., Schmidt 1st Lt., Howarth Capt., Beeson Capt., Land Capt., Long Capt. were there. We were told that the lecture was very important and highly secret. Then the lecturer gave us the lecture which dealt with Bacteriological Warfare and how it could be carried out by bombing B-26s. He said it could be done by the Navy like laying a smoke screen or by low flying jet aircraft using dust, and then he told us about bombing. He told us about bombs that carried germs which would split open when they hit the ground, and about bombs on which the tail would break off, and about bombs with doors in the tail which opened when the bombs struck the ground. He showed us pictures of these three and mentioned a bomb that opeend in the air and spread boxes of germs.

He told us about the insects that carry germs and explained how malaria was carried by mosquitoes, and other different germs carried by insects. He told us how to defend ourselves against these germs in case they got back into South Korea. He told us these bombs would not explode, they would be duds. On December 31st the operations officer told us in regular briefing to watch for all duds and report them to the intellegence section.

On January the 3rd just before take off I was told by Capt Reynolds in operations that I had a special mission to drop 4 duds S.E. of Pyongyang. My navigator was Rogers 1st Lt. and Sayer Sgt. was engineer. We took off at 2:25 and dropped the bombs at 3:30. We dropped these bombs 5 miles south of Pyongyang and 3 miles east of the highway bridge. We completed the mission hurriedly and reported back to intellegence about dropping these duds—germs bombs. On the 10th of January we were again briefed on a special mission to drop two duds—germ bombs, 3 miles north of Kunuri and 5 miles east of the railroad. We took off at 2 o'clock and dropped these two bombs at 3:25. Schwartz 1st Lt. was navigator and Sayer Sgt. was engineer. We finished the mission quickly and reported to intellegence that we had dropped these duds.

On the 15th of December I also attended a lecture on atomic warfare, which was important and secret, given in the ground school building by Mr. Clark from Japan. There were 25 pilots and navigators in the room. Schwartz 1st Lt., Larson 1st Lt., Land Capt., Long Capt., Schmidt 1st Lt., Roberts 2nd Lt., Allen Maj. The lecture was about the different sizes of bombs, different ways of their exploding—under ground, in the air, under water. He told us about the different rays, especially gamma rays, and how to protect ourselves. He told us about giegar counters and about little pocket radioactivity indicators. He told us about experiments conducted in the U.S. The lecture lasted from 9 to 10:30.

From these facts it is very clear to see that the U.S. Wall Street is using germ warfare and even preparing to use atomic warfare in order to expand the war and make more profits. I was forced by these warmongers of Wall Street to commit the horrible crime against the people of dropping germ bombs on peace loving people. This inhumane crime perpetrated by these U.S. Wall Street imperialists must be condemned by all peace loving people with good will and conscience in the world. The American people who are kept from knowing the truth by the greedy capitalists of Wall Street must certainly condemn this crime against the people of the world when they know the truth. Even the German Nazis would not do this terrible crime, but it has been done by the U.S. Wall Street.

I was forced to do these things because I am a soldier and must obey orders. But I realize that it was I who did this crime. I am condemned by my own conscience and good will for committing this crime against the people. Only because I was forced by these Wall Street sadists can I ask the people to forgive me this inhumane crime. I know I have been guilty of a most terrible crime, I realize now that I was a tool of Wall Street. I ask that the people forgive me for this crime. I hope that the peace loving people all over the world will arise and condemn this crime of germ bombs and Bacteriological Warfare which has been started by the U.S. imperialists of Wall Street, I hope that the American people learn the truth and rise up against these war mongers. Wall Street must not be allowed to bring on a third world war which would be a disaster to all the peace loving people of the world

CONFIRMATION OF JOHN QUINN'S DEPOSITION BY HIS WIFE

Below we give the text of an International News Service (U.S.) message and of a news story which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune of May 9th. In both of these Mrs Quinn, the wife of the captured airman, makes statements which, contrary to the intention of these Press organs, merely confirms the facts given by her husband.

First of all, here is the I.N.S. dispatch from Los Angeles, May 7th. It states:

"A Chinese Communist radio broadcast that quoted an American airman as 'confessing' that he dropped germ bombs on Korean troops was branded a lie today by the pilot's family. Mrs Mildred Quinn, 29, wife of pilot First Lieutenant John Quinn, 30, said:

" 'My husband did not go overseas until last November. In August we were still together at Langley Field, Virginia.'

"The Red broadcast claimed First Lieutenant Quinn confessed he attended a 'bacteriological warfare school' in Japan in August."

On May 9th, the "New York Herald Tribune" carried the following story headlined:

WIFE OF FLYER DENIES HE WAS IN GERM ATTACK—Says He Wasn't in Korea At Time; Calls Reported Confession a 'Silly Lie'

By The United Press

ALTEDENA. Calif. May 8—

Mrs Mildred Quinn, wife of an American flyer accused by the Chinese Communists of "confessing" he took part in germ-bomb raids on Korea, calls the charge a "silly lie".

A Communist broadcast quoted Lt. John Quinn, 29, as "confessing" he took part in germ-bomb raids and saying he attended "bacteriological warfare school" in Tokyo last August.

"The Communists overlooked one thing," Mrs Quinn said. "They apparently didn't know that in August my husband was at Langley Field Va. They have him where he wasn't. It's all a silly lie."

In the two versions Mrs Quinn is quoted as stating two facts—

(1) "My husband did not go overseas until last November."

(2) "... in August my husband was at Langley Field Va."

Here is the passage (as given in this book on P. 25) from the deposition of John Quinn which does not conflict, but in fact is confirmed by his wife's statements:

"I was told to report, on August 25, to Langley Air Force base to learn to fly B-26s. I was there for eight weeks. We were sent from there to camp Stoneman for processing. At camp Stoneman I was inoculated for typhoid fever, typhus, cholera and small pox. We left the United States by airplane and arrived in Japan on 27th November, 1951." (Our emphasis.)

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

NO 4 DECEMBER 1953

An International Meeting—World Council's Proposal To Organisations and Personalities Desiring An Easing of Tension

The World Council held its session in Vienna on November 23rd-28th. Council members from 59 countries were present and more than 150 personalities took part as guests in the work of the session.

The first results of the current world campaign for negotiation and agreement came out in the discussion which made it clear that the aim of this campaign has met with wide support. It showed, too, that in all countries the campaign is being conducted around precise objectives. The examination of these questions gave rise to a broad exchange of views.

In the debate on the major problems which are responsible for international tension, the World Council paid particular attention to their settlement. Recent developments in the international situation have shown that a settlement can only be reached by means of negotiation and the conclusion of agreements acceptable to all.

This idea, which the World Council has always upheld, is today finding fresh support in all countries and among people in all walks of life. Public opinion is becoming more and more favourable to the peaceful settlement of international differences. The desire to see an end to the Cold War is growing and, at the same time, the idea of the need for a meeting between the Great Powers is gaining ground. As a result, views are being expressed by political, religious, social and cultural organisations and personalities who, while they have no relations with the Peace Movement, give their support—as the Peace Movement does—to solutions which lead to a genuine relaxation of tension.

These facts led the World Council to propose joint preparation of an International Meeting to these organisations and personalities.

Our President, Professor Joliot-Curie, in his opening speech proposed that the session "examine the best way of bringing about an International Meeting for Peace in 1954 and the measures and steps to be taken." To make the point clearer, he added:

"The Meeting will bring together qualified representatives of the most diverse political trends and religious creeds, from all walks of life and from every country. It should have a single aim and, for myself, I would propose that it should be the relaxation of international tension."

Many speakers gave their opinion on this proposal during the discussion. Pastor Niemoller stated:

"It has been said here, at this Vienna session, that the horizon of the World Peace Movement should be extended beyond the organisation itself to include all trends near to us, so as to achieve the maximum effect through the participation of the greatest possible number of the forces working for Peace and I believe that the religious communities of the world have a great task to accomplish here."

Snr. Abel Chermont, President of the Brazilian Peace Movement, had this to say:

"In the present world situation, we are convinced that what is called for is a meeting, on an absolutely equal footing, of all forces who have an interest in the relaxation of international tension, whatever may be their views and irrespective of past differences."

Major-General Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey said:

"The World Council of Peace will be carrying through a project of great significance for the cause of Peace, by providing a common meeting-place for the representatives of all groups, all organisations and all leading personalities working in their own separate ways for Peace. This pooling of ideas, resources and efforts should prove of the greatest value in bringing respite to a distraught world."

Professor Joliot-Curie's proposal was also discussed at length in the Commissions. The World Council and its guests together adopted the "Message to Organisations and Personalities Desiring A Relaxation of International Tension."

In this Message, the World Council clarifies its attitude to such a Meeting. In its desire to remove any obstacles which might hinder the participation or support of organisations or personalities interested in the meeting, it refrained from laying down any rules. It expressed its point of view on the main problems of the hour in its General Resolution, but it does not subordinate the holding of the Meeting to acceptance of its point of view. It merely desires that a meeting of this nature, which would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension, should be held in the near future.

The unanimous decisions on this point reached by the World Council enabled Signor Pietro Nenni, in his closing speech, to state:

"Our World Council of Peace, fully conscious of its responsibility, has just taken the initiative in calling for an International Meeting of all those desiring to speed negotiation so as to ease international tension."

The Vice-president of the World Council pointed out that the development and influence of the current campaign are the essential conditions for the success of the proposed meeting, and concluded with these words:

"A new vista of work is thereby given to all National Peace Committees. The achievements of each will mark the progress of Peace and enable us to meet again, here or elsewhere, a few months hence with even more confidence in the outcome of the struggle, which is not ours alone but that of all justice and Peaceloving humanity."

A MESSAGE FROM THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO ALL ORGANISATIONS AND PERSONALITIES DESIRING A RELAXATION OF INTERNATIONAL TENSION

The armistice concluded in Korea has given an uneasy world the hope at last of seeing a decrease in tension between the Great Powers. But the negotiations have come up against fresh obstacles.

Agreement is proving difficult on other questions of vital importance to the Peace of the world.

Yet the peoples long for a relaxation of international tension. The economic shackles and political pressures accompanying this tension are becoming increasingly difficult to bear.

We believe it is possible to rescue the world from this condition.

Today, a wide range of political and social forces in all countries are working for an improvement in international relations.

New voices among eminent men of science, religion and politics are raised in condemnation of the use of weapons of mass extermination. Public opinion is becoming alarmed at the growing accumulation of armaments of all types.

All reasonable people appreciate that it is not possible to settle problems of world importance or guarantee implementation of any agreement made, without the participation of the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Responsible representatives of all political groups in most of the countries of Western Europe have made a public stand against the revival of German militarism in any form.

In these circumstances, we think on opportunity should be given for all organisations or personalities who are striving for the relaxation of international tension, to concentrate their efforts on this question. Our own viewpoint on the problem is set out in the resolution passed in Vienna by the World Council of Peace on November 28th, 1953.

Joint preparation for a meeting allowing the free exchange of all viewpoints and the study of possible solutions is now needed.

An international meeting of this nature, held as soon as possible, would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension.

(Vienna, November 23rd-28th 1953)

GENERAL RESOLUTION OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The Budapest Appeal for negotiation, launched by the World Council of Peace, has had profound repercussions and has won the widest support. As a result of this campaign, the idea of settling international differences by agreements acceptable to all is daily winning ground and bearing fruit.

In Korea, the ending of hostilities was a victory for the cause of Peace.

On Germany, the latest exchange of Notes between the Great Powers proves that the holding of a Four Power Conference in the near future is possible.

On Indochina, the idea of a cease-fire and a peaceful settlement is making progress both in France and Viet-Nam.

But the forces opposed to the easing of international tension are using the word "negotiation" to veil plans for prolonging the Cold War. It is not employing negotiation, for one side to confront the other with accomplished facts; it is not desiring negotiation, to seek to create conditions which must make it fail.

In both Asia and Europe there are situations and conflicts which represent a special danger to World Peace.

In Korea, negotiations are in danger. The attempt to exclude neutral nations, especially India, from a Political Conference dealing with specifically Asian interests, can wreck the negotiations. The peoples will not allow hostilities in Korea to be resumed.

The interests of European security demand the earliest possible settlement of the German problem. This settlement is only possible by agreement between the Four Powers—the United States, the USSR, Great Britain and France. The main obstacle which stands in the way of this agreement is the intention of one side to rebuild German militarism and to bring Germany into a war coalition directed against the other.

The World Council of Peace calls upon the peoples of Europe to prevent the ratification of the "European Army" treaties and the revival of German militarism in any shape or form. This would open the way to a Four Power agreement on the German problem—an agreement that would offer the German people the prospect of a peaceful future and give all the peoples of Europe a guarantee against the revival of aggressive forces in Germany.

The war between France and Viet-Nam, which has been raging for seven years, can only be ended by direct negotiations between the belligerents.

The World Council of Peace welcomes the proposal made in this direction by the Vietnamese delegation and supported by the Chinese delegation. This proposal, to which the French delegation made a favourable reply, could serve as a basis for a settlement.

The World Council of Peace has always maintained that foreign interference, occupation by foreign troops and the establishment of military bases on foreign soil, constitute a threat both to the peoples' independence and to Peace.

Such a policy is being extended in the Near and Middle East, Latin America and Africa. In Europe it is exemplified particularly in the plan for the European Defence Community and the installation of atomic bases in Spain; in Asia, in the shape of foreign occupation, in the intensified re-armament of Japan and in the attempts of the United States to set up military bases in Pakistan. This latest effort threatens to create a war psychosis amongst hundreds of millions of people in yet another part of the world.

The armaments drive and the manufacture of ever more powerful weapons of mass destruction impose an intolerable burden on the world and constitute a terrible menace.

The World Council of Peace has drawn the attention of the world to this problem by its campaign for the Stockholm Appeal and its Warsaw resolutions. It regrets that the United Nations Organisation has not yet reached agreement on these matters and hopes that efforts to bring about the absolute prohibition of atomic and biological weapons and a substantial reduction of all armaments under effective control will continue.

Finally, the World Council of Peace emphasises that, whilst negotiation must be applied to each particular problem, it considers, as it always has, that a Five Power Conference is still the best method for achieving a relaxation of international tension.

The Conference would be able, on the initiative of any of the Powers, to take up any problem felt to be a cause of international tension and to seek general agreements acceptable to all.

The persistent refusal to grant the People's Republic of China her rightful place in the councils of the world is an obstacle to this Five Power Conference. This refusal is contrary to the interests of all States and is judged more and more severaly by world opinion.

The Charter of the United Nations gives the peoples an instrument able to bring about a lasting Peace and it is for the peoples to see that it is respected. The infringements of the Charter have plunged the world into great difficulties. A return to the letter and the spirit of the Charter would help the peoples to ensure their security and independence. It would allow real co-operation between the nations in developing their economic resources, their wellbeing and their culture.

The anxiety and fear, the poverty and the difficulties of everyday life inflicted upon the peoples by the Cold War and the armaments drive, can and must be eliminated by the action of the peoples.

In the last resort, Peace depends upon the people.

Vienna, November 28th, 1953.

SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DIFFERENCES BY AGREEMENTS ACCEPTABLE TO ALL

The only successful negotiation is that which achieves Peace

Professor FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE (France)

President of the World Council of Peace

"Recent events provide good examples of the nature and variety of the manœuvres set afoot to delay and prevent negotiation. They enable us to perceive that certain proposals for negotiation can be put forward with aims that are very different from those which the peoples so ardently desire—that is to say, a sincere search for agreed solutions acceptable to all. As we see it, the only successful negotiation is that which achieves Peace.

"The aim of dividing the world permanently into two hostile blocs tied to the arms drive which is ruining the peoples, is today clashing with the desire for negotiation. It is therefore convenient for those who find the fulfilment of their ambition to dominate obstructed by this desire for negotiation, not to make a frontal attack but, by exploiting this desire, to try and show that negotiation is impossible. They claim that they want to negotiate, but do not wish to carry this negotiation through except under conditions which make failure inevitable, thereby creating a situation more conducive to the use of force. The peoples see in negotiation a means of reducing and, later, of eliminating international tension, a means of stopping armed conflicts, of settling differences and of making possible the organisation of disarmament. There are others who wish, through negotiations undertaken with the deliberate intention of wrecking them, to dash the hopes of the peoples and remove the last obstacles which prevent them from cutting the world in two and thereby engendering war.

"The main object of the manœuvres carried out over the last months is to create utter disillusionment among the people who, since the Korean armistice, placed such high hopes on the success of future negotiation. Furthermore, knowing and fearing the great forces which the Budapest Appeal can bring into action, those who oppose an easing of international tension aimed at making the disillusioned public place responsibility for the failure. These manœuvres, which are—to put it briefly—intended to gain wide support for a tough policy, will disappoint those who instigated them. The hopes born of the successful action to stop the war in Korea cannot easily be destroyed. Aware of the dangers, have we not already put people on their guard against such manœuvres by making known the resolution passed by our Bureau here in Vienna last September? By persevering in this way, so that none may fall into the dangerous traps which have in the past been set and which will continue to be set for the people, we shall succeed in making this great hope—honest negotiation—a reality. Negotiation undertaken in good faith should permit successful settlement of the main differences. All the problems cannot be studied simultaneously, but it must be clearly understood that the solutions adopted for each one of them are not independent of each other and that, in consequence, it is inadmissible that, prior to the consideration of a question, a predetermined solution to another question should have been arrived at by an intransigent group of Powers.

"It is nevertheless in such a manner that we have seen the Western Powers proposing a Conference for the solution of the German problem after prior tri-partite conferences had laid down conditions accepted by Chancellor Adenauer and which envisaged, in one way or another, a rearmed Germany which would be drawn into the Atlantic coalition.

"The problems of the Political Conference in Korea and those relative to the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction and disarmament are the object of similar manœuvres.

"Though they are in a minority, those who conduct this policy are still supported by many honest people and manage, what is more, to create confusion in others, thus rendering them powerless to act. It is all these honest people that we must convince. It would be vain to approach the minority directing this policy.

"It is in striving to convince the honest people who support this 'tough' policy, that we shall help to throw it overboard."

Negotiation for agreement

ILYA EHRENBURG (USSR)

"We have in the past supported, and we continue to support the idea of negotiation, for without negotiation no agreement is possible. But if there cannot be agreement without negotiation there can, on the other hand, be negotiation without agreement; there can be proposals for negotiation the aim of which is to compromise the very idea of agreement; there can be talks on negotiation the aim of which is to compromise the very idea of negotiation. We are now confronted with desperate attempts to deceive millions of Peace-loving people and to veil the feverish preparation for a terrible war with words dear to all friends of Peace."

Whoever wants Peace must be ready to reach agreement with his opponent

Pastor MARTIN NIEMOLLER (Germany)

"I said in Budapest last June: 'Two things are clear to me—whoever desires Peace, must also be prepared to come to an understanding with his opponent,' and further: 'Whoever desires Peace, that is, whoever is really prepared to come to an understanding with his opponent, must also be prepared to talk with his opponent and must strive for such talks with all the means at his disposal.'"

The method of genuine negotiation will ultimately prevail

Major-General Sir SAHIB SINGH SOKHEY (India)

Former Assistant Director-General of the World Health Organisation

"When we met in Budapest, the Korean armistice was on the point of being concluded. The universal demand for Peace by the people had its effect and brought about a peaceful end to the war which was threatening to deteriorate into another world war.

"We rightly concluded that if the Korean hostilities could be terminated by a negotiated armistice, so could all other international tensions. A lot of things have happened since we met in Budapest which seem on the whole to worsen the international tensions. But I believe that our conclusion still holds good . . .

"That the method of genuine negotiation will ultimately prevail, I have little doubt. But we cannot take it as inevitable. We must work for it. What is happening in Korea and elsewhere underlines the call of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace to the people to be on the alert."

To lay down conditions before negotiating is to render negotiation meaningless

General HERIBERTO JARA CORONA
(Mexico)

"If we try to arrange a meeting with the precise aim of solving all the existing problems which threaten Peace, but if at the same time one of the Powers starts by laying down conditions and demanding that these be accepted beforehand as a proof of good faith—and these conditions may embrace all the problems that demand an immediate meeting—then such a meeting will no longer have any object, unless it is only wanted in order to ratify what has been laid down in advance. But this would not be possible either, because every Government has the institutions appropriate to this purpose within its own State system.

"In any case, the fact that even the most recalcitrant are now examining the question, shows that it no longer arouses their scorn. This is highly significant for the cause of Peace."

Bulgaria is ready to settle all differences with neighbour States

GEORGI NADYAKOV
(Bulgaria)

"The President of the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, Vulko Chervenkov, in his speech on the foreign and domestic policies of the country, delivered on September 8th last, on the occasion of the 9th anniversary of our liberation from the fascist yoke, expressly stated that our Government has no aggressive intention against Bulgaria's neighbours and that it is ready, through peaceful negotiation, to settle all differences with the neighbouring States of Turkey, Greece and Yugoslavia.

"The re-establishing of normal diplomatic relations with Yugoslavia, the economic talks with Greece which are being carried on at the present time, together with our proposal for the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with Greece and the United States—all these concrete facts serve to demonstrate the full support given by our country to the recommendations of the World Council of Peace and the complete unity that exists between the Government and the people on the most important question of today, that of ensuring the safeguarding of world Peace through negotiation."

Small countries have need of Great Power agreement

Professor ANDRE BONNARD
(Switzerland)

"Switzerland is a small country and it is the small countries which have the greatest need of agreement between the Great Powers.

"We Swiss, as much as any other nation and even more than any other nation, are aware of our smallness and need agreement and détente. We need genuine negotiation among the Great Powers—negotiation not based upon force, not 'negotiation from strength' to use an Anglo-Saxon term, but negotiation without recourse to force."

The relaxation of international tension would open new perspectives for agreements between the peoples of Africa and Europe

GABRIEL D'ARBOUSSIER
(Senegal)

Vice-president of the World Council of Peace

"More than ever before we must exert ourselves to explain to our peoples that, without a relaxation of international tension, there can be no lasting solution to their own particular problems.

"The relaxation of international tension and the possibilities it would offer of disarmament and the resumption of commercial relations between all countries, would open new perspectives for agreements between the people of Africa and Europe which would be acceptable and beneficial to all."

Peaceful co-operation and unity

TSENDIN DAMDIN SUREN
(Mongolia)

"The spirit of our time and the peoples' will demand that the representatives of the USA, the Soviet Union, China, France and Britain co-operate in the United Nations in order to safeguard Peace and enjoy its fruits and to prevent the crows from looting them and the ravening wolves from devouring them.

"We have all seen during the last few years that the United Nations, without China, has been bumping along like a cart with a wheel missing. A Mongolian proverb says:

'A flock of birds is worth more than a prowling tiger.'

"We emphatically demand that the representatives of the Governments of the different countries in UNO stop fighting like tigers and that they work together as friends and unite in Peace."

The idea of negotiation has made great progress

PIETRO NENNI
(Italy)

Vice-president of the World Council of Peace

"Examination of the facts leads us to conclude that the idea of direct negotiation has made great headway, not only with public opinion but also with numerous Governments; that there is a certain relaxation of tension and a tendency to consider that the danger of the Cold War being transformed into a hot war is less today than it was two years ago. Yet nothing has happened which can be considered as a reversal of the policy followed since 1947 and which has often led us to the verge of grave conflicts . . .

"The problem remains that of giving enough cohesion and power of action to world opinion, so that it may expose and defeat the Cold War-mongers for whom the division of the world into opposing blocs is a life and death question.

"Great progress in this direction has been made during recent years. We shall make further progress."

NO RESUMPTION OF HOSTILITIES IN KOREA

The peoples must be vigilant

Professor FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE (France)

"It was a great victory for the forces of Peace that they succeeded at last in bringing hostilities to an end by making the spirit of negotiation prevail.

"Negotiation between Americans, Chinese and Koreans was proved to be possible and resulted in an armistice agreement. This is a fact of very great significance and it made a big contribution to the relaxation of international tension. But other facts—such as the behaviour of Syngman Rhee during the armistice talks and the conclusion of separate agreements between him and the United States and the sixteen Powers who took part in the Korean war under US command—were fraught with future difficulties. These acts could only impede the future negotiations and in point of fact we have since seen manœuvres similar to those we condemned in relation to the German problem.

"The forces that fear the relaxation of international tension use the most diverse methods to prevent the holding of the Political Conference. The preliminary conference is continually coming up against difficulties.

"The Korean and Chinese delegates have just proposed a new plan which tends to avoid 'tough' policies at the conference table by bringing into the Political Conference neutral countries like the Soviet Union, India, Pakistan, Indonesia and Burma. This plan corresponds to the peoples' conception of negotiations and should be accepted by all the parties; pressure is being exerted to wreck it.

"Does not Dulles threaten to disregard the armistice agreements regarding the liberation of prisoners if, after a certain date, the proposals of the mechanical majority at UNO for the composition of the Political Conference are not accepted as they stand by the Koreans and Chinese? . . .

"Our immediate task is to call on the people to be vigilant so that hostilities may not be renewed in Korea and the Political Conference may find a peaceful solution of the Korean problem."

Invite the USSR, India and other neutral Asian countries to the Political Conference

HAN SUL YA (Korea)

"Everyone now sees that the armistice in Korea has contributed to the easing of international tension. It has fortified the hope for Peace of all men of goodwill and shown that it is possible to settle international conflicts and other outstanding issues through understanding between the countries concerned.

"The Korean question can and must be solved at the Political Conference which, we may surmise, will be called in the very near future.

"Our people well know that the settlement of the Korean question will strengthen the cause of Peace in the Far East and throughout the world. To the extent that neutral States of Asia are concerned in the solution of the Korean question, we consider that countries with such a great interest in it as the Soviet Union, India, Indonesia, Pakistan and Burma must be invited to take part in the Political Conference. We do not doubt that the participation of these countries will have a favourable influence on its work and will help to settle successfully the questions with which the Conference will have to deal."

MAO DUN (China)

"Although the United States Government was compelled to accept the Armistice Agreement, they have always deliberately kept the Korean armistice in an unstable condition. Immediately after the signing of the Armistice Agreement, the United States and the Syngman Rhee clique signed a so-called 'Mutual Defence Treaty' giving the United States the right to station troops indefinitely in South Korea.

"United States military aircraft and military personnel have constantly violated the Armistice Agreement and invaded the demilitarised zone. The United States is repeatedly obstructing and sabotaging the realisation of the Armistice Agreement, while Syngman Rhee almost every day threatens to 'march to the North', 'unify Korea by unilateral military actions,' 'drive the Indian custodian troops out of Korea by force.'

"On the question of the repatriation of POWs, the United States Government has repeatedly violated the terms of reference for the Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission, preventing the POWs from listening to explanations and using special agents to keep a terrorist control over them . . .

"The United States Government has consistently refused to discuss the composition of the Political Conference, because it stubbornly opposes the proposal of the Chinese and Korean Governments to invite neutral countries, especially India and other neutral countries in Asia, to take part in the conference. But the United States Government has not been able to give any reason whatsoever for its opposition.

"Since the task of the Political Conference is to settle peacefully the Korean question, which is also a question relating to Peace in Asia and the world, to discuss such an important question without permitting the participation of the neutral countries concerned, especially the neutral countries in Asia, is, we believe, entirely devoid of reason."

Major-General Sir SAHIB SINGH SOKHEY (India)

"Scarcely had the ink dried on the Armistice Agreement than the Secretary of State of the USA, Mr. John Foster Dulles, publicly condemned the activities of the Repatriation Commission and had the temerity to describe India and other nations working on it as 'so-called' neutral nations! Mr. Syngman Rhee threatened to attack the Indian Custodian Force and launched a vile campaign of slander against India and our Prime Minister himself. The UN Command handed over the prisoners-of-war to the Indian Custodian Force, obviously after having made the most detailed arrangements to ensure that the proper administration of the prisoners' camps would be made difficult.

"... Peace-loving mankind is at one in demanding that India and other Neutral Asian countries participate in the Korean Political Conference."

Report on Korea at Peace

TOKUSABURO DAN

"What moved us most was that all the reconstruction and building undertaken after the armistice show that the Korean people count on the possibility of a lasting Peace, although the threat of a new attack has not ceased to exist. In fact, the Koreans are beginning to restore school buildings, hospitals and theatres.

"For example, on the day following the armistice, they began building a large theatre on the beautiful hill of the capital; it will shortly be completed, that is to say, only four months after the cease-fire. What does this prove? It shows that the Koreans have not only the firm intention of defending world Peace side by side with all the Peace-loving peoples of the world, but also that they have profound faith in the power of the forces of Peace to defeat the forces of war."

We must prepare the way for a lasting Peace in the Far East

Dr. JAMES ENDICOTT
(Canada)

"At its meeting in Ottawa, the National Council of the Canadian Peace Congress demanded:

'Strict observance of the Korean Armistice Agreement and a round-table conference on Korea, with neutral participation, to prepare the way for lasting Peace in the Far East'."

Mr. SATTAR
(Iraq)

"The withdrawal of the UN troops and the Chinese Volunteers from Korea and the granting of the right of self-determination to the Korean people are essential prerequisites for reaching a satisfactory settlement of the Korean question. We know, too, that Peace in Korea is closely linked to Peace in Asia, particularly in the Far East. The Political Conference, with the participation of the majority of the representatives of the UN forces; the examination by this Conference of the Korean question only, to the exclusion of the other questions relating to the establishment of Peace in the Far East; the non-participation of representatives of the neutral Asian States which are interested in a general settlement of Asian problems, particularly the Korean and Japanese questions and the wars in South-east Asia; the problem of the admission to UNO and to the Security Council of the representatives of the People's Republic of China—for all these reasons the Political Conference cannot achieve its aim or justify the hopes that it will reach a definite peaceful settlement of the Korean question and establish Peace in the Far East.

"We are therefore faced with the urgent task of doing all we can to prevent a renewal of hostilities in Korea, whether or not the Political Conference obtains any success in this."

Korea shows that negotiation is possible

Pastor MARTIN NIEMOLLER
(Germany)

"The World Council of Peace and its endeavours, the world forces of Peace and public opinion have finally succeeded—and indeed I am convinced that they have succeeded—in bringing the contending parties in the difficult problem of the Korean conflict to the Conference table. This is a good omen for all future efforts.

"I believe that Korea has clearly shown that they are obliged to negotiate even if they do not really want to."

The world wants a genuine Peace

Metropolitan NIKOLAI
(USSR)

Examining the effects of the Korean armistice, the Metropolitan stated:

"We Christians, like all other Peace-loving people on Earth, are greatly inspired by this important international event because it is the first significant result of the struggle of the peoples for Peace, a first convincing demonstration of the strength of public opinion when the latter is the weapon of a moral evaluation of things.

"Now, the whole world is following with sustained attention the observation of the clauses of the armistice and is awaiting the opening of negotiations for a stable Peace in Korea ...

"We must do everything possible to see that world public opinion plays an active part in these talks by demanding the peaceful unification of Korea and the withdrawal of all foreign troops. It is necessary that all Christian churches and religious organisations in the USA take a stand on this question and help the American people to make their Government recognise the Korean people's right to self-determination."

Foreign troops should be withdrawn from Korea

Professor
FELIPE SALAZAR SANTOS
(Colombia)

"Quite a few Latin American countries have already begun to move. In various ways public opinion is demanding that the Governments embark on a new political course at UNO and that they instruct their delegates to vote more in accordance with the ideas they represent. In Colombia, for example, the President of the Republic received many petitions, signed by people of various trends and from all walks of life, demanding the return of our troops and naval units which are still in Korea."

German rearmament compromises international security

Professor FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE (France)

In his opening speech the President dealt in detail with the essential characteristics of the German question as it is to-day:

"It is clear that the rearmament of militarist Germany is a part of the United States policy of peripheral strategy. A rearmed Western Germany, out for revenge, is regarded as a first class strategic base. It becomes increasingly evident to the people of the Western countries bordering on Germany, that their own safety will be jeopardised if these projects are carried through, for such a Germany may well be tempted, as in the past, to start expanding in their direction. This whole aggressive policy is put forward under the cover of defence, whereas actually it compromises the security of the world. It attempts to ignore the Anglo-Soviet and Franco-Soviet Treaties. It wipes out the Potsdam Agreement of which the fundamental principles would permit the conclusion of a treaty between the Four Great Powers creating a united, democratic and peaceful Germany. All peoples have some responsibility for eliminating the danger of a rearmed, militarist Germany, but Germany's neighbour States bear a particularly heavy responsibility."

The danger is causing fresh voices to speak out for France's national interests

GILBERT DE CHAMBRUN (France)

Secretary of the World Council of Peace

"The European Community and a European army would establish the predominance of German militarism in Europe. Any countries associated with Germany in these units would not only risk being dragged into a third world war, following in Germany's steps, but at the same time would be in danger of having to withstand the pressure of German militarism along their frontiers...

"In my country, a large number of people who accepted the Atlantic Pact because they considered it was a defensive measure, today feel that the entry of Germany into the European Army, under the orders of an Atlantic chief, would give this Pact an aggressive character because of the territorial ambitions of the Bonn Government.

"If we now examine the Soviet proposals, we have to admit that they are based neither upon preconceived conditions nor upon faits accomplis; in fact these proposals alone are based upon existing international agreements: Potsdam, the Anglo-Soviet Pact and the Franco-Soviet Pact.

"They are a compromise because both sides would renounce the idea of a divided world gambling over Germany.

"Germany could be quickly reunified following a Four Power Agreement aimed at finding a peaceful solution of the German problem. The only limitations imposed upon Germany would be in order to prevent the rebirth of militarism, both for Germany's neighbours and for the German people themselves...

"I would particularly like to speak to our friends of the Soviet Peace Committee. I do this because our two countries have a common interest in averting the revival of German militarism. This treaty, sealed by our common sufferings, is once again the order of the day in France.

"A few days ago M. Edouard Daladier, former President of the Council, reminded the National Assembly that since the duel between Alexander III and Napoleon no Russian soldier has set foot on our soil as an enemy.

"A great number of my countrymen consider that two points which do not depend solely on them are necessary in the struggle they are conducting in their country in the national interest.

"The first of these points is the firmness the Soviet Government shows in frustrating, in not tolerating, the fait accompli of German rearmament. This firmness helps us all the more because we too are working to make the French Government show an equal strength in face of the same danger.

"The second point is the full implementation of the Franco-Soviet Pact which, in spite of the vicissitudes of the last few years, is legally still in force, since it was drawn up on a twenty-year basis. The Franco-Soviet Pact envisages consultation between the two Governments in the event of a new threat from Germany. The threat is there. The great majority of the French people wish these consultations to take place...

"There is a lot of talk about building Europe. They use this fine expression to cover the revival of the Wehrmacht.

"To build Europe is to encourage all the peoples of this continent to live in co-operation with one another. It means developing between them commercial and cultural relations. It means securing the great German nation against the return of militarism which has been the cause of so much unhappiness in Europe, thus helping it back into the peaceful community of nations."

The Soviet people never repudiate their pledges

ILYA EHRENBURG (USSR)

The speaker described the two opposing policies on the German question:

"I ask this authoritative gathering to examine impartially the events of recent months. The Soviet Union has concluded no agreement with the Government of the German Democratic Republic directed against the security of France, Great Britain or the USA. There is no military agreement between the Soviet Union and the Government of the German Democratic Republic. The Soviet Union has not revived a German army to increase its power, nor has it used German territory to instal either atomic or other types of aggressive bases. For its part, the Government of the German Democratic Republic has carried out a series of political and economic measures which can facilitate the unification of Germany. This Government has never declared that its aim is to liberate the people of Frankfurt-on-Main or of Munich. Its Ministers do not say that they want to change the political or social systems of Denmark or Belgium and that when such changes have taken place they will be ready to discuss the question of the joint administration of the Danish part of Schleswig or the district of Malmédy.

"What has the behaviour of the other side been like? It has in every way supported the revenge-seeking elements in Western Germany. It has helped to revive military and paramilitary organisations run by Nazis. It proposed that the Government of West Germany conclude a military treaty directed against one of the Great Powers which, together with other Great Powers, won the victory over fascism. This other side has turned the territory of Western Germany into an aggressive bridgehead, into an arsenal of atomic and other weapons.

"The Government of Western Germany, for its part, has openly launched slogans of revenge. It has laid down claims to the territories of States who were allies of the USA, Great Britain and France. The leader of the West German Government has rejected the idea of negotiating with the Government of the German Democratic Republic and has declared that one of his aims is the "Liberation of the inhabitants of Dresden and of Weimar." The Ministers of this Government speak of the need to change the political system of Poland and Czechoslovakia. With the tacit approval of the representatives of Great Britain and France, they call upon the citizens of West Germany to recreate divisions which will make it possible to alter existing frontiers. Yet agreements exist between Great Britain and the Soviet Union, and between France and the Soviet Union, which can prevent any possible repetition of German aggression . . .

"I listened with great attention to M. de Chambrun's speech and I can make him the reply that the Soviet people are not in the habit of going back on engagements to which they have pledged themselves. If the Treaty of Friendship and Mutual Assistance is observed by the two parties it can become a guarantee of security for our two countries and for the whole of Europe.

"The States with an interest in the preservation of Peace are today much stronger than they were nine years ago. They can cause revenge-seekers and aggressors to think again. I believe in France. The people who fought at Valmy and Verdun, the people of the Maquis, will find a way out which is consonant with their traditions and their good sense. Let my words be understood aright; they have their source not in political considerations but in the heart."

Let us have a Germany in which her neighbours can have confidence

WILHELM ELFES
(Germany)

"The peaceful re-establishment of a united, democratic State which is desired by the German people and necessary to their national well-being cannot be achieved by the methods conceived in Washington and Bonn. I am glad that M. de Chambrun has already said this clearly. This is why we decided right from the beginning—and particularly at our international meetings in Berlin, Vienna and Budapest—on another method.

"This method which has also been put forward in the Soviet Union's Notes, begins with the Potsdam Agreement and leads through an agreement between the Great Powers as well as between Germans, and free all-German elections, to a unified Germany. This Germany would serve neither the East nor the West as an advanced military base and would see her national existence guaranteed by a Peace Treaty, her peaceful development by a democratic constitution and her economic potential by free trade relations. It would be a Germany enjoying both the respect and the confidence of its neighbours and would, therefore, be accepted into the United Nations as a matter of course."

The desire of the German people is to live at Peace with the Soviet Union and France

JOSEPH WIRTH
(Germany)

Former Chancellor

"Seeking agreement with all, without exception, had to be and must still be the principle of German foreign policy. If Germany wants Peace with Russia, she must, at the same time, seek Peace with France. This fundamental principle of history is being strikingly borne out by the current debate in the French Parliament.

"This idea is deeply rooted in the German people too—so deeply that, at the recent elections, the forces with an interest in war had to use the words Peace and agreement in order to hide their true aims from the people . . .

"To silence the voices calling for agreement, the rights guaranteed by the Constitution are being restricted. Already, the Constitution itself is being attacked. It is to be altered to make possible the conscription of the youth of West Germany. Germans who play a leading role in the fight for Peace are being persecuted for allegedly endangering State security.

"That such measures are necessary proves that, in the Federal German Republic, there is strong opposition to the policy of revenge and militarism . . .

"It is a source of great strength to us to know that this struggle of the democratic forces in Germany is supported by the confidence of all Peace-loving men and nations in the world."

The basis of German unity

ANNA SEGHERS
(Germany)

"On what basis can the unity of Germany be achieved today? There are some astounding notions on this subject, both in Germany herself and in other countries. Extraordinary plans are being drawn up in the West, but they are not aimed at helping Germany or advancing the cause of the unity, Peace and prosperity of Germany. They do not aim at bringing up German children to be worthy members of the family of Peace-loving peoples . . .

"One thing is certain—we know what a united Germany must not be. She must certainly not be what General Kesselring, for instance, envisages. He declared recently that the S.S. were the élite of the Wehrmacht and the forerunners of the European Army. She must certainly not be occupied by a European Army, giving every former S.S. man the hope of being promoted to the élite, perhaps even with "No man's lands" behind the Elbe and the Rhine, which would become enormous graveyards once the atomic weapons had done their job. Any negotiations on the unity of Germany must be approached by the participants with the determined intention of arriving at a peaceful solution. This intention is never absent from negotiation, as contrasted with the use of force.

"So the discussion must not be entered into with the intention of dragging it out interminably or even wrecking the chances of a solution, as has very often happened. Conditions must be sought which are acceptable both to the Four Great Powers and to both parts of Germany, that is to say the Federal Republic and the German Democratic Republic. From the start, everything that threatens the Peace of Europe and the Peace of Germany must be eliminated. Only when militarism no longer plays any role whatsoever will a new, united Germany cease to be a possible threat to the security of her neighbours."

We must achieve a united, democratic and peaceful Germany

JAROSLAV IWASZKIEWICZ
(Poland)

"The friendship of the Polish people for the people of France can be counted on. Further, they know what an immense, brilliant and attractive force France can be when she embraces a cause on behalf of the peoples. Today, this cause is the cause of Peace and the independence of nations.

"The German people find themselves in a dramatic position at the present time. The forces which, twice already, have led them into disaster are once again trying to entice them. But the German nation has always contained great, progressive forces with the power to act for the good of humanity. These forces are today reacting against the possibility of another catastrophe, they are combatting the revival of hatred and chauvinism. They exist in West Germany, too, and are working in spite of the terror used against them by Adenauer; it is our duty to support them with all our strength . . .

"These progressive forces are being stoutly supported by the German Democratic Republic which has proved that the German people are capable of establishing good neighbour relations based on the principles of mutual respect, friendship and co-operation, thus making a precious contribution to the work of consolidating Peace in the world.

"The Polish people believe that the only way to ensure Peace and ward off the menace of a new war is to achieve a Germany united on peaceful and democratic principles, in the spirit of Potsdam, as the Soviet Union has so often pointed out in its well-known Notes.

"The Polish nation would welcome with deep satisfaction the birth of a unified German State which would no longer be a threat to its neighbours and would become a real factor for Peace in Europe, while restoring to the great German nation its rightful place in the family of free nations."

Support the Peace-loving forces in Germany

ISABELLE BLUME
(Belgium)

Secretary of the World Council of Peace

"In all those countries in which, at the present time, the supporters of EDC, uncertain of victory, are trying to hide German rearmament behind the screen of the European Union, we are faced with a duty which becomes more urgent every day. It is that of bringing into the light of day what our enemies want at all costs to conceal, namely the monster lurking beneath all the plans for saving the civilisation of Europe and which is frightening Germany herself and all her neighbours—the rearmament of West Germany and her incorporation in the European Union . . .

"It is awful to think that, with the help of our peoples, not only could the old German dream of Europe in bondage to Germany be made a reality, but also that the European Union is taking up again Mussolini's and Hitler's plans for Africa, making of it an imperialist settlement for the excess population of Italy and Germany. This is a further proof, if such were necessary, that the European Union as conceived in Strasburg and as demonstrated in EDC can neither be an instrument for the liberation of nations nor an instrument of Peace . . .

"There is a fact of which our peoples and even our politicians are aware—the strongest guarantee must come from the German people themselves. Now, the recent ratification of the treaties by the two Houses of the Parliament of the Federal Republic and Adenauer's election have given us no assurance on this point, except one, which is that in Germany there are nine million voters who share our feelings and whom we must help at all costs . . .

"If we do not help these Germans to defeat EDC in their own country, we shall not succeed in defeating it in our own countries either."

D. N. PRITT Q. C.
(Britain)

"The effort is now being made to rush through the re-militarisation of Western Germany, which involves the permanent division of Germany—permanent so far as anything can be permanent in these days of collapse and rebirth—involves, too, a major step towards a Third World War, and the intensification of already perilously strained international relations.

"What is the attitude of British public opinion to this re-armament proposal? I have no doubt that the great majority of the people is unequivocally opposed to it?"

J. THEODORE HARRIS

"We wish to assure our German friends here in this Council that the British people want only to live at Peace with the German people, to have normal friendly relations, to help the German people to heal the divisions which mutilate their national life, to see the German people reunited, at Peace.

"It is not from any enmity to the German people that I speak with such deep conviction against the arming of Germany. We seek also for general disarmament. Only in these conditions can the German nation, which has contributed so much to the cultural life of the world, for example in music and literature, be free and really secure for the first time in their history."

The European Defence Community can be defeated

MRS. MINNAERT-COELING
(Holland)

"In July of this year the Second Chamber of the Dutch Parliament ratified the European Defence Community Treaty by 75 votes to 11. This is certainly a very large majority, but it is not as large and especially not as solid as one might think and as the papers would like us to believe . . .

"The Dutch people have not forgotten the occupation and they oppose the restoration of Nazi domination, although opposition to the European Army Treaty is not yet strong enough.

"That is why, above all, it must be explained to the Dutch people what the EDC treaty entails—German rearmament and the restoration of Nazi domination . . .

"The events of the last months in France are also encouraging for us. Many who at first thought that ratification of the EDC treaty was unavoidable have recently regained their courage and prefer to wait. The same phenomenon is to be observed in Right-wing political parties. Many put great hopes in future developments in France. This gives us the chance of making contact with wider circles."

The possibility of a peaceful settlement remains

OLAF FORCHHAMMER
(Denmark)

"The most important task of the moment is to avoid any complication of the German question . . .

"The rearmament of West Germany and her incorporation in a West European military bloc will automatically prevent the peaceful unification of East and West Germany.

"Yet, after one-and-a-half year's discussion and pressure, the Bonn and Paris agreements of May 1952 have still not come into force.

"So an eventual Conference of Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers, on which there have already been several exchanges of Notes, would not yet find itself confronted with the fait accompli of West German rearmament.

"The ambiguous and uncertain attitude of certain Western politicians is shown by the fact that, while calling a Four Power Conference, they at the same time jeopardise it by doing everything to push through the plans for a European army.

"But as long as these endeavours have not reached fulfilment, the Four Power Conference will not find itself confronted by a fait accompli . . .

"I am convinced that such a Conference would help to encourage and strengthen resistance to the European Army and would clearly demonstrate who stands for Peace and who does not."

SHEVQUET MUSARAJ
(Albania)

"The peaceful solution of the German question is of particular concern to our people.

"We have no common frontier with Germany, but we underwent the same horrors and devastation at the hands of the Nazis as the countries bordering on Germany. It is enough to mention the 28,000 who were killed during the anti-fascist struggle (that is 3% of our population) and the 60,000 houses which were burned down (about 40% of inhabitable dwellings), to show what a scourge German militarism and Nazism were for Albania.

"Therefore, in order to ensure a correct solution of the German problem, we have supported and continue to support, unreservedly, the Soviet proposals which put forward the demilitarisation and denazification of Germany and the creation of a united, democratic and free Germany, as provided for in the Potsdam Agreement which was signed by the Great Powers."

KNUT LØFSNES
(Norway)

"The solution of the German problem must be built on the basis of an understanding between the Great Powers which defeated Hitler Germany."

The reasons for the opposition to EDC of the peoples of French West and Equatorial Africa

GABRIEL d'ARBOUSSIER
(Senegal)

"The EDC Treaty is the logical result of the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact which were the means of extending US participation in the plans for another World War and in maintaining colonial exploitation and oppression."

M. Gabriel d'Arboussier went on to quote facts proving that the increasing poverty and oppression in colonial and dependent countries are concomitants of the worsening of international tension.

"...So the opposition of the peoples of French West and Equatorial Africa to incorporation in EDC does not spring from a narrow view of things, but from actual experience and a clear understanding of the prospects offered.

"The support that the peoples of French West and Equatorial Africa must lend to the French people's struggle against the ratification of the EDC Agreements, is dictated by the immediate interests of these peoples and not by some slogan or other."

BIRAMA TRAORE
(French Sudan)

"We do not accept the Bonn and Paris agreements, for they would mean a mass migration to our country of what is called the excess population of Europe...

"Neither do we support the setting-up, in any part of the world, of a Nazi regime which would revive the absurd Hitlerian theory of superior and inferior races.

"We want neither the European Community, Eurafrica nor the Third Force, for if we accepted them we should be going against our own national independence and we should make the serious mistake of encouraging the warmongers in the crimes they are getting ready to commit against our brothers in all countries."

Replace the policy of strength by a policy of negotiation

(France)

At the last sitting the speaker analysed a recent vote in the French National Assembly.

"All the majority parties split, a great number of Deputies of the majority joined the opposition in the common fight against the Bonn and Paris treaties, men of such diverse views as Herriot, the President of the Assembly, Daladier, Jacques Duclos, Daniel Meyer and General De Gaulle are speaking out against these treaties; the reason for this is that the popular will has been demonstrated throughout the country at the call of the Peace Movement and of a wide variety of organisations, particularly organisations of ex-servicemen and war victims...

"It would be wrong to believe that all these men, who represent varying trends of opinion, see this fight only in a negative light. Assuredly, they want to prevent the realisation of the EDC. But they all had a common objective of a very positive nature—replace a policy of strength by a policy of negotiation, eliminate the dangers of war and seek conditions that would guarantee the security of Europe...

"The theory of men like Guy Mollet, urging that all non-Communist nations join the American bloc—and this is Adenauer's theory, too—is opposed by another, our theory, which is upheld by Deputies of the Right, Left and Centre. It is the theory that the peaceful co-existence of different systems is possible, the theory of the settlement of all differences by honest negotiation. It was on this basis that former President of the Council of Ministers, Daladier, put forward a peaceful solution of the German problem...

"A conference can only succeed if the participants seek a peaceful solution and not the inclusion of a remilitarised Germany in a system of strength. A conference cannot succeed if one of the parties goes to meet the other with the intention of confronting it with a fait accompli."

Concentrate the efforts of all who are opposed to German rearmament

PIETRO NENNI
(Italy)

"The conclusion to be drawn from the present stage of the problem of EDC is that we must organise with the utmost urgency a great campaign of explanation and action against ratification, in close co-operation with every opponent of EDC. This should embrace not only the six countries of the "Little Europe" but the whole of Europe and the entire world, since it affects Asians and Africans just as much as Europeans...

"We have just seen that in Western Europe the situation is characterised by the struggles on the question of the European Community and the ratification of the EDC Treaty. In these struggles that section of public opinion which has not agreed with us up till now is deeply divided and even severely shaken by a matter of conscience which is breaking down the ideological, political and social barriers which some had tried to raise against us."

The Vietnamese people urge negotiations

LE DINH THAM
(Viet-Nam)

"Not only have French colonialists fallen short of their aims of reconquest, but they have sustained serious losses. The French Army has already lost more than 300,000 killed, wounded and prisoner and a great quantity of war material and weapons destroyed or captured by the People's Army. The ruinous war in Viet-Nam is a bottomless pit for French finances; this year, military expenditure has reached the enormous figure of 600,000 million francs. Every day that the war in Viet-Nam goes on means further losses for France. It is clear that the war of aggression against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam is contrary to the interests of the French people. The movement for the ending of the war in Viet-Nam, in which broad sections of the people are taking part, faithfully reflects the aspirations of all honest French men and women. This movement has made considerable progress during recent months. On behalf of the Peace-loving people of Viet-Nam, I bring warm greetings to our friends in France...

"The armistice in Korea has increased the confidence of the peoples of France, Viet-Nam and the Peace-loving people of the world in their ability to bring this war to an end and reach a peaceful settlement of the Vietnamese question. It has clearly demonstrated that all international conflicts can be settled by negotiation. The peoples of the world are becoming more concerned at the fact that the people of Viet-Nam are still suffering from a cruel war of aggression. In France and throughout the world there is an increasing volume of protest and concrete activity demanding an end to the war and peaceful negotiations to settle the Viet-Nam question...

"The war in Korea was ended by negotiation. It is therefore necessary and possible to put an end to the war in Viet-Nam by means of negotiation. The Peace-loving people of Viet-Nam urge negotiations to end the war and to reach a peaceful settlement of the Viet-Nam question, because it is desired by the people of the whole world and conforms to the interests of the peoples of Viet-Nam and France. During the past eight years the people of Viet-Nam have resolutely fought a war of resistance to the French colonialist troops in order to defend their independence and their liberty, to reconstruct their country in Peace and live a new life. This desire of our people has just been reaffirmed in a letter sent to the National Council of the French Peace Movement by the Viet-Nam Peace Committee."

The war in Viet-Nam can be ended through negotiation

MAO DUN
(China)

"Though the calls for the end of the war in Viet-Nam are being more and more echoed by people of all sections of French society, the United States Government is resorting to all sorts of means to exert pressure on the French Government to drag on the war in Viet-Nam. The aim of the United States Government, in addition to keeping the Far Eastern situation in a state of tension after the cease-fire in Korea, is to take over Indo-China for itself. At the same time, it is also trying to weaken the French position in Europe, so as to facilitate the rearming of West Germany. For this reason, the Vietnamese war has not only brought about the determined resistance of the Vietnamese people but has also aroused the increasing opposition of the French people.

"The Chinese people extend their boundless sympathy to the heroic Vietnamese people who are suffering from the calamities of war. We wholeheartedly support the proposal made yesterday by Mr. Le Dinh Tham, the delegate from Viet-Nam. His proposal serves the interest of Peace. We hope that all Peace-loving peoples the world over will take immediate action to call for an armistice in Viet-Nam and the peaceful settlement of the Vietnamese question. Since an armistice has been achieved in Korea through negotiations, we believe that the Vietnamese war can also be stopped in the same way."

Stimulate the movement of opinion for peaceful negotiations

Professor MARCEL NER
(France)

"We are happy to be able to state here that, in recent months, the French people have reached a much clearer understanding and have strengthened their will. Their anger is rising because they know that the destruction of the French Army, decimated in Indo-China, and the rearmament of Germany together with the glorification of the spirit of revenge, are preparations for another war or the enslavement of France to her neighbour in the East.

"The majority of French public opinion is today in agreement on the following points:

1 — The war in Indo-China serves no national interest. It only serves private interests or the interests of the USA.

2 — There is only one authentic Government in Viet-Nam, that of the Democratic Republic.

"After the experience of the armistice in Korea, the French delegation unanimously considers that the immediate ending of bloodshed and the opening of negotiations depend on a step which the Government must take with the utmost speed. We wish to restore to France the power to make Peace, without the US Government or private interests creating obstacles...

"We were happy to note that, in spite of the war, M. Le Dinh Tham could express sympathy for the French people from this rostrum.

"We are happy to express here our lively, fraternal sympathy for the people of Viet-Nam and to tell their representatives of the French people's emotion at the humane way with which our prisoners are treated and in which they are often liberated and allowed to return home.

"We agree with the delegates of Viet-Nam and of the great Chinese people in the proposal they made to the Council to launch an Appeal to the peoples of the world, to set in motion a great movement of public opinion for the immediate ending of hostilities and the opening of negotiations for Peace in Viet-Nam...

"When, now that the war in Korea is ended, the war in Viet-Nam, too, is stopped, a great step towards world Peace will have been taken, which will also be a great step towards convincing the peoples that it is possible to impose their will for Peace everywhere."

Cease fire!

J. CASADEI

Representative from the WFTU

"The World Federation of Trade Unions is waging a determined struggle against the war in Viet-Nam which has been going on since 1946. Why should it not be possible, after so many years of bloodshed, destruction, ruin and death, to compel the opening of negotiations for a peaceful settlement of this question? The Third World Trade Union Congress, not only judged that this is possible, but it also decided to make December 19th next, a great day of active international solidarity of the working people of the whole world with the people of Viet-Nam and a day of struggle for the ending of the colonial war in Viet-Nam.

"In the Appeal to the Working Men and Women of the World, the WFTU asks them to unite under the slogan 'An immediate cease-fire in Viet-Nam!,' to express their warm solidarity with the workers and people of Viet-Nam and to demand of the French Government and Parliament and the United Nations the ending of the war."

Growth of national resistance to remilitarisation in Japan

TOKUSABURO DAN
(Japan)

"During the last six months and especially since the eve of the armistice in Korea, there has been a vast development of the Japanese people's struggle against the existence of foreign military bases on their territory and against rearmament, the aim of which is to turn the Japanese into mercenaries of another country. At Uchinada, in the Department of Ishikawa, as is well-known, a great united front was formed between workers, fishermen, peasants and intellectuals of all political views, to resist the plans for setting up a United States military establishment in this locality. This brilliant example gave an immense spur to the whole people and ever broader strata are beginning to play a role in the national resistance to the remilitarisation of Japan."

The speaker quoted the opinion of a conservative political organisation on the so-called Mutual Security Aid granted to Japan by the USA:

"1. That Mutual Security Aid infringes the Japanese Constitution, since the basic principle of this Aid requires solutions of international differences by military means and it demands of us the creation and build-up of armed forces.

2. That Mutual Security Aid is fraught with the danger of dragging Japan into war, since it lays military obligations on Japan."

Proposed bases in Pakistan would create unbearable pressure on India

Major-General Sir SAHIB SINGH SOKHEY
(India)

"The proposed Pakistan bases are intended to sow discord among this group (the so-called "Group of Arab and Asian nations" at UNO) which can have very far-reaching evil results. The bases are also intended to bring almost unbearable pressure on India in her advocacy of, and work for, the peaceful solution of the Korean problem. The intention is an attempt to put an end to the splendid Peace-making contribution which India is making in the cause of World Peace."

INDULAL YAGNIK
(India)

"Nearer home the imperialist designs have now been convincingly exposed in what we call the foreign pockets of India occupied by the French and Portugese Governments. Years ago, these Governments, which cannot gain anything from these little areas but the dislike of the Indian people, appeared to be willing to discuss with our Government the question of the grant of independence to these territories. Recently, however, their attitude has hardened; and now it is as plain as a pikestaff that these Powers have virtually sold their little kingdoms to the US Government, to serve it as war bases on the sea-board of India...

"And finally all India is now seething with indignation at the US moves for planting their military bases in Pakistan by entering into a military pact with her Government. Our Prime Minister has sharply criticised their moves as unfriendly acts fraught with serious consequences for India and its relations with Pakistan. All sections of our people and our Press have been unanimously denouncing this latest phase of US diplomacy as inimical to the freedom and Peace of the Arab States, the Far East, the friendly Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China and, above all, of India herself."

Withdraw foreign troops and respect the sovereignty of the peoples of the Middle East

ANTOINE TABET
(Lebanon)

"In recent years the USA has made great efforts to set up an aggressive military bloc incorporating the Arab and other States in the Near and Middle East, sometimes under the label of the 'Middle East Command' or 'Mutual Defence' and sometimes under the name of the 'Northern Middle East Pact.' The Arab peoples energetically resisted this project and so far it has not been possible to put it into operation.

"In spite of this failure, we are witnessing an intensification of the efforts to bring this plan to fruition in other forms...

"According to the Lebanese paper, 'Assarkha,' Admiral Wright came to propose the conclusion of bi-lateral military agreements between the United States and each of the Arab countries, beginning with the Lebanon and Syria. These agreements would be similar to those concluded with Spain and Greece, that is to say, they would give the USA the right to set up military bases and atom bomb dumps, to use the resources of the Arab countries at the whim of the US and to station occupation troops...

"Further, the USA is trying to form a Mediterranean bloc and to drag the Arab countries into it through the intermediary of Turkey, Greece, Yugoslavia and Spain. Recently, contacts were established between Franco and the supporters of US policy in the Arab countries...

"We are fighting for our independence and national sovereignty. We demand the withdrawal of foreign troops from Iraq, Transjordan, Egypt, Libya, Tunisia, Morocco, Algeria and all the colonial and semi-colonial countries. We stand solidly behind the people of Iran in their fight for liberty and full independence. We are also striving to achieve a genuine relaxation of international tension in our own interests and that of all other nations. We are sure that we shall be supported by all Peace and liberty-loving peoples represented by the World Council of Peace and the Peace Movement."

The occupation of the Suez Canal is a threat to Peace

ABDUL RAHMAN SHARKAWI
(Egypt)

"The Canal is no longer a British base but an international base and especially a base for atomic bombs...

"The maintenance of British occupation troops in Egypt and of the Suez Canal as a military base is a direct threat to world Peace.

"The Egyptian people are resisting military pacts and bases in full awareness that the victory of Peace in the world is also a victory for the cause of their liberty, progress and civilisation."

Blockade is reply to Iranian people's desire for independence

Professor SAID NAFICY
(Iran)

"Our people have always insisted that all they wanted was to live in Peace and freedom so as to set their social, economic and cultural life in order. No pretext, no crusading spirit will ever be able to shake our people's strong determination to fight for Peace.

"Besides, have our people not given proof of this lofty and sacred aspiration in these last years? It suffices to quote the oil nationalisation, the facts of which are known to the world. Our people were convinced of the obvious truth that, as long as this source of wealth was not in their own hands, their independence and their national sovereignty were in jeopardy. When, at last, the logical solution to this question was found, the world had no longer any doubt as to the legality of our claims. International bodies acknowledge that we were in the right and fair-minded people approved our action; but the sole reply from the other side was an economic blockade which has deprived us of the benefits of our immense national resources for more than two years in an attempt to force us to give up our rights."

Our countries have been transformed into military bases

MANUEL SANCHEZ ARCAS
(Spain)

The speaker analysed the military agreements recently concluded between the Governments of Spain and the USA, whereby Washington "allied itself to a regime condemned by UNO in 1946 for its fascist character and activities."

"Spain's geographical situation is suitable for launching an aeriel offensive, not only for long-range attacks (as in a war against the Soviet Union and the Peoples' Democracies), but also short-range (as in a possible war between the USA and its European imperialist rivals). This explains the importance attached by dollar strategists to the adequate equipping of Spanish territory for use as an offensive air base. This intention is made clear by the construction of aerodromes on the Pyrrenean frontier without taking the requirements of defence into consideration . . .

"One of the concessions made to the USA by Franco authorises it to erect secret installations. Article IV of the Defence Agreement, referring to the property rights granted to the USA in the treaties in the case of both permanent installations and other constructions, says: 'In both cases (if the agreement is abrogated) these installations can be acquired by the Spanish Government, with the exception of the secret installations.' This concession amounts to giving the US permission to convert Spain into an arsenal for atomic bombs, H-bombs etc. and into a base from which these bombs can be used without taking into account the mortal peril in which this would place our country, the countries bordering on Spain and the Peace of the world . . .

"This treaty turns Spain into a base for aggression, yet one more in the chain of US bases, which have been set up in Britain, France, Italy, Norway, Greece and other countries, encircling the frontiers of the Soviet Union and the Peoples' Democracies. The transformation of Spain into a US base is directly connected with the measures which are being taken at the present time to remilitarise Western Germany."

ZAKARIA CERTEL
(Turkey)

"The war forces have done everything in their power to prepare Turkey as a war base, a stepping-stone and a centre of an offensive plan against the Soviet Union and the Peoples' Democracies. The Turkish armed forces have been reorganised, mechanised, equipped with the most modern weapons. All the Turkish land, sea and air forces have been put under the command of NATO. A NATO headquarters has been established in Smyrna. 3000 Anglo-American military teaching staff are preparing the new cadres of officers and teaching modern war methods. Twelve air bases for the heaviest bombers have been constructed in different parts of Turkish territory. Naval bases have been established on the Black Sea and the Aegean ports of Turkey. Military roads are being constructed in the direction of the Soviet frontiers."

The Trieste question must be settled peacefully

CLAUDIO TONEL
(Trieste)

"You all know that the question of the Free Territory of Trieste is bound up with aggressive plans in the Balkans. Today, the US and British Governments are trying to accelerate the linking up of the strategic potential of the Eastern Alps with that of the Balkans and to achieve this they want to get the Governments of Rome and Belgrade to accept the arbitrary decision given in the bipartite Note of October 8th, last . . .

"As you have already been informed, the Trieste Peace Movement has asked for the replacement of the two-fold military occupation, Anglo-American and Yugoslav, in the two zones of the Free Territory of Trieste, by a single provisional, civilian administration responsible to the Security Council of the United Nations. Our Peace Committee has collected approximately 50,000 signatures for this demand and they have been sent to the UN. Meanwhile, since the recent events, our Committee has decided to take fresh steps. To avoid the partition of the Territory, we adopted a plan which was unanimously approved by the Communal Councils of Trieste and Muggia asking for a UN Commission to be sent to Trieste and petitioning for a popular referendum in the two zones on the future of the Territory."

Mobilise public opinion against the establishment of foreign bases

ALBERTO CIANCA
(Italy)

"Certain peoples have already learned what foreign bases and troops on their territory mean. Italy's experience is particularly unhappy. You know that foreign bases have been set up and foreign troops stationed in my country, although no treaty which might give this fait accompli a shred of legal sanction has been passed by Parliament. As a matter of fact, the EDC treaty has not yet been brought before Parliament and the opposition it will meet there will be no less energetic than that of the French National Assembly. The Government has not yet put to the vote, in the two Chambers, the London Convention which provides for and regulates the stay of foreign military contingents in the countries of Western Europe and which, moreover, does not envisage the establishment of actual military bases . . .

"A tragic proof of the dangers resulting from the conflict between the national interests and the presence of foreign military organisations on our soil, has been provided by the grave events in Trieste . . .

"As more and more foreign bases are set up, international tension becomes more acute and there is a growing danger that violence will prevail over negotiation.

"The mobilising of public opinion against this danger in every country is, we think, one of the essential tasks of the World Council of Peace."

Our people are opposed to the stationing of foreign troops

OLAF FORCHHAMMER
(Denmark)

"The elections which have just taken place have, for one thing, clearly shown that the majority of the Danish people is opposed to the stationing of foreign troops in Denmark. The Socialist Prime Minister stated in Parliament that the majority of the Danish Parliament is also opposed to it."

HALLDOR LAXNESS
(Iceland)

International Peace Prize-winner

"The turning of Iceland into a US military base was formally agreed to by a majority of the Deputies of our Parliament, the Althing, but this formal handing-over of the country has nothing to do with the will of the people, who think that such a handing-over is a most unnatural thing. A traffic of this nature—handing over the rights of a country to a foreign Power by voting in Parliament—is a novelty in the world and contains a strong element of absurdity. It is as unnatural an action as if I should go to another man, saying to him: It is my wish to be your slave, will you please be my master?

"The whole Icelandic people dislike the stationing of US forces in Iceland and even the reactionary circles of the bourgeoisie, which in the Press plays the role of a confidential clerk of the occupying Power, would never dream of fraternising with the American soldiery or inviting its members to their homes."

Against foreign interference in Latin America

BALTASAR CASTRO
(Chile)

President of the Chamber of Deputies

"Our country has signed the military pact with the USA against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people and for the last three years the popular movement for the abrogation of this treaty has been growing rapidly. Our present Government is a step towards a more democratic regime in the country, and the President of the Republic based his electoral campaign on the abrogation of the pact and the establishment of commercial relations with all countries. The result is that the people and their leaders are ready to help the Government and press it to carry out these two promises. I hope that one day, Chile will do so and thus give a fine example of independence and pride to many Governments which have bartered their dignity for a few machine-guns for use against their own workers and have handed over part of their territory for the setting up of military bases."

General EDGARD BUXBAUM
(Brazil)

"Let us take a quick look back over the past four or five years and examine the overall picture presented by the backward countries. We must admit that, even recently, they were generally unable to put up effective resistance to the new methods of economic plunder and national oppression used by foreign warmongers. During these last few years this fact has been a serious and unfavourable factor in the international situation. The more or less rapid and easy militarisation of the economy of these countries by the aggressive forces of the US under cover of Truman's Point Four and other disguises, has played an important role in sharpening international tension and in the preparations for a third world war...

"The facts proving the unprecedented increase of foreign military, economic and political oppression on our Continent which is aimed at preparing for war, are epitomised in the bilateral military agreements made between the US and several countries of Latin America. These agreements undoubtedly constitute, not only military alliances of an aggressive nature, but also instruments for destroying the sovereignty of the nations of Latin America."

FERMIN BERETERBIDE
(Argentina)

"North American policy, to which several Latin American Governments subscribe, is making ever more pressing demands for the conclusion of economic pacts and agreements in which there are clauses containing political restrictions. The Pacts of Rio de Janeiro, Bogota and Washington make the countries of Latin America militarily and economically dependent upon the USA if war should break out. To these have recently been added bilateral pacts extorting the cession of military bases, the subordination of the national economies to continental defence plans and restricting the sovereignty of the nations of Latin America...

"It is therefore with anxiety that our country sees a repetition of what happened to Mexico yesterday and is happening to Venezuela today. Such a policy is harmful to the development of industry and the national economy because it subordinates them to the US economy and is operated in the interests of an arms drive which seriously affects our national independence."

Elimination of foreign bases imperative to détente

Professor FLORICA MEZINCESCU
(Rumania)

The speaker quoted "US News and World Report" which lists US bases in Alaska, Britain, Turkey, North Africa, Greenland, Saudi Arabia, Tripoli, Okinawa, Guam etc. She then went on:

"The military bases situated on foreign territories thousands of miles away from the USA have no connection with the security of these countries. The interests of international security obviously demand that the Great Powers get together and decide to liquidate these bases—this would be a decisive step towards the easing of international tension."

PIETRO NENNI
(Italy)

"Can we look forward to an improvement in international relations as long as the principal activity of the United States is to tighten up the system of US military bases in Europe, Asia and Africa, and to perfect the plans of peripheral strategy? Can one speak seriously of a Four-Power Conference on the German question without renouncing, at least while awaiting the results of such a conference, the incorporation of Western Germany in the Atlantic military alliance?"

WE MUST CONTINUE OUR EFFORTS TO ACHIEVE THE ABSOLUTE PROHIBITION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION AND THE REDUCTION OF ALL ARMAMENTS UNDER STRICT CONTROL

Professor FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE (France)

"We know the impressive demonstration of approval given to the Stockholm Appeal by the people of the whole world. The desire to ban weapons of mass extermination has become even stronger since then . . .

"While certain progress has been made towards the solution of this problem it must be recognised that today there is still a clash of ideas and that no effective decision has been reached up to now by the UN Disarmament Commission.

"The same arguments are always put forward in order to make banning of atomic weapons impossible. In the most recent proposals put forward at UNO—those of the former French Minister Jules Moch—is repeated the fundamental contradiction of the Baruch Plan which stipulates that agreement on the ban should be preceded by a disclosure of all military forces and all atomic installations.

"How can we believe in the sincerity of those who ask nations to reveal their defences and industrial structure in their entirety, without the others and themselves having first renounced the use of atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons? The only measure of this kind put forward in the French representative's plan is the prior banning of the use of chemical and biological weapons, though this ban, as laid down in the Geneva Protocol, has already been accepted by all the Powers, so far as chemical weapons are concerned, and by all the Powers except the United States, in the case of biological weapons.

"Why not put forward the same proposal of prior banning in the case of atomic weapons?"

Professor J. D. BERNAL F.R.S. (Britain)*

Vice-President of the World Council of Peace

"Popular demand for disarmament has steadily increased as the result of the bitter experience of the last two years, particularly in the war in Korea, when something has been seen of the amount of destruction which can be carried out even by the so-called conventional armaments and of the way in which, in modern war, civilians and particularly women and children have been their chief victims. At the same time the relentless economic pressure of the rearmament drive is holding back social progress in many countries and has reduced some of them to a state of extreme economic distress . . .

"It is particularly the scientific development of new weapons and the threat that they hold for indiscriminate and unlimited destruction that is arousing world conscience . . .

"The device of insisting first of all on an international census of armaments is transparent. It has the advantage of spinning out time while gathering militarily interesting information without any commitment to subsequent action. At its last meeting on November 18th, the United Nations Political Committee reaffirms the Assembly's desire to reach agreement, but in the very same paragraph it lays down the already unacceptable and futile sequence of regulation, limitation and reduction. This deadlock must be broken and that can only be so by the action of the peoples themselves. They must insist that Governments come together with a sincere intention to achieve substantial and rapid disarmament and without any preconditions about how it is to be reached . . .

"The Baruch Plan of ownership of all fissile material by an international authority, has now become pointless. It was always unacceptable as it would have meant effective control over the economy of every country in the world and more so now than ever because of the steps taken to use atomic energy for the power of production. Control at the source could do nothing to prevent the concealment of atomic and hydrogen bombs. For that, only a system of inspection as already agreed in principle by all countries including the Soviet Union could be effective. Even that, it should be recognised, requires for its success a genuine intention from the start to abide by the agreement and some evidence of good faith which can only be guaranteed by the strength of popular will in all the countries concerned.

"It is for that reason that we should insist on the importance of the preliminary declaration of abolition of weapons of mass destruction. In the last resort the surest guarantee against any breach of international agreement is the honesty of the common people in standing by the agreements they have made.

"It is, of course, for this very same reason that the promotors of the majority resolutions refuse to make any such agreement."

ALEXEI SURKOV (USSR)

"There is an iron logic in the fact that the problem of the struggle for a reduction of armaments and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction arises, willy-nilly, in all public discussions which aim at seeking a way of reducing the present international tension.

"Why is this?

"I think it is because the armaments race, born of international tension, has itself become, as it swelled more and more monstrously, a constant source of aggravation of this tension.

"We can say the same for the atomic and hydrogen bombs which, since they saw the light of day, have kept millions of human beings in a state of anxiety and mental prostration. They, too, are a serious cause of the present international tension . . .

"What are the Soviet proposals for solving these problems? To begin with what is most important—to establish and to decree that the nations and the Governments ban the use of atomic, thermo-nuclear and all other weapons of mass extermination, and that they denounce as war criminals the first Governments to use them.

"To establish and decree that the nations and the Governments undertake a substantial reduction of armaments and armed forces, in an agreed ratio and order.

"After this objective has been laid down as an obligation for the contracting parties, they will proceed to the creation of conditions necessary to ensure the speedy and strict application of the decisions taken; that is to say they will proceed to a census of the objects to be controlled and to a strict control and inspection, with the right to control the objects declared by any Government and the additional right of seeking out objects which are not declared but whose existence is suspected by the international control bodies . . .

"A few years back, when we were advocating the prohibition of the atomic bomb, those in possession of this inhuman weapon said, with irony—they are demanding prohibition because they do not have this weapon and fear it.

"But time passed and the bitter necessity of not remaining unarmed forced us to create this weapon. Seeing that we still persisted in our demand for the banning of this murderous weapon, those in possession of large stocks of bombs kept on saying—they demand prohibition because they have few bombs while we have many, and because they fear the hydrogen bomb which we are preparing.

"With time the same bitter necessity of not remaining unarmed brought us to create the hydrogen bomb as well.

"Disconcerted by this fact so unpleasant to them, those who yesterday had a monopoly of atomic and hydrogen bombs, tried to frighten humanity by talking of the threat represented by the atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons in the possession of the Soviet Union. They are incorrigibly bad-natured and instead of renouncing this terrible weapon on a reciprocal basis—which is the natural thing to do—they went into another fit of atomic hysteria.

"We, on the other hand, having torn from the hands of yesterday's monopolists the advantages of unilateral possession of atomic and hydrogen bombs and quite aware of the strength of our position as a result of this—we do not cease and shall never cease demanding, tenaciously and insistently, the prohibition of this barbarous weapon.

"We demand it because we have confidence in humanity and in its future, because we believe that human reason will triumph over the mad intentions of these dangerous maniacs.

"It is not because we are weak but because we are strong and sure of our future, because we are capable of attaining the objectives of our work of peaceful creation, that we intend, along with all men of good sense, to do all we can to reduce the dangerous international tension. To this end we are ready, on the honourable basis of reciprocity, to make all reasonable concessions serving the cause of Peace. Agreements can be reached with us, but it is impossible to dictate orders to us."

HAN SUL YA
(Korea)

"On behalf of my people who have suffered the horrors of war, I call on all men of goodwill throughout the world . . . to put an end to the arms drive, to ban atomic weapons and the hydrogen bomb—weapons of mass destruction—and to reduce the level of armaments of all types."

Professor LEOPOLD INFELD
(Poland)

Vice-president of the World Council of Peace

"The first step towards reducing international tension would be to forbid the manufacture of the hydrogen bomb and the atom bomb; to destroy the existing supplies and to establish an effective international control preventing the manufacture of such bombs . . .

"After that, further steps would come, such as disarmament, which would have the effect of raising the living standard of humanity all over the world. How can we obtain the prohibition of the use of the atomic weapon and weapons of mass destruction? By a mutual understanding acceptable to all. By an understanding among equals, without conditions imposed in advance; by an understanding arrived at in an atmosphere of goodwill."

(Sweden)

"Allow me, as a member of the International Scientific Commission for the Investigation of the Facts Concerning Bacteriological Warfare in Korea and China, to point out that the exposing of bacteriological warfare further stresses the need for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction."

Mme. EUGENIE COTTON
(France)

Vice-president of the World Council of Peace

"At the present time we have reached a paradoxical and monstrous situation in which the latest scientific discoveries and improvements are used for lethal purposes, no matter what the cost, while millions of human beings are left to live in unbelievable poverty. We must therefore waste no time in telling the people about these two things which should be incompatible—the immense wealth of the world on the one hand and its dire poverty, on the other. They must all know that transmutations have revealed to us a new form of behaviour of matter, vastly different from the chemical reactions that we are used to, the combustion of coal for example. It is as if the transmutation of atoms had placed new fuels at our disposal which, weight for weight, release millions of times more heat than the burning of coal.

"Once we have calories we can set machines to work, produce electricity, in other words, supply energy for various industries and heat and light for homes . . .

"Measuring all the well-being and security which would accrue to mankind from the use of this powerful nuclear energy which is being put to such evil ends, all men and women will take a pledge to unite their efforts in order to ensure a future of Peace, Happines and Beauty for the world."

Professor FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE (France)

"Is not a meeting between the representatives of the Five Great Powers (USA, USSR, Great Britain, the People's Republic of China and France), since they bear the heaviest responsibility for the maintenance and consolidation of Peace, the best way of bringing about an easing of international tension?

" Let the representatives of the Great Powers meet, let them exchange views on their interests, their fears and the problems which divide the world in general, thereby dispelling mistrust and clearing the atmosphere.

"Though such a meeting might not necessarily reach definite solutions on any particular problem, it would have the great advantage of creating conditions favourable to successful negotiations on particular problems. Seen in this light, a meeting between the Five Great Powers would have, as we know, the support of many millions of men. It would restore to UNO the possibility of fulfilling its mission and of successfully bringing about disarmament."

PIETRO NENNI (Italy)

"The Korean armistice created the preliminary condition for a Five Power conference including China, and yet US opposition to a meeting with China has not weakened. One should even say that if, after the armistice, the holding of the Peace Conference in Korea is coming up against all kinds of difficulties and excuses, it is to put off for as long as possible the day when, Peace having been concluded, China's entry into UNO and the meeting of the Five Great Powers would become, in a manner of speaking, inevitable."

MAO DUN (China)

"All Peace-loving peoples should demand at this time that the Big Powers agree on general disarmament, the prohibition of the use of atomic and hydrogen bombs, germ weapons, as well as other weapons of large-scale slaughter, the abolition of military bases on the soil of foreign countries serving as spring-boards of aggression, and the withdrawal of troops stationed in foreign lands, which infringes on the sovereignty of these countries. In order to make a comprehensive examination of possible measures that will work toward the relaxation of international tension, it is reasonable and imperative at this time to call a Five Power Conference in which the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China will take part. Peace-loving persons in many countries have repeatedly proposed that the People's Republic of China must be a member of this Five Power Conference. But the United States Government has continually barred the People's Republic of China from assuming its legal status in the United Nations and its right to take part in international conferences. This is not only unfair and unreasonable, it entirely ignores the need of the present international situation. The United States Government has not only denied China her rightful place in international affairs, but has invaded Taiwan, which is Chinese territory, and encircled China with military bases established in South Korea, Japan, the Ryukus, Taiwan, the Philippines, Thailand and many other places. It has also forced other countries to place embargoes and economic blockades against China. All these measures prove that it is the United States Government which creates international tension.

"The United States Government should not indulge any more in empty talk of peaceful negotiation but has to prove its words by action. It should agree to the calling of the long-awaited Five Power Conference so as to further ease the international situation.

"Ladies and Gentlemen, this Council meeting is our first since the cease-fire in Korea. As a result of the three-year struggle on the part of the Chinese and Korean peoples and the efforts of Peace-loving peoples throughout the world, the wild ambition of the forces of war has been frustrated and the tense international situation which lasted for several years has begun to show some relaxation. But the forces of war have by no means abandoned their war plans and they are persisting in endless provocations. Hence, we still have before us a tremendous task in defence of world Peace. All Peace-loving peoples must be ever more vigilant, must continue to work tirelessly, mobilise more broadly, and unite more closely in our common endeavour to strive for the early convening of the Five Power Conference, the solution of all international disputes through negotiation and to achieve a further relaxation of the international situation."

ILYA EHRENBURG (USSR)

"One of the Great Powers, I mean the United States, refuses to negotiate with another Great Power, China. How do American statesmen, who, while extolling the principle of negotiation, refuse to talk with the Government of the People's Republic of China, justify their position? They say that when the United Nations was founded there was a different Government in China. But can it be said that China has become a less important country than it was under Chiang Kai-shek? No, no one says so. The Americans say that they do not like the Government of Mao Tse Tung, and that's why a conference of the Five Great Powers is impossible. Does the Chinese Government refuse to negotiate, saying that Eisenhower's Government is not to their liking? The Americans say that, since the San Francisco Conference, there has been a change of Government in China. That is true. But do the Chinese refuse to negotiate on the pretext that the Republicans have replaced the Democrats? The Americans stress the fact that the new regime in China was born in battle. But was it not out of battle that the United States itself was born? The Americans refuse to negotiate with the Government of the People's Republic of China, calling it aggressive! As far as I can remember US bombs have often fallen on Chinese towns, but not a single Chinese bomb has fallen upon American towns. Let us however suppose that for many Americans the Chinese are aggressors. For many others—among them the fairly large population of China—it is the Americans who are the aggressors. Nevertheless the Chinese people do not say that they refuse to negotiate with US representatives because they are aggressors."

Dr. JAMES ENDICOTT
(Canada)

"The National Council of the Canadian Peace Congress met in Ottawa. We proposed to the Canadian Government the following ... points which I would like to put on the record for discussion in the Commissions:

A meeting of the leading Powers with a view to solving, through negotiation, questions which threaten the Peace of the world.

... The Government of China must be recognised by Canada. China must no longer be barred from her rightful seat at the United Nations."

(France)

"While it is desirable that negotiation should be undertaken in every part of the world where there is a dangerous situation, as in Korea, Europe and Indo-China, we nevertheless know that only a meeting and agreement between the Five Great Powers can lead to a relaxation of international tension.

"The resolutions of the Congress of the Peoples are more than ever valid today. A Five-Power Conference is necessary so that the Great Powers may bring up for discussion all the problems which are at the root of international tension ...

"It is necessary so that 500,000,000 people and the Chinese Government by which they are represented may be heard in a debate which affects the security and Peace of all continents. This conference is necessary to create the conditions for harmonious co-operation between the Five Great Powers at UNO."

GOVIND SAHAI
(India)

"We feel that in the present day world no country can exist alone or achieve all-round progress without Peace in the world. Therefore, we are determined to strain every nerve to establish Peace in the world. In order to give a concrete shape to this ambition we have suggested that the Five Powers should meet at the earliest possible moment. Let the leaders of these five big countries sit at a table in a cordial atmosphere and exchange views and suggestions to end the causes of international tension in order to save this world from any future war and its destructive effects."

TOKUSABURO DAN
(Japan)

"The Japanese people will not fail to support all international activities organised to ensure the peaceful co-existence of the nations. They will do all they can ... to organise a campaign in support of a Five-Power Conference."

Mr. IBRAHIM
(Transjordan)

"Even those people who still believe in a Communist threat find that they do not gain by the continuation of tension in the world. On the contrary, they lose by it. Therefore, they realise more and more that a meeting of the Five Great Powers in a Conference for Peace would be closely connected with the struggle for national independence in our country.

"We believe China should be admitted to UNO and should be allowed to participate in all international conferences. This, we think, would help to solve all outstanding questions concerning Peace."

NASOU GAFARI
(Syria)

"The establishment and consolidation of Peace resulting from these negotiations would of necessity guarantee the full national independence of small countries."

Mme JEANNE EBOLLO
(Cameroons)

"Our country is one of the territories under UN trusteeship and has a vital need of Peace in order to attain her independence through peaceful means. In our fight for Peace we strive at the same time to bring the UN back to the principles upon which it was founded viz.:

(1) to ensure Peace and security for the nations;

(2) to ensure the progress of dependent countries to self-government or independence."

Major-General Sir SAHIB SINGH SOKHEY
(India)

The speaker pointed out the responsibility for the maintenance of Peace placed on the Five Great Powers by the UN Charter. He went on:

"Under the Charter, the Five Great Powers were to work together on a mutually agreed basis to preserve Peace and thus leave man free to develop. That is how the concept of unanimity, which is now misnamed veto power, arose. It devolved on the Security Council to maintain Peace. Military pacts between nations and military bases on foreign territories are repugnant to the letter and the spirit of the Charter. Even if the matter of words be arguable, there is no doubt about the spirit of the Charter. The move away from the Charter has bedevilled all our efforts to give the world secure Peace. It would be very much worthwhile to bring nations back to the Charter, to make them respect it."

Statement by the Scientists at the Meeting of the World Council of Peace

The scientists present at this session of the World Council of Peace, knowing the terrible power of destruction of weapons of mass extermination, call upon their colleagues throughout the world to take energetic action for the prohibition of these weapons.

They call upon them to support the efforts of all those who want science no longer to be used for destructive ends but put at the service of mankind.

Recommendation of the Cultural Commission

The last session of the World Council of Peace correctly demonstrated the need and the possibility of a wide extension of cultural relations, a valuable factor in achieving and ensuring a relaxation of international tension.

We are happy to see that in spite of the still too numerous obstacles, appreciable results have been obtained since then. At the same time, we note how much greater successes can be obtained. Vast prospects will open up if all organisations and individuals who hold dear both the culture of their own country and that of the world, take upon themselves to enter into contact and work for fruitful international relations on a reciprocal basis.

The full support of the Peace Movement is assured for the many activities already carried out or planned, such as visits or exchanges of delegations, works of art, literary, scientific or other publications; international exhibitions, congresses and meetings and interchange of scientists, intellectuals, artists and sportsmen.

We call on every organisation and person interested in the development of cultural relations between the peoples. We appeal to them to multiply such activities and to secure broader and, therefore, more effective co-operation.

Vienna, November 28th, 1953.

A MESSAGE FROM THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO ALL ORGANISATIONS AND PERSONALITIES WHO DESIRE A RELAXATION OF INTERNATIONAL TENSION

The armistice concluded in Korea has given an uneasy world the hope at last of seeing a decrease in tension between the Great Powers. Negotiations which were opened, however, have come up against renewed obstacles.

Agreement is proving difficult on other questions vitally important for the peace of the world.

Nevertheless, the peoples long for a relaxation of international tension. The economic shackles and political pressures accompanying this tension are becoming increasingly difficult to bear.

We believe it is possible to rescue the world from this condition.

Today, a wide range of political and social forces in all countries are working for an improvement in international relations.

New voices among eminent scientific, religious and political authorities are condemning the use of weapons of mass extermination. Public opinion is becoming alarmed at the growing accumulation of armaments of all types.

All people of good sense realise that it is not possible to settle problems of world importance or guarantee fulfilment of any agreement made, without the participation of the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Responsible representatives of all political groups in most West European countries have made a public stand against the rebirth of German militarism in any form.

In these conditions, we think an opportunity should be given for all organisations or personalities who are striving for the relaxation of international tension, to concentrate their efforts on this question. The resolution, passed in Vienna by the World Council of Peace on November 28th, 1953 is an expression of our point of view on this matter.

The joint preparation for a meeting allowing the free exchange of all viewpoints and the examination of possible solutions is now necessary.

A meeting of this nature, to be held as soon as possible, would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension.

World Council of Peace

(Vienna Session, 23rd—28th November 1953)

The General Resolution of the World Council of Peace

The Budapest Appeal for negotiation, launched by the World Council of Peace, has had profound repercussions and has won the widest support. As a result of this campaign, the idea of settling international differences by agreements acceptable to all is daily winning ground and bearing fruit.

The end of hostilities in Korea was a victory for the cause of Peace.

The latest exchange of Notes between the Great Powers proves that the holding in the near future of a Four Power Conference on the German question is possible.

The idea of ending hostilities and reaching a peaceful solution in Indochina is making progress both in France and in Viet-Nam.

But forces opposed to the easing of international tension are using the word "negotiation" to veil plans for prolonging the Cold War. Negotiations cannot be realised if one party is confronted by the other with accomplished facts; the desire for negotiation cannot be present if conditions are created to make if fail.

In Asia and in Europe, there are situations and conflicts which are especially endangering World Peace.

In Korea, negotiations are in danger. The intention to exclude neutral nations, especially India, from a Political Conference dealing with specifically Asian interests, could cause the failure of negotiations. The peoples will not allow hostilities in Korea to be resumed.

The interests of European security demand the quickest possible settlement of the German problem. This settlement is only possible by agreement between the Four Powers — the United States, the U.S.S.R., Great Britain and France. The main obstacle which stands in the way of this agreement is the intention of one side to rebuild German militarism and to bring Germany into the war coalition directed against the other.

The World Council of Peace calls upon the peoples of Europe to prevent the ratification of the Treaties concerning the European Army and the revival of German militarism in any shape or form. This would open the way to agreement on the German problem between the Four Powers, thereby offering the German people the prospect of a peaceful future and giving to all the peoples of Europe a guarantee against the revival of aggressive forces in Germany.

For the last seven years there has been war between France and Viet Nam which can only be ended by direct negotiations between the belligerents.

The World Council of Peace welcomes the proposal made in this direction by the Vietnamese delegation supported by the Chinese delegation. This proposal, to which the French delegazion made a favourable reply, could serve as a basis for a settlement.

The World Council of Peace has always affirmed that foreign interference, occupation by foreign troops and the establishment of military bases on foreign soil, constitutes a threat both to the peoples independence and to Peace.

Such a policy is also being developed in the Near and Middle East, Latin America and Africa. It shows itself in Europe, particularly by the plan for the European Defence Community and the installation of atomic bases in Spain, in Asia by the foreign occupation and the intensification of the rearmament of Japan, and in Pakistan where the United States is trying to set up military bases. This latest effort threatens to create a war psychosis amongst hundreds of millions of people in yet another part of the world.

The armaments race and the manufacture of ever more powerful weapons of mass destruction impose an intolerable burden on the world and constitute a frightful menace.

The World Council of Peace, has drawn the attention of the world to this problem by its campaign for the Stockholm Appeal and its Warsaw resolutions. It regrets that the United Nations Organisation has not yet reached agreement on these matters, and hopes that steps will be taken to bring about the absolute prohibition of atomic and biological weapons and a substantial reduction of all armaments under effective control.

The World Council of Peace finally emphasises that, whilst negotiation is necessary on each particular problem, it considers, as it always has, that a Five Power Conference is still the best method for achieving a relaxation of international tension.

This Conference would be able, on the initiative of each of the Powers, to take up any problem felt to be a cause of international tension, and could seek general agreements acceptable to all.

The persistent refusal to grant the People's Republic of China her rightful place in the councils of the world is an obstacle to this Five Power Conference This refusal is contrary to the interests of all states and is judged more and more severely by world opinion.

The Charter of the United Nations gives the peoples an instrument able to bring about lasting peace. The peoples should strive to ensure respect for the Charter. The infringements of the Charter have plunged the world into great difficulties. A return to the letter and the spirit of the Charter would help the peoples to ensure their security and independence. It would allow real co-operation between the nations to develop their economic resources, their wellbeing and their culture.

The anxiety and fear, the poverty and the difficulties of everyday life imposed upon the peoples by the Cold War and the armaments race, can and must be eliminated by the action of the peoples.

In the last resort, Peace depends upon the people.

Charles CHAPLIN

Bernard Shaw a dit que Charles Chaplin était "le seul génie auquel le cinéma ait donné le jour". L'écrivain anglais Thomas Burke n'a pas hésité à affirmer que Chaplin était "le premier homme dans l'histoire dont on puisse vraiment et littéralement dire qu'il est célèbre dans le monde entier". Développant la même idée et commentant certaines mesures prises contre Chaplin par le Procureur Général des Etats-Unis, le "Manchester Guardian" affirmait en 1952: "Chaplin est peut-être le seul homme au monde qui soit, dans le monde entier, reconnu par les hommes de la rue, le seul dont chacun se souvienne avec gratitude." Et Gilbert Seldes prétendait que Chaplin était "destiné par son génie à être le seul, l'unique homme universel des temps modernes".

Ce caractère universel du personnage et de l'œuvre, souligné par les créateurs et par les critiques, se trouve largement confirmé par la statistique de la diffusion de ses films, selon laquelle plus de trois cent millions de personnes auraient assisté à la projection de chacun d'eux. Et n'oublions pas que Chaplin a réalisé jusqu'à présent 80 films. Charlie, Charlot, Carlitos, Carlino est connu et aimé des peuples de toutes les races, de toutes les religions, de toutes conditions et de tous usages. Sa présence suscite le même fervent enthousiasme des foules à Londres, sa ville natale, qu'à Tokio. A Ceylan, en Australie, au Maroc, en Argentine, en Union Soviétique, aux Etats-Unis, en France, en Norvège, au Transvaal, le public se dispute les places chaque fois qu'on annonce un de ses films.

La raison de ce succès universel n'est pas un secret. Sous l'apparence de la farce et à travers l'affabulation satirique, sentimentale ou poétique, des millions d'êtres humains se reconnaissent en Charlot.

Grâce à une profonde connaissance de l'être humain — par expérience et par intuition — et grâce à une compréhension géniale des rapports de l'homme et du destin, Chaplin a su créer un personnage dans lequel tout homme de la rue peut retrouver un trait qui l'identifie fraternellement à lui. Et il est allé encore plus loin: il a su découvrir dans l'adversité — qui est encore, jusqu'à présent, le patrimoine de la majorité des hommes —, certains charmes ineffables qui constituent une compensation de l'infortune. Bien que Charlot, le petit homme, soit persécuté, trompé, déçu par le destin ou par la société, la dignité avec laquelle il reprend son chemin après chaque revers est nourrie d'espérance. Cas unique dans l'art universel: la déception du "héros" ne laisse pas au spectateur un sentiment d'amertume, mais au contraire la confiance que, plus tard, les choses iront mieux.

Le petit homme Charlot vit dans une lutte permanente avec les êtres et avec les choses, avec la société, avec le monde, avec la destinée. Mais sa lutte n'a d'autre but que la réconciliation avec les hommes et avec le monde. A travers les péripéties les plus désordonnées, il cherche l'équilibre, l'ordre: un redressement de la justice qui conduise à la paix.

Assistant à la lutte de Charlot sur l'écran, des millions d'êtres humains ont senti qu'il représentait leur propre lutte, leur lutte quotidienne, dans leurs aspirations les plus intimes, les plus vitales. C'est pourquoi, lorsqu'ils virent leur liberté plus compromise, leur vie plus menacée, leurs chances de bonheur plus réduites, ils comprirent parfaitement que Charlot s'incarnât un jour dans le petit barbier juif du "Dictateur" pour lutter contre le plus grand des désordres, contre la plus grave des injustices. Et ils entendirent la voix de son propre cœur lorsque le barbier, prenant la place du dictateur, cria dans les micros préparés pour une harangue tout à fait différente:

"J'aimerais aider chacun si possible, les Chrétiens comme les Juifs, les Noirs comme les Blancs. Nous avons le désir de nous entr'aider. Les gens civilisés sont ainsi. Nous voulons vivre de notre bonheur mutuel et non pas de notre malheur mutuel... En ce monde il y a de la place pour chacun... Le chemin de la vie peut être libre et magnifique, mais nous avons perdu ce chemin...

"Vous, le peuple, vous avez le pouvoir de créer une vie libre et splendide, de faire de la vie une radieuse aventure. Alors, au nom de la démocratie, utilisons ce pouvoir. Unissons-nous tous. Combattons pour un monde nouveau, pour un monde propre, qui donnera à chaque homme la possibilité de travailler, qui assurera à la jeunesse son avenir, qui mettra les vieillards à l'abri du besoin..."

Appuyé par le témoignage irréfutable de toute son œuvre, depuis "Charlot soldat" jusqu'à "Monsieur Verdoux", Charles Chaplin pouvait déclarer tranquillement en 1949: "Je suis seulement un fauteur de paix."

En 1952, après la réalisation de "Limelight", Charles Chaplin disait à un groupe de journalistes:

"Je crois au pouvoir du rire et des larmes comme contrepoisons de la haine et de la terreur. Les bons films constituent un langage international, ils répondent au besoin qu'ont les hommes, d'humour, de pitié, de compréhension. Ils sont un moyen de dissiper la vague de suspicion et de crainte qui envahit le monde aujourd'hui. Nous avons eu trop de films gratuitement remplis de violence, de sexualité morbide, de guerre, de meurtres, d'intolérance. Ils rendent encore plus insoutenable la tension mondiale. Si seulement nous pouvions échanger entre les nations, sur une grande échelle, les films qui ne constituent pas une propagande agressive, mais qui parlent le langage simple des simples hommes et femmes... Cela pourrait contribuer à sauver le monde du désastre."

Par ces mots, Charles Chaplin réaffirmait l'intention pacifiste de son œuvre et donnait son véritable sens à son personnage, au petit homme qui a su, depuis 1915, se gagner le soutien fervent de centaines de millions d'êtres humains.

Ce caractère pacifiste de l'ensemble de l'œuvre de Chaplin a été reconnu et applaudi dans le monde entier. Nous nous bornerons à citer ici les paroles qu'en 1948, l'Association française de la critique de cinéma rappelant une proposition faite dès 1926, adressait au Président du Storthing de Norvège pour demander que le Prix Nobel de la Paix fut attribué à Charles Chaplin.

"Les films de M. Chaplin se signalent par leur caractère pacifiste, par l'amour de l'humanité qui s'y révèle... Ce caractère... s'est accentué particulièrement dans ses deux derniers films, "Le Dictateur" et "Monsieur Verdoux", qui contiennent dans leur dernière partie des déclarations qui ont puissamment contribué, assurément, à diffuser les idées chères à M. Alfred Nobel."

On a déjà écrit sur Charlot des dizaines de livres et, sûrement, on en écrira encore des dizaines. Mais il suffit peut-être de rappeler certaines scènes de "Charlot soldat", du "Grand Dictateur", de "Monsieur Verdoux", pour trouver une justification plus que suffisante à la décision prise par le Jury des Prix Internationaux de la Paix, qui est d'attribuer à Charles Chaplin l'un des deux Prix Internationaux de la Paix 1953.

Dmitri Dmitrievitch CHOSTAKOVITCH

Dans les années 1925—1930, les milieux musicaux d'Europe et d'Amérique commencèrent à s'intéresser à l'œuvre d'un jeune compositeur soviétique: Dmitri Dmitrievitch Chostakovitch, né en 1906. Rapidement, l'intérêt des musicologues se transforma en enthousiasme du public, qui, à Paris, Londres, New-York, Buenos-Aires, Rome, Tokio, Rio de Janeiro ou Mexico, reconnaissait l'apparition d'un grand symphoniste. Après sa Septième Symphonie, écrite à Léningrad en 1941, alors que les bombes hitlériennes détruisaient la ville et qu'un siège implacable faisait de chacun de ses habitants un martyr et un héros, l'opinion universelle consacrait en Chostakovitch l'un des plus grands compositeurs contemporains.

C'est au Conservatoire de Léningrad, sa ville natale, et sous l'experte direction de Maximilien Steinberg, l'un des disciples préférés de Rimsky-Korsakov, et du célèbre professeur de piano Léonidas Nicolaev, que Chostakovitch termina ses études musicales, en 1925, année où il écrivit sa première symphonie. Dans cette œuvre de début, écrite à l'âge de 19 ans, se trouvent déjà en germe les caractéristiques essentielles de son œuvre future: un admirable équilibre entre l'originalité de son inspiration créatrice et la mise à profit des traditions de la musique classique russe; une exaltation vitale et une grande richesse de sentiments, exprimés avec une connaissance minutieuse des ressources de l'orchestre et une liberté d'innovation née du domaine déjà magistral des formes classiques de composition. Il est facile de comprendre pourquoi dès lors l'illustre compositeur russe Alexandre Glazounov, directeur du Conservatoire de Léningrad, tint en très haute estime les capacités de Dmitri Dmitrievitch Chostakovitch.

La fertilité de l'imagination créatrice va de pair chez le compositeur soviétique avec son inépuisable capacité de travail: dix symphonies, cinq quatuors, un quintette pour piano et instruments à corde, un trio, vingt-quatre préludes et fugues pour piano, un grand oratorio, dix chœurs inspirés par les œuvres des poètes révolutionnaires russes, la cantate "Le soleil brille dans le ciel de notre patrie", "l'Hymne des Nations Unies", les partitions pour le "Hamlet" de Shakespeare et la "Comédie Humaine" de Balzac, des romances sur des poèmes de Shakespeare, Sir Walter Raleigh, Burns, et de poètes japonais, la musique des films "Contre-plan", "Rencontre sur l'Elbe", "La Jeune Garde", "La Chute de Berlin", etc., figurent dans le répertoire de son œuvre, qui ne s'arrête pas là.

Parlant de quelques-unes des œuvres les plus célèbres de Chostakovitch, le critique soviétique L. Danilevitch déclare:

"Sa 5ème Symphonie (1937) glorifiait avec force la lutte pour la vie, le triomphe de la volonté et l'intelligence humaine." "Le thème de ma symphonie est le devenir de la personnalité", disait le compositeur, "c'est bien l'homme avec toutes ses émotions que je voyais au centre de la conception de cette œuvre."

"Dans les années de la Grande Guerre Nationale et dans l'après-guerre, D. Chostakovitch intervient en artiste-humaniste qui lutte par toutes les ressources de son art contre l'agression, pour la paix et la démocratie, pour l'amitié entre les peuples.

"D. Chostakovitch écrivit sa 7ème Symphonie (1941) à Léningrad assiégée par les troupes hitlériennes." "J'ai voulu créer une œuvre sur notre époque, sur notre vie, sur notre peuple, — déclarait l'auteur peu après avoir achevé son travail — "C'est à notre lutte contre le fascisme, à notre prochaine victoire sur l'ennemi, à Léningrad, ma ville natale, que je consacre ma 7ème Symphonie."

"Dans cette œuvre Chostakovitch déploie les tableaux de la vie pacifique et ensoleillée des peuples du pays soviétique, les tableaux de l'invasion fasciste et de la résistance héroïque à l'ennemi. Il a exprimé en musique la colère des Soviétiques, leur haine des envahisseurs, leur foi en la lumière et en la vérité qui triomphent des ténèbres, du mensonge, de la barbarie.

"La 7ème Symphonie a joué un rôle important dans le resserrement des forces antifascistes internationales. On l'appela "La Symphonie de Léningrad" et en France "La Symphonie de Stalingrad", car cette œuvre est bien l'expression de la victoire sur la tyrannie fasciste.

"Après la première exécution de la 7ème Symphonie aux Etats-Unis, un représentant des simples gens d'Amérique s'écria: "Non, aucun démon ne saurait asservir un peuple qui crée une pareille musique!"

"La 7ème Symphonie n'a pas perdu aujourd'hui de son acuité et de son actualité. Dans la grande lutte pour la paix sa musique résonne comme une accusation véhémente à l'adresse des fauteurs de guerre. Cette musique nous dit: "Voyez comme la vie pacifique est belle, comme l'image de la guerre est effroyable, voyez quel crime commettent les gens qui voudraient étouffer la paix et la liberté."

"L'oratorio "Le Chant des Forêts" est une des œuvres d'après-guerre les plus importantes du compositeur. Chostakovitch y célèbre le fécond travail pacifique du peuple soviétique. L'oratorio est empreint d'optimisme, il exprime la joie lumineuse des travailleurs socialistes qui s'avancent vers le communisme. La claire mélodie de ses chants traduit la foi en l'avenir. Le thème du libre travail socialiste se trouve organiquement lié à celui de la défense de la Paix. Dans la partie centrale de l'œuvre (consacrée aux jeunes bâtisseurs de Stalingrad), on entend une accusation véhémente à l'adresse de ceux qui voudraient attiser les flammes noires de la guerre.

"En 1953, D. Chostakovitch termina sa 10ème Symphonie. Elle attira de suite l'attention du public soviétique et provoqua des discussions passionnées. Mais indépendamment des critiques qu'on peut adresser à cette œuvre, elle doit être appréciée comme un apport important à l'art musical de notre temps. C'est avec raison qu'on y découvre une profonde méditation sur les destinées du monde, les échos de la lutte de l'humanité progressiste contre les forces ténébreuses de la réaction qui préparent la perte de millions d'hommes.

"La 10ème Symphonie de D. Chostakovitch est empreinte d'un souffle tragique, mais on n'y voit aucune ombre d'abattement, de résignation. Angoisse pour le sort de l'humanité, tristesse provoquée par le souvenir des victimes, protestation véhémente, tout cela résonne dans la musique dramatique et enflammée de la symphonie qui fait penser aux paroles du poète révolutionnaire russe Ryléev: "Je ne sais pas pardonner aux ennemis."

"L'extraordinaire fécondité de son génie musical, qui le classe comme l'un des plus grands musiciens de notre époque, n'a pas empêché Chostakovitch de mener une activité sociale intense qui a fait de lui l'un des citoyens les plus éminents de l'Union Soviétique et qui lui a gagné l'affection de tous les hommes et de toutes les femmes qui dans le monde entier désirent la paix et recherchent l'amitié entre les peuples."

C'est encore Danilevitch qui résume ainsi l'activité publique du grand compositeur soviétique:

"D. Chostakovitch est député au Soviet Suprême de la RSFSR. Il est membre du Comité soviétique pour la défense de la paix. Il a beaucoup fait pour l'affermissement de l'unité et de l'amitié des peuples. En 1947 il a visité la Tchécoslovaquie et y a participé au Festival "Le printemps de Prague". D. Chostakovitch fut membre de la délégation qui prit part au Congrès américain des partisans de la paix (1949). Un grand meeting eut lieu alors à Maddison Square Garden; sur la demande de la foule, Chostakovitch dirigea l'exécution de sa 5ème Symphonie. Le compositeur a participé également aux congrès mondiaux des combattants de la paix à Varsovie (1950) et à Vienne (1952). En qualité de représentant des milieux musicaux de l'URSS, D. Chostakovitch a participé aux festivals Bach et Beethoven dans la République Démocratique Allemande.

"Nombreuses ont été les interventions de Chostakovitch dans la presse. Beaucoup de journaux soviétiques, "La revue", "Musique Soviétique," ainsi que nombre de journaux étrangers ont publié ses articles. L'œuvre de D. Chostakovitch a été cinq fois couronnée du Prix Staline. Il a reçu cette haute récompense pour son quintette, sa 7ème Symphonie, son trio, son oratorio "Le Chant des Forêts", et ses dix chants pour chœur dont les paroles sont de poètes révolutionnaires russes."

La remise du Prix à Chaplin

En application de la décision prise par le Jury des Prix Internationaux de la Paix, le Prix International de la Paix 1953 a été remis, le 3 juin, à l'éminent artiste britannique Charles Chaplin en sa résidence du Manoir de Ban, à Vevey (Suisse).

Le Conseil Mondial de la Paix était représenté à cette cérémonie par le docteur Synge (Grande-Bretagne) et par l'illustre helleniste André Bonnard (Suisse). Le Jury des Prix Internationaux de la Paix s'était fait représenter par MM. Vercors (France), Sergueï Guerassimov (URSS) et Jorge Zalamea (Colombie).

DISCOURS DE CHAPLIN

"Charlot soldat"

Le désir de paix est universel. Formuler une demande de paix, qu'on la fasse à l'Est ou à l'Ouest, je crois fermement que c'est là un pas dans la bonne direction.

C'est pourquoi je suis honoré et très heureux de recevoir cette récompense. Je ne prétendrai pas connaître les réponses aux problèmes qui menacent la paix, mais ce que je sais, c'est que les nations ne les résoudront jamais dans une atmosphère de haine et de méfiance. Et ce n'est pas non plus les menaces de jeter les bombes atomiques qui les résoudront. Le secret de fabrication de ces armes d'épouvante sera bientôt connu de tous et bientôt toutes les nations, petites ou grandes, les possèderont.

Dans notre ère de science atomique, les nations devraient songer à des choses moins démodées et plus constructives que le recours à la violence pour résoudre les différends. Les tristes efforts pour accoutumer les peuples à accepter la guerre de la bombe à hydrogène avec toutes les horreurs qu'elle comporte, sont un crime contre l'esprit humain et un ferment de folie universelle.

Eloignons de nous cette atmosphère désespérante et délétère, efforçons-nous de comprendre réciproquement nos problèmes car, dans une guerre mondiale, il n'y aura de victoire pour personne.

C'est pourquoi nous devons nous engager à revenir à ce qui est naturel et sain dans l'homme, à l'esprit de bonne volonté qui est la base de toute inspiration, de tout ce qui est créateur, bon et noble dans la vie.

Déployons tous nos efforts dans ce sens pour atteindre une ère glorieuse de paix dans laquelle toutes les nations prospèreront.

Discours de VERCORS

Au nom du Conseil Mondial de la Paix et des membres du Jury des Prix Internationaux de la Paix, j'ai l'insigne honneur de vous remettre le diplôme de lauréat pour l'année 1953.

Ce n'est pas seulement un honneur pour moi d'avoir été désigné pour vous le remettre, c'est aussi une joie très grande. Il n'y a pas loin de quarante ans que je vous aime et vous admire comme un homme de la paix; peut-être êtes-vous le premier homme qui m'ait fait comprendre la criminelle bêtise de la guerre. J'étais un enfant lors de la première guerre mondiale. Et la guerre me paraissait une glorieuse aventure, qui excitait mon imagination enfantine dans la mesure même où ce n'était pas moi qui étais appelé à payer le prix de cette gloire ni les souffrances de cette aventure, mais des hommes dans la peur et la boue et que je ne connaissais pas. Et puis un jour, en pleine guerre, un film extraordinaire est venu déchirer en morceaux, par l'extraordinaire puissance du rire, les sanglants oripeaux de la gloire militaire. Depuis ce jour, je n'ai plus cessé de voir la guerre sous le visage même que vous nous aviez montré: une ignoble entreprise d'écrasement de l'homme dissimulée sous l'hypocrisie mystifiante d'une gloire inventée par les mystificateurs.

"Le Dictateur"

Ensuite, pendant quarante ans, vous nous avez obstinément montré ce que l'homme est réellement, petite lumière écrasée sous les puissances aveugles de la nature, et qui tire sa seule dignité, sa seule grandeur à refuser de s'y soumettre comme le fait l'animal, et même s'il est vaincu d'avance à se relever après chaque défaite pour reprendre une lutte sans fin. Et ceux qui, au lieu de l'aider, se mettent du côté du bourreau pour profiter de sa défaite, vous nous avez montré combien ils sont aveugles eux-mêmes et imbéciles, puisqu'ils ne voient pas que le bourreau a déjà la hache levée sur leur propre tête. Ainsi, depuis quarante ans, vous nous montrez qu'il n'y a pas d'autre chemin raisonnable pour tous les hommes que la paix, que leur coalition fraternelle contre ces puissances aveugles, dans l'amour réciproque et l'entr'aide.

C'est pourquoi, ayant moi-même essayé à votre suite de montrer dans mes livres ce que vous avez magistralement montré dans vos films, je ressens comme une merveilleuse récompense à mes propres efforts de remettre aujourd'hui ce diplôme entre vos mains.

Discours du Dr. SYNGE

Je viens ici en tant que membre britannique du Conseil Mondial de la Paix, et suis profondément conscient de l'honneur et de la chance que constitue pour moi le fait d'avoir été choisi pour vous saluer aujourd'hui.

Je suppose que, de tous temps, les hommes ont compris qu'ils sont responsables, au véritable sens du terme, de leurs enfants et donc de l'avenir de l'humanité, et se sont demandés s'ils s'acquittaient bien de cette responsabilité. Mais jamais certainement cette interrogation n'a été aussi anxieuse qu'aujourd'hui. Le Conseil Mondial de la Paix a pour seule raison d'être de rassembler les millions d'hommes de toutes les nations du monde, afin qu'ils puissent traduire dans la réalité leur désir de vivre ensemble dans la paix, de mener leur vie à leur propre manière et de l'enrichir par leur propre contribution à l'industrie, à la science et à l'art.

Vous êtes l'un de ceux qui ont compris cela depuis toujours, mais ce n'est pas tout. Vous avez réussi, par votre œuvre, à transmettre cette conscience à des millions d'autres hommes dans le monde entier, et à fortifier en eux la volonté de défendre l'avenir qui leur est confié. Bien que nous ayons tous su ce que vous diriez quand vous vous décideriez à sortir de votre silence, nul autre que vous n'aurait pu le faire si bien, ni si clairement. Vous avez aidé deux, peut-être trois générations à mener leur vie avec une conscience plus claire. Le Prix que vous venez de recevoir n'est que la reconnaissance de cette œuvre. Nous sommes fiers, en Grande-Bretagne, que cette œuvre soit celle d'un compatriote.

ILYA EHRENBURG

SPEECH

DELIVERED TO THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

VIENNA SESSION, NOVEMBER 23rd-28th, 1953

A year ago, in this city, a Congress of the Peoples took place. Much has changed since that time. The forces of Peace have grown but it is too early to celebrate victory; the threat of war has not yet disappeared.

The voices of those who call for another blood-bath have not yet fallen silent. Mr. Dean, the former Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, in a statement which the Daily Herald described as a piece of criminal folly, proposed to use the atomic weapon against the Soviet Union. The "Commonwealth Club," which is an organisation of American businessmen, approved the idea of "preventive war" and Mr. Wiley, President of the Senate Commission for Foreign Affairs, confirmed that similar views are held by business circles in his country. I wouldn't stress this if Mr. Dean and these war-minded businessmen were only a small group of fanatics. However, mass circulation newspapers not only publish calls for war but often accompany them with favourable comments. Responsible persons in the USA do not condemn the declarations of Mr. Dean and his ilk; the only reproach they have to make is that these declarations are too vehement. When we compare the behaviour of responsible people in certain States with the seemingly irresponsible appeals to which I have just referred, we have every right to say that here we have a difference of temperament rather than a difference of intention. There is a Russian proverb which says: "What a wise man keeps in his head, the drunkard has on his tongue." I fear that Mr. Dean's militant calls will not hurt Mr. Dulles' feelings.

There is no doubt that of late Mr. Dulles himself and other statesmen have altered their tone. They must have remembered that the English language is rightly considered to be one of the richest and that, as well as the words in which they have too freely indulged such as "containment," "ousting," "cold war," "preventive war," "crusade," atomic bomb and hydrogen bomb, there exist more pleasant ones such as "proposal," "conference" and "negotiation."

How are we to explain such a change of vocabulary? Above all it is due to our joint efforts. The appeal launched at the Budapest session of the World Council of Peace has found support throughout the world and this has caused certain statesmen to alter their tone. Mr. Hamilton writes in the New York Times, and I quote: "The growing neutralism in Western Europe and the demands in the United States for lower taxes, that come very near to being the same thing, seem to leave no alternative but to negotiate with both of the Communist giants." This changed tone on the part of certain statesmen would have brought us relief if it had indicated a change in their approach to the problem of Peace and war. However, the New York Times journalist didn't think it necessary to say that those statesmen who, without giving up their former views, are nowadays forced to take public opinion into account, have found another way out by saying one thing and doing another.

Of course we prefer people to be polite and the word "negotiations" sounds much more decent than misplaced praise of different types of bombs. As a writer I am very strict about style but I am not a pedant where words are concerned. Pondering over the chances of war and Peace I take into consideration not only the declaration of this or that statesman, but also the actions that accompany these declarations.

What, then, are the aims of the statesmen who, while extending preparations for another war, setting up new military bases and enlarging their armies, repeat again and again the words: "proposal," "conference," "negotiation," "guarantee?"

In Perrault's fairy tale, known to every child, the wolf, eager to devour the little girl, puts on her grandmother's bonnet. Everyone knows that the Soviet people, although very fond of the colour red, are not at all like the naive Little Red Riding Hood. It is not for the purpose of deceiving the Soviet Union that certain statesmen deliver peaceful tirades—their aim is to calm their own citizens, to prove to the people of Western Europe and America that the increase in taxes, the arms drive and the various military pacts are necessary because of the unwillingness of the other side to respond to their friendly overtures. In other words there is no wolf at all; there is only a patient, kind grandmother and a very naughty Red Riding Hood.

The fact that certain statesmen must now resort to camouflage is eloquent testimony to the strength of the defenders of Peace. But it would be a great tragedy for all peoples if this camouflage were to weaken their vigilance.

We have in the past supported, and we continue to support the idea of negotiation, for without negotiation no agreement is possible. But if there cannot be agreement without negotiation there can, on the other hand, be negotiation without agreement; there can be proposals for negotiation the aim of which is to compromise the very idea of agreement; there can be talks on negotiation the aim of which is to compromise the very idea of negotiation. We are now confronted with desperate attempts to deceive millions of Peace-loving people and to veil the feverish preparation for a terrible war with words dear to all friends of Peace.

Everyone agrees that it is necessary to lessen international tension and that there is only one way to do it: negotiations between the Great Powers. Everyone knows, too, that according to the charter of UNO these Great Powers are the United States of America, the USSR, Great Britain, China and France. Who is it then, whilst saying that negotiations are necessary, makes negotiations impossible? Let us take a calm look at the situation. One of the Great Powers, I mean the United States, refuses to negotiate with another Great Power, China. How do American statesmen, who,
